

Sura 1: AL-Fatiha (The Opening)

1. In the Name of God, the Lord of Mercy, the Giver of Mercy.
2. Praise be to God, Lord of the Worlds,
3. The Lord of Mercy, the Giver of Mercy;
4. Master of the Day of Judgment.
5. You alone we do worship, and You alone we ask for help.
6. Guide us to the straight path,
7. The path of those on whom you have bestowed your blessings, not the path of those who earn your anger nor of those who go astray.

This short Sura, which has only seven verses, is recited by each and every Muslim at least seventeen times every day. The number of recitations can be doubled, if a Muslim chooses to pray the supererogatory prayers. The number would grow even larger if one chooses to pray more voluntary prayers. A prayer in which this Sura is not recited is deemed invalid. According to a tradition that was reported by the two authentic books (Al-Bukhari and Muslim), the Prophet (pbuh) has been quoted to have said, “A prayer in which Al-Fatiha is not recited is invalid.” This Sura outlines the basic principles of the Islamic doctrine as well as the fundamentals of the Islamic perspective. This may explain the rationale behind the requirement to recite it repeatedly by Muslims in their daily prayers.

Ibn Katheer mentioned that there is a difference in opinion regarding where it was revealed. According to Ibn ‘Abbas (RA) it was revealed in Mecca, while Abu Hururriah (RA) is of the opinion that it was revealed in Medina. Most probably it is a Meccan Sura, since prayer was prescribed in Mecca and it is known that prayer is rendered invalid if the Fatiha is not recited.

Al-Qurtobi mentions that this Sura has twelve names. However, the most common names for the Sura are the opening of the Book (al-Fatiha), the seven of the most-offt repeated verses, and the mother of the Qur’an. It is the very first Sura in the Qur’an, hence the name: the opening of the Book. It is called the seven of the oft repeated verses because it is repeated most-often in the prayer. It is also the mother of the Book because it is the foundation of the Qur’an.

Al-Razi says that the Qur’an establishes four fundamental concepts. These are the belief in the Oneness of God, the belief in the Day of Judgment, the belief in power of God and that each and everything happens by His leave, the belief in the fact that God sent messengers to guide people to the right path.

The verses, “Praise be to God, Lord of the Worlds; the Lord of Mercy, the Giver of Mercy,” is a statement of the belief in the Oneness of God; and that He has power over everything

The verse, “Master of the Day of Judgment,” is a statement of the inevitability of the resurrection.

The verse, “You alone we do worship, and You alone we ask for help,” is a statement of the ability of the human beings to make choices and that nothing can happen except by the leave of God.

The verses, “Guide us to the straight path; the path of those on whom you have bestowed your blessings, not the path of those who earn your anger nor of those who go astray;” is a statement of the belief that God has sent messengers to guide people to the straight path.

Hawwa states that the Qur’an encompasses three areas of knowledge: The Doctrine, the acts of worship, and a way of life. The verses, “Praise be to God, Lord of the Worlds, the Lord of Mercy, the Giver of Mercy; Master of the Day of Judgment;” are a statement of the doctrine. The verse, “You alone we do worship, and You alone we ask for help,” is a statement of the acts of worship. The way of life is stated in the verses, “Guide us to the straight path; the path of those on whom you have bestowed your blessings, not the path of those who earn your anger nor of those who go astray.”

The Sura starts with the phrase, “In the name of God, the Lord of Mercy, the Giver of Mercy.” The scholars have different views regarding the status of this verse. Some are of the opinion that this verse is a part of each Sura in the Quran, while some are of the opinion that it is a verse that should be recited at the beginning of each Sura but it is not part of the Sura. However, there is a consensus that it is one of the verses of Surat Al-Fatiha. This makes the number of verses of this Sura (Al-Fatiha) seven. There is an opinion that the verse, “Indeed, We have bestowed on you (Prophet) seven of the oft repeated verses.” (15:87) refers to Surat Al-Fatiha.

Starting the Sura in God’s name is consistent with the general rule that has been established in the first verse that was revealed to the Prophet (pbuh), “Recite in the name of your Lord.” (96:1). This also reflects the fundamental conception of God as the First and the Last, the Outer and the Inner. All praise is to God, He is the Truth, and from His existence emanates the existence of everything in the universe. Therefore, everything should start with His name.

The attributes, “The Lord of Mercy, the Giver of Mercy,” encompass all aspects and dimensions of mercy. Only God has these two attributes combined together; and only He can be called the “The Lord of Mercy.” One can describe a human being as a giver of mercy, but one cannot describe a human being as “The Lord of Mercy.” The term “The Lord of Mercy” is an exclusive attribute of God.

Thus, two fundamental Islamic concepts are outlined in the first verse. The first concept is that it is the proper Islamic etiquette to start each action with the name of God. This reflects the belief in the Oneness of God. The second concept is that the attributes of God as the Lord of Mercy and the Giver of Mercy, encompass all aspects of mercy and it sets the tone for the relationship between the Creator and the creation. The praise of God and the acknowledgement that He is the absolute Lord of the universe follow. The praise of God is the feeling that floods the hearts of the believers when they remember God. Our mere existence is by the grace of God for which we should be eternally grateful. He should be praised in the beginning and at the end. Another fundamental Islamic concept is the belief in God’s infinite power. He is the Almighty, the Lord of the worlds. The Lord owns, controls, and teaches. He cares about His creation and He looks after them. This concept establishes the foundation of the belief in the Oneness of God. The recognition of the absolute power of God as the Lord is the corner stone of monotheism. Islam emphasized this principle to purify the faith from any hint of polytheism.

“Praise be to God, Lord of the Worlds.” God is the only One who deserves our limitless praise. It is a praise that is not bounded by a time or a place. He is the Lord of the Worlds, His power is limitless and He controls everything. Nothing happens in the world without His leave. There is nothing like Him. He is the Creator who created the worlds, and He is the Lord of the Worlds. The word, “worlds,” is a plural and is undefined.

The two dimensions of the attribute of mercy are repeated again; “The Lord of Mercy, the Giver of Mercy,” to emphasize one of the basic characteristics of the Lord and to once again establish the basis for the relationship between the Creator and the creation as one of mercy. The Lord is merciful, kind, and cares about the welfare of His creation. His mercy and kindness evoke feelings of gratitude and contentment in the hearts of His creatures. The gratitude is reflected in the praise of the Creator uttered by the creation.

The next verse, “Master of the Day of Judgment,” establishes an important Islamic principle that has a far reaching impact on the daily lives of people: the belief in the Hereafter. The Master owns, controls, and rewards on the Day of Judgment. The resurrection is inevitable and people will be held accountable for what they did in this life.

These two concepts complement each other. Some may believe in God as the Creator but they do not believe in the concept of the Day of Judgment. The Quran refers to them by saying, “And if you ask them who created the heavens and earth, they will say, ‘God;’” (31:25) another verse echoes the same reaction, “They may deem it strange that a warner should have come to them from among themselves, and so those who deny the truth will say, ‘A strange thing is this. How could we be resurrected after we have become dust?’” (50:2-3) this establishes the fundamental concept of life after death. When people fully recognize this fact, they will not be totally consumed by the struggle to get the rewards for their deeds in this life. They will understand that their reward will not be lost, rendering their struggles worthless. If they do not get compensation in this life, they will get it in the Hereafter. Acceptance of this fact will make people lead a life of security, contentment, tolerance, and certitude. This basic principle identifies the demarcation between the road to slavery imposed by the desires and whims and the road to freedom befitting humankind. Humankind will not be able to lead the excellent way of life that God wants for them if this concept is not inculcated in their psyche.

The next verse says, “You alone we do worship, and You alone we ask for help.” This is a logical consequence for the belief in the Oneness of God. No one is worthy of worship except God. No one can provide help and support to the believer except God. So, believers should neither worship any one else nor seek help from anyone else. Such a statement frees humankind from all sorts of servitude and it guides people to worship God alone. No system, organization, or human can control the destiny of people. We worship God alone and He is the only one who can help us.

The practical application of these fundamental concepts starts with praying to receive guidance from the Creator. Give us the knowledge that guides us to the straight path. Give us the courage to stay on the straight path after we have found it. The knowledge and the ability to stay on the path are the fruits of God's guidance and mercy. Asking God for guidance is the fruit of the belief that God is the only giver of guidance. The believer's first and foremost endeavor is to ask for the guidance of his Lord. Guidance to the straight path is the only guarantee for happiness in this life and in the Hereafter. It satisfies the quest of the natural innate disposition to find and recognize the Creator.

The Creator responds to the quest of His creation for guidance by sending messengers who bring guidance to humankind. This guidance defines the straight path which God has decreed for His servants. God blessed this path with His grace. This path is not followed by those who chose not to follow God's guidance. These are the ones who deviated from the truth after they had discovered it, and those who were not interested in finding the truth in the first place.

This is the Sura which has been chosen to be part of each and every prayer, without it the prayer is rendered invalid. It outlines the fundamental concepts of the doctrine and the practice of Islam. Imam Muslim narrates that the Prophet (pbuh) has been quoted to have said, "God said, 'The prayer is a dialogue between Me and My servant. I will grant him whatever he asks for. When the servant says, 'All praise is to God, the Lord of the worlds,' I say, 'My servant praised me.' When he says, 'The Lord of Mercy, the Giver of Mercy,' I say, 'My servant has glorified Me.' When he says, 'You alone we do worship, and You alone we ask for help,' I say, 'This is between Me and My servant. I will grant him what he asked for.' When he says, 'Guide us to the straight path, the path of those on whom you have bestowed your blessings, not the path of those who earn your anger nor of those who go astray,' I say, 'I will grant My servant what he asked.'"

Sura 2: AL-Baqarah (The Cow)

In the name of God, the Lord of Mercy, the Giver of Mercy

This Sura of the Qur'an was one of the first Suras to be revealed after the migration to Medina took place. It is the longest Sura of the Qur'an. Most probably its verses were not revealed all at once. The verses of the Sura were revealed over a period of time interspersed with verses from other Suras. A review of the occasions for the revelation of some of its verses as well as the occasions for the revelation of some of the verses of the other long Suras – even though the description of these occasions may not have been absolutely unequivocal – indicates that the verses of each of the long Medinian Suras were not revealed all at once. Some verses of one Sura would be revealed followed by the revelation of few verses from another Sura and so on. The order of the revelation of the Suras was determined according to the order of the revelation of the opening verses of each Sura. The opening verses of this Sura were probably the first verses to be revealed after the Prophet's (PBUH) migration to Medina. Other verses in this Sura, such as the one dealing with usury, were revealed at a much later date.

The assignment of a specific verse to a specific Sura and the order of the verses within each Sura were decided according to God's revelation. It has been narrated by Al-Bukhari and Muslim that Ibn 'Abbas (RA) said, "The Prophet (PBUH) was the most generous person. He was even more generous during the month of Ramadan when he used to meet with the Archangel Gabriel. Gabriel (PBUH) used to meet with the Prophet (PBUH) every night during the month of Ramadan to recite the Qur'an." Another version of this tradition states that Gabriel (PBUH) was teaching the Prophet (PBUH) the Qur'an during these meetings. It is confirmed that the Prophet (PBUH) has recited the complete Qur'an in the presence of Gabriel (PBUH) and that Gabriel (PBUH) has recited the complete Qur'an in the presence of the Prophet (PBUH). This indicates that these recitations were made for the Qur'an in its final form, with the proper arrangement of the verses in each Sura. Those who live in the shade of the Qur'an will feel that each Sura has its own specific features. One lives with these features in an atmosphere as if one is in the company of a living being. Each Sura has one or more basic themes all revolving around a fundamental concept. Each Sura has its own ambiance that connects all its different topics in harmony. This is a general feature that all the Suras of the Qur'an have in common.

There are many hadiths about the blessings that one gains when he/she recites Surat al-Baqarah. Abu Hurairah (RA) narrated that the Prophet (PBUH) said, "Do not make your homes like graveyards. Satan does not enter the home in which Surat al-Baqarah is recited."

Hawwa suggests that the Sura consists of an introduction, three sections, and a conclusion. This suggestion is based on the similarity between the beginning and end of each section. The introduction is comprised of the first twenty verses. The introduction describes three groups of people: those who are God conscious, those who disbelieve (reject faith), and the hypocrites.

The first section of the Sura is comprised of the verses twenty-one to hundred and sixty-seven. This section starts with calling people to the worship of God. Then, it shows how the worship of God leads to God consciousness. God consciousness is then discussed using the stories of the Children of Israel and Prophet A braham (PBUH).

The second section is comprised of the verses hundred and sixty-eight to two hundred and seven. This section discusses various pillars of Islam: prayers, fasting, alms, and pilgrimage. In addition to the discussion of the doctrine. All these topics are connected to the concepts of God consciousness and showing gratitude to God.

The third section is comprised of the verses two hundred and eight to two hundred and eighty-four. This section explores various major issues that concern the individual, the family, and the community.

This Sura deals with several topics woven around a central theme. The central theme has two dimensions. The first dimension deals with the response of the Children of Israel to the Islamic call in Medina and how they confronted the Muslims and the Messenger. This dimension also describes the alliances that the Jews of Medina formed with the hypocrites on one side and with the idolaters on the other side. The second dimension deals with the training process that the fledgling Muslim community went through in the early days of the message. This is the training that prepared the community to bear the responsibility of the call to Islam and to fulfill the conditions of being vicegerents on earth.

Verses: 1 to 29

1. Alif. Lam. Mim.
2. This is the Book in which there is no doubt; in it there is guidance for those who are conscious of God;
3. Those who believe in the unseen, establish prayer, and spend out of what We have provided for them;
4. And those who believe in the revelation sent to you, and that which was revealed before you, and have certitude in the Hereafter.
5. These are on (true) guidance, from their Lord, and it is these who will succeed.
6. Surely, those who disbelieve, it is the same to them whether you warn them or do not warn them; they will not believe.
7. God has set a seal on their hearts and on their hearing, and a veil on their eyes; great torment is theirs.
8. Some people say, "We believe in God and the Last Day;" but they do not (truly) believe.
9. They desire to deceive God and those who believe, but they only deceive themselves and they realize it not.
10. There is a disease in their hearts; and God has increased their disease. Painful is the torment they incur, as a result of their persistent lying.
11. When it is said to them, "Do not make mischief on earth," they say, "Why, we are only mending things."
12. Indeed, they are the ones who make mischief, but they realize it not.
13. When it is said to them, "Believe as the others believe;" they say, "Shall we believe as the fools believe?" Indeed, they are the fools, but they do not know.
14. When they meet those who believe, they say, "We believe;" but when they are alone with their evil ones, they say, "We are really with you. We were only mocking."

15. God will throw back their mockery on them, and give them rope in their trespasses; so they will wander like blind ones (to and fro).
16. These are they who bartered guidance for error. But their bargain is profitless, and they have lost true direction.
17. Their similitude is that of a man who kindled a fire; when it lighted all around him, God took away their light and left them in utter darkness. So they could not see.
18. Deaf, dumb, and blind, they will not return (to the path).
19. Or (another similitude) is that of a rain-laden cloud from the sky. In it are zones of darkness, and thunder and lightning. They press their fingers in their ears to keep out the stunning thunder-clap, for fear of death. But God encompasses the disbelievers.
20. The lightning all but snatches away their sight; every time the light shines on them, they walk therein, and when the darkness grows on them, they stand still. And if God willed, He could take away their faculties of hearing and seeing; for God has power over all things.
21. People, worship your Lord, who created you and those who came before you, that you may be conscious of Him.
22. Who made the earth a resting place and the sky a canopy, for you; and sent down rain from the sky; and brought forth therewith fruits for your sustenance; and do not set up rivals to God when you know (the truth).
23. And if you are in doubt as to what We have revealed to Our servant, then produce a single Sura like it; and call your witnesses (or helpers) besides God -if there are any - if you are truthful.
24. But if you cannot do it - and certainly you will not be able to do it - then guard yourselves against the fire whose fuel is people and stones, which is prepared for the disbelievers.
25. Prophet, give glad tidings to those who believe and do good deeds, that theirs are gardens, beneath which rivers flow. Every time they are fed with fruits therefrom, they say, "this is what we were given before," for they are given things in similitude; and they will have pure mates; and they will abide therein (for ever).
26. God does not shy from putting forward a parable even with something as small as a gnat, or larger. Those who believe know that it is the truth from their Lord; but the disbelievers say, "What does God mean by this parable?" By it, He causes many to go astray, and many He leads to the right path; but it is only the transgressors that He causes to go astray.
27. Those who break God's Covenant after it is ratified, and who sever the bonds which God has commanded to be joined, and do mischief on earth, these are the losers.
28. How can you disbelieve in God? seeing that you were without life, and He gave you life; then will He cause you to die, and will again bring you to life; and again to Him will you return.
29. It is He who created for you all things that are on earth; then turned He to the heaven, and fashioned it as seven heavens. And He knows all things. (2:1-29)

The Sura starts with three letters of the Arabic Alphabet, "Alif. Lam. Mim." This is followed by the mention of the Book of God, "This is the Book in which there is no doubt; in it there is guidance for those who are conscious of God." Similarly, other Suras in the Qur'an begin with one or more letters of the Alphabet. Different views are available in the literature that attempt to explain the rationale behind starting the Suras with these alphabetical letters. One of these appears most compelling, using these letters in the beginning of a Sura points to the fact that the Book is composed using the letters of the Alphabet of the language that the Arabs were familiar with at that time. The Qur'an challenged the Arabs repeatedly to use these same letters with which they were quite familiar to compose a book similar to the Qur'an, ten Suras similar to the Suras of the Qur'an, or even a single Sura like the ones in the Qur'an, but they were never able to meet the challenge.

"There is no doubt in the Book." How can there be any doubt when the proof of its authenticity is given in the beginning of the Sura. The Book is written in the Arabic language, yet the Arabs were unable to meet the challenge of composing a similar book. This is a book of true guidance, but who would benefit from this guidance? This Book offers guidance to those who are conscious of God. God consciousness opens the doors for the light of guidance to go through and shine on the heart. God consciousness prepares the heart to receive and engage guidance. Those who want to find guidance in the Qur'an must approach the Qur'an with a sound, sincere, sensitive, and pious hearts. They should approach the Qur'an with hearts that dread the temptation of going astray.

The Qur'an lists some of the attributes of those who are God conscious. The believers in Medina had these attributes, and all true believers must have these attributes. They "believe in the unseen, establish prayer, and spend out of what We have provided for them; and who believe in the revelation sent to you, and that which was revealed before you, and have certitude in the Hereafter." The first characteristic of those who are God conscious is that they have a holistic approach to faith. This holistic approach unites all the components of faith around one central belief: the belief in the Oneness of God. The components of the faith are the belief in the unseen, the performance of the rituals, the belief in all God's messengers, and the certitude of the inevitability of the Hereafter. This approach forms the basis for a believer's approach to life. It is an approach worthy of the final revelation to humankind, the revelation that best meets the needs of humanity.

The belief in the unseen breaks the physical barrier that prevents the soul from reaching out to the source from which it emanated. The belief in the unseen removes the roadblocks which stand between the soul and the metaphysical. The belief in the unseen elevates humankind above carnal desires and allows the human beings to explore the reality of their existence and to reflect on the reality of the universe and beyond. It allows the human being to go beyond the small world of the physical senses to the boundless universe of the spiritual. It allows the human being to appreciate the power that created this infinite universe, the power that cannot be fathomed using the limited human understanding. God cannot be seen by the human eye nor can His nature be understood by the human mind. This protects us from wasting our limited energy in thinking about what we are not created to think about. God gave the human beings an intellect which helps them in fulfilling their obligations as God's vicegerents on earth. A vicegerent is a person responsible for thinking, building, producing, and researching to promote better life on earth. These material duties should be supported by spirituality that connects the human being with the rest of the universe and the Creator of the universe. Without this spiritual support the responsibility of the vicegerent will not be fulfilled.

The believers establish prayer worshipping God alone. This frees them from other forms of worship. Their worship is solely dedicated to God. Prayers connect people to God. This connection provides security and support. It provides an incentive to do good deeds and to behave ethically.

The believers spend out of what God provided for them. They recognize that their wealth is not a natural product of their hard work but it is an endowment from God. This fills their hearts with gratitude to God for his grace; it is a gratitude that manifests itself in acts of kindness to the needy and the poor. They feel that they are part of the human family, so they have a responsibility toward their brothers and sisters in humanity. The recognition that their wealth is an endowment from God purifies them from stinginess and fills their hearts with goodness and generosity.

Spending includes the obligatory poor-dues and the voluntary charity. Charity includes all money spent in good causes. The principle of spending in the way of God was institutionalized in Islam before the rules regarding the obligatory poor-dues were revealed. Spending in the way of God is a general term that includes among other things the obligatory poor-dues. The Prophet (PBUH) has been quoted to have said, “There are dues other than the poor-due.” The verse points to the generalization of the principle of spending in the way of God.

They believe in what has been revealed to you and what has been revealed before you. This is fitting for a Muslim. Since, Muslims inherited all the previous divine messages. They believe in all messengers sent by God to guide humanity since the beginning of time. They were urged to be keepers of the legacy of all the previous messengers. This belief instills in the heart of the believer the concept of the oneness of humanity, the Oneness of the Creator, the oneness of the message, and the continuity of the messengers. This belief purifies the soul from religious intolerance and racism. It assures the believer that God has not forsaken His creatures and He continued to send messengers at different times to guide them to the right path.

They are certain of the inevitability of the Hereafter. It is a belief that joins the worldly life with the life in the Hereafter in a continuum, it indicates that people were not created in vain, and it highlights divine justice. This is the criterion which differentiates between those who believe only in materialistic things and those whose souls are free to wander beyond the material to the open space of the spiritual. Those are the truly guided and therefore, they will succeed.

These verses are followed by verses which paint an image of those who reject faith, those who disbelieved. The image portrays all the ingredients of faith rejection that can be found in all places and at all times.

“Surely, those who disbelieve, it is the same to them whether you warn them or do not warn them; they will not believe. God has set a seal on their hearts and on their hearing, and a veil on their eyes; great torment is theirs.” The images of the believers and the disbelievers are juxtaposed. The Book brings guidance to the believers, but the disbelievers are not affected whether they are warned or not. All the windows that are open for the believers’ souls to connect with the Creator are closed in front of the souls of the disbelievers. Their hearts and their hearings are sealed, so no guidance can reach them. The veil on their eyes blocks the light of the truth from going through to their souls. They deserve what they get because they refused to heed the warning before. So, it does not matter whether they receive another warning or not. They will receive their due torment.

A third image is portrayed in the following verses. It is not a picture of purity and transparency as the one that portrays the believers' souls, nor it is a dark and gloomy image as the one painted for the souls of the disbelievers. This is the image of the hypocrites. It is an image of deceit and treachery. "Some people say, 'We believe in God and the Last Day;' but they do not (truly) believe. They desire to deceive God and those who believe, and they deceive only themselves and they realize it not. There is a disease in their hearts; and God has increased their disease. Painful is the torment they incur, as a result of their persistent lying. When it is said to them, 'Do not make mischief on the earth,' they say, 'Why, we are only mending things.' Indeed, they are the ones who make mischief, but they realize it not. When it is said to them, 'Believe as the others believe;' they say, 'Shall we believe as the fools believe?' Indeed, they are the fools, but they do not know. When they meet those who believe, they say, 'We believe;' but when they are alone with their evil ones, they say, 'We are really with you. We were only mocking.' God will throw back their mockery on them, and give them rope in their trespasses; so they will wander like blind ones (to and fro). These are they who bartered guidance for error. But their bargain is profitless, and they have lost true direction." This image describes a group of people who lived in Medina at that time, but the image also describes the hypocrites at all times. They claim that they believe in God and the Last Day but they do not really believe. They are cowards; they are not able to declare their rejection of faith openly. They think they can outsmart God and the believers. The verse states one of the basic principles established by God's grace. This principle describes the relationship between God and the believers. God aligns Himself with the believers; He engulfs them in His care. They are His party. He defends and protects them against their enemy. Whoever tries to scheme against them is in actual fact scheming against God. By associating the believers with Himself, God is raising the status of the believers above all others. Faith fills the believers' hearts with security and peace because they know that God's protection is guaranteed.

The hypocrites were only deceiving themselves. They had sickness in their hearts. They swerved away from the straight path. Any deviation starts small but then grows larger quickly. They were arrogant to the extent that when they were asked to stop spreading mischief in the land they had the audacity to claim that they were implementing reform. However, they fooled no one, they were the mischief makers. Their arrogance made them think that they were above all others. They refused to be part of the community that submitted to God. They did not want to be associated with the poor people who were part of this community. They called the poor who believed in the Prophet (PBUH) fools, but they were themselves the fools.

The last attribute of the hypocrites is that they did not only deceive the believers but they also connived against them. "When they meet those who believe, they say, 'We believe;' but when they are alone with their evil ones, they say, 'We are really with you. We were only mocking.' They thought that deception and connivance will make them powerful. But they forgot that a powerful person does not need deceit and connivance. They thought that they were mocking the believers but indeed it was God who was mocking them. "These are they who bartered guidance for error. But their bargain is profitless, and they have lost true direction."

We notice that the verses dedicated to the description of the hypocrites are much longer than those dedicated to the description of the other two categories: the believers and the disbelievers. It is a fairly straight forward task to describe a believer or a disbeliever. Both of them have clear and distinct features. The image of the first group is the image of pure souls pursuing a straight path. The image of the second group is the image of dark souls pursuing a crooked path. But the third image is much more complex. It is an image of sick, insecure and troubled souls. It requires a lengthy statement to define its dimensions.

The verses continue to elaborate on the image of the hypocrites. “Their similitude is that of a man who kindled a fire; when it lighted all around him, God took away their light and left them in utter darkness. So they could not see. Deaf, dumb, and blind, they will not return (to the path).” The hypocrites did not reject faith initially as did the disbelievers. They turned away from the true path after they had embarked on it. Similar to those who kindle a fire seeking its light, but when they see the light, they do not benefit from it. When they turned away from the light of guidance, God took away the light and left them in total darkness. They blocked their ears against hearing the guidance and became deaf, they disabled their tongues so that they would not speak the truth and became dumb, and they closed their eyes so that they would not see the truth and became blind.

Another parable is struck to describe the perplexity and confusion of this group, “Or (another similitude) is that of a rain-laden cloud from the sky. In it are zones of darkness, and thunder and lightning. They press their fingers in their ears to keep out the stunning thunder-clap, for fear of death. But God encompasses the disbelievers. The lightning all but snatches away their sight; every time the light shines on them, they walk therein, and when the darkness grows on them, they stand still. And if God willed, He could take away their faculties of hearing and seeing; for God has power over all things.” It is an awful description that paints a very dramatic and dreadful image of the fear and terror that people who are lost in a violent storm would experience. The image reflects the perplexity of the hypocrites as they deal alternately with the believers and the disbelievers; saying one thing to the believers and turning back to say another thing to the disbelievers. The image underlines the feelings of insecurity and confusion felt by the hypocrites as they waver between the light of faith and the darkness of disbelief.

“People, worship your Lord, who created you and those who came before you, that you may be conscious of Him. Who has made the earth a resting place and the sky a canopy, for you; and sent down rain from the sky; and brought forth therewith fruits for your sustenance; and do not set up rivals to God when you know (the truth).” This is a universal call to all people to worship their Lord who created them and those before them. The Lord is the sole Creator, so He deserves to be worshiped alone. Worship has one objective that people should strive to achieve: to become and remain conscious of God. He has made the earth a resting place for you, so it is easy for you to live, work, and enjoy life. The term canopy used to describe the sky points to the strength and the delicate organization of its structure. These characteristics are closely related to the ease of life on earth. The heat and light coming from the sky were essential to the beginning and continuation of life on earth. These are signs that remind people of the power of the Creator and His right to be worshiped. Verses talking about rain coming down from the sky to produce fruits have been mentioned in several places in the Qur’an. They act as a reminder of the power and blessings of God. This water is the main ingredient of all living beings.

These verses outline two fundamental Islamic concepts. The first is the concept of the Oneness of God, He alone created everything. The second is the harmony of the universe. God created the universe and maintained its delicately balanced harmony. This harmony allowed man to live comfortably on earth. The earth is extended and the heavens are raised to provide water needed for plants to grow and enable people to live comfortably on earth. You know that God alone created humans and the universe, so He deserves to be worshiped alone. So, do not associate partners with Him. Qur'an is very strict in denouncing associating partners with God. The belief in the Oneness of God should remain clear of the blemish of any shadow of idolatry. You know that He is the Creator who created you and those before you and you know that He is the One who made the earth a resting place and the sky a canopy for you. He is the One who brings down water from the sky. He did not have a helper to support Him, nor had He a rival to oppose Him. It is thus, inappropriate to associate partners with Him. The rivals that the verse refers to may not be only idols to be worshiped, but a rival may take other forms. Believing that someone or something other than God can harm or benefit people constitutes setting up rivals to God.

“And if you are in doubt as to what We have revealed to Our servant, then produce a single Sura like it; and call your witnesses (or helpers) besides God - if there are any - if you are truthful.” This is a challenge that is posed to everyone who has the slightest doubt of the authenticity of the message which Prophet (PBUH) brought. The verse calls the Prophet (PBUH) God's servant. This is an honour bestowed on the Prophet (PBUH). God's servants are given the highest rank of honour among people. This honour is attainable for all who worship God alone. There is an implicit reprimand for those who refuse to attain the honour which was bestowed on the Prophet (PBUH) who was blessed by receiving God's revelation.

The challenge that is explicitly posed here has been implicitly alluded to in the beginning of the Sura. This is a book composed using the well-known letters of the Alphabet, if you doubt its authenticity then compose a Sura similar to the ones that are in the Book using these letters which are familiar to you and call your witnesses to judge. God has given His testimony that His servant is telling the truth.

This challenge was posed when the Prophet (PBUH) was still alive and it is still valid today. It is an insurmountable proof of the authenticity of the Qur'an. The Qur'an has certain characteristics which sets it apart from any of the literary works produced by humans. The verse states that no human can write a similar book, “But if you cannot do it – and certainly you will not be able to do it- then guard yourselves against the Fire whose fuel is people and stones, which is prepared for the disbelievers.” It is remarkable that the challenge was posed and the anticipated response was stated in unequivocal terms. Had the disbelievers at that time been able to refute the authenticity of the Book, they would not have hesitated for a moment. The Qur'anic statement that they will never be able to meet the challenge posed to them is a miracle because if they had been able to compose a single Sura similar to the Suras of the Qur'an, then the Qur'anic claim would have been refuted. However, the Arabs at that time were not able to face the challenge. Not only they were unable to compose a Sura similar to the Suras of the Qur'an but also no human being was ever able to do so.

One wonders why the verse associates people with stones in this fearful image describing Hell fire. In a previous verse, people who rejected faith had their hearts and hearings sealed and had their sights veiled. They could not hear, see, nor think. The people to whom the challenge was posed were not able to act or respond similar to a stone which has no ability to act or respond, hence the similarity between those who reject faith and the stones.

This fearful image is juxtaposed against an image of comfort and happiness that awaits the believers. “Prophet, give glad tidings to those who believe and do good deeds, that theirs are Gardens beneath which rivers flow. Every time they are fed with fruits there from, they say, ‘this is what we were given before,’ for they are given things in similitude; and they will have pure mates; and they will abide therein (for ever).” One of the wonders of these gardens is that there will be fruits similar in shape to fruits that the believers had in their lifetime but will be different in taste. They will see the similarity in shape but will be pleasantly surprised by the difference in taste. The verse gives an image of comfort, happiness and pleasant surprises for the believers.

These verses point to doubts that the hypocrites, and possibly others from among the Jews and the idolaters, may have casted on the use of parables in the Qur’an. They may have indicated that it does not behove God to use such parables which denigrate and mock them. They may have also questioned the propriety of using creatures like a fly and a spider in parables narrated in the Scripture. This was part of a campaign launched against Islam by the hypocrites and some Jews in Medina, and by the idolaters in Mecca. These verses came to refute such arguments and to state the rationale behind using parables in the Qur’an. The verses warn the disbelievers who spread such doubts and reassure the believers that this campaign is fruitless. God is the Lord of the little and the large. He is the Creator of the gnat and the elephant. The miracle of creating life in the form of a gnat is the same as the miracle of creating life in the form of an elephant. The miracle of life is beyond our comprehension, only God knows the secret of life. These parables were used as illustrative tools and as a test for the hearts and souls of people. The believers are those whose faith filled their hearts with light, opened their minds, and enhanced their spirituality to receive whatever comes to them from their Lord with appropriate reverence. But the disbelievers say, “What does God mean by this parable?” Only a person whose heart was neither touched by God’s light nor did it receive God’s wisdom may ask such a question. It is a heart that lost touch with God’s conventions. The question reflects ignorance and limited imagination and it shows disrespect to the Lord and what He is able to do. This is responded to by a dire warning, “By it, He causes many to go astray, and many He leads to the right path; but it is only the transgressors that He causes to go astray.” God allows His tests to take their natural course. People’s reaction to these tests will vary depending on their way of thinking and attitudes.

Tests may come in the form of adversity or may come in the form of affluence. Adversity causes the believers, who have put their trust in God, to seek God's help and support; while it causes the disbelievers and the hypocrites to stray away from God's path. Affluence fills the heart of the believer with gratitude, while it makes a transgressor ungrateful. Similarly, people react differently to God's parables some are guided by them, while others go astray. However, only the transgressors go astray. Those are the people whose hearts have swerved away from guidance and truth. They are rewarded with more of the same.

The verse continues to list the characters which identify transgression, "Those who break God's Covenant after it is ratified." The covenant that has been ratified between God and people has various aspects. It is the covenant engrained in the initial natural disposition of all human beings to recognize the Creator and to worship Him alone. Human beings are created with an initial natural disposition which makes them yearn to the belief in God, but sometimes this initial natural disposition becomes corrupt and drives people to go astray. It is also the covenant that God ratified with Adam (PBUH) to make him a vicegerent on earth. These aspects of the covenant were outlined in the message brought by the various messengers that God sent to guide humankind. Those who break God's covenant after it has been ratified can easily break any other covenant.

"Who sever the bonds which God has ordered to be joined," God commanded the joining of many bonds. These include the bond of kinship, the bond of brotherhood in humanity, and the bond of brotherhood in faith. Joining these bonds ensures the coherence of the society; and without it, corruption and chaos would prevail. "And do mischief on earth, these are the losers." Mischief has different forms. The root of all forms of mischief is embedded in disobeying God, revoking the covenant between the person and God, and severing the bonds that God commanded to be joined.

"How can you disbelieve in God? Seeing that you were without life, and He gave you life; then will He cause you to die, and will again bring you to life; and again to Him will you return. It is He who created for you all things that are on earth; then turned He to the heaven, and fashioned it as seven heavens. And He knows all things." Denying God after realizing all these proofs and signs is a baseless and hateful deed. The Qur'an confronts people with what they need to face, so that they recognize the truth and submit to its consequences. The Qur'an confronts people with the progression of their lives and the phases of their existence, they were dead and they were given life. There is no escape from facing the truth of life and its miraculous beginning. Who is the creator who gave them life after being dead? Life has been given by the Creator who created everything on earth from a lifeless substance.

"How can you disbelieve in God? Seeing that you were without life, and He gave you life;" You were dead and He gave you life. How can a creature reject faith in his/her Creator? Then He will put you to death. This is the ultimate truth; no one can argue about the inevitability of death. Then He will raise you again. They did contest this statement as do many people today. However, if they had reflected on how life started in the first instant, it is plausible that the one who started life can restart it again. Then you will return to Him. You will return as He created you in the first instance. You will be gathered in front of Him to receive His judgment.

In one single short verse, the whole record of life of humankind is reviewed. A quick image of the phases that humankind will go through is projected: life is given, it is taken away, and it is given for the second time; then all will return to God as He created them in the first instance. It is an image of God's power that fills the sensitive soul with all types of emotions.

"It is He who created for you all things that are on earth; then turned He to the heaven, and fashioned it as seven heavens. And He knows all things." Long discourses were written by scholars attempting to interpret the verses on the creation of heaven and earth. They discussed the meanings of "before" and "after," as well as the terms "istiwaa" and "taswiyah" which have been translated here as "turned" and "fashioned." They forgot that "before" and "after" reflect human dimensions that cannot be extended to God. Similarly, they forgot that the terms "istiwaa" and "taswiyah," attempt to describe the metaphysical in terms that can be appreciated by the limited imagination of the human mind.

"It is He who created for you all things that are on earth" The word "for you" has a deep meaning. It is an unequivocal statement that God created humankind to perform a great undertaking. God created humankind to act as vicegerent on earth. Humankind was given the earth's wealth and they should play an effective role in its development. They are the heirs of this wide kingdom and they should play a major role in shaping its progress.

"Then turned He to the heaven, and fashioned it as seven heavens." It does not make sense to dwell on the meaning of the term "turned," here, except to say that it is a symbol of the controlling power of God and that creation was a deliberate plan of God. There is also no sense in trying to explain the meaning of the term "seven heavens." It is sufficient to understand the main significance of the verse. The verse emphasizes the power of God who created the heavens and the earth and made the earth habitable; and it denounces the rejection of faith on part of disbelievers who ignore the miracle of creation.

"And He knows all things." Since, He is the Creator of everything and He controls everything, then He knows everything. His knowledge is comprehensive as is His control. This is an incentive for people to believe in God alone, and worship Him alone. Worshiping the provider alone is an act of gratitude.

Verses: 30 to 39

30. And when your Lord said to the angels, "I will place a vicegerent on earth." They said, "Will You place therein one who will make mischief and shed blood? While we do celebrate Your praise and glorify Your Holy (name)?" He said, "I know what you know not."

31. And He taught Adam the names of all things; then He placed them before the angels, and said, "Tell me the names of these if you are truthful."

32. They said, "Glory is to You. We have no knowledge, except that which You have taught us. Verily, You are the Omniscient, the Wise."

33. He said, "Adam, tell them their names." When he had told them, God said, "Did I not tell you that I know the unseen in the heavens and earth, and I know what you reveal and what you conceal?"
34. When, We said to the angels, "Prostrate yourselves before Adam " and they prostrated, all save Iblis: he refused and was haughty. He was one of those who disbelieved.
35. We said, "Adam, dwell you and your spouse in the Garden; and eat of the bountiful things therein as you will; but approach not this tree lest you become wrongdoers."
36. But Satan made them slip from the (garden), and got them out of the state (of felicity) in which they had been. We said, "Get out, all of you, with enmity between yourselves. On earth you will have a dwelling-place and means of livelihood - for a time."
37. Then Adam received from his Lord's words and his Lord relented toward him; for He is Ever- Relenting, the Giver of Mercy.
38. We said, "Get out all of you; but when guidance comes from Me, as it certainly will, whosoever follows My guidance, on them shall be no fear, nor shall they grieve.
39. But those who disbelieved and denied Our revelations, they shall be companions of the fire; they shall abide therein." (2:30-39)

Stories are told at different places in the Qur'an to address certain events. The event dictates how the story develops, which part of the story is told, and how it is narrated to present the appropriate spiritual, intellectual, and artistic ambience for the event and to underscore the moral of the story. A superficial examination, may lead one to think that the Qur'anic stories are repetitive, because aspects of the same story are mentioned in different places of the Qur'an. However, a careful examination shows that not a single story was repeated in the same way or with the same level of details twice. Whenever a story was retold a new aspect of the event was explored. Stories form a major part of the Qur'an. Let us then consider the story of Adam in light of these comments.

The previous verses explored not only the progression of life on earth but also the development of the whole universe. Earth, one of the signs of God, has been created with all its contents for the benefit of humankind. The verses dealing with the story of making Adam a vicegerent on earth is a logical sequel. God created Adam and struck a covenant with him to undertake the responsibility of being a vicegerent on earth. God gave Adam the knowledge he needs to fulfill this responsibility. These verses also lead to the story of the Israelites, and the covenant that God struck with them appointing them a model for humankind on earth and the subsequent revocation of the covenant and replacing them with the Muslim nation who fulfilled God's covenant.

"And when your Lord said to the angels, 'I will place a vicegerent on earth.' They said, 'Will You place therein one who will make mischief and shed blood? While we do celebrate Your praise and glorify Your Holy (name)?' He said, 'I know what you know not.'"

It was then God's deliberate plan to make this new creature a vicegerent on earth. The plan gave humankind the freedom, the ability, and the creativity to manage the earth according to the will of God. Humankind was given the responsibility to discover, analyze, form, change, and develop the treasures of the earth. God gave humankind the mandate to use these treasures in fulfilling the enormous undertaking that God entrusted them with; and He endowed them with the ability, the knowledge, and the aptitude needed to fulfill such an undertaking. These are some of the ideas which the hallowed statement "I will place a vicegerent on earth," brings to our minds.

"They said, 'Will You place therein one who will make mischief therein and shed blood? While we do celebrate Your praise and glorify Your Holy (name)?'" This question intimates that the angels may have had a previous experience or some sort of insight that made them suspect that this creature will make mischief and shed blood. The angels with their innocent minds, which accept nothing but the absolute goodness and comprehensive peace, thought that celebrating God's praise and glorifying Him are the ultimate goals and the only purpose of the creation. Since, they are performing these functions then there is no need for another form of creation. They were not privy to the rationale behind the will of God to place a vicegerent on earth. God willed a civilization to be established and to develop on earth. It was God's will to entrust the responsibility for growing, developing, and improving this civilization to one of His creature. This creature, humankind, has been appointed by God as a vicegerent. This creature may make mischief and he/she may shed blood in the process of achieving a higher good, the good of continuous growth, development, and improvement. This good involves incessant trials and efforts that continuously push the envelope. The answer to their question was, "I know what you know not."

"And He taught Adam the names of all things; then He placed them before the angels, and said, 'Tell me the names of these if you are truthful.' They said, 'Glory is to You. We have no knowledge, except that which You have taught us. Verily, You are the Omniscient, the Wise.' He said, 'Adam, tell them their names.' When he had told them, God said, 'Did I not tell you that I know what is hidden in the heavens and earth, and I know what you reveal and what you conceal?'" Through glimpses of insight, we experience what the angels experienced in their high place. We see aspects of God's mystery being bestowed on humankind when he was asked to undertake the responsibility of being a vicegerent on earth, the mystery of the ability to use vocal symbols to identify physical things and beings.

"When, We said to the angels, 'Prostrate yourselves before Adam' and they prostrated." This is the highest honour that was given to a creature who makes mischief and sheds blood on earth but was given hidden aspects that elevated him in rank above the angels. Humankind was given the aptitude to gain knowledge and the free will which enables him to make choices. The rationale for getting this high honour lies in the duality of the nature of humankind. The duality that allows humankind to use his will to make the decisions needed for human life to continue on earth, and to act as a beacon which guides to God's path. The angels bowed in obedience, "all save Iblis: he refused and was haughty. He was one of those who disbelieved." Plain evil is manifested in disobeying God's command, behaving arrogantly, and being stubborn and narrow minded. The way the story is told intimates that Iblis was not an angel, if he were an angel he would not have disobeyed God. Angel's first and basic attribute is, "they do not disobey God in what He commands them, and they do as they are commanded." (66:6) He was simply present with the angels when the command was issued. The use of the exception style "all save Iblis" should not be taken as an evidence which supports the conclusion that Iblis was an angel because linguistically it is valid to use the exception style to single out an individual who is not part of a group but happened to be present with the group when a command was issued to the group. Qur'an states unequivocally that Iblis belongs to a different kind of creation called jinn.

Thus, the field for the eternal battle has been established. It is the battle between Iblis, the embodiment of evil, and God's vicegerent on earth. This is the eternal battle for the human conscience. It is a battle in which the victory of goodness is contingent on observing the covenant of God. Disobedience to God and succumbing to the temptation of carnal desires will help evil to prevail.

"We said, 'Adam, dwell you and your wife in the Garden; and eat of the bountiful things therein as you will; but approach not this tree lest you become wrongdoers.'" They were given the permission to eat of the fruits of all the trees in heaven except one tree. Only one single tree was prohibited for them. Perhaps, this was a symbol for all prohibited things which would have to exist on earth to give meaning to the concept of free will. There would be no meaning for the concept of free will if everything was allowable and nothing was prohibited. Without the temptation to commit the forbidden, what then would be the criterion that differentiates between a free-willed person and a forcibly-lead animal. A free-willed person has the choice either to honour the covenant of God by following His commands or to succumb to the temptation that satisfies his/her carnal desires.

"But Satan made them slip from the (garden), and got them out of the state (of felicity) in which they had been." What an image that is formed by the use of the phrase "made them slip." One can almost see them fall as Satan was pushing them over the edge away from the garden. Now the trial was completed, Adam forgot his covenant with God and succumbed to the temptation. The verdict was issued, "We said, 'Get out, all of you, with enmity between yourselves. On earth you will have a dwelling-place and means of livelihood - for a time.'" The eternal battle between humankind and Satan has started. However, Adam's nature and God's mercy brought him up from his fall. God's mercy is there for whosoever seeks it. "Then Adam received from his Lord's words, and his Lord relented toward him; for He is the Ever-Relenting, the Giver of Mercy."

The final word of God has been decreed. The permanent covenant with humankind has been declared explaining the conditions for success in life. "We said, 'Get out all of you; but when guidance comes from Me, as it certainly will, whosoever follows My guidance, on them shall be no fear, nor shall they grieve. But those who disbelieved and denied Our revelations, they shall be companions of the fire; they shall abide therein.'" The eternal battle was now launched on its intended grounds. The battle will continue to rage till the end of time. Humankind can find their way to victory if they so will, but they can also end up losing the way if they so will.

Let us go back to the story of the beginning of humanity. God said to the angels, "I will place a vicegerent on earth." So, Adam was created to live on earth. Why then was Adam created in heaven and why he was put to the test and why was that specific tree prohibited for him. One can almost feel that this was a training program to prepare this vicegerent for his intended role. It was a training program to sharpen his wits so that he can recognize his enemy and prepare him for resisting the temptation. It was the objective of this training period to show him the consequences of succumbing to the temptation and how to seek refuge with God when he fails.

The story of the forbidden tree, the temptation of Satan, forgetting the covenant and consequently disobeying God, the realization of the wrongdoing, the remorse, and seeking forgiveness reflect the ever repeating human experience. It is a mercy of God that humankind was trained for his intended role before placing him in the position of responsibility.

Let us outline briefly some of the thoughts that may be generated by this story. Several important messages may be gleaned from the story. Among these are the high stature that Islam confers on humankind, the importance of his role on earth, the relationship between humankind and the Creator, the responsibility of humankind in this universe, the standards that can be used to evaluate his success and failure, and the covenant between God and humankind. Not only did God declare Adam to be a vicegerent on earth but He also commanded the angels to bow to him. When Iblis refused in arrogance to bow, he was expelled from Heaven. This bestows on humankind the rank of the master of the earth. Humankind is valued highly above any other material value and he is the most honored creature on earth. This high view of humankind is inextricably linked to the high morals and supreme ethical values that should be upheld and promoted by humankind. Upholding these ethical values and promoting these morals constitute an integral part of the covenant with God. Although, the vicegerency is usually concerned with the achievement of materialistic and administrative goals, ethical values are more important than any administrative and materialistic matters. Administrative and materialistic objectives should always be guided by the high morals of the Islamic code.

Islam values highly the concept of human free will, because it is the focal point of the covenant with God and the system of reward and punishment. Humankind can elevate himself to a rank higher than that of the angels by honoring his covenant with God. Honoring the covenant requires self-discipline to abstain from indulging in carnal desires and to rise above the temptation. It also acts as a constant reminder of the point of demarcation between happiness and misery; between honour and shame; and between the ranks of the free-willed human and the forcibly-steered animal.

The story is also a constant reminder of the ever continuing battle between humankind and Satan. It is the battle between keeping God's covenant and succumbing to the temptation of Satan. It is the battle between faith and rejection, between right and wrong, and between guidance and loss. The battle field is the human psyche. The human being can either win or lose this battle. This is a constant reminder to humankind to be always on the alert like a soldier on a battle field.

Finally, the Islamic perspective regarding the concepts of sin and repentance is explored. Adam repented and asked for forgiveness and God forgave him before sending him to start his mission on earth. Islam refuses the concept of the original sin. An individual is not responsible for a sin committed before he or she is born. Each person is responsible for his/her own personal actions. No one will bear the responsibility of someone else. These are some of the thoughts that are inspired by the story of Adam.

Verses: 40 to74

40. Children of Israel, remember My blessings which I bestowed upon you, and fulfill your covenant with Me as I fulfill My Covenant with you, and fear none but Me.
41. And believe in what I revealed, confirming the revelation which you possess already, and be not the first to reject it, nor sell My revelation for a small price; and be conscious of Me alone.
42. And do not cover the truth with falsehood, nor knowingly conceal the truth.
43. And establish prayer; pay the poor-dues; and bow down your heads with those who bow down (in worship).
44. Do you enjoin right conduct on the people, and forget (to practice it) yourselves, and yet you study the Scripture? Have you then no sense?
45. Seek (God's) help with perseverance and prayer; it is indeed hard, except for those who are humble.
46. Who know that they will certainly meet their Lord, and that they will return to Him.
47. Children of Israel, remember My blessings which I bestowed upon you, and that I favoured you over all other people.
48. Then guard yourselves against a day when one soul shall not avail another nor shall intercession be accepted for it, nor shall compensation be taken from it, nor shall anyone be helped.
49. And remember, We delivered you from the people of Pharaoh, who subjected you to dreadful torment, slaughtered your sons, and let your women-folk live; that was a tremendous trial from your Lord.
50. And when We parted the sea for you and saved you and drowned Pharaoh's people before your eyes.
51. And We appointed forty nights for Moses, and in his absence, you chose the calf (for worship), and you were wrongdoers.
52. Even then, We did pardon you; in order that you may be grateful.
53. And when We gave Moses the Scripture and the Criterion (Between right and wrong): so that you may be guided.
54. And when Moses said to his people, "My people, you have indeed wronged yourselves by your worship of the calf. So turn (in repentance) to your Maker, and slay the wrongdoers from among yourselves; that will be better for you in the sight of your Maker." Then He turned toward you (in forgiveness); for He is the Ever-Relenting, the Giver of Mercy.
55. And remember when you said, "Moses, we shall never believe in you until we see God manifestly," so the thunderbolt overtook you while you looked on.
56. Then We raised you up after your death, that you may be grateful.
57. And We gave you the shade of clouds and sent down to you Manna and quails, saying, "Eat of the good things We have provided for you."; they wronged Us not, but they did wrong themselves.
58. And when We said, "Enter this town, and eat freely therein as you wish in abundance; but enter the gate with humility, in posture and in words, and We will forgive you your sins and will increase (reward) for the good-doers.
59. But the wrongdoers changed the word from that which had been given them; so We sent on the wrongdoers a plague from heaven, because they infringed (Our command).

60. And remember Moses when he prayed for water for his people. We said, "Strike the rock with your staff," and then gushed forth therefrom twelve springs. Each group knew its own place for water. So eat and drink of the sustenance provided by God, and do neither evil nor mischief on the (face of the) earth.
61. And when you said, "Moses, we cannot bear to eat only one kind of food (always), so call upon your Lord for us to produce for us of what the earth grows of herbs, cucumbers, garlic, lentils, and onions." He said, "Will you exchange the better for the worse? Go you down to any town (misr), and you shall find what you want." And humiliation and misery were stamped on them; they drew on themselves the wrath of God. This is because they continued to reject God's message and to slay His Messengers wrongfully. This was so because they rebelled and they were aggressors.
62. Those who believe (in that which is revealed to you Muhammad), and those who follow the Jewish (Scriptures), and the Christians and the Sabians - any who believe in God and the Last Day, and do good deeds, shall have their reward with their Lord; on them shall be no fear, nor shall they grieve.
63. And remember when We took your covenant and We caused the mount to tower above you, (Saying), "Hold fast to what We have given you and remember that which is therein so that you become conscious of God."
64. But you turned away thereafter. Had it not been for the Grace and Mercy of God, you would have certainly been among the losers.
65. And you knew those among you who transgressed in the matter of the Sabbath. We said to them, "Be you apes, despised and rejected."
66. So We made it an example to those who witnessed it and to the succeeding generations, and a lesson to those who are conscious of God.
67. And remember Moses when he said to his people, "God commands that you sacrifice a cow." They said, "Do you make us a laughing-stock?" He said, "God forbid that I should be among the foolish."
68. They said, "Call upon your Lord on our behalf to make plain to us what cow it is." He said, "He says, 'The cow should be neither too old nor too young, but of middle age.' Now do what you are commanded."
69. They said, "Call upon your Lord on our behalf to make plain to us her colour." He said, "He says, 'Verily, it is a bright yellow cow, pure and rich in tone and gives delight to the beholders.'"
70. They said, "Call upon you Lord on our behalf to make plain to us what she is, to us are all cows alike. We wish indeed for guidance, if God wills."
71. He said, "He says, 'A cow not trained to till the soil nor water the fields; sound and without blemish.'" They said, "Now you have brought the truth." Then they offered her in sacrifice, though they almost failed to do it.
72. And remember when you slew a man and fell into a dispute among yourselves as to the crime. But God brought forth what you did hide.
73. So We said, "Strike the (body) with a piece of the (cow)." Thus, God brings the dead to life and shows you His Signs, so you may understand.
74. Then, after that, your hearts were hardened and became like a rock and even harder. For indeed there are rocks from which rivers gush forward; others send forth water when they are split asunder; and others sink for fear of God. And God is not unmindful of what you do. (2:40-74)

God reminds the Children of Israel of the bounties that He blessed them with and of the covenant that He made with them, “Children of Israel, remember My blessings which I bestowed upon you, and fulfill your covenant with Me as I fulfill My Covenant with you,” But which covenant does this verse refer to. Is it the covenant that God made with Adam, “But when guidance comes from Me, as it certainly will, whosoever follows My guidance, on them shall be no fear, nor shall they grieve? But those who disbelieve and deny Our revelations, they shall be companions of the fire; they shall abide therein.” (2:38-39) Or is it the initial universal covenant that God made with humankind not to worship anyone but Him. This is a covenant that has been deeply engrained in the initial natural disposition of humankind. It gives humankind the propensity to seek God. This natural propensity can be impaired as a result of external factors that misguide humankind away from the right path. Or is it the special covenant that God made with Prophet Abraham (PBUH), the account of which will be given later on, “And remember when Abraham was tried by his Lord with certain commands, which he fulfilled. He said, ‘I will make you a leader for humankind.’ Abraham said, ‘And of my offspring (will they be leaders).’ He answered, ‘My promise does not include the wrongdoers.’” (2:124) Or is it the covenant that God made with the Children of Israel when He raised the mountain over their heads and asked them to hold fast to what God has given them.

All these covenants are in essence one covenant. It is the covenant between the Creator and His servants to consecrate their hearts to God alone and to thoroughly submit themselves to Him. This is the essence of God’s single religion, the religion of submission which constituted the message brought by all the messengers of God. This was the banner carried high by the procession of faith over the history of humanity. So, God calls upon the Children of Israel to fulfill this covenant and to fear Him alone, “And fear none but Me.” He also reminds them that in order to fulfill the covenant they have to believe in what God revealed to His Prophet (PBUH) which confirms the revelation that they received before, and that they should not hasten to reject it, becoming the first disbelievers, “And believe in what I reveal, confirming the revelation which you possess already, and be not the first to reject it,” The religion of Islam which Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) brought is the last version of the single eternal message. It is a continuation of the same message that came from God and the eternal covenant between God and all humankind. It includes all previous versions of the Message, and it consolidates the old and new testaments and adds what God wants to add for the benefit of humankind. It brings all humankind together in a single brotherhood. They gather around God’s religion and fulfill His covenant irrespective of their race, nationality, or political affiliation.

God admonishes the Children of Israel not to reject the new message seeking worldly gains or fearing loss of power and influence, “Nor sell My revelation for a small price; and be conscious of Me alone.” The verse continues to warn against hiding the truth, “And do not cover the truth with falsehood, nor knowingly conceal the truth,” with the intention of spreading chaos and sedition in the Muslim community. The verse then exhorts them to join the procession of the faithful and practice the obligatory duties, “And establish in prayer; pay the poor-dues; and bow down your heads with those who bow down (in worship).”

The verse then continues to rebuke the religious leaders who use double standards in their dealings, “Do you enjoin right conduct on the people, and forget (to practice it) yourselves, and you study the Scripture? Have you then no sense?” Although this verse was revealed to address a specific incident, but it also addresses all professional religious leaders, irrespective of their persuasion, who use double standards in their dealings. There is always a fear that religious leaders abuse their power when religion ceases to be a way of life or a deep rooted conviction and it becomes a profession or a vocation. They may succumb to the temptation of money and power to twist the facts or produce decrees (fatwas), which may seem to agree with the apparent meaning of the verses but deviate greatly from the true spirit of the religion, to satisfy people in power. It is a grave blunder not to practice what one preaches. Not only people will be doubtful of their religious leaders but they will also be doubtful of the morals of the religion itself, because they listen to nice talk but they see ugly deeds. Hence the advice was not meant only for the Jews, who were addressed with these verses, but it was also addressed to religious leaders of all persuasions, “Seek (God’s) help with perseverance and prayer;” Jews were advised to follow what they knew to be the truth rather than worry about their special status in Medina. They should sacrifice whatever worldly gain they were getting and join the procession of faith, especially since they considered themselves a beacon of faith in the midst of the idolatry society of Medina. However, this required perseverance which comes through prayers. It is a difficult undertaking that can only be achieved by those who are humble, conscious of their Lord, and are certain about meeting Him on the Day of Judgment, “It is indeed hard, except for those who are humble. Who know that they will certainly meet their Lord, and that they will return to Him.” Seeking support and help through perseverance and prayers is mentioned repeatedly in the Qur’an. Perseverance and prayers provide the support necessary to overcome any adversity or hardship. It is indeed a hardship to relinquish the glamour, the power, and the wealth that usually come with leadership positions in favour of telling the truth.

What is the meaning of prayers? Prayers are an opportunity for the servant of God to meet and connect with his Lord. It is a conveyer that provides the heart with strength, and the soul with solace. This is a sustenance which is more valuable than any worldly material gain. Although the Prophet (PBUH) was always in close contact with his Lord, but he used to seek solace in prayers whenever he was faced with an adversity. Prayers continue to be a resource available for every believer who needs sustenance for the road, water to quench the thirst during the journey of life, and moral support when the support becomes scarce.

The certainty of meeting God is the focal point of perseverance and prayers, it is the focal point of God consciousness, and it is the focal point of the authentic standard of the true values. When one uses an authentic standard for the values, worldly gains appear trivial compared to the reward in the Hereafter. A wise person will find no difficulty in making the right choice.

The verses continue to address the Children of Israel and remind them with God’s favours which He bestowed on them, “Children of Israel, remember My blessings which I bestowed upon you, and that I favoured you over other people. Then guard yourselves against a day when one soul shall not avail another nor shall intercession be accepted for it, nor shall compensation be taken from it, nor shall anyone be helped.” God’s favour which was bestowed on the Children of Israel and made them the “chosen people” was contingent on the fulfillment of their covenant with God. The favour of being a chosen people ceased when they failed to fulfill the covenant, disobeyed their Prophets, became ungrateful, and abdicated their responsibility. When this happened, God’s curse and anger fell on them, and they were dispersed in the land. Reminding them of God’s favour which they enjoyed before was meant to motivate them to return back to God’s path and to join the procession of faith through the Islamic call. The motivation is followed by the warning of the Day of Judgment. Belief is a personal responsibility. Every soul is accountable for its deeds. On that day, no intercession will be accepted on behalf of those who did not believe and did not do good deeds nor will they be able to ransom themselves.

The verses continue to enumerate the blessings of God on the Children of Israel, “And remember, We delivered you from the people of Pharaoh, who subjected you to dreadful torment, slaughtered your sons, and let your women-folk live; that was a tremendous trial from your Lord. And when We parted the sea for you and saved you and drowned Pharaoh's people before your eyes.” An image of the strife of their ancestors in Egypt and how they were miraculously saved is painted. Details of the strife are mentioned: the killing of male babies and letting the females live. This was a trial from God. Then the miraculous escape of the Jews and the drowning of the Egyptians are mentioned. The description which is given for this experience here is brief and serves as a reminder of the trial and the deliverance of the Children of Israel. The verse paints a vivid image of the Jews reaching the shores of the Red sea under the leadership of Prophet Moses (PBUH) trying to flee the Egyptians who were earnestly pursuing them and suddenly the sea was parted so that they can cross it and escape. The experience has been detailed in other Suras of the Qur’an.

“And We appointed forty nights for Moses, and in his absence you chose the calf (for worship), and you were wrongdoers. Even then, We did pardon you; in order that you may be grateful. And when We gave Moses the Scripture and the Criterion (Between right and wrong), so that you may be guided. And when Moses said to his people, ‘My people, you have indeed wronged yourselves by your worship of the calf. So turn (in repentance) to your Maker, and slay the wrongdoers from among yourselves; that will be better for you in the sight of your Maker.’ Then He turned toward you (in forgiveness); for He is the Ever-Relenting, the Giver of Mercy.” This is only a brief reference to the story of the calf and how it was used for worship when Moses (PBUH) went to meet his Lord; more details are given in Surat TaHa (Chapter 20). This was a transgression on their part; however, God forgave them and gave Prophet Moses (PBUH) the Scripture (the Torah). The Scripture embodied the criteria that differentiate between right and wrong, so they would be guided.

After this transgression, there was a need for extreme purification, which can only be achieved when they “slay the wrongdoers from among yourselves; that will be better for you in the sight of your Maker.” This was a severe undertaking but it was the only way for penitence. Their repentance was accepted by God.

“And remember when you said, ‘Moses, we shall never believe in you until we see God manifestly,’ so the thunderbolt overtook you while you looked on. Then We raised you up after your death that you may be grateful. And We gave you the shade of clouds and sent down to you Manna and quails, saying, ‘Eat of the good things We have provided for you.’ They wronged Us not, but they did wrong themselves.” Were they only capable of gaining knowledge through physical senses, or were they being stubborn? The abundance of signs, blessings, and forgiveness from God were not able to change their materialistic hard nature. They continued to argue and wrangle until the wrath of God befell them. They said to Moses (PBUH), “We shall never believe in you until we see God manifestly, so the thunderbolt overtook you while you looked on.” But God’s mercy engulfed them and they got another chance, perchance they remember and be grateful to God. The verses reminded them of the incident when God raised them from the dead after the thunderbolt overtook them. They were also reminded of God’s blessings when they were in the barren desert, when God provided them with tasteful food at no effort on their part and He protected them from the extreme heat of the sun and the extreme cold of the desert, “And We gave you the shade of clouds and sent down to you Manna and quails, saying, ‘Eat of the good things We have provided for you,’” Stories are narrated about how God provided them with Manna which they found on trees. It tasted like honey. He also provided them with a bird called Salwa, which they were able to capture easily. Thus, they were blessed with tasteful food and comfortable stay, but they were ungrateful.

“And when We said, ‘Enter this town, and eat freely therein as you wish in abundance; but enter the gate with humility, in posture and in words, and We will forgive you your sins and will increase (reward) for the good-doers.’ But the wrongdoers changed the word from that which had been given them; so We sent on the wrongdoers a plague from heaven, because they infringed (Our command).” Some narrations indicate that the town mentioned here was Jerusalem. Jerusalem was the homestead of the Giants. The Jews were commanded to conquer the city and expel the Giants, but they declined on the account that they cannot conquer the Giants. They said, “Moses! A giant people (dwell) therein and we will not go in till they exit. When they go out, then we will enter.” (5:22) Those who transgressed and disobeyed the command were punished. It should be noted that the verse singles out those who transgressed from among them.

The provision of water in the desert was another miracle that God bestowed on the Children of Israel, in addition to the provision of food and shade. The Qur’an reminds them with this miracle “And remember when Moses prayed for water for his people;” God responded favourably, “Strike the rock with your staff. Then gushed forth therefrom twelve springs. Each group knew its own place for water. So eat and drink of the sustenance provided by God, and do neither evil nor mischief on the (face of the) earth.” When Moses (PBUH) requested water for the Children of Israel, God responded favourably to his request. He asked him to strike a particular rock with his staff. Out of the rock gushed water from twelve springs, the same number as the number of the Israelite tribes. These tribes were the descendants of the twelve grandchildren of Prophet Jacob (Israel) (PBUH). Each tribe was given its own spring for its members to drink. The verse ends by a warning against doing evil or mischief.

“And when you said, ‘Moses, we cannot endure one kind of food (always); so call upon your Lord for us to produce for us of what the earth grows of herbs, cucumbers, garlic, lentils, and onions.’ He said, ‘Will you exchange the better for the worse? Go you down to any town (misr), and you shall find what you want.’ And humiliation and misery were stamped on them; they drew on themselves the wrath of God. This is because they continued to reject God’s message and to slay His Messengers without just cause. This was so because they rebelled and they were aggressors.” Moses (PBUH) reprimanded them for this strange request. Do you want to exchange the tasteful food that God gave you with a food of a lesser quality? This is not a matter worthy of praying for, go down to any town and you will find what you are asking for. There are two possible interpretations for the Arabic word “Misr” used in this verse. In the Arabic language a town is called “misr”; also “Misr” is the name of the country Egypt. So, the verse may mean that the food they requested is a common food that can be found in any town; or it may mean do you want to go back to Egypt in which you suffered misery and humiliation where you can find the food you requested.

“Those who believe (in that which is revealed to you Muhammad), and those who follow the Jewish (scriptures), and the Christians and the Sabians,- any who believe in God and the Last Day, and do good deeds, shall have their reward with their Lord; on them shall be no fear, nor shall they grieve.”

Those who believe in that which is revealed to Muhammad (PBUH) are the Muslims, those who follow the Jewish Scripture are the Jews, and the Christians are the followers of Jesus (PBUH). Most likely, the Sabians were a group of the Arabs who rejected idol worship and were looking for a better faith. This group adopted the belief in the Oneness of God and followed Abraham’s (PBUH) faith. So, the idolaters called them “Sabians” meaning that they rejected the faith of their ancestors. The verse indicates that those who believe in God and the Day of Judgment and do good deeds from any of these groups will get their reward from God and they will have no fear nor will they be saddened.

“And remember when We took your covenant and We caused the mount to tower above you (Saying), ‘Hold fast to what We have given you and remember that which is therein so that you become conscious of God.’ But you turned away thereafter. Had it not been for the Grace and Mercy of God, you would have most assuredly been among the losers.” The content of the covenant is detailed in other Suras, and some of the details are mentioned later in this Sura. The verse paints a vigorous image: the mount is raised, the pledge is sought, and the command to hold fast to the covenant is issued. It is a clear command to stand firm in matters of faith. The covenant between God and the believers is an unequivocal pledge to strive in the way of God. It involves responsibilities and hardships but the believer should accept it whole heartedly and spare no effort in upholding the responsibilities and overcoming the hardships. This sentiment was voiced by the messenger when he was called upon to carry the responsibility of the message. He said to his wife, “It is no longer sleep time.” God told him, “We will reveal to you a heavy message;” (73:5) similarly, the Children of Israel were asked to hold fast to the covenant. To be able to hold fast to the covenant, it is imperative that they should remember its contents and understand its essence. The covenant of God details a way of life for the believers. The principles underlying this way of life should rest deep in the hearts of the believers, should be reflected on their behaviour, and should shape their lives as a whole. These principles should lead the believers to become highly and continuously conscious of God. But the Children of Israel turned away; however, once more they were saved by the mercy of God.

“And you knew those among you who transgressed in the matter of the Sabbath. We said to them, ‘Be you apes, despised and rejected.’ So We made it an example to those who witnessed it and to the succeeding generations, and a lesson to those who are conscious of God.” Breaking the law on the Sabbath was also mentioned in another Sura, “and ask them about the village near the sea. The fish become abundant on the Sabbath but they disappear during normal days.” (7:163) The Jews requested a day for rest, so God made the Sabbath a sacred resting day. They were then tested by God when they noticed that the fish appears in abundance on the Sabbath, but disappear on regular days. They wanted the fish, but were afraid to blatantly break the law. Can they persevere and lose a plentiful catch of fish? They succumbed to the temptation and broke the law of the Sabbath in a roundabout way. They installed barriers to trap the fish when it comes on the Sabbath. Then, they catch the fish the day after the Sabbath, “We said to them, ‘Be you apes, despised and rejected.’”

They deserved to be punished for reneging on their covenant with God. Those who succumb to their desires in face of temptation relinquish the status of the free-willed humans. They lose the highly valued free-willed status of humankind that they gained through their covenant with God. The verse does not mean that they were made apes in a physical sense, but it points to the similarity between the two conditions: losing the free-willed status of humans and being apes with no control over their desires. They became similar to the apes in their thoughts and feelings. This was a lesson for those who witnessed this event and an admonition for the believers in all ages, “So We made it an example to those who witnessed it and to the succeeding generations, and a lesson to those who are conscious of God.”

Then, we come to the story of the cow which is narrated in detail and is mentioned only in this Sura. “And remember Moses when he said to his people, ‘God commands that you sacrifice a cow.’ They said, ‘do you make us a laughing-stock?’ He said, ‘God forbid that I should be among the foolish.’ They said, ‘Call upon your Lord on our behalf to make plain to us what cow it is.’ He said, ‘He says, “The cow should be neither too old nor too young, but of middle age.’ Now do what you are commanded.” They said, ‘Call upon your Lord on our behalf to make plain to us its colour.’ He said, ‘He says, “Verily it is a bright yellow cow, pure and rich in tone and gives delight to the beholders.” They said, ‘Call upon you Lord on our behalf to make plain to us what it is, to us are all cows alike. We wish indeed for guidance, if God wills.’ He said, ‘He say, “A cow not trained to till the soil nor water the fields; sound and without blemish.” They said, ‘Now you have brought the truth.’ Then they offered it in sacrifice; though they almost failed to do it. Thus, God brings the dead to life and shows you His Signs, so you may understand.”

This short story, as it is narrated in the Qur’an, deals with several aspects that warrant some reflection on the part of the reader. The story describes the argument that the Children of Israel had with Prophet Moses (PBUH) when he asked them to make a sacrifice by slaughtering a cow. The story also shines the light on two major issues: the certainty of resurrection after death, and the nature of life and death. One also should pay attention to the beauty and flow of the narrative.

The argumentative nature of the Children of Israel is apparent from the narrative. Their hearts lost contact with the pure spring of the belief in the unseen, the trust in God, and the ability to believe in what comes to them through the messengers of God. The story tells of their procrastination in following the commands of God and making excuses to evade complying with the command. Their prophet said to them, "God commands that you sacrifice a cow." This should have been enough for them to comply. Their prophet was their leader who saved them, with the grace of God, from the humiliating torture at the hands of the Egyptians. He made clear to them that this was not his own command but God's command. They responded rudely because they thought that their prophet was mocking them. This is highly inappropriate. Moses (PBUH) responded saying, "God forbids." This was a gentle reminder of the proper etiquette to be followed when dealing with God Almighty and His messenger. It was also a reminder that it is not appropriate to think that God's messenger is mocking them. At this point, they could have easily complied with the command by sacrificing any cow. But they chose to ask, "Call upon your Lord on our behalf to make plain to us what cow it is." The way they framed the question may suggest that they were still in doubt of the seriousness of the command. They asked Moses (PBUH) to ask his God - as if God was only the God of Moses and not their God as well- about the cow. Moses (PBUH) answered their question and continued to gently guide them to the right path and to teach them what they should do. He told them that God says, "The cow should be neither too old nor too young, but of middle age," so, you should now follow the command. The dialogue should have stopped at this point. They could have easily found a cow that matches the general description that was given, but they continued with their questions. This time they asked about its color. The response was forthcoming that it was yellow in color. Each question they asked brought about more restrictions. The cow is now a middle aged cow, yellow in color, and pleasing to the eye. However, this was not specific enough for them. They continued to ask for more details. However, they followed their request with an apology for the many questions they asked. It became evident that the more they asked for more details the narrower the choices available to them became. It would have been much easier if they had complied with the command once it was issued by sacrificing any cow. The description became more specific, not only the cow should be middle-aged, yellow, and pleasant to the sight, but it had to be a cow that was not trained to till the land nor water the plants. Its color should be clear without a blemish. "Now you have brought the truth, then they offered her in sacrifice, though they almost failed to do it," was their answer. God then revealed to them the rationale behind the command, "And remember when you slew a man and fell into a dispute among yourselves as to the crime. But God brought forth what you did hide. So We said, 'Strike the (body) with a piece of the (cow).'' Thus, God brings the dead to life and shows you His Signs, so you may understand." A person was murdered, there were no witnesses to identify the culprit, but many accusations were made. God wanted to bring the victim back to life, long enough, to identify his killer.

This brings us to the second aspect of the story, the aspect that deals with the power of the Creator, the certainty of the resurrection, and the nature of life and death. The style of the verses changes from a narrative style to confrontation and blame. A man was killed, no one witnessed the crime, and a dispute ensued about who killed him. God wanted the truth to be announced by the murdered person himself. The cow that was sacrificed was the tool used to accomplish this objective. God asked the disputing parties to strike the corps with a piece of the cow's flesh. When the murdered person's corps was struck with the flesh of the cow, he was raised from the dead to tell them who had murdered him. Thus, the culprit was named and the truth became known without any shadow of a doubt. But what is the rationale behind this long process.

Certainly, God has the power to raise the dead without going through this process. What is the relationship between the dead cow and the man who was raised from the dead?

It was the custom of the Children of Israel to offer cows as a sacrifice to God. A piece of the flesh of a dead cow was used to cause a dead person to be raised again. The flesh of the dead cow has no power to give life to a dead person. It is only a tool to show the power of God. No one knows the mechanism behind the power or how it works; one only sees its effects. The moral of the story is that God can raise the dead in front of your eyes using simple ways which cannot be fathomed by people. The leap from death to life is huge. It is a jump that baffles people. But it is a simple matter for the Divine. How? No one knows. It is beyond the comprehension of any human being. It is one of the secrets of the Divine power.

This evocative scene, which should have moved the hearts of the Children of Israel and filled them with the light of God consciousness, is followed by a very strong final statement. “Then, after that, your hearts were hardened and became like a rock and even harder. For indeed there are rocks from which rivers gush forward; others send forth water when they are split asunder; and others sink for fear of God. And God is not unmindful of what you do.” Their hearts were likened to the rock in its hardness. They were familiar with the nature of rocks and they knew how hard they can be. They have seen the water gushing from the rock that Moses (PBUH) struck into twelve springs and they have seen how the mountain was destroyed when God manifested Himself to it. But their hearts remained rigid and inflexible. Hence the warning, “God is not unmindful of what you do.”

Verses: 75 to 103

75. Can you (believers) entertain the hope that they will be true to you? Seeing that a party of them heard the word of God and they distorted it knowingly after they understood it.

76. When they meet the believers, they say, "We believe." But when they meet each other in private, they say, "Shall you tell them what God has revealed to you, that they may engage you in argument about it before your Lord? Do you not understand?"

77. Do not they know that God knows what they conceal and what they reveal?

78. And among them there are illiterates. They only know the Scripture through hearsay. They do nothing but conjecture.

79. Therefore, woe to those who write the Scripture with their own hands, and then say, "This is from God," to make a small gain. Woe to them for what their hands do write, and for the gain they earn.

80. And they say, "The Fire shall not touch us except for a few numbered days." Say, "Have you taken a promise from God, for He never breaks His promise? Or is it that you say of God what you do not know?"

81. Certainly, those who earn evil and are surrounded by their sins, they are companions of the Fire. Therein shall they abide (for ever).

82. But those who believe and do good, they are companions of the Garden. Therein shall they abide (for ever).

83. And remember when We took a covenant from the Children of Israel. Worship none but God; treat with kindness your parents and kindred, and orphans and those in need; speak to people kindly; establish prayer; and pay the poor-dues. Then did you turn back, except a few among you, and you were refusing.

84. And remember We took your covenant. Shed not the blood of your people, nor evict your own people from your homes. Then you ratified (Our covenant) and you were witnesses to that.

85. Yet here you are slaying each other and driving out a party of your people from their homes, supporting one another against them in sin and aggression? And if they came to you as captives you would ransom them, whereas their expulsion was itself unlawful for you. Do you believe in parts of the Scripture and reject others? And what is the reward of those who do so save ignominy in the life of this world, and on the Day of Resurrection they will be consigned to the most grievous torment. For God is not unaware of what you do.

86. These are the people who buy the life of this world at the price of the Hereafter. Their torment shall not be lightened nor shall they be helped.

87. And Indeed, We gave Moses the Scripture and followed him up with a succession of messengers; We gave Jesus the son of Mary clear signs and strengthened him with the Holy Spirit. Is it that whenever there comes to you a messenger with what you yourselves do not desire, you grow arrogant? Some you called impostors, and others you slew.

88. They say, "Our hearts are covered." Nay, God's curse is on them for their blasphemy. Little is that which they believe.

89. And when there comes to them a Book from God, confirming that which is in their possession, although before that they had prayed for victory against the disbelievers, when there comes to them that which they (should) have recognized, they refuse to believe in it. The curse of God is on the disbelievers.

90. Miserable is the price for which they have sold their souls, that they deny (the revelation) which God has sent down, grudging that God should reveal of His bounty on whom He pleases of His servants. Thus, they have incurred wrath upon wrath. And humiliating is the torment of those who disbelieve.

91. When it is said to them, "Believe in what God has revealed," they say, "We believe in what was revealed to us," and they reject what came after it, even if it is the truth confirming what they have. Say, "Why then have you slain the prophets of God in times gone by, if you are indeed believers?"

92. And Indeed, Moses came to you with clear signs, yet, while he was away, you chose the calf (for worship) and you were wrongdoers.

93. And remember when We made a covenant with you and caused the Mount to tower above you, (saying), "Hold fast to that which We have given you, and hear (Our Word)," they said, "We hear and we disobey." And they were made to imbibe (the love of) the calf into their hearts on account of their disbelief. Say (to them), "Evil is that which your belief enjoins upon you, if you are believers."

94. Say to them, "If the abode of the Hereafter in the providence of God is indeed for you alone and not for others of humankind (as you claim), then long for death if you are truthful."

95. But they will never long for it, because of that which their own hands have sent before them. God is aware of the wrongdoers.

96. And you will indeed find them, of all people, most greedy for life, even more than the idolaters. Each one of them wishes he could be given a life of a thousand years. But the grant of such life will not save him from torment. For God sees well all that they do.

97. Say, "Whoever is an enemy to Gabriel – no one else brought it down (the revelation) to your heart by God's leave, a confirmation of what went before, and guidance and glad tidings for those who believe.

98. Whoever is the enemy of God and His angels and His messengers and Gabriel and Michael, so indeed God is the enemy of the disbelievers?

99. Verily, We have sent down to you clear signs; and none reject them but those who are the transgressors.

100. Is it not so that every time they make a covenant, a party of them cast it aside? The truth is, most of them do not believe.

101. And when there came to them a messenger from God, confirming that which they have, a party of the People of the Scripture threw away the Scripture of God behind their backs, as if (it had been something) they did not know.

102. And they followed that which the devils fabricated against the kingdom of Solomon. Solomon was not a disbeliever. But the devils disbelieved, teaching humankind magic and that which was revealed to the two angels in Babel, Harut and Marut. Nor did they (the two angels) teach it to anyone till they had said, "We are only a trial, therefore do not disbelieve." And from these two (angles) people learn that by which they cause division between man and his wife; but they harm thereby no-one save by God's leave. And they learn that which harms them and does not benefit them. And they certainly knew that whoever made a gain from this knowledge will have no share in the Hereafter; and indeed, evil is the price for which they sell their souls, if they but knew.

103. And if they had believed and remained conscious of God, recompense from God would be better, if they only knew. (2:75-103)

"Can you (believers) entertain the hope that they will be true to you? Seeing that a party of them heard the Word of God and they distorted it knowingly after they understood it." There is no hope that people of such a character would accept faith. People who accept faith have open minds and souls which are ready to receive the light of guidance. They are prepared to connect with the eternal pure spring of guidance. They are conscious of God. This consciousness prevents them from distorting the word of God after reading and comprehending it. The party that is referred to in these verses is a group of Jewish scholars who were knowledgeable of the truth revealed in the Torah. They distorted the truth given in the Torah, which was revealed to their Prophet Moses (PBUH), by providing round about interpretations of its verses to change their intended meaning, not because they did not understand the intended meaning but because they were motivated by their own desires to protect their interests and remain in a position of authority among their people. One cannot expect them to believe in the truth revealed to Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) after they had distorted the truth revealed to Prophet Moses (PBUH).

"When they meet the believers, they say, 'We believe.' But when they meet each other in private, they say, 'Shall you tell them what God has revealed to you, that they may engage you in argument about it before your Lord?' Do you not understand?" This group of scholars had two traits, corruption and hypocrisy, what hope can you hold that they would be true to you? Some of them used to say to the believers, "We believe in what Muhammad brought," because the advent of Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) corroborates the prophecies of the Torah. They were hoping that the new prophet becomes their saviour. However, when they congregated together they blamed each other for revealing what in their Scripture to the believers. They thought that revealing this information to the believers will be taken as a proof against them in front of God. “Do not they know that God knows what they conceal and what they reveal?”

“And among them there are illiterates. They only know the Scripture from hearsay. They do nothing but conjecture. Therefore, woe to those who write the Scripture with their own hands, and then say, ‘This is from God,’ to make a small gain. Woe to them for what their hands do write, and for the gain they earn.” It is not expected of such people to accept the truth and become guided. These people have no scruple to change and distort verses in their revealed Scripture when these verses stand between them and their interests. They will be punished severely by God for the infractions they committed.

They had hoped that they will be spared the torment no matter what they do. This is merely wishful thinking that contravenes divine justice. They believed that they will only stay for a few days in Hell then they will be moved to the eternal bliss. These aspirations are not in alignment with God’s system of justice, nor are they aligned with the principle that the recompense should be commensurate with the deeds. “And they say, ‘The Fire shall not touch us except for a few numbered days.’ Say, ‘Have you taken a promise from God, for He never breaks His promise? or is it that you say of God what you do not know?’” This is the divine statement for the proof against them, “Have you taken a promise from God” where is then this promise? “Or is it that you say of God what you do not know.” This is a rhetorical question which conveys a rejection of their claim.

At this point, the unequivocal statement, which elucidates one of the fundamental principles of Islam and refutes their claim, is pronounced. This principle emanates from the comprehensive Islamic perspective on the universe, life, and humankind. Recompense is fitting and according to the deeds, “Certainly, those who earn evil and are surrounded by their sins, they are companions of the Fire, Therein, shall they abide (for ever). But those who believe and do good, they are companions of the Garden. Therein shall they abide (for ever).” We have to stop here and reflect on this profound artistic description of the state of mind of the sinner. The word “earn” is used to describe the act of committing a sin. This describes the state of mind of the person who commits a sin. A person commits a sin because he/she enjoys the act and thinks that he/she earned the pleasure that comes with it. Those people do not think that they are committing a hateful act. Had they thought of it as a loss rather than a gain, they would not have done it. Had they thought of it as a hateful deed and they somehow succumbed to the temptation and committed the sin, they would have hastened to seek God’s forgiveness. In this case, they would not have been surrounded by their sin. A person who enjoys being in sin and does not feel bad about doing it, is surrounded by this sin. The sin surrounds them all around and prevents them from seeing anything else other than instant gratification. Thus, they do not see a reason for remorse and seeking repentance or forgiveness. The term “surrounded by their sins” exemplifies this concept. This is one of the characteristics of the Qur’anic diction which gives it a profound power in painting dramatic images that flood the hearts with emotions. What image could be more compelling than the image of a person imprisoned by his sin? When the doors to repentance are shut on a person in the prison of sin, then there is no escape from the swift, just recompense, “They are companions of the Fire.” The recompense for the believers follows, “They are companions of the Garden.” True faith rests deep in the heart of a believer and provides the source from which good deeds spring. It is crucial that those who call themselves Muslims understand and apply this principle. True faith should lead to good deeds. Those who call themselves Muslims and spread mischief in the land are not true believers. Faith is never complete if it is not reflected on the deeds of a person.

The verses continue to talk about the Children of Israel and describe the different covenants between them and God, “And remember when We took a covenant from the Children of Israel. Worship none but God; treat with kindness your parents and kindred, and orphans and those in need; speak to people kindly; establish prayer; and pay the poor-dues. Then did you turn back, except a few among you, and you were refusing. And remember We took your covenant. Shed not the blood of your people, nor evict your own people from your homes. Then you ratified (Our covenant) and you were witnesses to that. Yet here you are slaying each other and driving out a party of your people from their homes, supporting one another against them by sin and transgression? and if they came to you as captives you would ransom them, whereas their expulsion was itself unlawful for you. Do you believe in parts of the Scripture and reject others? And what is the reward of those who do so save ignominy in the life of this world, and on the Day of Resurrection they will be consigned to the most grievous torment. For God is not unaware of what you do. These are the people who buy the life of this world at the price of the Hereafter. Their torment shall not be lightened nor shall they be helped.” The first verse describes the details of the covenant between God and the Children of Israel. This is the covenant that was struck in the shade of the mount. This is the covenant that they were commanded to hold fast to and to remember its details. This is the covenant which comprised the fundamental principles of the religion of God, the same principles stated in Islam which they rejected.

The covenant dictated that they worship no one other than God. This is the first rule for the belief in the absolute Oneness of God. It dictated treating parents, the kin, the orphans, and the poor with kindness. It also ordained speaking nicely to people, enjoining what is good and forbidding what is evil, establishing prayer, and paying poor-dues. This covenant sums up the fundamental principles of Islam. These verses highlight two facts. The first fact is the Oneness of God’s religion, there is an agreement in principle between Islam (the last message) and the previous messages. The second fact is the obstinacy of those who rejected the message of Islam, despite the fact that it agrees in principle with the covenant that they had with God.

The verses then turn to address the Children of Israel, “Then did you turn back.” The verses then continue to list the infractions they committed against the covenant. “And remember We took your covenant. Shed not the blood of your people, nor evict your own people from your homes. Then you ratified (Our covenant) and you were witnesses to that. Yet here you are slaying each other and driving out a party of your people from their homes, supporting one another against them by sin and transgression? and if they came to you as captives you would ransom them, whereas their expulsion was itself unlawful for you. Do you believe in parts of the Scripture and reject others?” These verses describe a state of affairs which the Jews of Medina experienced before the migration of the Prophet (PBUH) to Medina. Although the two main Arab tribes of Medina, Al-Awas and Al-Khazraj, were both idolaters, but they were avowed enemies to each other. There were also three Jewish tribes, Bani Qaynuqa’, Bani Nadir, and Bani Qurayzah who resided in Medina. The Jewish tribes were divided among themselves. Bani Qaynuqa' and Bani Nadir aligned themselves with Al-Khazraj, while Bani Qurayzah aligned themselves with the Al-Awas. Whenever war erupted between the two Arab tribes, each Jewish tribe fought alongside its ally. This led to situations where a Jew fought and even killed another Jew. The covenant with God forbade them to kill one another. The side which emerged victorious at the end of the war would expel their enemy from their homes, loot their property, and take their women captive. This was a transgression against the covenant. After the hostilities had subsided, each Jewish tribe would ransom its members who fell captive as a result of the war - according to the statement in the Torah which ordained that it is incumbent on a Jew to free enslaved Jews. These verses confronted them with this contradictory behaviour, "Do you believe in parts of the Scripture and reject others?" The verse promised that this breach of the covenant will bring them, "Ignominy in the life of this world, and on the Day of Resurrection they will be consigned to the most grievous torment."

The true nature of those who behave in this fashion is declared to all people, Muslims and non-Muslims, "These are the people who buy the life of this world at the price of the Hereafter. Their torment shall not be lightened nor shall they be helped."

"And indeed, We gave Moses the Scripture and followed him up with a succession of messengers; We gave Jesus the son of Mary Clear Signs and strengthened him with the Holy Spirit. Is it that whenever there comes to you a messenger with what you yourselves do not desire, you grow arrogant? Some you called impostors, and others you slew." This verse addresses the assertion which some of the Children of Israel made: they did not need a new religion because it was sufficient for them to follow the laws and teachings which their previous prophets brought. The verse reminded them of how they treated some of the prophets who were sent to them before. The verse pointed out the similarity between their attitudes toward earlier prophets and their attitude toward Prophet Muhammad (PBUH).

The verse elaborates on their interaction with Prophet Moses (PBUH), a topic which was touched upon in earlier verses. The verse also describes how they treated some of the prophets who were sent to them and cites, as an example, Jesus the son of Mary (PBUH) who was endowed with the ability to perform miracles and was supported by the Holy Spirit. Whenever a messenger came to them with that which they did not desire, they either rejected the messenger or slew him.

"They say, 'Our hearts are covered.' Nay, God's curse is on them for their blasphemy. Little is that which they believe." They said their hearts were sealed, they were no longer in the mood to receive a new message, nor could they listen to a new messenger. They said this to Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) and to the Muslims to explain why they did not respond favourably to the call of Prophet Muhammad (PBUH). God responded to their assertions, "God's curse is on them for their blasphemy." They rejected the guidance given to them, so God distanced them further from guidance as a punishment for their rejection. Therefore, only few of them will heed the guidance and become believers. The word "little" could also mean that their faith is "little" because they rejected guidance when it came to them.

Their rejection was unreasonable, because they were waiting in anticipation for a new prophet but when one came to them - with a message that confirmed the revelation that they had received before - they rejected him. “And when there comes to them a Book from God, confirming that which is in their possession, although before that they had prayed for victory against the disbelievers, when there comes to them that which they (should) have recognized, they refuse to believe in it. The curse of God is on the disbelievers.” This rejection is punished by a curse from God.

The following verse uncovers the true reasons behind their rejection, “Miserable is the price for which they have sold their souls, that they deny (the revelation) which God has sent down, grudging that God should reveal of His bounty on whom He pleases of His servants. Thus, they have incurred wrath upon wrath. And humiliating is the torment of those who disbelieve.” They sold their souls for a miserable price. The price they received for their souls is their rejection of the faith. This is truly a losing bargain.

“When it is said to them, ‘Believe in what God has revealed,’ they say, ‘We believe in what was revealed to us’ and they reject what came after it, even if it is the truth confirming what they have. Say, ‘Why then have you slain the prophets of God in times gone by, if you are indeed believers?’” This is what they used to say when they were called to Islam, “We believe in what was revealed to us.” They thought that this is enough. They rejected what Jesus and Muhammad (PBUH) brought. The verses express a sense of amazement. Why would they reject the newer revelation which was sent down, after they had received their first revelation, while they know that the newer revelation is the truth? They were not interested in the truth; they were interested only in maintaining authority and power. They decided to deny the new revelation because it came through someone outside their circle. They worshiped themselves, their desires, and their clannish loyalty. They even rejected what their previous prophets brought when it stood against their desires and interests. The verse asked them, “If you truly believe in what you received before, why did you kill your prophets?”

“And indeed, Moses came to you with clear signs, yet, while he was away, you chose the calf (for worship) and you were wrongdoers.” Was it part of your faith to worship the calf after Moses (PBUH) brought you guidance? This was not the only time you did this, “And remember when We made a covenant with you and caused the Mount to tower above you, (saying), ‘Hold fast to that which We have given you, and hear (Our Word),’ they said, ‘We hear and we disobey.’ And they were made to imbibe (the love of) the calf into their hearts on account of their disbelief. Say (to them), ‘Evil is that which your belief enjoins upon you, if you are believers.’” The style changes here from addressing the Children of Israel to a narrative addressed to the believers and the rest of the world. It also tells the Prophet (PBUH) how to respond to them, “Evil is that which your belief enjoins on you, if you are believers.”

Let us stop for a moment to reflect on the expression, “We hear and we disobey. And they were made to imbibe (the love of) the calf into their hearts on account of their unbelief.” They said, “We hear,” but, they would not have been able to voice their disobedience. Why then the verse states that they said, “We disobey?” The verse vocalises the silent reality. Their tongues said, “We hear,” while their deeds said, “We disobey.” Deeds send a much stronger message than words. This is another Islamic fundamental principle: deeds, not words, what matter most. Deeds change an enunciated concept to a reality of life.

The verse paints a harsh image. Did they really imbibe the calf? How did they imbibe it in their hearts? The verse visualizes a calf being squeezed into their hearts. This image dramatically describes the strength of their love for the calf. The verse portrays a mental picture of how the love for the calf filled and flooded their hearts.

The Jews used to claim that they are God's chosen people. They claimed that only they are guided and only they will be successful in the Hereafter. No other nation will have a share in God's reward in the Hereafter. This claim implies that those who believe in Muhammad (PBUH) have no share in God's reward in the Hereafter. The claim was used to sow the seeds of doubt in the hearts of Muslims regarding the authenticity of the message of Islam and the truthfulness of the promises made by their Prophet (PBUH) and the Qur'an. They wanted to plant the seeds of mistrust between the believers and their Prophet (PBUH). So, God asked His Prophet (PBUH) to challenge them. The Prophet (PBUH) asked them to join him in calling upon God to destroy the erring party, "Say to them, if the abode of the Hereafter in the providence of God is indeed for you alone and not for others of humankind (as you claim), then long for death if you are truthful." The verse continued to tell the Prophet (PBUH) that they will not accept the challenge. They could not call upon God to destroy the erring party because they knew that this meant their own destruction, "But they will never long for it, because of that which their own hands have sent before them. God is aware of the evildoers."

"And you will indeed find them, of all people, most greedy for life, even more than the idolaters. Each one of them wishes he could be given a life of a thousand years. But the grant of such life will not save him from torment. For God sees well all that they do." They would love it if they can live for a thousand years, because they did not long to meeting God. They only loved this life and they had no aspirations for another life in the Hereafter. This worldly life would seem certainly very short if one feels that it does not lead to the Hereafter. The belief in the Hereafter is a blessing. It is a blessing that fills the heart of the believer. It is a blessing that God bestows on the mortals whose lives are short but their hopes are high. Only those who lost the sense of true life close the door that leads to the Hereafter. Not only is the belief in the Hereafter an indication of the belief in the ultimate justice of God, but it is also an indication of souls filled with refreshing vitality. It is an indicator of souls filled with eternal life that does not end at the boundaries of earth but goes beyond it to an open space that only God knows its extent. This is the open space that leads to the meeting with God.

The Qur'an commands Muhammad (PBUH) to pose to them another challenge, "Say, 'Whoever is an enemy to Gabriel – no one else brought it down (revelation) to your heart by God's leave, a confirmation of what went before, and guidance and glad tidings for those who believe.'" The Jews were hoping that God would send one of them as a prophet. They were very angry that the message was given to Muhammad (PBUH). Their anger led them to claim that Gabriel is their enemy claiming that he is the angel of destruction, torture, and misery. They claimed that this animosity became the barrier between them and the belief in Muhammad (PBUH). They claimed that had Michael been the one who brought the revelation to Muhammad (PBUH), they would have been able to believe in Muhammad (PBUH), because they claimed that Michael is the angel of opulence, rain, and fertility. This is truly ridiculous. How can Gabriel (PBUH) be their enemy? Gabriel (PBUH) was not a human working for them or against them. Gabriel (PBUH) was not doing things on his own; he was a servant of God. He does what God commands him to do, and never disobeyed what he has been told to do. The Qur'an in general confirms the previously revealed Scripture. The core of the message embodied in all revealed Scriptures and religions is the same. The message brings guidance and glad tidings to the believing hearts that are open to receive the message. This is a truth that needs to be emphasized. The verses of the Qur'an fill the believing hearts with concord and harmony; they open the doors of knowledge and understanding; and they create inspiration and feelings which can never be achieved without having faith. This leads to guidance and glad tidings. The Qur'an repeats this truth in several places in verses like, "Guidance to those who are conscious of God," (2:2) "It is certainly guidance and mercy to those who believe," (27:77) "Guidance and mercy to those who have certitude," (45:20) and "in it there is healing and mercy for the believers." (41:44) Guidance is the fruit of having faith, God consciousness, and certitude. Those who are the enemy of Gabriel (PBUH) are the enemy of God. Only those who reject faith differentiate between God, His angels, and His messengers, "Whoever is the enemy of God and His angels and His messengers and Gabriel and Michael, so indeed God is the enemy of the disbelievers."

"Verily, We have sent down to you clear signs; and none reject them but those who are transgressors. Is it not so that when they make a covenant a party of them cast it aside? The truth is, most of them do not believe. And when there came to them a messenger from God, confirming that which they have, a party of the People of the Scripture threw away the Scripture of God behind their backs, as if (it had been something) they did not know."

These verses indicate that the reason behind the actions of the Jewish scholars in Medina was their transgression. Transgression engulfs the heart and sways the initial natural disposition of a human being away from the true faith. A non-corrupt initial natural disposition leads people to the true faith. Only those who have a corrupt initial natural disposition are able to rationalize their rejection of faith.

The Jews were not even a closely knit group. They were divided into factions, and each faction was motivated by its own interests. They breached the covenants and were never united. They breached the covenant of God and the covenants they had with their Prophets. They also breached the agreement they had with Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) when he first came to Medina. They supported the Prophet's enemy, insulted his faith, and attempted to plant the seeds of sedition among Muslims in clear contravention of the terms of the agreement they had with him. Compare this behaviour with what the Muslims were commanded to do. The Prophet (PBUH) commanded the Muslims to support each other and to honour the pledge given by the least in power among them. When a Muslim makes a pledge to someone, it is the responsibility of all Muslims to honour that pledge. An army commander, Abu 'Ubaida, wrote to the Caliph 'Umar telling him that a Muslim slave pledged protection for the people living in a small township in Iraq. The commander sought 'Umar's advice how to deal with this pledge. 'Umar wrote back saying, “God ranks fidelity very high among human traits, so be faithful, honour the pledge, and leave them alone.” Fidelity is a trait for a nation united on the straight path.

“And when there came to them a messenger from God, confirming that which they have, a party of the People of the Scripture threw away the Scripture of God behind their backs, as if (it had been something) they did not know.” This is another way infidelity was manifested. Believing in the messengers of God was one of the terms of the covenant they made with God, but when a Book came to them confirming that which they already had, a group of them breached the covenant and rejected the new Book.

“And they followed that which the devils fabricated against the kingdom of Solomon. Solomon was not a disbeliever. But the devils disbelieved, teaching humankind magic and that which was revealed to the two angels in Babel, Harut and Marut. Nor did they (the two angels) teach it to anyone till they had said, ‘We are only a trial, therefore do not disbelieve’ And from these two (angels) people learn that by which they cause division between man and his wife; but they harm thereby no-one save by God’s leave. And they learn that which harms them and does not benefit them. And they certainly knew that whoever made a gain from this knowledge will have no share in the Hereafter; and indeed evil is the price for which they sell their souls, if they but knew.”

They rejected God’s revelation which confirmed what had been already revealed to them and listened instead to the stories narrated by the devils about Prophet Solomon (PBUH). The stories were lies aimed at distorting the image of Prophet Solomon (PBUH). They claimed that his controlling power was an import of the magic he practised. The Qur’an implies that the use of magic is a form of disbelief, so it affirms that Prophet Solomon (PBUH) was a believer and that the devils were the ones who disbelieved. The Qur’an affirms also that the angels did not receive magic instructions from God and they were truly believers. It seems that there was a certain understanding that the two angels, Harut and Marut, did practice magic and they used to teach people how to practice magic, but the Qur’an rejects this claim. The Qur’an states that God sent these two angels as a trial for people for a certain reason, known only to God. They used to say to those who came to them asking for instructions in magic that they were sent as a test for people. They admonished people who sought this knowledge not to fail this test, because if they fail the test they will join the ranks of the disbelievers. Some people did not heed this warning and continued to seek this knowledge. They came to learn how to cause a split between a man and his wife, the evil act that the angels warned them against. The Qur’an then emphasizes one of the fundamental principles of Islam, “but they harm thereby no-one save by God’s leave.” Only by God’s leave can the means lead to the results. Every Muslim should understand and be certain of the truthfulness of this statement. The truth is that those who practice magic to harm people can only harm themselves. The practice of magic is a form of disbelief which is bad enough for those who practice it. They knew that when they make this choice they will lose all hope in the Hereafter. This is the worst bargain they can make. This ruling applies to those who did learn magic at the hands of the angels, those who believed the fabrications made about Prophet Solomon (PBUH), and those who rejected God’s Book.

Verses: 104 to 123

104. Believers do not say (to the Messenger), "Listen to us," but say, "have patience with us," and hearken (unto him). The disbelievers will have a painful torment.
105. Neither those who disbelieved among the people of the Scripture nor the idolaters desire that any good thing should be sent down to you from your Lord. But God chooses for His mercy whom He wills, and God is of Infinite Bounty.
106. Nothing of Our revelations do We abrogate or cause to be forgotten (even a single verse), but We substitute it with another better or similar. Do you not know that God has power over all things?
107. Do you not know that to God belongs the dominion of the heavens and the earth? And besides Him you have neither guardian nor helper.
108. Or would you question your messenger as Moses was questioned before? But whoever replaces belief with disbelief has certainly gone astray from the right way.
109. Many of the people of the Scripture long to make you disbelieve after you have become believers, out of envy on their own account, after the truth has become manifest to them. Pardon and forbear until God gives command. God has power over all things.
110. And establish prayer and pay the poor-dues. Whatever good you send forth for your souls before you, you shall find it with God. God sees well all that you do.
111. And they say, "None shall enter paradise unless he is a Jew or a Christian." That is their wishful thinking. Say, "Bring your proof if you are truthful."
112. Nay, whoever submits himself entirely to God while doing good, his reward is with his Lord; on such shall be no fear, nor shall they grieve.
113. The Jews say, "The Christians have no grounds to stand upon;" and the Christians say, "The Jews have no grounds to stand upon." Yet they both read the same Scripture. And those who have no knowledge say the same. God will settle the dispute between them on the Day of Judgment.
114. And who is more unjust than he who forbids that God's name be celebrated in the places for God's worship, and who strives to ruin them? It was not fitting that such should themselves enter them except in fear. For them there is nothing but disgrace in this world, and in the hereafter great torment.
115. To God belong the east and the west, wherever you turn, there is the presence of God. For God is All-Embracing, Omniscient.
116. They say, "God has begotten a son." Glory be to Him. Nay, to Him belongs all that is in the heavens and earth. All are subservient to Him;
117. He is the Originator of the heavens and the earth. When He decrees a thing, He says, "Be," and it is.
118. And those who have no knowledge say, "Why does not God speak to us, nor is a sign shown to us?" Those before them said the same thing. Their hearts are all alike. We have made clear the revelations for people who have certitude.
119. Verily, We have sent you with the truth as a bearer of glad tidings and a warner. But you will not be asked about the companions of the blazing fire.
120. Never will the Jews or the Christians be satisfied with you unless you follow their form of religion. Say, "The Guidance of God is the (only) Guidance." Were you to follow their whims after the knowledge which has reached you, then you would find neither a protecting guardian nor a helper against God.

121. Those to whom We have sent the Scripture recite (follow) it as it should be recited (followed). They are the ones who believe in it. Those who deny its truth are the losers.
122. Children of Israel, remember My blessings which I bestowed upon you, and that I preferred you to all others.
123. Then guard yourselves against a day when one soul shall not avail another, nor shall compensation be accepted from it, nor shall intercession profit it, nor shall anyone be helped. (2:104-123)

“Believers, do not say (to the Messenger), ‘Listen to us,’ but say, ‘have patience with us,’ and hearken (to him). The disbelievers will have a painful torment.” The Arabic word which has been translated here as, “listen to us,” can be twisted into a form which means, “Foolish.” It is narrated that Muslims were admonished not to address the Prophet (PBUH) in this way because some silly Jews used to address the Prophet (PBUH) using the twisted form of this word. They wanted to deride the Prophet (PBUH) in a roundabout way without confronting him with their hostility. The Qur’an admonished the believers not to use this verb in addressing the Prophet (PBUH) so that others would not have an excuse for using it.

The Qur’an continues to explore the ill feelings that some Jews harboured against the believers because they begrudged the bounty that God bestowed upon the Muslims, “Neither those who disbelieved among the people of the Scripture nor the idolaters love that there should be sent down to you any good thing from your Lord. But God chooses for His mercy whom He wills, and God is of Infinite Bounty.” This was a reminder for the believers to be aware of their enemy and to be grateful to God for the bounty He bestowed upon them. The Qur’an groups those who rejected faith from among the people of the Scripture and the idolaters in one group because both of them rejected the last message. Both groups harboured feelings of hatred and jealousy against the Muslims mainly because they envied them for the bounty they received from God. They wished that they themselves would have been the recipients of such bounty. They loathed the fact that the Muslims would be blessed with this bounty. This is a blessing of God that He bestowed on the Muslims to carry the torch of the message to the whole world. God knows well who should deliver the message. He chose Muhammad (PBUH) because He knew that Muhammad (PBUH) was capable of delivering the message. God is of infinite bounty, nothing is greater than the bounty of being a messenger of God and nothing is greater than being a deliverer of the message.

“Nothing of Our revelations do We abrogate or cause to be forgotten (even a single verse), but We substitute it with another better or similar.” Irrespective of the occasion on which this verse was revealed, the verse states unequivocally the ruling regarding abrogation of verses in the Qur’an. During the lifetime of the Prophet (PBUH), some Islamic laws revealed in the Qur’an were slightly modified to suit the changing conditions of the Muslim community. These slight modifications were meant to achieve a greater good for the whole humanity. God the Creator - who sent the messengers and gave them the Scripture - is the one who knows best how to conduct these changes. He is the one who decides which verse - whether it is a verse that embodies a certain ruling, a sign, or a miracle - to abrogate and to replace with a better verse. God is the owner of everything and He has the absolute command of heavens and earth, “Do you not know that God has power over all things? Do you not know that to God belongs the dominion of the heavens and the earth? And besides Him you have neither guardian nor helper.” This was a warning and a reminder to the believers that only God can provide help and support. There is no helper or supporter beside Him. The warning was issued to Muslims who fell in the trap, became confused, and started asking the Prophet (PBUH) questions which showed weakness in faith. It was necessary to remind them, “Or would you question your messenger as Moses was questioned before? but whoever replaces belief with disbelief has strayed without doubt from the right way.” The verse denounced the behaviour of those Muslims who asked questions, similar to the questions that the Jews used to ask Prophet Moses (PBUH). They kept asking for proofs and miracles to confirm Moses’ (PBUH) commands. The reminder indicated that people who have this attitude usually end up deviating from the straight path, “Many of the people of the Scripture long to make you disbelieve after you have become believers, out of envy on their own account, after the truth has become manifest to them.” Jealousy drives people to adopt bad attitudes and to the desire to rob others of what they are blessed with.

But the Qur’an impresses on the believers the duty to be tolerant toward those who wanted to hurt them. The Qur’an wanted the believers to cleanse their hearts of ill feelings toward their enemy and to wait for God’s command. God has the will and power over everything, “Forgive and forbear until God gives command. God has power over all things.” And go forward on your way and worship your Lord, “And establish prayer and pay poor-dues. Whatever good you send forth for your souls before you, you shall find it with God. God sees well all that you do.”

The verses continue to respond to the claim that only Jews and Christians are rightly guided and only they will be admitted to paradise, “And they say, ‘None shall enter Paradise unless he is a Jew or a Christian.’ That is their own wishful thinking. Say, ‘Bring your proof if you are truthful.’ Nay, whoever submits himself entirely to God while doing good his reward is with his Lord; on such shall be no fear, nor shall they grieve. The Jews say, ‘The Christians have no grounds to stand upon;’ and the Christians say, ‘The Jews have no grounds to stand upon.’ Yet they both read the same Scripture. And those who have no knowledge say the same. God will settle the dispute between them on the Day of Judgment.” Although there was no Christian community in Medina, but the verses state a general principle regarding who will be admitted to paradise. God rewards people according to their deeds not according to who they are. The criteria for goodness are submission to God and doing good deeds. It is the same fundamental principle that was stated before: whoever earns a sin he will be encircled by his sin, and whoever submits to God and does good deeds will earn his reward from his Lord. Earning a sin is juxtaposed against submission to God. The expression “submitting one’s face to God,” conveys the meaning of complete and absolute submission to God. It is submission in belief and submission in actions. However, the value of the action is emphasized by, “while doing good.” Islamic faith stresses the inseparable bond between human feelings and behaviour, the inseparable bond between faith and deeds, and the inseparable bond between the belief in the heart and the doing of good. This turns faith into a way of life which unites all human activities into a single entity clear of any kind of duality or double standard. This makes people eligible for the greatest reward, “his reward is with his Lord; on such shall be no fear, nor shall they grieve.” This is a guaranteed reward that can never be lost, security that can never be tarnished by fear, and happiness that can never be touched by sadness. This is a fundamental principle that applies to all humanity.

Not only did the Christians and Jews dispute with each other, but also the idolaters Arabs were party to the dispute. The Arabs, who did not receive a Scripture similar to the Jews and Christians, were neither interested in Judaism nor Christianity. Those Arabs believed that their own religion is superior to Judaism and Christianity, so they also said to the Jews and Christians, “you have no grounds to stand on.” The Qur’an recorded these disputes, addressed the claims of each group, and stated that God has the final say in settling these disputes on the Day of Judgment, “God will settle the dispute between them on the Day of Judgment.” Everything will return to God and He will judge fairly among these disputing parties. This approach is the only effective way in dealing with a situation where the disputing parties could neither produce solid proofs to support their claims nor were they willing to listen to the voice of reason.

“And who is more unjust than he who forbids that God’s name be celebrated in the places for God’s worship, and who strives to ruin them? It was not fitting that such should themselves enter them except in fear. For them there is nothing but disgrace in this world, and in the Hereafter great torment. To God belong the east and the west; wherever you turn, there is the presence of God. For God is all-Embracing, Omniscient.” The first thought that comes to mind is that these two verses were revealed in connection with the command to face toward the Ka’ba in Mecca during prayers. However, there are other narrations which suggest different reasons for the revelations of these two verses. At any rate, these two verses embody a general ruling that deals with those who forbid the name of God to be celebrated in God’s places of worship and those who try to destroy these places. These people deserve to be fought back and stripped of any peace or security unless they take refuge in one of God’s places of worship, similar to what happened on the day of the conquest of Mecca. On that day, the Messenger of God commanded one of his companions to announce that safety and security are guaranteed for whosoever sought refuge inside the Holy Mosque. Many of the leaders of Quraish, who previously denied the Messenger of God and the Muslims the right to visit the Holy Mosque, sought refuge in the Holy Mosque. Those who seek the destruction of the God’s places of worship are not only threatened with disgrace in this life but also with great torment in the Hereafter.

The claim made by some Jews that the prayers which were made by Muslims before the realignment of the direction of Qibla toward Mecca were null and void (since they were done facing the wrong Qibla direction) is addressed in the second verse, “To God belong the east and the west, wherever you turn, there is the presence of God. For God is all-Embracing, Omniscient.” The verse indicates that wherever one faces there is a Qibla. God’s Qibla is not limited to a specific direction but it is wherever we face seeking to worship Him. However, it is an act of obedience to follow God’s command to face toward a specific direction.

“They say, ‘God has begotten a son.’ Glory be to Him. Nay, to Him belongs all that is in the heavens and on earth. All are subservient to Him; the Originator of the heavens and the earth. When He decrees a thing, He says, ‘Be,’ and it is. And those who have no knowledge say, ‘Why does not God speak to us, or a sign comes to us?’ Thus, those before them said the same thing. Their hearts are all alike. We have made clear the revelations for people who are sure.” This false statement, “God has begotten a son,” was not only made by the Christians about Jesus, but was also made by the Jews about Ezra and by the idolaters about the angels. Islam embraces the concept of the absolute Oneness of God. God created the universe with His absolute will, “Be, and it is.” God’s will to create a being with any image or form is sufficient for such being to materialize. God does not need help or support of any kind. To Him belongs all that in the heavens and the earth. It is thus unnecessary for Him to have a son. All His creations are equal. He is “The Originator of the heavens and the earth. When He decrees a thing, He says, ‘Be,’ and it is.” How God’s will operate is beyond the comprehension of the human mind. It is futile to spend effort trying to discover this process.

Having addressed the claim that God has a son, the Qur’an turns to an equally unreasonable request made by the idolaters, “And those who have no knowledge say, ‘Why does not God speak to us, or a sign comes to us?’ Thus, those before them said the same thing. Their hearts are all alike. We have made clear the revelations for people who have certitude.” Those who do not know are the idolaters who did not receive a Scripture. They often challenged the Prophet (PBUH) to make God talk to them or to bring about a miracle from God. These verses confirm the faith of those who have certitude in their hearts. The verses do not create certitude, rather those who have certitude in their hearts are able to understand the verses and find peace and security in their meanings.

We have sent you with the truth. This is an unequivocal statement to support the Messenger (PBUH) against those who are spreading rumours and doubts about the authenticity of the message. The mandate of the Messenger (PBUH) is to deliver the message. He brings glad tidings to the obedient and warns the disobedient. He is not responsible for those who chose to enter Hellfire as a consequence of their disobedience. The Qur’an addressed the Messenger saying that the Jews and the Christians will never be satisfied with you unless you give up the message and abandon the truth that was revealed to you. The only way to please them is to abandon your faith and follow theirs. But the only true guidance is the guidance that you received from God. The Qur’an warns the Messenger, “Were you to follow their whims after the knowledge which has reached you, then you would find neither a protecting guardian nor a helper against God.” It is a stern warning to the Prophet (PBUH) not to follow their whims. He should follow the guidance that he received from God. Those among them who do not follow their whims recite their Scripture the way it should be recited and they follow it as it should be followed. They believe in the truth that was revealed to you. Those who reject this truth are the true losers.

This group of verses ends up with a final call to the Children of Israel, “Children of Israel, remember My blessings which I bestowed upon you, and that I preferred you to all others. Then guard yourselves against a day when one soul shall not avail another, nor shall compensation be accepted from her nor shall intercession profit her nor shall anyone be helped.”

Verses: 124 to 141

124. And remember when Abraham was tried by his Lord with certain commands, which he fulfilled. He said, "I will make you a leader for humankind." Abraham said, "And of my offspring (will there be leaders)?" He answered, "My promise does not include the wrongdoers."
125. Remember when We made the House a place of resort for humankind and a place of safety; and take you the station of Abraham as a place of prayer. We commanded Abraham and Ishmael, that they should sanctify My House for those who compass it round, or use it as a retreat, or bow, or prostrate themselves (therein in prayer).
126. And remember when Abraham said, "My Lord, make this a city of security, and provide its people with fruits, those who believe in God and the Last Day." He said, "As for them who disbelieve I will grant them their pleasure for a while, but will soon drive them to the torment of fire. It is an evil destination (indeed)."
127. And remember when Abraham and Ishmael raised the foundations of the House, "Our Lord, accept (this service) from us. Indeed, You are the All-Hearing, the Omniscient.
128. Our Lord, make us submit to You, and of our progeny a people who submit to You; and show us our way of worship; and relent toward us. Verily, You are the Ever-Relenting, the Giver of Mercy.
129. Our Lord, and raise up in their midst a messenger from among them who shall recite to them Your revelations, and shall instruct them in the Scripture and in wisdom and purify them. Verily, You are the Eminent, the Wise."
130. And who forsakes the religion of Abraham but he who makes himself a fool, and most certainly We chose him in this world, and in the Hereafter he is most assuredly among the righteous.
131. His Lord said to him, "Submit" He said, "I submit to the Lord of the Universe."
132. And Abraham commanded his sons, and so did Jacob, "My sons, God has chosen the religion for you; then die not except in a state of submission to Him."
133. Or were you witnesses when death came to Jacob? He said to his sons, "What will you worship after I am gone?" They said, "We shall worship your God and the God of your fathers, Abraham, Ishmael and Isaac, the one (True) God. To Him we have submitted."
134. Those are a people who have passed away; theirs is that which they earned and yours is that which you earn. And you will not be asked of what they used to do.
135. And they say, Be Jews or Christians, then you will be rightly guided. Say (Muhammad), "Nay, we follow the religion of Abraham, the upright, and he was not of the idolaters."
136. Say (you believers), "We believe in God, and the revelation given to us, and to Abraham, Ishmael, Isaac, Jacob, and the Tribes, and that given to Moses and Jesus, and that given to (all) prophets from their Lord. We make no distinction between any of them. And we submit to God."
137. So if they believe as you believe, they are indeed on the right path; but if they turn back, it is they who are in schism. God will suffice you against them; and He is the All-Hearing the Omniscient.

138. (Our life takes) its hue from God, and who could give a better hue (to life) than God. We are His worshippers.
139. Say (to the People of the Scripture), "Do you dispute with us concerning God. He is our Lord and your Lord? Ours are our deeds and yours are your deeds. We are sincere to Him."
140. Or do you say that Abraham, Ishmael, Isaac, Jacob and the Tribes were Jews or Christians? Say, "Do you know better than God?" And who is more unjust than those who conceal the testimony they have from God? But God is not unaware of what you do.
141. Those are a people who have passed away; theirs is that which they earned and yours is that which you earn. And you will not be asked of what they used to do. (2:124-141)

"And remember when Abraham was tried by his Lord with certain commands, which he fulfilled. He said, 'I will make you a leader for humankind.' Abraham said, 'And of my offspring (will there be leaders).' He answered, 'My promise does not include the wrongdoers.'" The Prophet (PBUH) was asked to remember how God tested Prophet Abraham (PBUH). God commanded him to do certain things which he completed perfectly. God commended Prophet Abraham (PBUH) in another verse in the Qur'an for being thorough in the execution of his tasks. For that he was labeled by God as, "Abraham who fulfilled." This earned Prophet Abraham (PBUH) a high stature befitting a person who earned the pleasure of his God. God rewarded him by appointing him a leader, to lead the people on God's way and to introduce them to goodness. The initial natural disposition of Abraham (PBUH) as a human being made him request that the honour bestowed on him by God be extended to his progeny. So, he asked God, "And of my offspring." But the answer came from God who chose Abraham (PBUH) and raised him in stature, "My promise does not include the wrongdoers." The answer states a fundamental principle: leadership is not a family inheritance but it is a trust to be earned by righteousness, faith, actions, and behaviour. The other fundamental rule that can be gleaned from this response is that wrongdoers are precluded from this trust. There are different kinds of wrongdoing: a person may wrong himself/herself by associating partners with God, or a person may wrong people by oppressing them. There are also different types of leaders. These include, among others: God's messengers who guide people to the right path, rulers who govern people, and those who lead people in prayers. The verse states that the wrongdoers are precluded from assuming any type of leadership. Fairness is a fundamental criterion for choosing leaders. Any person who commits any type of wrongdoing cannot be trusted with a leadership role.

"Remember when We made the House a place of resort for humankind and a place of safety; and take you the station of Abraham as a place of prayer. We commanded Abraham and Ishmael, that they should sanctify My House for those who compass it round, or use it as a retreat, or bow, or prostrate themselves (therein in prayer)." God wanted this sacred house to be a place of peace and security for all people. Safety and security should be guaranteed for any who enters the House. The verse commands people to pray at "the station of Abraham." The term "the station of Abraham" should be taken to mean the whole house. The House has been designated as a Qibla for Muslims praying anywhere. It is the focal point toward which Muslims should face when they perform their prayers. It is natural and fitting to designate the House as Qibla for Muslims since the House belongs only to God not to any human being. He entrusted two of His righteous servants to cleanse and prepare it for those who “compass it round or use it as a retreat or bow or prostrate themselves (therein in prayer).” It is a place for prayers for those who come from far away to perform the rituals of pilgrimage as well as for those who live nearby. Prophets Abraham and Ishmael (PBUT) did not own the House; they only built it, prepared it for prayers, and took care of its maintenance as a place of worship.

“And remember when Abraham said, ‘My Lord, make this a city of security, and provide its people with fruits, those who believe in God and the Last Day.’ He said, ‘As for them who disbelieve, I will grant them their pleasure for a while, but will soon drive them to the torment of fire. It is an evil destination (indeed).’ Abraham (PBUH) called upon God to make the House a place of safety and security for people, and having understood the lesson that God’s promise “does not include the wrongdoers,” he called upon his Lord to bestow His bounty on those who “believe in God and the Last Day.” This is an invocation which reflects Abraham’s (PBUH) obedience, piety, and meekness. God responded to his invocation, “As for them who disbelieve I will grant them their pleasure for a while, but will soon drive them to the torment of fire.”

Prophets Abraham and Ishmael (PBUT) started the undertaking commanded by God, “And remember when Abraham and Ishmael raised the foundations of the House.” The image is so vivid, we feel as if we were there watching them building the House and hearing their voices calling upon God, “Our Lord, accept (this service) from us. Indeed, You are the All-Hearing, the Omniscient. Our Lord, make us submit to You, and of our progeny a people who submit to You; and show us our way of worship; and relent toward us. Verily, You are the Oft-Relenting, the Giver of Mercy.” They called upon God to accept their efforts which were dedicated solely to Him. They asked God’s help to guide them to true submission, the submission that puts their hearts in God’s hand. They also asked God to guide their progeny to His way. Having tasted the sweetness of faith, they wanted their progeny to enjoy God’s bounty as well. “Our Lord, and raise up in their midst a messenger from among them who shall recite to them Your revelations, and shall instruct them in the Scripture and in wisdom and purify them. Verily, You are the Eminent, the Wise.” Centuries after this call has been made, God responded favourably to their invocation and sent His messenger Muhammad (PBUH) to recite the revelation of God and to teach the Book and the Wisdom. All sincere invocations are heard and accepted by God; however, it is He who decides when these invocations would be realized.

“And who forsakes the religion of Abraham but he who makes himself a fool? Most certainly We chose him in this world, and in the Hereafter he is most assuredly among the righteous. His Lord said to him, ‘Submit’ He said, ‘I submit to the Lord of the universe.’ Abraham’s religion is true submission to God. Only wrongdoers and fools would turn away from such a religion. And Abraham (PBUH), “Commanded his sons, and so did Jacob, ‘My sons, God has chosen the religion for you; then die not except in a state of submission to Him’”

“Or were you witnesses when death came to Jacob? he said to his sons, ‘What will you worship after I am gone?’ They said, ‘We shall worship your God and the God of your fathers, Abraham, Ishmael and Isaac, the one (True) God. To Him we have submitted.’” This verse narrates a dialogue between a father on the death bed and his sons. It is a very emotional scene, what would the father say to his sons in such a moment? What is the most important thought on his mind at these last moments of his life? What is the legacy that he wants to leave behind for his children? The legacy is the faith that he adopted. It became the most important treasure that he wanted to leave behind for his children. He wanted them to cherish it after his death as he did during his life. He wanted to make sure that they will worship the Lord that he worshiped. They did not fail him and responded that they have “submitted.”

“And they say, Be Jews or Christians, then you will be rightly guided. Say (Muhammad), ‘Nay, we follow the religion of Abraham, the upright, and he was not of the idolaters.’ Say (you believers), ‘We believe in God, and the revelation given to us, and to Abraham, Ishmael, Isaac, Jacob, and the Tribes, and that given to Moses and Jesus, and that given to (all) prophets from their Lord. We make no distinction between any of them. And we submit to God.’ So if they believe as you believe, they are indeed on the right path; but if they turn back, it is they who are in schism. God will suffice you against them, and He is the All-Hearing the Omniscient. (Our life takes) its hue from God, and who could give a better hue (to life) than God. We are His worshippers. Say (to the People of the Scripture), ‘Do you dispute with us concerning God. He is our Lord and your Lord? Ours are our deeds and yours are your deeds. We are sincere to Him.’ Or do you say that Abraham, Ishmael, Isaac, Jacob and the Tribes were Jews or Christians? Say, ‘Do you know better than God?’ And who is more unjust than those who conceal the testimony they have from God? but God is not unaware of what you do.”

The Prophet (PBUH) was commanded to respond to the Jews and Christians, who claimed independently that the only way to guidance is to adopt their own faith, by saying, “Nay, we follow the religion of Abraham, the upright, and he was not of the idolaters.” We will go back to the original faith, the faith of Abraham (PBUH), our father and your father. This is the faith that is rooted in the complete submission to God. The Muslims are commanded to pronounce the principle of the Oneness of God, the religion brought by all the messengers starting by Abraham and ending by Muhammad (PBUT). This is the concept of the universal unity that brings all messages and all messengers together. This is the Islamic perspective of God’s religion, the perspective that makes the Muslim nation the rightful heir of a faith based on God’s true religion on earth. This is the true faith, whoever follows it has been guided but those who chose not to follow it will always be in conflict with the truth. Those who turned away from guidance have neither power nor authority over the believers. God will take care of the nonbelievers. The believers’ only task is to align themselves along the straight path. They should be proud of the truth that came to them directly from God. God gives them the hue of their lives. What better life can one aspire to? This is the hue of a life that has been not corrupted by hatred, racism, or bigotry.

Do you dispute with us regarding God? The Oneness of God is indisputable. He is our Lord and He is your Lord. All people will be held accountable for what they have done. We are sincere in our devotion to God. We neither associate partners with Him, nor do we ask anyone else for help.

The verses continue to address another issue that seems to have been disputed, “Or do you say that Abraham, Ishmael, Isaac, Jacob and the Tribes were Jews or Christians?” These Prophets existed before the advent of Judaism and Christianity. God stated that they adopted the religion of true submission to Him. Do you have knowledge that God does not have? This is a rhetorical question. The discourse then ends with the same statement mentioned earlier, “Those are a people who have passed away; theirs is that which they earned and yours is that which you earn. And you will not be asked of what they used to do.”

Verses: 142 to 152

142. The fools among the people will say, “What has turned them away from the Qibla to which they used to face?” Say, “To God belong both east and west. He guides whom He wills to a straight path.”
143. Thus, have We made you a justly balanced nation that you might be witnesses over the nations, and the Messenger is a witness over yourselves. We appointed the Qibla, to which you were facing in prayer, only to test those who followed the Messenger from those who would turn on their heels. Indeed, it was a momentous change, except to those guided by God. But it was not God's purpose that your faith should be in vain. Indeed, God to all people, is All-Pitying Giver of Mercy.
144. We see the turning of your face to heavens (for guidance). Now, We shall make you turn (in prayer) toward a Qibla which pleases you. Turn then your face in the direction of the Sacred Mosque. Wherever you may be, turn your faces (when you pray) in that direction. The People of the Scripture know well that this is the truth from their Lord. God is not unaware of what they do.
145. Even if you were to bring the People of the Scripture all the signs, they would not follow your Qibla; nor are you going to follow their Qibla; nor indeed will they follow each other's Qibla. If you, after the knowledge has reached you, were to follow their whims, then you are indeed a wrongdoer.
146. The People of the Scripture know this revelation as they know their own sons; but some of them conceal the truth which they themselves know.
147. The truth is from your Lord; so do not be one of those who doubt.
148. And each one has a goal toward which he turns; so strive together (as in a race) toward all that is good. Wherever you may be, God will bring you together. Certainly, God has power over all things.
149. And from whatsoever place you come forth, turn your face toward the Sacred Mosque; and indeed it is the truth from your Lord, and God is not at all unaware of what you do.
150. So from whence ever you come forth, turn your face in the direction of the Sacred Mosque; and wherever you may be, turn your face toward it; so that there would be no ground for dispute against you among the people, except those of them who are wrongdoers; so fear them not, but fear Me; so that I may complete My blessings on you, and you may be guided.
151. A similar (favour you have already received) that We sent you a Messenger from among you, to recite to you Our revelation, and to purify you, and to teach you the Book and the Wisdom, and teaches you that which you did not know.

152. Therefore, remember Me, I will remember you. Give thanks to Me, and do not reject faith. (2:142-152)

These verses discuss the event of the realignment of the direction of the Qibla to face toward Mecca. There is no unequivocal account of the details of this incident and the Qur'an did not mention when this change took place. Most probably, the event took place sixteen or seventeen months after the migration to Medina. It may be deduced from the different accounts about this subject that Muslims in Mecca used to pray toward the Ka'ba, although there is no Qur'anic verse regarding this. After migration, Muslims were commanded to turn their faces toward Jerusalem in prayers. The command came in these verses to realign the direction of Qibla back to face toward the Sacred Mosque in Mecca. The realignment of the Qibla from the Ka'ba to Jerusalem may have given the People of the Scripture an excuse not to adopt Islam. They argued that the fact that Muslims are facing toward Jerusalem meant that their religion is the true religion and that Muslims should follow their religion.

It is narrated that Al-Baraa bin A'zeb (RA) said, “When the Prophet (PBUH) came to Medina and settled near his uncles from among the Ansar, he continued to pray toward Jerusalem for about sixteen or seventeen months. All the time, he yearned to realign the direction of the Qibla toward the Ka'ba. The first prayer he performed toward the Ka'ba was the afternoon prayer (Asr). A man prayed (Asr) with the Prophet (PBUH), then on his way home, he saw a group of people praying facing toward Jerusalem, he said, ‘By God, I just prayed with the Prophet (PBUH) and we did face toward the Ka'ba.’ On hearing this, the group turned around to face toward the Ka'ba.” The Jews of Medina were happy that the Muslims were facing toward Jerusalem in their prayers, so the command to realign the Qibla was disappointing news to them. This is the reason behind the verse, “The fools among the people will say, ‘What has turned them from the Qibla to which they used to face?’ Say, ‘To God belong both east and west. He guides whom He wills to a straight path.’” It seems that some Muslims were annoyed by the reaction of the Jews in Medina to the change in the Qibla. These verses were revealed to deal with this reaction and to explain the rationale behind the change. God is there whether one faces east or west. The important thing is seeking guidance. Whatever God chooses for His servants is best for them. He has chosen an important role for His servants, “Thus, have We made you a justly balanced nation, that you might be witnesses over the nations, and the Messenger is a witness over yourselves.” It is a justly balanced nation that establishes fairness and justice on earth according to fair standards and measures. The Prophet (PBUH) was appointed as a witness to testify whether this nation had fulfilled its intended role.

The term “justly balanced nation” conveys very rich and powerful meaning. It encompasses the full range of the dimensions of the word “balanced.” The nation enjoys well balanced characteristics in all areas of human activities. It is balanced in its faith, its feelings, and its behaviour. It shuns all types of extremism. Its religion maintains a balance between spirituality and materialism. Its endeavours are balanced between the well-established traditions and the adventurous new. It maintains a balance between the freedom of the individual and the rights of the community. It has well-balanced economic and legal systems. It maintains a balance between human creativity and the preservation of traditions. It is well balanced both in time and space.

Then, the rationale behind the realignment of the Qibla to face toward the Sacred Mosque is given, “We appointed the Qibla, to which you were facing in prayer, only to test those who followed the Messenger from those who would turn on their heels.” It is an exercise to prepare the community for the new pure faith and rid them of all remnants of the old traditions of the pagan society that they were living in. The Arabs before Islam used to sanctify the Sacred Mosque but their practices were wrapped in the impurities of idolatry. God wanted to free the fledgling Muslim community from all traces of idolatry. He wanted the Muslims to break away from all traditions that were engulfed in racism, tribalism, and paganism. So, they were commanded to turn away from the place which became a symbol of all these infractions. God wanted the Muslim community to dedicate itself to the pure submission to God and to free that submission from all other forms of transgressions that surrounded it. Turning away from the Sacred Mosque was a symbol of the rejection of all expressions of loyalty to pagan traditions which engulfed the Mosque at that time. This was an expression for complete devotion to the concept of submission to God alone. The command to turn their focal point to Jerusalem was made to rid them of any feeling of loyalty to old traditions and to test their obedience and dedication to the Prophet (PBUH).

“Indeed it was a momentous change, except to those guided by God.” Although, this was a momentous change, but it was made easy by the grace of God for those who chose guidance. They accepted the change and got rid of all the old concepts and symbols. It was easy for them to dedicate themselves to God and to listen to and obey the commands.

The Qur’an continued to reassure Muslims that the rituals which they performed before the realignment of the Qibla were not in vain. God does not want people to suffer and He does not burden a soul beyond its ability, “But it was not God's purpose that your faith should be in vain. Indeed God to all people, is All-Pitying Giver of Mercy.”

The realignment of the Qibla was announced in response to the Prophet’s (PBUH) wish, “We see the turning of your face to heavens (for guidance).” This is an expression which reveals the Prophet’s (PBUH) strong wish for a command from God to realign the Qibla. The Prophet (PBUH) was too shy to express such a wish in words; he waited for the command to come from his Lord. His Lord responded to his wish and expressed this response in a way which intimates a loving relationship between God and His servant, “Now, We shall make you turn (in prayer) toward a Qibla which pleases you.” Then the Qibla is specified, “Turn then your face in the direction of the Sacred Mosque.” This is a Qibla for Muhammad (PBUH) and his nation and it is going to stay their Qibla till the end of time, “Wherever you may be, turn your faces (when you pray) in that direction.” Wherever Muslims may be, they all face toward Mecca in prayer. It is a Qibla for all Muslims. Muslims living at different places on earth, speaking different languages, and having different ethnic origins, they all face toward one focal point in their prayers. This Qibla is a strong expression of the unity of Muslims. The unity that brings all Muslims together in one nation that believes in the same God, the same Messenger, and the same Message. This nation is united around a single faith and follows the same way of life even if they all have different cultures, speak different languages, have different colors, and come from different ethnic back grounds.

“The People of the Scripture know well that this is the truth from their Lord. God is not unaware of what they do.” They know that the Sacred Mosque is the first house built on earth for the worship of God. This is the house that Prophet Abraham (PBUH) raised. It is appropriate for the descendants of Prophet Abraham (PBUH) to face toward the Sacred Mosque in their prayers. Although, the People of the Scripture know this historic fact, they did not accept this logic. There is nothing you can do, Muhammad (PBUH), to convince them that this is the appropriate thing to do. They are stubborn in their way and will not relent, no matter what you do, “Even if you were to bring to the People of the Scripture all the signs, they would not follow your Qibla; nor are you going to follow their Qibla; nor indeed will they follow each other's Qibla. If you, after the knowledge has reached you, were to follow their whims, then you are indeed a wrongdoer.” They will not follow your Qibla, nor should you follow their Qibla, because if you do, then you will be one of the wrongdoers. This is a very strong language that God uses in addressing and warning His Prophet. The Qur'an warned the Prophet (PBUH) not to follow the desires of those who were not on the straight path. The verses juxtaposed the two alternatives: you either follow the unsubstantiated desires of people or follow the knowledge that comes from God. A Muslim should not entertain the thought of following other than the knowledge that comes from God.

“The People of the Scripture know this revelation as they know their own sons; but some of them conceal the truth which they themselves know.” The expression “Knowing one's son” is a figure of speech which suggests very intimate knowledge. It is a figure of speech which the Arabs use to indicate certainty of knowledge. The Muslims should not be influenced by the desires and the arguments of the People of the Scripture, who knew the truth but chose not to follow it. The believers should follow the truth which came to them through the Messenger of God (PBUH).

Then, a warning is issued, “The Truth is from your Lord; so do not be one of those who doubt.” We know that the Prophet (PBUH) never doubted. When God addressed him in another verse, saying, “if you are in doubt of what We revealed to you, then ask those who read the Scripture before you,” (10: 94) the Prophet's (PBUH) response was, “I have no doubt and I will not ask.” So, this warning was actually directed to the Muslims through the Prophet (PBUH). Those Muslims who may come under the influence of such falsehood should heed this warning.

“And each one has a goal toward which he turns; so strive together (as in a race) toward all that is good. Wherever you may be, God will bring you together. Indeed, God has power over all things.” The believers should focus on the objectives they have at hand. They should strive to do good deeds and remember that they will be held accountable when they meet their Lord. God is all encompassing and He is aware of everything.

The command to follow the new Qibla is reiterated, once more, “And from whatsoever place you come forth, turn your face toward the Sacred Mosque; and indeed it is the truth from your Lord, and God is not at all unaware of what you do.”

The command is reiterated a third time, “So from whence ever you come forth, turn your face in the direction of the Sacred Mosque; and wherever you may be, turn your face toward it; so that there would be no ground for dispute against you among the people, except those of them who are wrongdoers; so fear them not, but fear Me; so that I may complete My blessings on you, and you may be guided.” The believers were told to follow God’s command and never to worry about those who were plotting against them. God has bestowed His blessings on the believers and no one else has power over them.

The believers were reminded of the grace of God, when He sent one of them as a prophet to guide them in response to the prayer that Prophet Abraham (PBUH) made, “A similar (favour you have already received) that We sent you a Messenger from among you, to recite to you Our revelation, and to purify you, and to teach you the Scripture and the Wisdom, and teaches you that which you did not know. Therefore, remember Me, I will remember you. Give thanks to Me, and do not reject faith.” It should be noted that the verse reiterates the prayer that Prophet Abraham (PBUH) made while he was rebuilding the House, with his son Ishmael (PBUH). He prayed God to send one of his progeny as a prophet to recite God’s revelations and to teach the people the Book and the wisdom and to purify them. This is a reminder that Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) was sent as a response to Prophet Abraham’s (PBUH) prayer. It emphasizes the concept of the oneness of the divine message and the continuation of the guidance that God promised His Prophet Abraham (PBUH). He sent His Messenger (PBUH) to purify the people from the impurities of paganism and associating partners with God. He sent His messenger to purify them from the myths that burdens human souls and from the carnal desires that contaminate human bodies. He sent His messenger to purify the society of usury, fraudulent transactions, injustices, and oppression. He sent His messenger to spread justice and peace. He sent His messenger to teach them the Book and the wisdom which encompassed all what have been revealed before it. The wisdom which is achieved from following the teachings of the Book, will train the believers to identify high goals, to choose the appropriate ways to reach these goals, and to use appropriate measures for evaluating successes and failures. This messenger was also sent to teach them that which they did not know. Before Islam, the Arabs lead a nomadic life which did not require much knowledge. After the advent of Islam, the Mosque became a school for training leaders and a source of knowledge in all areas of life. Many prominent leaders graduated from this school and went on to lead the world in a wise and enlightened way. The verse ends by a loving invitation from God to His servants, “remember Me and I will remember you.” It is a blessing from God to reward His servants when they remember Him by remembering them. They would remember God in their small world, but God will remember them in the huge universe. Those whom God remembers enjoy endless bounty and abundant blessings.

Several authentic traditions elaborate on this verse. It has been narrated that God said, “Whoever remembers Me in private, I will remember him in private; and whoever remembers Me in front of an audience, I will remember him in front of a better audience.” In another version, it has been narrated that God said, “Whoever remembers Me in private, I will remember him in private; and whoever remembers Me in front of an audience, I will remember him in front of a better audience. If the son of Adam moved toward Me a distance equal to the width of his palm, I will move toward him a distance equal to the length of his arm; and if the son Adam approached Me walking, I will approach him hurriedly.” Such generosity cannot be described in words, nor can it be repaid with gratitude, except the gratitude expressed by a prostrating heart.

Remembrance of God is not merely a lip service, but it is an experience for the heart which feels the existence and nearness of God. The least that this experience can lead to is the obedience to God. But it can also lead to a heart which is completely devoted to God, oblivious to everything except God, and a heart that yearns to be in the presence of God at all times.

“Give thanks to Me, and do not reject faith.” There are different ways one can give thanks to God. The least one can do is to acknowledge God’s bounty and to shy away from disobeying Him. A higher rank of giving thanks is to dedicate all human activities to God as an expression of gratitude. Every effort to be exerted, every word to be pronounced, every heartbeat, and every thought are dedicated to God as expressions of gratitude to Him. The command, “do not reject faith,” hints to the grievous end to which ingratitude may lead.

153. Believers, seek help with perseverance and prayer. Indeed, God is with those who persevere.
154. And do not say of those who are slain in the way of God, "They are dead." Nay, they are alive, though you realize it not.
155. And certainly, We shall try you with something of fear and hunger, and loss of wealth and lives and crops; but give glad tidings to the perseverant,
156. Those who say, when afflicted with calamity, "To God we belong, and to Him is our return."
157. They are those on whom (descend) blessings from God, and mercy, and they are the ones who are rightly guided. (2: 153-157)

“Believers, seek help with perseverance and prayer. Indeed, God is with those who persevere.” The reference to perseverance is repeated often in the Qur’an. God Almighty knows that staying on the straight path requires an enormous effort on the part of the believer. Believers have to fend off temptations and vain desires which would make them swerve away from the right path. One has to be alert at all times. Perseverance is needed to fulfill the prescribed undertakings and it is needed to avoid committing that which is prohibited. The life of a believer is full of activities that cannot be done without perseverance. Going through life, everyone meets obstacles and adverse situations; perseverance helps to overcome these obstacles. Truth does not always prevail and righteousness does not always win. The Qur’an provides an endless fountain for perseverance: prayer. Prayer is a direct link between the mortal human being and the everlasting God; it is the time for the isolated droplet of water to connect with the infinite spring; and it is the key to the treasure of all riches. It is the launching pad for a vehicle that moves from a bounded place on earth to a limitless universe. It is the spirit, the drop of dew, and the shade for a traveler across an arid desert. It is the comforting touch for the tired heart. Whenever the Prophet (PBUH) met an adversity, he would call upon Belal (RA) - the Prophet’s (PBUH) Moazen- to call for prayer. He would say, “Comfort us with prayer.” In these situations, the Prophet (PBUH) would pray more than usual.

The Islamic way of life has its foundations in the acts of worship. The rituals in Islam embody hidden benefits. Rituals provide sustenance for the spirit and purity for the heart. Rituals provide the support for carrying out the heavy undertakings. Rituals open the door for the believer's heart to find enjoyment in performing the difficult undertakings. When God chose Muhammad (PBUH) for the difficult role of a messenger, He said to him, "You enwrapped in your cloak, stay up, in prayer at night, all but a small part of it, one-half thereof – or make it a little less than that, or add to it; and recite the Qur'an calmly and distinctly, with your mind attuned to its meaning. We shall bestow upon you a weighty message." (73:1-5). The Prophet (PBUH) was given a training program to prepare him for the weighty message. Spending the night in prayer and reciting the Qur'an were components of the training program to prepare the Prophet for the heavy task ahead. Rituals open the heart to receive the light of guidance and strengthen the link with God. They provide the support and comfort needed to face hardships. It is therefore appropriate that the believers are commanded to seek help in prayer and perseverance. Certainly, God is, "with those who persevere." He provides the support, the strength, the comfort, and the company along the road. God will not abandon the believers and leave them to face adversity with their limited power and resources. The verse begins with an endearing call, "Believers," and ends by stressing the fact that God is, "with those who persevere," This alludes to the beauty of the link between God and those who persevere.

As the Muslim community was given the responsibility for the call to Islam, it was unavoidable that they will have to go through hard times. It was then appropriate to motivate them and prepare them for the hard times that lie ahead, "And do not say of those who are slain in the way of God, 'They are dead.' Nay, they are alive, though you realize it not." There will be battles, and there will be lives lost. Those who fall in the battle against falsehood, giving up their lives in the way of God, have pure hearts and unselfish souls. They chose to sacrifice their lives for the sake of establishing the truth. They cannot be considered dead. Life and death cannot be judged using the superficial human standards. The effectiveness of the life of a human being is measured by the influence it had on the lives of others; effectiveness of life is also measured by the growth and enrichment it produces in the lives of others. Death, on the other hand, brings about a cessation of activities and the absence of any influence on the lives of others. Those who fight for the sake of God pay their lives to propagate the truth; their blood waters the idea they planted. Their death may still influence the lives of others. In that sense, their death is the reason for a better and more effective life for others. So they are considered alive because of the influence they produce on the living.

God considers them alive. We don't know the nature of their lives with God. It is beyond the capability of a human mind to grasp this concept. For these reasons, a special procedure is followed in dealing with their burial. Their bodies are neither washed nor wrapped in the traditional burial shrouds. The rationale for the ritual burial wash is to cleanse the dead body before burial. Since they are considered still alive they do not need this cleansing process and they are buried in the same clothes that they had on before they died.

Martyrs were promised a great reward from their Lord. It has been narrated by Muslim, that the Prophet (PBUH) has been quoted to have said, "The souls of martyrs are kept in the necks of green birds that fly wherever they wish all around paradise. They then land under lights hanging under God's throne. Their Lord looks at them and says, 'Make a wish.' They say, 'Our Lord, there is nothing we wish for, You have given us more than You have ever given anyone of your servants.' When God repeats the request, they say, 'We wish to return to life to fight and die in Your way again.' They wish to enjoy the reward of martyrdom again. But God has decreed that they will not return."

Anas (RA) narrated that the Prophet (PBUH), said, "No one from among those admitted to paradise wishes to go back to life except the martyr. The honour that a martyr receives in paradise makes him wish to return to life and die for the sake of God ten times over."

But who are these martyrs? They are those who lose their lives for the sake of God alone. They are not interested in anything else except serving God's cause. Abu Musa (RA) narrated that, the Prophet (PBUH) has been quoted to have said, "Different motives may drive people to engage in fighting a battle. There are those who fight because they are courageous, those who fight because they want fervently to defend a worldly cause, and those who fight to gain fame and honour. None of them is considered to be fighting for the sake of God. Only those who fight so that the word of God prevails are fighting for the sake of God."

Abu Hurariarah (RA) narrated that the Prophet (PBUH) has been quoted to have said, "A person who fights for the sake of God but in the meantime harbours a worldly objective will not be rewarded by God." The martyrs are those who die fighting only for the sake of God and nothing else.

Those who choose to stay on the right path and serve God will face hard times and calamities will befall them. They need to be trained to face and overcome these difficulties. They need to be trained to perform their responsibilities even when they are facing adverse conditions. They will be put through tests and trials as part of this training, "And certainly, We shall try you with something of fear and hunger, and loss of wealth and lives and crops; but give glad tidings to the perseverant, Who say, when afflicted with calamity, 'To God we belong, and to Him is our return.'" Tests strengthen the believers and their perseverance will entice others to reflect on their cause. The verse gives a recipe for dealing with calamities and hard times: taking refuge in God and remembering that everything comes from God and everything is returning back to Him. This is an expression of absolute submission to God. Those who practice true perseverance will be rewarded with the blessings of God, "They are those on whom (descend) blessings from God and mercy; they are the ones who are rightly guided."

We need to stop for a moment and reflect on the last verses of this passage. The verses talk about hard times; martyrdom; fear; and loss of life, wealth, and crops that the believers expect to face. The final verse promises a reward for those who will persevere in face of all these difficulties: blessings from God and mercy. There is no promise of victory, authority, or material gain. The promise is blessings from God. Worldly gain should not be the incentive for dedicating oneself to the service of God. The only reward that the believer should aspire to is to gain the pleasure of God and to enjoy His blessings.

Verses: 158 to 177

158. Indeed, the Safa and Marwa are among the rites of God. It is therefore no sin on those who visit the House to perform major or minor pilgrimage, to go around them. And if any one does good of his own accord, (for him) God is Appreciative, Omniscient.
159. Those who conceal the clear (signs) We have sent down, and the guidance, after We have made it clear for the people in the Scripture, on them shall be God's curse, and the curse of those entitled to curse.
160. Except those who repent and make amends and openly declare (the truth). I will accept their repentance; for I am Ever-Relenting, Giver of Mercy.
161. Those who disbelieve, and die while they are disbelievers, on them is God's curse, and the curse of the angels, and of all humankind;
162. They will abide therein. Their torment will not be lightened, nor will they be reprieved.
163. And your God is the One True God. There is no deity but He, the Lord of Mercy, the Giver of Mercy.
164. Indeed, in the creation of the heavens and the earth; in the alternation of the night and the day; in the sailing of the ships through the ocean for the benefit of humankind; in the rain which God sends down from the skies, thereby reviving the earth after its death; in the beasts of all kinds that He scatters through the earth; and in the change of the winds, and the clouds made subservient between the sky and the earth are indeed signs for a people who understand.
165. Yet there are people who take (for worship) others besides God, as rivals to God. They love them as they should love God. But the believers are stronger in their love for God. If only the wrongdoers could see, as they will when they face the torment, that to God belongs all power, and that He is severe in torment.
166. When those, who were followed disown those who followed (them), would see the torment, and all relations between them would be cut off.
167. And those who followed would say, "If only We had one more chance, We would disown them, as they have disowned us." Thus, will God show them (the fruits of) their deeds as (nothing but) a source for regret. Nor will there be a way for them out of the Fire.
168. People, eat of what is lawful and wholesome on earth; and do not follow in the footsteps of Satan, for he is to you an avowed enemy.
169. He indeed, commands you what is evil and shameful, and that you should say about God that of which you have no knowledge.
170. When it is said to them, "Follow what God has revealed." They say, "Nay, we shall follow the ways of our fathers." Even though their fathers had no sense at all and had no guidance.
171. The parable of those who disbelieve is that of a beast which hears the shepherd's cry, and hears in it nothing but the sound of a voice and a cry. Deaf, dumb, blind, for they do not use their reason.
172. Believers, eat of the good things that We have provided for you, and be grateful to God, if it is Him you worship.
173. He has only forbidden you carrion, blood, the flesh of a swine, and that on which any other name has been invoked besides that of God. But if one is forced by necessity, without wilful disobedience nor transgressing due limits, then no sin shall be upon him. For God is All-Forgiving Giver of Mercy.

174. Indeed, those who conceal God's revelations in the Scripture, and barter them for a miserable profit, they only fill their bellies with fire. God will not speak to them on the Day of Resurrection, nor will He purify them. Painful will be their torment.
175. They are the ones who buy error in place of guidance and torment in place of forgiveness. How perseverant are they in their strife to reach the Fire.
176. That is because God has revealed the Scripture with the truth. Those who find (a cause of) disagreement in the Scripture are in deep discord.
177. It is not righteousness that you turn your faces toward east or west; but the truly righteous are those who believe in God and the Last Day, and the angels, and the Book, and the Messengers; those who give away some of their wealth - however much they may cherish it - to their kin, to the orphans, to the needy, to the wayfarer, to those who ask, and to ransom slaves; those who establish prayer and pay the poor-dues; who fulfill the contracts which they have made; and who are perseverant, in times of tribulation and adversity, and in time of peril. Such are the people of truth, the God conscious. (2:158-177)

There are several narrations that explain the rationale behind the revelation of the verse, “Indeed, the Safa and Marwa are among the rites of God. It is therefore no sin on those who visit the House to perform major or minor pilgrimage, to go around them. And if any one does good of his own accord, (for him) God is Appreciative, Omniscient.” However, the following explanation seems to be the most plausible one. When Muslims went to perform Major (Hajj) and Minor (‘Umra) pilgrimages they were reluctant to walk between Safa and Marwa because this was part of the rituals they used to perform before the advent of Islam. The idols of Asaf and Naeila used to be placed on top of these two mountains. Al-Bukhari narrated on the authority of Muhammad bin Yousof that Anas (RA) said, “We used to think that this was a pagan ritual, so when we became Muslims we stopped performing it, until this verse was revealed.”

Alsha’bi said, “The idols of Asaf and Naeila were placed on top of the mountains of Safa and Marwa, respectively. That is why Muslims did not like to perform the ritual of walking between Safa and Marwa, until the verse was revealed.”

So, Safa and Marwa are parts of the rituals of worship of God. People who walk between Safa and Marwa are only performing God’s rites. They perform this ritual out of their devotion to God alone. Islam approved most of the rituals of pilgrimage that the Arabs used to perform before the advent of Islam. However, all rituals that were connected to idol worship were completely abandoned. Rituals of pilgrimage were again used to connect with the rituals that God taught Prophet Abraham (PBUH). The major difference between the rituals of ‘Umra (Minor pilgrimage) and Hajj (Major pilgrimage) is the ritual of spending sometime in the valley of ‘Arafat. This ritual is observed in Hajj but not in ‘Umra. ‘Umra can also be done at any time of the year, while Hajj can only be done at a certain prescribed time of the year. The verse ends by motivating people to do good, “And if any one does good of his own accord, (for him) God is Appreciative, Omniscient.” This indicates that walking between Safa and Marwa is indeed an acceptable deed. This statement aimed at removing any doubt that Muslims may harbour about the validity of this ritual.

“Those who conceal the clear (signs) We have sent down, and the guidance, after We have made it clear for the people in the Scripture, on them shall be God's curse, and the curse of those entitled to curse. Except those who repent and make amends and openly declare (the truth). I will accept their repentance; for I am Ever-Relenting, Giver of Mercy. Those who disbelieve, and die while they are disbelievers, on them is God's curse, and the curse of the angels, and of all humankind; They will abide therein. Their torment will not be lightened, nor will they be reprieved.” The People of the Scripture should have known from their Scripture that the message brought by Muhammad (PBUH) is the truth. However, they chose to conceal this knowledge, for one reason or another. Many people, at different places and various times conceal the truth; they intentionally and knowingly hide verses that existed in the Scripture to serve their worldly purposes. These people are cursed by God. God's curse means that they have earned God's wrath and they were expelled from His mercy. However, they still have a window of opportunity to repent and make amends. This is the window of repentance. It is a window that brings a breath of fresh air and hope. This is the hope which brings light to the life of the repentant to lead their hearts back to the source of light. No one should despair of the mercy and forgiveness of God. Those who wish to return to the safe refuge of God still have a chance. The signs of true repentance are doing good deeds, acknowledging the truth, and behaving according to the truth. Those who chose to repent should put their trust in God who says, “I am Ever-Relenting, Giver of Mercy.” But those who are stubborn and continue in their crooked ways until it is too late, they will meet the promised result, “Those who disbelieve, and die while they are disbelievers, on them is God's curse, and the curse of the angels, and of all humankind; They will abide therein. Their torment will not be lightened, nor will they be reprieved.” They brought it on themselves by ignoring the opportunity to acknowledge the truth.

“And your God is the One True God. There is no deity but He, Lord of Mercy, Giver of Mercy.” This is an unequivocal statement of the Oneness of God. He is the only One who is worthy of worship. He is the only One who sets the standards for ethical behaviour. He is the only One who issues rules and laws necessary for the organization of life on earth. He is the only One who defines the way of life to be adopted by His servants. This statement is enunciated in the context of preparing the Muslim nation to carry its responsibility on earth. This statement is repeated over and over again to inculcate this value in the hearts of the believers. This statement is the corner stone of the Islamic way of life. The verse ends with an emphasis that all God's decrees spring from His Grace and Mercy.

The whole universe is a testament of the Oneness and mercy of God, “Indeed, in the creation of the heavens and the earth; in the alternation of the night and the day; in the sailing of the ships through the ocean for the profit of humankind; in the rain which God sends down from the skies, thereby reviving the earth after its death; in the beasts of all kinds that He scatters through the earth; in the change of the winds, and the clouds made subservient between the sky and the earth; are indeed signs for a people who understand.” The Qur'an invites humankind to travel through the universe, with open eyes, to discover the secrets of the creation. The verses allude to the vastness of heavens and earth and the huge constellations that form the universe. They all move in harmony and delicate balance. The alternation of day and night, light and darkness, and sunrise and sunset are miracles that stir emotions in people and fill their hearts with awe and apprehension. However, very quickly the miraculous phenomena lose their lustre and become accepted as routine events except for the heart of a believer, which continues to feel the blessings of God and continues to be awed by the miracles of the creation.

Ships sail through water bringing goods to people. Reading this verse, the image of a vast dark ocean dotted with minute structures which move under the mercy of huge merciless waves comes to mind. Nothing protects the floating ships from being overtaken by the huge waves except the mercy of God. God's mercy has materialized in the laws of the universe that keep ships afloat allowing them to survive in harsh environments.

Contemplating the scenes of falling rain that creates life in the dead earth, the variety of animals that live on earth, the change of winds, and the motion of the clouds, one cannot but feel awed by the power of God and His mercy. Dry land looks dead; when water falls, life springs suddenly from the dead ground. Where did life come from? Was it lurking in the seed? But where did the seed come from? Questions that we cannot escape from and all lead to the Creator.

The change of winds and the clouds that move around are all controlled by God's law. Theories may explain these natural phenomena but they do not tell us about the origin of these phenomena. The verse is an invitation to humankind to reflect on the miracles of the creation and the amazing balance under which the universe is kept.

Many people do not reflect. They associate partners with God, "Yet there are people who take (for worship) others besides God, as rivals to God. They love them as they should love God." At the time of the revelation of these verses, the pagans of Mecca used to worship idols. Idols may take different forms and types but the essence of this practice continues at all times. But, "the believers are stronger in their love for God." The love of God in the heart of the believer is unconditional. It is a love that fills the heart of the believer and leaves no space for the love of anything else. It connects the believer with God through a link of love, kindness, and spiritual affection.

"If only the wrongdoers could see, as they will when they face the torment, that to God belongs all power, and that He is severe in torment." Those are the ones who associated partners with God. They committed injustice against themselves and against the truth. If only they had the foresight to think about the Day of Judgment, they would have realized that God has all power and He has no partners. On that Day, "those, who were followed disown those who followed (them), would see the torment, and all relations between them would be cut off." On that day, everyone will be busy with their own affairs. There will be no chiefs to be obeyed, nor leaders to be followed. The truth will become evident and no one will be able to protect anyone else. Anger will overtake those who were fooled by the illusion of power in life. They will wish if they could go back to take revenge against those who deluded them, "And those who followed would say, 'If only We had one more chance, We would disown them, as they have disowned us.' Thus, will God show them (the fruits of) their deeds as (nothing but) a source for regret. Nor will there be a way for them out of the fire.”

“People, eat of what is lawful and wholesome on earth; and do not follow in the footsteps of Satan, for he is to you an avowed enemy. He indeed, commands you to do what is evil and shameful, and that you should say about God that of which you have no knowledge. When it is said to them, ‘Follow what God has revealed.’ They say, ‘Nay, we shall follow the ways of our fathers.’ Even though their fathers had no sense at all and had no guidance? The parable of those who disbelieve is that of a beast which hears the shepherd’s cry, and hears in it nothing but the sound of a voice and a cry. Deaf, dumb, blind, for they do not use their reason.” God makes it allowable for people to eat of that which He provided, lawful and wholesome. That which has been prohibited is explained in detail. Commands regarding the lawful and the forbidden should be taken from God alone. Satan’s should not be followed because he is the avowed enemy for humankind. Satan’s commands are never for the good of humankind, he only commands what is evil. He commands people to change God’s laws regarding what is allowed and what is forbidden.

This verse establishes a general rule that reflects the ease of the Islamic faith and shows that it is in concert with the creation of the universe and humankind. It is allowable for humankind to use for their benefit all what is on earth, except the few things which God has declared prohibited. It is a rule that responds to the initial natural disposition of the universe and people. God created everything on earth for the benefit of humankind, thus He decreed that the use of these things is allowable.

The practice of those who do not reflect on the revelation of God, but follow blindly in the footsteps of their forefathers in matters of faith is condemned. All matters of faith have to come from God. They are being ridiculed for following blindly the faith of their fathers, even though they may not be able to listen with their ears, talk with their tongues, or see with their eyes. They have no understanding.

“Believers, eat of the good things that We have provided for you, and be grateful to God, if it is Him you worship. He has only forbidden you carrion, blood, the flesh of a swine, and that on which any other name has been invoked besides that of God. But if one is forced by necessity, without wilful disobedience or transgressing due limits, then no sin shall be upon him. For God is All-Forgiving Giver of Mercy.”

God is calling upon the believers to enjoy the good things that He made lawful to them. Whatever God allows is good and whatever He prohibited is bad. God alone is the provider and He has made the good things allowable to them and for that they should be grateful. A list of the things that He made unlawful is given. This is an exclusive list, only the things mentioned on the list are unlawful. In addition to the fact that modern medicine discovered the dangers around consuming carrion and blood, they are abominable. Swine meat has been prohibited in the Torah and in the Qur’an. It was later discovered that there are health issues regarding swine flesh; however, the claim is made that at this day and age these issues have been sorted out. But the question is, are we sure that we have discovered all the bad consequences that may result from consuming such prohibited items. God's law deserves to be heeded.

God prohibited the consumption of meat from an animal, “on which any other name has been invoked besides that of God.” not because of health issues but because it has been dedicated to other than God. This violates the belief in the Oneness of God. It is a spiritual impurity that brings this item under the same umbrella that covers physical impurities. The verses indicate the close relationship between rules defining the lawful and the forbidden with the belief in the Oneness of God. Obeying God's commands which delineate the lawful and the forbidden is a practical application of the belief in the Oneness of God.

However, there are exceptional situations when the prohibition rules are overridden, “But if one is forced by necessity, without wilful disobedience or transgressing due limits, then no sin shall be upon him.” This is a general rule: the rules which prohibit certain food should be suspended if the application of such rules may endanger human life. There is a difference in the views of the scholars regarding the type and extent of the necessity for which the rule can be suspended.

Some of the Jewish tribes in Medina argued extensively about the rules of the lawful and forbidden that were revealed in the Qur'an. One reason for this argument is that the Qur'an made lawful some of the things that the Jews considered unlawful. Verse 146 of Sura 6, recounts some of the things that were forbidden for Jews but were made allowable for Muslims, “For those who followed the Jewish Law, We forbade every (animal) with undivided hoof, and We forbade them the fat of the ox and the sheep, except what adheres to their backs or their entrails, or is mixed up with a bone.”

The Qur'an continued to condemn those who conceal God's revelation, “Those who conceal God's revelations in the Scripture, and barter them for a miserable profit, they only fill their bellies with fire. God will not speak to them on the Day of Resurrection, nor will He purify them. Painful will be their torment. They are the ones who buy error in place of guidance and torment in place of forgiveness. How perseverant are they in their strife to reach the Fire? That is because God has revealed the Scripture with the truth. Those who find (a cause of) disagreement in the Scripture are in deep discord.” Although the verse came to denounce the concealment of the revelation by the People of the Scripture, but it applies to any group of people who conceal the truth for personal gains. They bargain a losing deal. Whatever gain they make is trivial in comparison to the loss of God's blessing and the great reward in the Hereafter. The material gain they make in this life is like consuming fire in their bellies. This is a scene of the scenes of the Day of Judgment: they will be clothed in fire and they will be eating fire. In addition, they will be humiliated, “God will not speak to them on the Day of Resurrection, nor will He purify them. Painful will be their torment.” The verse continues to paint an emotive image of people who are negotiating a bargain: they buy error in place of guidance, and they sell forgiveness in place of torment. This is truly a losing bargain. But it was their decision to relinquish guidance and choose error, and to forfeit forgiveness and choose torment. They should then endure the consequences of their decision, because they will suffer long in Hell fire. This is the recompense for concealing the Scripture that has been revealed to guide people to the way of life that God has chosen for people on earth. This is truly the Book of truth, whoever chose to live according to it, has made the right choice. Those who chose not to follow it are in great schism with the law of nature and they will always live in schism among themselves.

In a single verse, the true Islamic behaviour is defined and the characteristics of the true believers are delineated, "It is not righteousness that you turn your faces toward east or west; but the truly righteous are those who believe in God and the Last Day, and the angels, and the Book, and the Messengers; those who give away some of their wealth - however much they may cherish it - to their kin, to the orphans, to the needy, to the wayfarer, to those who ask, and to ransom slaves; those who establish prayer, and pay the poor-dues; who fulfill the contracts which they have made; and who are perseverant, in times of tribulation and adversity, and in time of peril. Such are the people of truth, the God conscious." This verse may have been revealed in connection with the issue of the realignment of the direction of the Qibla, but the underlying issue here is much more fundamental. It is an unequivocal statement that defines the approach of Islam to life and defines the priorities of faith. Righteousness is not attained by performing superficial rituals. Facing east or west - toward Mecca or Jerusalem - is not the ultimate goal of the ritual. Righteousness is deeds and behaviours based on feelings and principles. The feelings and principles initiate changes in the psyche and the way of life of the individual and the community.

Righteousness is the whole sum of goodness. What is the relation between righteousness and the belief in God, the Last Day, the angels, the Book, and the Messengers? The belief in God is a turning point in the lives of people. It frees people from slavery: whether it is slavery to other people, to a greater power, or to ideas and traditions. Being a servant of God frees the human being from the chains of all types of slavery. Belief in God puts all people on the same footing in front of God, all people are equal. Belief in God is a turning point from chaos to harmony, from confusion to clarity, from disunity to the oneness of objectives. Belief in the Last Day is a belief in the ultimate divine justice. It is the belief that life on earth is not in vain and that whatever good one does on this earth will never go unrewarded. The belief in the angels is a component of the belief in the unseen. This is one of the criteria that differentiate between human beings and beasts. Human beings are able to perceive the metaphysical while beasts only perceive the physical. The belief in the Book and the Messengers is the belief in all Messengers and the message they brought. It is a belief in the unity of humanity, the oneness of its God, and the oneness of its way of life.

To give out of one's wealth, which one loves, to "their kin, to the orphans, to the needy, to the wayfarer, to those who ask, and to ransom slaves;" is to free oneself from enslavement to stinginess and selfishness. It frees oneself from the love of wealth which controls people and prevents them from being generous to those who are in need. It enriches the relationship between the members of the extended family. It provides support to the vulnerable orphans who lost their parents and protects them from straying away from the right path. Giving to the needy, who refrain from begging, makes them feel that they are part of the community, it is an expression of the collective responsibility of the members of the community. Helping the travelers who are on the road away from their homes emphasizes the unity of humanity. Those who have no recourse but to ask for help should be helped. Islamic traditions urge people to have good work ethics. Thus, those who are asking for help are doing this out of sheer necessity. It is a righteous deed indeed to help slaves to gain their freedom.

Establishing prayers goes beyond facing toward east or west, it is the absolute devotion of the whole of the human being to his/her Lord. The physical, the spiritual, the body, the mind, and the soul are all in devotion to God. Prayer does not consist only of motions to be performed mechanically, nor it is an exercise of spiritual devotion. Prayer sums up the essence of the Islamic perspective on human life. Islam acknowledges the various components of the human being: a body, a mind, and a spirit. The three components are all united in one being and they should be in harmony with each other. No component is favoured over the other two. The three components have equal roles in performing prayer, the major act of worship. Prayer consists of movements of the body, recitation and reflection of the mind, and submission of the spirit all working together to exemplify the Islamic conception of human life.

Paying the poor-dues (Zakat) is a fulfillment of the individual's social obligation to the community. God is the ultimate owner of wealth, He delegated people to use it and spend out of it in legitimate causes. One of these causes is the poor-dues. Poor-dues is mentioned in the verse in addition to other ways of spending which indicates that poor-dues is independent of the other ways of spending money. Poor-dues is an obligatory tax, while the other ways of spending money are voluntary. Righteousness is not achieved until one practices both obligatory and voluntary spending in the way of God. Obligatory spending and voluntary spending are two of the fundamental principles of Islam.

Fulfillment of pledges is a fundamental element of the Islamic ethical code. The command to fulfill pledges made is often repeated in the Qur'an. A common sequence of verses starts with the command to fulfill pledges, followed by verses about faith, humanity, and doing good deeds. Fulfillment of pledges is critical to the establishment of an environment of trust and security whether at the individual, community, or state levels. The absence of this ethic in a community creates an atmosphere of mistrust among people. The first pledge one makes, is the pledge one makes with God. Islam does not differentiate between pledges made to friends or foes, all pledges have to be honoured.

Perseverance, "in times of tribulation and adversity, and in time of peril," is an important trait that is needed to help people go through life with all its tribulations and trials. Believers should trust that each time of adversity will be followed by a time of ease. Hope and trust in God are the ways to deal with adverse situations. The way this part of the verse is written alludes to the special status that is given to those who persevere.

The verse defines righteousness as an indivisible combination of the articles of faith and the individual responsibilities and traits. It ends by stating that whoever fulfills these characteristics are, "the people of truth, the God conscious," Those who are truthful with their Lord, truthful in their faith, and truthful in translating their faith into a way of life.

This verse gives a very concise summary of the way of life that Islam calls for. One can see clearly, that the verse states the articles of faith of Islam; then it mentions the rituals and the acts of worship; and finally it states the main attributes of believers. The verse is composed in such a way that elements of these three topics are intermingled. Two points can be stated. First, righteousness is achieved when one adopts an Islamic way of life. Second, Islam is not a compartmentalized religion. All three components: the doctrine, the rituals, and behavior are interconnected.

Verses: 178 to 188

178. Believers, just retribution is ordained for you in cases of murder; the free for the free, the slave for the slave, and the woman for the woman. But for him who is pardoned by his (injured) brother, this shall be adhered to fairly, and restitution should be made to him in kindness. This is alleviation and a mercy from your Lord. He who transgresses after this will have a painful torment.
179. And there is life for you in the law of just retribution, people of understanding, that you may remain conscious of God.
180. It is prescribed for you, when death approaches any of you, if he leaves behind any wealth that he should make a bequest to parents and next of kin, according to reasonable usage. This is a duty incumbent on those who are conscious of God.
181. And whoso changes (the will) after he has heard it, the sin thereof is only upon those who change it. God is All-Hearing, Omniscient.
182. But if one has a reason to fear that a testator has committed a mistake or wrong, and brings about a settlement between the heirs, (it shall be) no sin for him. God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.
183. Believers, fasting is prescribed for you as it was prescribed for those before you, that you may remain God conscious.
184. Fast for a fixed number of days; but if any of you is ill, or on a journey, the prescribed number (Should be made up) from days later. For those who can do it (with hardship), is a ransom, the feeding of one that is indigent. But he who will give more, of his own free will, it is better for him. And it is better for you that you fast, if you only knew.
185. Ramadan is the (month) during which the Qur'an was sent down, a guidance to humankind and clear (signs) for the guidance, and the Criterion (between right and wrong). So every one of you who is present (at his home) during this month should spend it in fasting, but if anyone is ill, or on a journey, the prescribed period (should be made up) by days later. God wants ease for you. He does not want to put you to hardship. (He wants you) to complete the prescribed period, and to glorify Him in that He has guided you; and you may be grateful.
186. When My servants ask you concerning Me, I am indeed close (to them). I respond to the call of him who calls, whenever he calls on Me. So let them also listen to My call, and believe in Me, that they may be guided.
187. Permitted to you, on the night of the fast, to go unto your wives. They are your garments and you are their garments. God knows what you used to do secretly among yourselves; but He accepted your repentance and pardoned you; so now associate with them, and seek what God has ordained for you, and eat and drink, until the white thread of dawn appears to you distinct from its black thread. Then complete your fast until nightfall. Do not associate with your wives while you are in retreat in the mosques. Those are limits (set by) God, so do not go near them. Thus, does God make clear His Signs to people, that they may remain conscious of Him.

188. And do not eat up your property among yourselves wrongfully, nor use it to bribe judges, with intent that you may eat up sinfully and knowingly a portion of (other) people's property. (2:178-188)

“Believers, just retribution is ordained for you in cases of murder; the free for the free, the slave for the slave, and the woman for the woman. But for him who is pardoned by his (injured) brother, this shall be adhered to fairly, and restitution should be made to him in kindness. This is alleviation and a mercy from your Lord. He who transgresses after this will have a painful torment.” The address is to the believers, who believe in God and therefore have to accept God’s commands and laws. This verse outlines God’s legislation regarding retribution. The law is enunciated and the rationale behind it is explained. The verse also exhorts them to remain conscious of God which guarantees the observance of the law. The law states that retribution has to be exacted when crimes of premeditated murder are committed, “the free for the free, the slave for the slave, and the woman for the woman.” However, “for him who is forgiven somewhat by his (injured) brother, this shall be adhered to fairly, and restitution should be made to him in kindness.” Acceptance of restitution is a sign from the victim’s family that they are willing to forgive. It has to be requested and paid with kindness. The purpose of this process is to remove animosity between the murderer and the victim’s family. This is an alleviation and mercy from God. But, “He who transgresses after this will have a painful torment.” Transgressors are not only punished in the Hereafter, but also in this life. Those who transgress after restitution has been negotiated and agreed upon should be executed. Retribution is not allowed once restitution has been accepted.

The verse reflects the comprehensive nature of the law and illustrates how it takes into consideration human emotions. It is natural for a victim’s family to feel angry and to request retribution, so means for exacting justice is provided. However, forgiveness is encouraged and legislated. Forgiveness is made an option for those who are willing and able to exercise it.

It has been narrated that this verse has been abrogated by verse 45 in Sura 5, “And We ordained for them therein a life for a life, an eye for an eye, a nose for a nose, an ear for an ear, a tooth for a tooth, and for wounds is legal retribution,” which emphasized retribution as the only option. However, it is clear that these two verses address different circumstances. It seems that verse 45 in Sura 5, addresses situations of individual crimes, when a single person or persons commit premeditated murder. In this case, just retribution should be exacted. But, the present verse applies to situations where killing is the result of large scale hostility between two groups of people. In the first case the target is one or more specific individuals, while in the second case it is a war between two tribes or two families in which case, the killing and the acts of revenge are random. Therefore, the two options of retribution and restitution are open. This interpretation, if accepted, removes any contradiction between the two verses.

“And there is life for you in the law of just retribution, people of understanding, that you may remain conscious of God.” The purpose of the law for just retribution is not only to address the desire of the victim’s family to take revenge for their loved ones who were killed, but it is also a legislation to preserve life. It is a deterrent for anyone who attempts to commit a murder. When the culprits realize that they may lose their lives as a punishment for their crimes, they may stop, think, and change their minds. The rationale behind the law of just retribution may also be understood if we consider the protection that the whole community will enjoy when the lives of the individuals are protected.

The verse ends with an admonition to the believers to remain God conscious. This is actually the main factor in deterring people from committing crimes, whether it is unprovoked aggression or an act of revenge. Although retribution laws are necessary for the establishment of justice in a community, this alone does not provide sufficient deterrent against crime. God consciousness provides a strong motivation to stop aggression. Laws alone are not sufficient tools to change people's behaviour; laws should be accompanied by internal motivation. Islam provides this internal motivation in the form of the concept of God consciousness. This explains the rarity of crimes committed during the time of the Prophet (PBUH). Even when a crime was committed the culprits, in most cases, made voluntary admission of their guilt. This behaviour was mainly motivated by feelings of God consciousness in the culprit's heart.

“It is prescribed for you, when death approaches any of you, if he leaves behind any wealth, that he should make a bequest to parents and next of kin, according to reasonable usage. This is a duty incumbent on those who are conscious of God.” This is a command for the believers who die and leave behind estates; they should write a will before they die. There is a difference in opinion among the scholars as to the size of the estate which makes this command obligatory. Most probably, the norms of the society would be the decisive factor in this case.

It should be mentioned that the requirement of making a bequest for the parents has been abrogated by the verses expounding the inheritance laws which were revealed at a later time. Inheritance laws specified the portions that each parent is entitled to receive from the estates of their children. The Prophet (PBUH) has been quoted to have said, “Those who were allotted portions of the estate by virtue of the inheritance laws have no right in an additional bequest from the same estate.” As for the next of kin, if they are allotted portions by virtue of inheritance laws, then they have no additional rights as well. Those who are not allotted a portion according to the inheritance law are entitled to a portion through the will that the deceased makes. The rationale behind making a bequest for those who are not entitled to a portion of the estate according to the inheritance laws is to strengthen the ties of the extended family. It is an application of the collective responsibility of family members toward their kinfolks. All these laws and regulations should be executed with kindness and fairness. People should observe God consciousness when wills are made to make sure that no injustice is done to a family member. The Prophet's (PBUH) tradition limited the portion of the estate that the deceased is allowed to include in such a will to one third of the estate. This way, those who are entitled to inherit according to the inheritance laws will not suffer injustice.

“And whoso changes (the will) after he has heard it, the sin thereof is only upon those who change it. God is All-Hearing, Omniscient.” Those who change the will of a deceased person after he/she had died are sinners. God has knowledge of everything. However, there is one case in which the executor is allowed to change the will. This is the situation when the executor knows that the deceased intended to deprive someone, who is legally entitled to inherit, of their right, “But if one has a reason to fear that a testator has committed a mistake or wrong, and brings about a settlement between the heirs, (it shall be) no sin for him. God is All-Forgiving,

Giver of Mercy.”

“Believers, fasting is prescribed for you as it was prescribed for those before you, that you may remain God conscious.” This shows that the main objective behind fasting is the attainment of God consciousness. God consciousness enhances the ability of the hearts to obey God’s commands, to do the things that please God, and to refrain from doing the things that displease Him. Fasting is a tool to promote God consciousness which helps the believers to overcome the temptation of sin. Believers know how important God consciousness is. Attaining God consciousness is one of the major objectives of the believer. This verse emphasizes that fasting is one of the ways that lead to the attainment of God consciousness.

“Fast for a fixed number of days; but if any of you is ill or on a journey, the prescribed number (Should be made up) from days later. For those who can do it (with hardship), is a ransom, the feeding of one that is indigent. But he who will give more, of his own free will it is better for him. And it is better for you that you fast, if you only knew.” Fasting is prescribed for few days only every year for those who are healthy and not traveling. Those who are sick or travelling are given an exemption until they recover or come back home from their travel, respectively. The way the verse is written gives the impression that there are no specific conditions attached to this exemption. This is the way these exemptions should be understood. The exemption is not attached to the severity of the illness or the level of hardship encountered in travel. The idea is to make these tasks easier for people and to remove any feeling of embarrassment that they are not complying with God’s commands. We are not privy to the reasons behind these exemptions, God knows best. So, we have to accept these rulings even if we don’t understand the rationale behind them. Some of the scholars are wary of this approach, because they fear that people may abuse this privilege. They may become reckless in the conduct of the rituals. This may lead to neglecting the ritual of fasting for the slightest hardship that they may suffer. This is not a justification for introducing conditions that were not prescribed in the first place.

There are traditions that may shed some light on the application of these exemptions. Anas (RA) said, “One day, we were travelling with the Prophet (PBUH), some of us were fasting and some were not. We camped in a very hot place. Those who were fasting were too tired so they lied down. Those who were not fasting set up camp, and tended the horses and camels. The Prophet (PBUH) said, ‘Today, those who are not fasting got all the reward from God.’”

Jaber (RA) said, “The Prophet (PBUH) was traveling and saw a group of people surrounding a man covering him from the sun, the Prophet (PBUH) asked, ‘What is wrong with him?’ they said, ‘He is fasting.’ The Prophet (PBUH) said, ‘It is not righteousness to fast while one is traveling.’”

‘Amr bin Umayyah Al-Damri (RA), said, “I came back from travel, and went to see the Prophet (PBUH). The Prophet (PBUH) offered me food. I apologized saying, ‘Messenger of God, I am fasting.’ The Prophet (PBUH) said, ‘I tell you that God has decreed that the traveler is given an exemption from fasting and to pray only half the prayer.’”

‘Aiysha (RA) said, “Hamza bin Amr Al-Aslami (RA) asked the Prophet (PBUH) about fasting while traveling- Hamza was a person who frequently fasted - the Prophet (PBUH) said, ‘It is up to you, whether you fast or not.’”

The impression one gets from these different narrations and others, is that when one of the companions asked the Prophet (PBUH) a question, the Prophet (PBUH) used to take into consideration the different circumstances surrounding the question and the person who is asking. My final impression, about the exemption from fasting during travel, is that it is better not to fast during travel and that this exemption is not related to how difficult the travel conditions are. I could not find any tradition that deal with the exemption for being sick, except the opinions of the scholars. It seems that there are no conditions attached to this exemption as well. Those who are traveling or are sick are allowed not to fast. They have to make up the days which they missed when their conditions allow.

Fasting was prescribed in the second year after Hijra. In the beginning, it was a very difficult undertaking. So, another exemption was given to those who are barely able to fast, instead of fasting, one can feed a needy person. Muslims are urged anyway to feed the needy, whether it is a ransom for not fasting or not, “But he who will give more, of his own free will it is better for him.” Muslims were also encouraged to fast, even if they suffer some hardship in fasting, “And it is better for you that you fast, if you only knew.” Fasting is a good training for self-discipline and increasing the stamina. In addition, this exemption was only a temporary measure until people got used to the practice of fasting. This exemption remained only in the case of the elderly who are unable to fast. Imam Malek said that it was the opinion of Anas bin Malek (RA) that feeding a needy person in lieu of fasting is acceptable for those who are unable to fast because of their old age.

“Ramadan is the (month) during which the Qur’an was sent down, a guidance to humankind and clear (signs) for the guidance, and the Criterion (between right and wrong). So every one of you who is present (at his home) during that month should spend it in fasting, but if anyone is ill, or on a journey, the prescribed period (should be made up) by days later. God wants ease for you. He does not want to put you to hardship. (He wants you) to complete the prescribed period, and to glorify Him in that He has guided you; and you may be grateful.” This is the verse that was revealed to restrict the permission to feed a needy person in lieu of fasting to only those who are not able to fast because they are too old. So, those who are home during this month and are certain that the month has started should fast. However, those who are travelling or sick are allowed to delay the fasting until they return home, or they recover from sickness. A fundamental principle is reiterated: God wants ease for you and He does not want you to suffer unnecessarily. This is a fundamental principle that applies to all undertakings that a Muslim is required to perform as part of the rituals of Islam. It exhorts Muslims to become lenient in their dealings with others. It gives Muslims a sense of security and trust in God’s mercy. Allowing the sick and the traveler to perform fasting after they return to normal life again allows them to gain the reward for fasting. So, they do not lose that reward. The verse ends by explaining another reason for fasting, “to glorify Him in that He has guided you; and you may be grateful.” One of the objectives of fasting is for Muslims to appreciate the value of the guidance they received from God. During the month of fasting, Muslims become more sensitive to gaining the pleasure of God by abstaining from thinking and committing all sorts of sin. They become grateful to God that He gave them the opportunity to become better human beings and helped them to become better equipped to perform the greater responsibility that they are expected to undertake.

Before continuing to talk about the details of fasting, the huge reward from God for those who fast is mentioned, “When My servants ask you concerning Me, I am indeed close (to them). I respond to the call of him who calls, whenever he calls on Me. So let them also listen to My call, and believe in Me, that they may be guided.” What better reward than feeling the closeness of God. He listens to their requests and is ready to respond favourably to them. The verse’s language reflects the limitless kindness and grace of God. He honours those who believe in Him by calling them, “My servants.” Another form of grace and kindness is that He himself tells His servants that He is close to them. Instead of delegating the Prophet (PBUH) to answer their question, He Himself responds directly to the people and tells them that He is close. Then the verse is completed by an invitation to heed God’s call and to believe in Him so that they become guided. The fruit of believing in God is guidance. This is true guidance because it comes from God and is based on the belief in Him.

It has been narrated that the Prophet (PBUH) said, “God will shy away from ignoring one of His servants who asks for something good.” In another tradition, the Prophet (PBUH) has been quoted to have said, “God will respond to the call of whoever submits to Him on the surface of this earth. God may grant the wish of the person who is asking or may protect her/him from something bad as long as the request does not involve hurting a kin or a wish for something evil.”

The Prophet (PBUH) has also been quoted to have said, “God promised to respond favourably to all requests as long as it does not involve hurting a kin or a wish for an evil deed, or made hurriedly.” The companions asked the Prophet (PBUH) what he meant by the word “hurriedly.” He said, “Hurriedly means that a person asks for an immediate response from God”

A fasting person is in a favourable position for making requests from God. Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) has been quoted to have said, “God responds favourably to the request of a fasting person at the time of breaking fast.”

The Prophet (PBUH) has also been quoted to have said, “God never turns down supplications made by three kinds of people: a just leader, a fasting person until he/she breaks their fast, and a person who suffered injustice. God raises these supplications above the clouds and opens the doors of heaven for them. God then says, ‘I will certainly respond favourably to these calls, though, this may not occur immediately.’”

“Permitted to you, on the night of the fast, to go unto your wives. They are your garments and you are their garments. God knows what you used to do secretly among yourselves; but He accepted your repentance and pardoned you; so now associate with them, and seek what God has ordained for you, and eat and drink, until the white thread of dawn appears to you distinct from its black thread. Then complete your fast until nightfall. Do not associate with your wives while you are in retreat in the mosques. Those are limits (set by) God, so do not go near them.

Thus, does God make clear His Signs to people, that they may remain conscious of Him.” When fasting was first prescribed, a fasting person who sleeps after breaking fast at sunset would not be able to eat, to drink, or to have intimate relationship with his/her spouse when they wake up even if they wake up before dawn. So, if it so happened that a person was not able to breakfast at sunset and instead was overcome by sleep and woke up later, he /she would not be able to eat anything and would have to continue fasting for another day. This subjected Muslims to a great hardship. This verse was revealed to remove this restriction and to allow Muslims to practice their normal activities between sunset and dawn. The Qur’an uses a decent allegory to describe the intimate relationship between spouses, “They are your garments and you are their garments.” The allegory elevates this relationship from the realm of a mere physical interaction to the realm of a kind, sensitive, and tender relationship. It also alludes to the security and comfort that each spouse should find in the relationship with his/her spouse.

God forgave whatever trespasses happened before the revelation of this verse. So, seek fulfillment in whatever God has made lawful to you until the light of dawn appears on the horizon. Prayer schedules issued by religious authorities provide accurate times for starting the fast. No intimate relationship between spouses should be conducted during periods of retreat at mosques. These are the boundaries of allowable practices made clear by God, so do keep your distance from them. It is safer not to come close to the boundary for fear of an unintentional crossing of the boundary. The objective of the believer is to seek and remain conscious of God. God consciousness is a goal that the believers should hold dear to their hearts and keep it in front of their eyes, working hard to reach it.

“And do not eat up your property among yourselves wrongfully, nor use it to bribe judges, with intent that you may eat up sinfully and knowingly a portion of (other) people's property.” Ibn Katheer wrote regarding the interpretation of this verse on the authority of ‘Ali bin Abi Talha (RA), “This verse deals with a situation that arises as a result of a person who borrowed money without making a written document attesting to the debt, refuses to repay the debt and asserts in a court of law that he never borrowed the money. His intention is to avoid paying back the debt knowing full well that he is committing a sin.” Mejahed and others said “Do not get into a litigation knowing that you are wrong.” Um Salamah (RA) was quoted to have said, “The Prophet (PBUH) said, ‘I am a human being, when I judge between two litigators of you I may be persuaded by the person who is able to articulate his/her case more eloquently than the other. Whosoever claims something that is not his/her and gets it, it is like getting a piece of fire. He/she would either leave it or get burnt by it.’”

Verses: 189 to 203

189. They ask you concerning the new moons. Say, “They are signs to mark fixed periods of time for people and for pilgrimage.” It is not righteousness that you enter your houses from the back. But, it is righteousness to be conscious of God. Enter houses through the proper doors and be conscious of God so you may attain success.
190. Fight in the cause of God those who fight you, but do not transgress the limits. God does not love transgressors.

191. And slay them (in battle) wherever you catch them, and turn them out from where they have turned you out; for persecution is worse than slaying; but fight them not at the Sacred Mosque, unless they fight you there (first); but if they fight you, slay them. Such is the reward of the disbelievers.
192. But if they cease, God is All- Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.
193. And fight them until there is no persecution, and religion should be only for God, but if they desist, then there should be no hostility except against the wrongdoers.
194. The sacred month is for the sacred month and violation of sanctity (calls for) fair retribution. And if one attacked you, attack him in like manner as he attacked you. But remain conscious of God, and know that God is with those who are conscious of Him.
195. Spend in the cause of God, and let not your hands contribute to (your) destruction; but do good, for God loves those who do good.
196. And perform the pilgrimage, major and minor, for God. But if you are prevented (from performing it), send an offering for sacrifice that may be obtained with ease, and do not shave your heads until the offering reaches the place of sacrifice. And if any of you is ill, or has an ailment in his scalp, (necessitating shaving), he should offer a ransom for it by either fasting, or feeding the poor, or offering another form of worship; and when you feel safe, if any one wishes to continue the minor pilgrimage to the major one, he must make an offering, such as he can afford, but if he cannot afford it, he should fast three days during the major pilgrimage and seven days on his return, making ten days in all. This is for those whose household is not in (the precincts of) the Sacred Mosque. And remain conscious of God, and know that God is severe in punishment.
197. The pilgrimage takes place in the months appointed for it, and whoever performs the pilgrimage during these months (let him remember that) there is (to be) no lewdness, abuse, nor angry conversation during the pilgrimage. And whatsoever good you do God knows it. So make provision for yourselves; for the best provision is to be conscious of God. Therefore, remain conscious of Me, you who have understanding.
198. It is no sin for you that you seek the bounty of your Lord (by trading), but when you press on in the multitude from 'Arafat, remember God by the Sacred Monument. Remember Him as He has guided you, although before you were of those astray.
199. Then hasten from the place from which the people hasten, and ask for God's forgiveness. For God is All-forgiving, Giver of Mercy.
200. And when you have completed your rites, celebrate the praise of God, as you used to celebrate the praise of your fathers, with far more heart and soul. There are men who say, "Our Lord, give us (your bounties) in this world." But they will have no share in the Hereafter.
201. And there are some among them who say, "Our Lord, grant us good in this world and good in the hereafter, and save us from the torment of the fire."
202. To these will be allotted what they have earned; and God is swift in reckoning.
203. Celebrate the praise of God during the appointed days. But if any one hastens to leave after two days, there is no blame on him, and if any one stays on, there is no blame on him, if his aim is to do right. Then be conscious of God, and know that you will surely be gathered to Him. (2:189-203)

“They ask you concerning the new moons. Say, ‘They are signs to mark fixed periods of time for people and for pilgrimage.’ It is not righteousness that you enter your houses from the back. But, it is righteousness to be conscious of God. Enter houses through the proper doors and be conscious of God so you may succeed.” It is narrated that the Prophet (PBUH) was asked why the moon takes different shapes. The question may have been also, why the moon was created. So, the answer came that the moon is a sign to mark fixed periods of time. It is a tool that can be used by people to determine times for activities as well as for rituals. The verse continues to talk about a custom which the idolaters used to follow during pilgrimage. It was narrated that, it was the custom of the people of Medina to use the back doors to their houses when they return back after performing pilgrimage. They thought that this is a sign of righteousness. The verse came down to change this meaningless tradition which was rooted in pre Islamic myth. The verse states that righteousness is not achieved through superficial and meaningless traditions. Righteousness is achieved through God consciousness and the belief that God is ever watching over people, He knows what they do in secret and in the open. So, “Enter houses through the proper doors and be conscious of God so you may succeed.” The verse alerts the believer to seek righteousness through God consciousness because God consciousness is the door to success.

“Fight in the cause of God those who fight you, but do not transgress the limits. God does not love transgressors. And slay them (in battle) wherever you catch them, and turn them out from where they have turned you out; for persecution is worse than slaying; but fight them not at the Sacred Mosque, unless they fight you there (first); but if they fight you, slay them. Such is the reward of the disbelievers. But if they cease, God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy. And fight them until there is no persecution, and religion should be only for God, but if they desist, then there should be no hostility except against the wrongdoers. The sacred month is for the sacred month and violation of sanctity (calls for) fair retribution. And if one attacked you, attack him in like manner as he attacked you. But remain conscious of God, and know that God is with those who are conscious of Him. Spend in the cause of God, and let not your hands contribute to (your) destruction; but do good, for God loves those who do good.” It was narrated that this was the first verse that commanded the believers to fight back those who fight them. A previous verse acknowledged the persecution of Muslims at the hands of the idolaters of Mecca but stopped short of giving the command to fight back, “Permission is given to those against whom war is waged, because they have been wronged; and verily, God is able to give them victory. (They are) those who have been expelled from their homes in defiance of right, (for no cause) except that they say, ‘Our Lord is God.’ Had not God checked one set of people by means of another, there would surely have been destroyed monasteries, churches, synagogues, and mosques, in which the name of God is commemorated in abundant measure. God will certainly aid those who aid his (cause); for verily God is full of Strength, Eminent.” (22: 39-40).

The permission for the believers to fight back the idolaters has now been given. The permission was given to redress the injustice inflicted on the believers. They were given the permission to fight back. But why was the permission to fight back delayed until this time? There could have been a multitude of reasons for the timing of the permission to fight back. God knows best, but we can speculate on some of these reasons.

The first reason may have been that the believers needed a training period to be prepared for the responsibilities which they were about to undertake. The Arabs were hot tempered people, unable to control themselves in face of oppression, and they responded quickly and spontaneously to aggression. They needed a training program in self-discipline. They needed to be trained to follow orders. Through this training men like ‘Umar bin Al-Khatib (RA), known for his daring courage, and Hamza bin Abdel Muttaleb (RA), known for his physical strength, were made to exercise patience in face of the insults and persecution suffered by the believers at the hands of the idolaters; and to comply with the orders issued from the supreme commander to, “Restrain your hands (from fighting) and establish prayer and give poor-dues.” (4:77) Men like them were known to quickly jump to combat at the slightest hint of aggression. Muslims needed the training for self-control and self-discipline to behave like an organized army.

Another reason may have been that the Prophet (PBUH) wanted to appeal to the sense of gallantry of the non-Muslim Arabs when they watch their fellow Muslim Arabs being tortured and tormented. He was hoping that this may induce the Arabs who were not party to the dispute between the Muslims and Quraish to sympathize with the Muslims. History bears witness to the success of the Prophet’s (PBUH) strategy in restraining the Muslims against fighting back during the time of persecution in Mecca. An example of this success is the failure of the coalition that Quraish formed to boycott the tribe of Bani Hashem to force them to disown the Prophet (PBUH). Bani Hashem refused to abandon their tribal duty and continued to offer the Prophet (PBUH) tribal protection. When other tribes saw the extent of the harm inflicted on Bani Hashem, they rose up against the coalition and tore the agreement between Quraish and the other tribes who participated in the coalition.

A third reason for not allowing Muslims to fight back may have been because Muslims were still living with their families some of whom were non-Muslims; fighting back under such conditions would have resulted in bloody wars inside each house in Mecca.

These could have been some of the reasons why fighting back was not allowed during the first years following the advent of Islam. In addition to this, the Muslim community was still a fledgling community unable to support such fights. The verse outlines one of the fundamental Islamic principles regarding fighting back. These rules met the needs of the Muslim community at that time. The fighting rules evolved to suit the changing requirements of the Muslim community as time progressed. The present verses enunciate some of the fundamental rules of war in Islam which remained valid until they were amended in Sura 9.

It may be a good idea to talk a little about Jihad in Islam at this point. This provides a general background for the verses dealing with Jihad.

Islam, the final form of the creed of submission, came to set up standards and a general way of life for humankind on earth. The Muslim nation was given the undertaking of leading humankind to a way of life based on the divine project. This way of life is rooted in the correct understanding of the purpose for which the universe and humankind were created. This blessed way of life leads to a life of goodness, without which humanity would be lost.

It is, thus, the right of all human beings to be able to examine this creed. No one should be deprived of the right to examine this creed for themselves without any harassment, oppression, or transgression. Once they have examined it, they have the right to adopt it or reject it freely, without any oppression or compulsion. Those who chose to adopt the creed should be able to practice this way of life freely. Those who reject the creed should not stand in the way of letting other people examine this creed or force them not to adopt it if they so wish. These are basic rights for all human beings. It is the responsibility of the Muslim nation to defend these basic rights.

The Muslim nation should prevent any power to stand in the way of presenting this creed to all people or attempts to harass or persecute the believers. The Muslim nation may have to resort to armed struggle to stop the aggression against the believers or those who wish to adopt this faith. This does not mean that the Muslim nation has the right to compel people to adopt Islam. But it means that Muslims should be able to practice their faith freely without any fear.

These are the basic principles underlying the concept of Jihad. Jihad is only decreed to provide a tool for the protection of the creed and the right of the people to choose freely the religion they would like to practice. Jihad is also a means for protecting Muslims against any aggression which aims at destroying their way of life. Jihad is not meant to be a tool for forcing people to become Muslims.

These verses were revealed to outline the rules of Jihad to the Muslims at a time when they were subjected to persecution by the idolaters of Mecca. However, these are also fundamental rules for Jihad in Islam. The verses start by a command to fight back those who are fighting the Muslims and to continue to fight back as long as the others continue to fight them. However, they are commanded not to transgress the limits, “Fight in the cause of God those who fight you, but do not transgress the limits. God does not love transgressors.” The objective of Jihad is stated in unequivocal terms, “Fight in the cause of God those who fight you.” The fight should be in the cause of God. A Muslim should not fight for any of the causes which have been adopted by people during the long history of humanity as excuses for waging wars. A Muslim should not fight for worldly gains whether it be wealth, honour, enslavement of others, control of resources, or opening markets for products. Not only the cause has been stated but also the extent of the war has been specified, “but do not transgress the limits. God does not love transgressors.”

The narrative continues to emphasize the right to fight those who fought the Muslims, persecuted them, and evicted them out of their homes, “And slay them (in battle) wherever you catch them, and turn them out from where they have turned you out; for persecution is worse than slaying; but fight them not at the Sacred Mosque, unless they (first) fight you there; but if they fight you, slay them. Such is the reward of the disbelievers. But if they cease, God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.” Persecuting people because of their faith represents an assault on people’s most sacred right. It is therefore, more horrendous than killing. Fighting back should continue until they desist. If they fight you at the Sacred Mosque, then fight them back. If they fight you during the sacred months, then they do not deserve to enjoy the protection and security that are guaranteed during the sacred months, “The sacred month is for the sacred month and violation of sanctity (calls for) fair retribution. And if one attacked you, attack him in like manner as he attacked you. But remain conscious of God, and know that God is with those who are conscious of Him.” God has decreed that the safety and security should be guaranteed for all people in the precinct of the Sacred Mosque at all times. Safety and security are guaranteed for all people in any area outside the precinct of the Sacred House during the scared months. However, those who violate the sanctity of the place or the time designated by God should be punished. But this punishment should be within reasonable limits, “do not transgress the limits.”

An army requires men as well as equipment. The Muslim fighters were volunteers; they were not professional soldiers who were paid to fight. Each one brought his own fighting equipment including a horse or a camel for transportation. They volunteered themselves and their wealth which they used to buy fighting equipment. There were others who wanted to volunteer as fighters but they could not afford the price of a mount to use to travel to the battle ground. They would come to the Prophet (PBUH) asking for means of transportation. When they were told that no means of transportation were available, “They turn back with eyes overflowing with tear of grief that they have nothing to spend in God’s cause.” (9:92). The verse urges Muslims to spend in the cause of God, “Spend in the cause of God, and let not your hands contribute to (your) destruction; but do good; for God loves those who do good.” Stinginess is bad for the individual as well as for the community especially for a society in which volunteerism plays a major role in the maintenance of its welfare. The Arabic word translated as, “Doing good” designates those who have the highest rank among the believers in Islam. The Prophet (PBUH) explained the meaning of “doing good,” by saying that, “To serve God as if you see Him, because if you are unable to see God, God certainly sees you.”

“And perform the pilgrimage, major and minor, for God. But if you are prevented (from performing it), send an offering for sacrifice that may be obtained with ease, and do not shave your heads until the offering reaches the place of sacrifice. And if any of you is ill, or has an ailment in his scalp, (necessitating shaving), he should offer a ransom for it by either fasting, or feeding the poor, or offering another form of worship; and when you feel safe, if any one wishes to continue the minor pilgrimage to the major one, he must make an offering, such as he can afford, but if he cannot afford it, he should fast three days during the major pilgrimage and seven days on his return, making ten days in all. This is for those whose household is not in (the precincts of) the Sacred Mosque. And remain conscious of God, and know that God is severe in punishment.” The first thing we notice about this verse is the way the rules for performing pilgrimage are explained. The verse includes a number of rules which were given one after the other but with the proper punctuation to make the rules distinct from one another. A comment about each rule is mentioned before moving on to the subsequent one. All these rules are connected with the fundamental concept of God consciousness. The verse starts with the command to complete the rituals of pilgrimage, major and minor. Some scholars are of the opinion that this verse is a command to establish the rituals of pilgrimage. Others understood it to mean that once a person makes the intention that he/she wants to perform pilgrimage, they should go through with the rituals until they have been completed. The latter opinion seems to be more appropriate, because the verse talks about pilgrimage major and minor and it is known that minor pilgrimage is not considered an obligatory ritual in Islam. It is thus apparent that the command indicates that once one started the rituals of pilgrimage, one should continue until the rituals have been completed. This rule applies to both major and minor pilgrimage. An exception is made in case one is faced with an obstacle that does not allow him/her to go through with the rituals as planned, such as in the case of falling ill. In this case the person who wanted to perform pilgrimage should offer a prescribed sacrifice at the place which he/she was able to reach. They can then break the state of Ihram even if they are unable to perform any of the rituals except entering the state of Ihram at the designated place. The state of Ihram describes the condition of a person who is performing minor and major pilgrimage. At a certain distance from Mecca, people who intend to perform pilgrimage go through a list of spiritual and physical acts to declare their intention to perform pilgrimage and to announce the beginning of the rituals. This is what happened at Hudaibiyah when Muslims were denied entrance to Mecca thus, preventing them from reaching the Sacred Mosque to perform minor pilgrimage in the Sixth year after Hijra. (6H). The Hudaibiyah's agreement was ratified. The agreement stipulated that Muslims would be allowed to perform minor pilgrimage the following year. The verse was revealed to command the believers to offer their sacrifice at Hudaibiyah and to break the state of Ihram. Muslims were somewhat reluctant to offer their sacrifice before they reach the Sacred Mosque. However, when they saw that the Prophet (PBUH) complied with the command, they followed suit.

Part of the rituals of pilgrimage is to offer, "A sacrifice that may be obtained with ease." The animals to be sacrificed include camels, cows, sheep and goats. It is allowable that seven people share in offering one cow or one camel as a sacrifice; alternatively, individuals can each offer a goat or a sheep.

In a normal situation, breaking the state of Ihram occurs when the person offers the sacrifice upon having finished the rituals of the day of 'Arafat. Offering the sacrifice usually occurs on the tenth day of the month of Zi Al-Hijja, in Mena.

Another exception is made for those who cannot stay long without having a hair-cut because of sickness. They can cut their hair before offering their sacrifice and before the rituals of pilgrimage have been completed provided they offer a ransom. This ransom can be either a three days fast, feeding six needy people, or offering another sacrifice. The details of this ruling came in a tradition that has been narrated in Al-Bukhari. Ka'b bin 'Aqrah (RA) said, "I was carried to the Prophet (PBUH) with lice jumping all over my face, the Prophet (PBUH) said, 'I did not realize how bad your condition was, can you offer an ewe in sacrifice?' I said, 'No.' He said, 'then you can either fast three days; or feed six needy people, each one should get half a Sa' (the Sa' is a standard for volumetric measurement equal to 2512 milliliter); and you can cut your hair.'"

"And when you feel safe, if any one wishes to continue the minor pilgrimage to the major one, he must make an offering, such as he can afford," Those who may have arrived in Mecca long before the appropriate time for Hajj, performed the minor pilgrimage, and are waiting for the designated time to start the rituals for major pilgrimage, can break the state Ihram during this waiting period provided they offer a sacrifice. However, if they cannot afford to offer a sacrifice, they can fast ten days: three before the day of 'Arafat, and seven after they had returned home. Fasting may have been prescribed as an alternative to strengthen the relationship with God during these days when the state of Ihram has been broken. However, those whose household is in the Sacred Precinct are exempt since they are not required to perform minor pilgrimage.

“And remain conscious of God, and know that God is severe in punishment.” God consciousness is the only guarantee that people will heed these rules and perform the rituals as required, hence the reminder to remain God conscious.

The narrative continues to outline the timing and etiquette of pilgrimage and ends also by a reminder to remain conscious of God, “Pilgrimage takes place in the months appointed for it, and whoever performs pilgrimage during these months (let him remember that) there is (to be) no lewdness nor abuse nor angry conversation during pilgrimage. And whatsoever good you do God knows it. So make provision for yourselves; for the best provision is to be conscious of God. Therefore, remain conscious of Me, you who have understanding.” It is obvious that there is a specific time for pilgrimage. Embarking on a state of Ihram for those who intend to perform the rituals of pilgrimage should be done during the months of Shawal, Zul Qi’da, and the first ten days of Zul Hijja. However, according to some scholars, one may embark on the state of Ihram any time during the year. El-Shafe’i supports the former opinion, while Malek, Abu Haneefa, and Ahmed bin Hanbal support the latter. The former opinion has also been narrated on the authority of Ibn Abbas, Jaber, A’taa, Tawoos, and Mejahed. The former opinion is stronger than the latter. However, there is an agreement that the rituals of pilgrimage should be performed during the time frame outlined above.

Once a person embarks on the state of Ihram, one should abstain from, “Lewdness nor abuse nor angry conversation during the pilgrimage.” Lewdness refers to intimate relationship with women, while abuse refers to sins in general. The idea behind these injunctions is to devote oneself completely to God. It is a time for enhancing our spirituality and taking advantage of being in the precinct of the Sacred House of God to feel the closeness to Him. Having been told of what not to do, the narrative continues to urge the believers to do good deeds, reminding them that God knows whatever they do. Pilgrimage is a time to get the spiritual provision for life, “And whatsoever good you do God knows it. So make provision for yourselves; for the best provision is to be conscious of God.” God consciousness is the provision which sustains the hearts and the souls of the believers. It is the provision that enhances their spirituality, helps them to overcome difficulties of life, and enables them to reach their objective. Only those who have understanding appreciate the value of God consciousness.

The narrative goes on to discuss what is allowable and what is forbidden during pilgrimage, whether it is allowable to engage in business transactions or work for a salary and when to leave the mount of ‘Arafat and what to say in way of remembrance of God, “It is no sin for you that you seek the bounty of your Lord (by trading), but when you press on in the multitude from ‘Arafat, remember God by the sacred monument. Remember Him as He has guided you, although before you were of those astray. Then hasten from the place from which the people hasten, and ask for God’s forgiveness. For God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.” It was narrated by Abu Daoud on the authority of Ibn Abbas (RA) that, “Muslims abstained from engaging in business activities during the time of pilgrimage and dedicated themselves fully to the remembrance of God until the verse, 'It is no sin for you that you seek the bounty of your Lord (by trading),' was revealed." The verse calls the business activities a bounty from God. Thus, those who work to earn a living are in reality seeking the bounty of God. It is thus appropriate to find a verse talking about earning a living among the verses describing the rituals of pilgrimage.

"But when you press on in the multitude from 'Arafat, remember God by the Sacred Monument. Remember Him as He has guided you, although before you were of those astray." Standing on the mount of 'Arafat is the corner stone of the rituals of pilgrimage. It has been narrated that the Prophet (PBUH) said, "Pilgrimage is primarily standing on the mount of 'Arafat. Whoever reaches the mount of 'Arafat before the dawn of the Tenth day of Zi Al-Hijja has performed pilgrimage. People should stay in Mena for three days but it is no problem if someone has to leave after two days only or someone wanted to stay longer."

The time for standing on the mount of 'Arafat starts at noon on the Ninth day of Zi Al-Hijja and continues till the dawn of the tenth of Zi Al-Hijja. It was narrated that the Prophet (PBUH) stayed on 'Arafat until after the sunset of the ninth day of Zi Al-Hijja. Then he went from 'Arafat to Muzdalifah where he prayed Maghreb and Isha together. He lied down until the break of dawn on the tenth day of Zi Al-Hijja at which time he prayed Fajr.

The verse commands the believers to remember God after they have come out from 'Arafat. This is another blessing from God to be guided by Him. The early Muslims understood the meaning of this statement, since they were idolaters just few years back. They knew what it means to be misguided and confused by the mythology of idolatry.

The Arabs used to come to the markets of 'Uokaz, Mejna, and Zi Majaz for trade and to participate in poetry competitions. These competitions were the battle fields for their poets to brag about their forefathers' achievements and to boast the ethnic origins of their tribes. Islam considered these practices a waste of time and energy. Muslims now have a more important calling. The Qur'an guides them to a more worthwhile practice, "And when you have completed your rites, celebrate the praise of God, as you used to celebrate the praise of your fathers, with far more heart and soul." The verse derided the tribal practices of boasting and bragging. Those who come to perform the rituals of pilgrimage should be fully devoted to God. They made sacrifices in terms of money and effort to complete the rituals. One of the expressions of their devotion is to shed off their regular garments and to dress in the shrouds of Ihram. It is thus unfitting for them to be engaged in the tribal practice of boasting and bragging about their forefathers in such a setting. They should busy themselves with the praise of God. Real honour is not achieved through ancestry, but it is achieved by the remembrance of God. The new standard in life is the standard of God consciousness. This standard is further elaborated upon, "There are men who say, 'Our Lord, give us (your bounties) in this world.' but they will have no share in the Hereafter. And there are some among them who say, 'Our Lord, grant us good in this world and good in the Hereafter, and save us from the chastisement of the fire.' To these will be allotted what they have earned; and God is swift in reckoning.” During pilgrimage, there are those who are only interested in what God provides for them in the following year. They wanted more rain so that they can plant crops and raise cattle. Others had a more comprehensive approach to life; they were interested in success in this life as well as in the salvation in the Hereafter. They do not ask God for specific material gains but rather they ask God to decide what is best for them. They are content with whatever God bestows on them. Their share is guaranteed by God because He is quick in reckoning. This is a fundamental Islamic concept: those who submit their will to God and put their trust in Him will get the best reward both in this life and in the Hereafter.

Finally, the rituals of pilgrimage come to an end. This has to be celebrated by singing the praise of God, “Celebrate the praise of God during the appointed days. But if any one hastens to leave after two days, there is no blame on him, and if any one stays on, there is no blame on him, if his aim is to do right. Then be conscious of God, and know that you will surely be gathered to Him.” It was narrated by Ibn Abbas (RA) that “The appointed days are the days after the day of ‘Arafat, when people celebrate the praise of God.” Abdel El-Rahman bin Mo’amer Al-Dailami said, “The days of Mena are three, if any one hastens to leave after two days, there is no blame on him, and if any one stays on, there is no blame on him.” The days of ‘Arafat, and the next three days are good opportunity for celebrating God’s praise. God consciousness is the criterion for the acceptance of deeds. So, remain God conscious because you will be gathered to meet Him on the day judgment.

Verses: 204 to 214

204. There is the type of people whose speech about this world's life may dazzle you, and he calls God to witness about what is in his heart; yet he is the most contentious of enemies.
205. When he turns his back, his aim everywhere is to spread mischief through the land and destroy crops and cattle. But God does not love mischief.
206. When it is said to him, "Be conscious of God", he is led by arrogance to (more) crime. Hell will settle his account, an evil resting place.
207. And there is the type of people who gives his life to earn the pleasure of God. And God is All-Pitying to (His) devotees.
208. Believers, enter whole heartedly into submission to God and follow not in the footsteps of Satan; for he is to you an avowed enemy.
209. If you backslide after the clear signs have come to you, then know that God is Eminent, Wise.
210. Are they waiting for God to come to them in canopies of clouds, with the angels? Then the matter would have been already settled. All matters go back to God.
211. Ask the Children of Israel how many clear signs We have sent them and whoever changes the blessings of God after it has come to him, then surely God is severe in punishment.
212. The life of this world is made alluring to the disbelievers, and they scoff at those who believe. But those who are conscious of God will be above them on the Day of Resurrection; for God provides without measure to whom He pleases.

213. Humankind was one single nation, and God sent messengers with glad tidings and warnings; and with them He sent the Scripture in truth, to judge between people in matters in which they disagreed. And only those to whom the Scripture was given differed concerning it, after clear proofs had come to them, out of mutual jealousy. And God by His will guided the believers to the truth of that concerning which they differed. God guides whom He wills to a straight path.
214. Or do you think that you shall enter paradise without such trials as came to those who passed away before you? They encountered tribulation and adversity, and were so shaken that even the Messenger and the believers with him cried, "When will the help of God come?" Verily, the help of God is always near." (2:204-214)

This is a very expressive image that depicts the true nature of some people, a nature which cannot be perceived and described except by the Creator. The image of a person who appears on the surface to be kind and loving, while his inner self is bent on animosity and hatred, "There is the type of people whose speech about this world's life may dazzle you, and he calls God to witness about what is in his heart; yet is he the most contentious of enemies." This is the image of an extremely eloquent person who uses his eloquence to portray himself as a godly person. On the face of it, he is perceived as a loving, caring, and kind person but his heart overflows with animosity and hatred. Every one admires him and his qualities, but God knows what is in his heart. His heart is full of deceit and void of all feelings of love or empathy. A double-faced person who knows how to lie and deceive but when the time for action comes his true nature emerges and all what he does is evil, "When he turns his back, his aim everywhere is to spread mischief through the land and destroy crops and cattle. But God does not love mischief." His actions are all evil and he is bent on destruction and wickedness. Whenever, someone reminds him that he should be conscious of God he becomes haughty and arrogant, "When it is said to him, 'be conscious of God', he is led by arrogance to (more) crime. Hell will settle his account, an evil resting place."

The narrative continues to describe another kind of person at the other end of the spectrum of human nature, "And there is the type of people who gives his life to earn the pleasure of God. And God is All-Pitying to (His) devotees." This is a person who is completely devoted to God and dedicates all of his/her being to Him. They do not expect any worldly gain from this bargain except the pleasure of God. Ibn Katheer narrated in his interpretation of the Qur'an that Ibn Abbas (RA) said, "This verse was revealed to laud the behaviour of Suhaib bin Sanan Al-Roomi (RA), who adopted Islam and when he wanted to migrate to Medina the idolaters of Mecca refused to let him take his possessions with him. He gladly gave up all his possessions and left Mecca to Medina. On the way to Medina he met with 'Umar bin Al-Khattab and a group of Muslims. They said to him, 'God has made your bargain a profitable one,' He said, 'I pray the same for you, but what are you talking about?' They told him about the revelation of this verse and that it pertains to his situation." It was narrated that the Prophet (PBUH) told Suhaib (RA) also that God has made his bargain with the idolaters of Mecca a profitable one. Although the verse may have been revealed to describe a particular incident but it goes beyond this to describe a model that should be followed at all times.

“Believers, enter whole heartedly into submission to God and follow not in the footsteps of Satan; for he is to you an avowed enemy. If you backslide after the clear signs have come to you, then know that God is Eminent, Wise.” This is a call to the believers to submit completely to God. The first basic principle of Islam is to submit fully to God. It is an absolute submission in all matters. It is a voluntary submission without coercion or compulsion. It is the submission of a person who is contented with whatever the results of this submission may be. It is a submission of a person who finds security in submitting willingly to the hand that leads to guidance and goodness. It is the submission of those who are sure of the path and destination both in this life and in the Hereafter.

Addressing the believers with such a call intimates that there were still some people who were reluctant to submit fully. It is natural that such type of people existed in the Muslim community at that time. So, the call was issued to urge these people to purify their thoughts and rid themselves of any doubt or reluctance. They should align themselves with the rest of the community and follow their prophet in secure steps.

When a Muslim accepts this call he/she is admitted to a peaceful universe. This is a universe of security and stability. It is a universe free of confusion and anxiety. Those who accept this call enjoy comprehensive peace: peace within themselves; peace with the people and the living beings around them; peace on earth and in heaven; peace with the whole universe.

The first sign of this peace is a feeling that fills the heart with a simple, clear and unequivocal fact: the Oneness of God. It is the Powerful and Almighty God toward Whom one should face and only Him one should ask. Submission to God, the only true power in this universe, frees the human beings from all kinds of fear. He is the Just and Wise God. He protects us from injustice, vain desires, and the suffering of loss. He is the Loving and Caring God who bestows His blessings on His servants. He is the Forgiving and Relenting God who forgives the sins of His servants and accepts the calls of those who are in need.

Submission to God who has these attributes creates the feeling that the believer is living under the care of God. The believer lives according to God’s law, obedient to His decrees, and moving forward to achieve God’s will. It also places the believer in a harmonious environment with the other creations of God. All follow God’s laws in harmony and collaboration. All are guided by God’s light.

Finally, they are reminded that God is Eminent and Wise. He has the power to discipline them when they err. He is Wise, so He knows what is best for them.

“Are they waiting for God to come to them in canopies of clouds, with the angels? Then the matter would have been already settled. All matters go back to God.” The verse questions the attitude of those who are reluctant to submit. What kind of proof are they waiting for? Are they going to wait until the horrible day comes? Are they waiting for the day when God will come in canopies of clouds and the angels will stand in line? On that day no one will dare speak unless he/she is given permission and will only say the truth. But then, the case would have been settled: time has gone by, the opportunity has been lost, and no salvation can be achieved. It is a dramatic way to end the verse.

The narrative goes on to address the Prophet (PBUH), “Ask the Children of Israel how many clear signs We have sent them and whoever changes the blessings of God after it has come to him, then surely God is severe in punishment.” Ask them how many clear signs came to them and they were reluctant to submit. It is appropriate to remind the believers of the stance that the Children of Israel adopted before and warn the believers not to follow in their footsteps. It is a reminder that submission and faith are a blessing of God; one should not lose this blessing once it has been bestowed. Those who forfeit this blessing live forever in a life of insecurity, instability, and doubt.

Subsequently, a comparison between the conditions of the believers and disbelievers is made, “The life of this world is made alluring to the disbelievers, and they scoff at those who believe. But those who are conscious of God will be above them on the Day of Resurrection; for God provides without measure to whom He pleases.” Trivial interests and cheap gains of this life lure the disbelievers. They do not go beyond the immediate gratification they get from these pleasures. The believers look with contempt upon these worldly gains, not because they do not want to enjoy life, but because they believe that life is more than a place for instant gratification and worldly pleasures. The believers while they enjoy material pleasures of this life, they also aspire to the fulfillment of the supreme undertakings which were entrusted to humankind. The believers espouse a comprehensive outlook toward life and they believe that such an outlook is the basis for a plan that leads humankind to supreme levels of felicity. The disbelievers do not comprehend the believers’ attitude. The believers manoeuvre away from instant gratification and are not interested in immediate personal gains. They are more interested in issues that concern all humankind. They choose difficult routes and they suffer hardships because they believe in certain principles. These are actions that earn ridicule from the disbelievers. However, the measure of honour and success has been set by God. The criterion of honour and success is God consciousness. The believers should understand this, so that they could continue on their way to achieve their goals ignoring the ridicule they receive from the disbelievers. God bestows His blessings and bounties on whomsoever He wishes. He chooses those who should receive His bounty, no one controls the treasures of His bounty. He may grant the disbelievers of His bounty on earth during their lifetime for a wisdom that only He knows.

“Humankind was one single nation, and God sent messengers with glad tidings and warnings; and with them He sent the Scripture in truth, to judge between people in matters in which they disagreed. And only those to whom the Scripture was given differed concerning it, after clear proofs had come to them, out of mutual jealousy. And God by His will guided the believers to the truth of that concerning which they differed. God guides whom He wills to a straight path.” This is a fundamental truth, in the beginning all people formed a single nation; they had the same way of life and the same perspective. This may be a reference to the small community which consisted of Adam, his wife and their children in the early days of humanity; when they all had the same understanding of life. Qur’an states that all people are the descendants of Adam and Eve. God willed the human race to be brought forth from a single family. It may have been a way to emphasize the importance of the role of the family in the human society. The family is the building block of the society. Humankind started with the same perspective but humanity grew into a multitude of people who spread and developed and followed different directions and adopted different life styles depending on their abilities and aptitudes. God sent prophets with the Scripture in truth to guide and warn people. It is natural that the original group of people developed into a number of different communities, because it was the will of God that life on earth becomes diversified. Diversity is needed for humankind to fulfill their undertaking on earth, being the vicegerents of God. Diversity is needed for the successful completion of this task because this task requires the collaboration of people with different talents and aptitudes, “And if your Lord had pleased, He would certainly have made people a single nation, and they shall continue to differ. Except those on whom your Lord has bestowed His Mercy.” (11:118-119). Diversity in talents, aptitudes, and attitudes brings about differences in perspectives, interests, and methodologies. But God wants these differences to remain within a broad framework that guarantees the collective success of humanity. This framework is the framework of the correct faith. This is a wide and open minded framework that accepts the differences and allows creativity and talent to grow and flourish. The framework is not meant to kill or imprison diversity but aims at providing a platform to organize the collaborative efforts of the different communities effectively and successfully.

The framework should be built on a single standard to be used as a reference for settling disputes, “And God sent messengers with glad tidings and warnings; and with them He sent the Scripture in truth, to judge between people in matters in which they disagreed.” The word “in truth” is the unequivocal statement that the Scripture came with the truth that should be used in settling the disputes between people. This is the only standard that should be used to settle these differences; anything else is based on people’s whims and interests. Without this standard, life on earth will be chaotic, no dispute will be settled fairly, and no peace will prevail on earth.

This concept is important in understanding that there is only one single source for the laws that can be used to settle all disputes among people. This is the source that brought down the Scripture in truth. It is the same Scripture which was revealed to different messengers. It came with the same message, to provide a single perspective of a single Lord and Creator. The details of the various revelations are different because they came to address the needs of different people at different times and different places. Islam embodied the final form of this single message.

People followed their whims and were lured by worldly interest so they strayed away from the Scripture, “And only those to whom the Scripture was given differed concerning it, after clear proofs had come to them, out of mutual jealousy.” Jealousy led people along different paths. But those who believed were guided because they had pure spirits and their souls aspired to the truth. “And God by His will guided the believers to the truth of that concerning which they differed. God guides whom He wills to a straight path.” This is the straight path that the Scripture brought, it is a program that is based on the truth and promotes the truth. God knows who among His servants are ready and able to submit themselves to Him. Those are the successful ones

“Or do you think that you shall enter paradise without such trials as came to those who passed away before you? They encountered tribulation and adversity, and were so shaken that even the Messenger and the believers with him cried, 'When will the help of God come?' Verily, the help of God is always near." This is how God addressed the early Muslim community to bring to their attention the experiences of previous believing communities. The verse also draws the attention of the Muslim community to God's plan to prepare and train His chosen servants. These are God's servants who were designated to carry God's banner and to act as God's vicegerents on earth. The verse paints a dramatic picture of the suffering of the Muslim community which is reflected in the believers' cry, "When will the help of God come?" This must have been a tremendous suffering. The response was forthcoming, "Verily, the help of God is near." God's help is saved for those who deserve it, those who persevere and are steadfast in face of difficulty and adversity. When a calamity strikes, the believers long to God's support; they do not seek a solution or help from any other source. They strive, persevere and dedicate themselves to God. This is the way to paradise, which they enter after passing the test.

Verses: 215 to 220

215. They ask you what they should spend in charity. Say, "Whatever you spend of wealth is for the parents and the kindred and the orphans and the needy and for the wayfarers. And whatever you do that is good, God knows it well."
216. Warfare is ordained for you, though it is hateful to you. But it is possible that you hate a thing which is good for you, and that you love a thing which is bad for you. But God knows, and you do not know.
217. They ask you concerning warfare in the sacred month. Say, "Warfare during the sacred month is a grave offence; but it is graver, in the sight of God, to prevent access to the path of God, to disbelieve in Him, to prevent access to the Sacred Mosque, and to drive out its members." Persecution is worse than killing. Nor will they cease fighting you until they turn you back from your faith if they can. And if any of you turn back from their faith and die as a disbeliever, their deeds will bear no fruits in this life and in the Hereafter; they will be companions of the Fire and will abide therein.
218. Those who believed and those who fled their homes and strove hard in the path of God, they hope for the Mercy of God. And God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.
219. They ask you about intoxicants and gambling. Say, "In them there is great sin, and some profit, for people; but the sin is greater than the profit." They ask you how much they should spend; Say, "What you can spare." Thus, does God make clear to you His signs, in order that you may reflect
220. On this life and the Hereafter. They ask you concerning the orphans. Say, "The best thing to do is what is for their good; if you mix their affairs with yours, they are your brethren; but God knows the one who means mischief from the one who means good. And if God had wished, He could have put you into difficulties. He is indeed Eminent, Wise." (2:215-220)

"They ask you what they should spend in charity. Say, 'whatever you spend of wealth is for the parents and the kindred and the orphans and the needy and for the wayfarers. And whatever you do that is good, God knows it well.'" Many verses discussed charitable spending before this question was posed. Spending in the way of God was a necessity at the time of the advent of Islam. It was necessary to help establish a Muslim community which was facing difficulties as a result of being surrounded by hostile communities. It was a tool to fulfill the collective social commitment of the community. It was also necessary to address the needs of the individuals, so that they feel that they are an integral part of the community and that they are being looked after by other members of the community. The question was then posed by a group of Muslims, “What should we spend?” It is a question about the kind of charity they should give. The answer came not only to explain what to spend but also to whom should the charity be given. The verse in Arabic could be understood in two different ways. The first is that charitable spending is good. It is good for the person who gives, for the person who receives, and for the whole community. The second meaning is that it is recommended that the person who is giving would give out of the best he/she has. Giving purifies the heart and enhances the spirituality of the person who is giving; in addition, it should be useful to the person who is receiving. That is why it is recommended that one should give out of the best things one owns. However, this is only a recommendation. It is obligatory that whatever is given should be in a decent condition for use.

The verse then continues to list those who are worthiest of receiving charity, “The parents and the kindred and the orphans and the needy and for the wayfarers.” The parents are members of the nucleus family; the relatives are members of the extended family; the orphans, the needy, and the wayfarers are members of the human family at large. Looking after these people is part of the collective social duty of the members of the community. The order given in this verse sheds light on the approach that Islam adopts in training people to become better human beings taking into consideration the essential characteristics of the human psyche. The training program takes the human being gradually, one step at a time until he/she reaches the intended target. Islam recognizes human interest in the welfare of oneself. So, the first step is to satisfy the needs of the individual, allowing the human being to enjoy a moderately comfortable life with no excesses. The Prophet (PBUH) explained that, “The best charity is that which is given after the person him/herself becomes self-sufficient. The upper hand is better than the lower hand, and one should start with the immediate family.” A person came to the Prophet (PBUH) with a piece of gold. He said, “Prophet of God, this is all I have and I am giving it as a charity.” The Prophet (PBUH) did not respond and simply turned away. The man repeated what he said a second time and the Prophet (PBUH) continued to ignore him. When the man repeated his request for the third time, the Prophet (PBUH) took the piece of gold and threw it aside. He then said to the man, “If this is all you have then it is better for you to keep it and spend it on your family, rather than to give it away in charity and then ask people for help. The best charity is that which is given by a person who is self-sufficient.”

The second step after becoming self-sufficient is to look after the members of one’s immediate family, to satisfy the natural instinct which God created in the human beings. The third step involves looking after members of the extended family. The fourth step is to look after the orphans, the needy, and the travelers who are members of the human family at large. The verse ends by emphasizing God’s knowledge of all forms of charity to entice the believer to dedicate his/her charity to God.

“Warfare is ordained for you, though it is hateful to you. But it is possible that you hate a thing which is good for you, and that you love a thing which is bad for you. But God knows, and you do not know.” Fighting in God’s cause is a difficult task, but it is a duty that has to be fulfilled. It is necessary because it is a way to better the conditions of the Muslim individual, the Muslim community, and the whole humanity. It is a tool to establish the truth, guidance and goodness. Islam does not ignore the initial natural disposition of the human beings nor does it try to suppress the natural feelings of people. Islam does not belittle the hardships associated with fighting and recognizes that the human race in general has a natural disposition against violence. However, Islam realizes that there are other realities that need to be considered. Fighting may be hateful and difficult but there may be a greater good that materializes as a result of fighting. God knows best.

“They ask you concerning warfare in the sacred month. Say, ‘Warfare during the sacred month is a grave offence; but it is graver, in the sight of God, to prevent access to the path of God, to disbelieve in Him, to prevent access to the Sacred Mosque, and to drive out its members.’ Persecution is worse than killing. Nor will they cease fighting you until they turn you back from your faith if they can. And if any of you turn back from their faith and die as a disbeliever, their works will bear no fruit in this life and in the Hereafter; they will be companions of the Fire and will abide therein.” The verse states clearly the sanctity of the sacred month. The Muslims did not transgress by starting a fight during the sacred month, but it was the idolaters who prevented access to the Sacred House. The idolaters committed capital sins against God and violated the sanctity of the sacred month and defiled the Sacred House. They oppressed and tortured the Muslims and forced them out of their homes. This is greater in the sight of God than fighting during the sacred month.

The idolaters raised the issue of fighting in the Sacred Month as an excuse to portray the Muslims as transgressors, while they themselves were the ones who violated the sanctity of the Sacred Month and the Sacred House in the first place. The idolaters will continue to fight the Muslims until they turn them away from their faith, if they could. The enemies of Islam will take recourse to all kinds of tricks and acts of deception to turn Muslims away from their faith; Muslims should be on the alert not to let this happen. A warning is issued for those who capitulate to these efforts. Those who surrender and turn away from their faith and die as disbelievers will lose all the fruits of their deeds in this life and in the Hereafter. Those who strive constantly in the way of God seeking and never despairing of God’s mercy will not be disappointed, “Those who believed and those who fled their homes and strove hard in the path of God, they hope for the Mercy of God. And God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.”

“They ask you about intoxicants and gambling. Say, ‘In them there is great sin, and some profit, for people; but the sin is greater than the profit.’” Up until this time, the revelation was silent regarding the status of drinking and gambling. Earlier, the Quran hinted that there is a difference between alcohol and good provision “And from the fruit of the date-palm and the vine, you get wine and wholesome food: behold, in this also is a sign for those who reason.” (16:67). This was an indirect way to state that there is a difference between wine and wholesome provision. However, no specific strategy was suggested for the prohibition. This verse was the first step in Islam’s strategy to prohibit drinking and gambling. The verse points to the criterion that can be used to render something lawful or unlawful. Many things may have mixed shares of good and evil. However, if the evil that will accrue as a result of the usage of something is more than the good that may accrue, then this thing should be made unlawful. The verse points to the criterion but stops short of declaring these items unlawful. We can detect from this verse and others, the Islamic approach in dealing with social issues. The fundamentals of faith were stated clearly, unequivocally, and decisively from the start. On the other hand, Islam adopts a gradual strategy in dealing with issues that are related to old established habits and entrenched traditions. The strategy is based on developing an environment conducive to the changes that Islam wishes to implement.

Since its inception, Islam dealt decisively and unequivocally with the question of the belief in the Oneness of God. The concept of associating partners with God was rejected outright from the beginning. No compromise was accepted. The fundamentals of faith were declared from the outset.

However, Islam recognizes that changing social habits and old traditions cannot happen overnight. Outlawing drinking and gambling needed a gradual program. The first step was to highlight the difference between intoxicants and wholesome provision, “And from the fruit of the date-palm and the vine, you get wine and wholesome food: behold, in this also is a sign for those who reason.” (16:67). This was an indirect way to state that there is a difference between wine and wholesome provision. The second step was taken to alert people to the evil that accrues from drinking and gambling, and to motivate them to think about this evil. The third step came in verse 43 of Sura 4, “Believers, do not approach prayers while you are intoxicated until you know well what you say.” (4:43) This did not leave much time for drinking, since Muslims had to perform five prayers every day. The prayer times are distributed over the hours of the day in close intervals. This minimized the time available for drinking. It broke the cycle for the alcoholics who were habituated to drinking at specific times. The fourth step declared the prohibition in no uncertain terms, “Believers, intoxicants and gambling, idolatrous practices, and divination by arrows, are an abomination of Satan's handwork eschew such (abomination), that you may succeed.” (5:90)

The narrative continued to establish Islamic principles in the form of answers to questions which were posed to the Prophet (PBUH) by his companions, “They ask you how much they are to spend; Say, ‘What you can spare.’ Thus, does God make clear to you His signs, in order that you may reflect.” The question was asked before and the answer came to specify the kind of items that can be given in the form of charity and who is worthiest to receive this charity. This time the response dealt with other aspects of charitable spending: the amount. One can spend whatever one can spare after the personal needs have been reasonably addressed. This kind of charitable spending is different from the obligatory poor-dues (Zakat); it is over and above the prescribed poor-dues. The Prophet (PBUH) has been quoted to have said, “There is spending obligation beyond the prescribed poor-dues (Zakat).” One should seek God’s pleasure by fulfilling this obligation. The Muslims were then commanded to reflect on matters related to this life and the Hereafter. This reflection enhances the spirituality, and minimizes the selfish attitudes of human beings. It opens up windows for people to understand the benefits of charitable spending both at the personal level and at the societal level. The individual gains purity of the heart which more than make up for the money spent in charity. The society gains when the needs of the destitute are addressed and feelings of need are replaced by contentment and security. Reflecting on the Hereafter puts these benefits in perspective.

“They ask you concerning the orphans. Say, ‘The best thing to do is what is for their good; if you mix their affairs with yours, they are your brethren;’ but God knows the one who means mischief from the one who means good. And if God had wished, He could have put you into difficulties. He is indeed Eminent, Wise.” Collective social responsibility is a basic principle in the establishment of the Islamic society. The Muslim community as a whole has a duty to protect the welfare of the vulnerable in the society. The orphans are among the most vulnerable in the society. It is the duty of the society to look after their welfare. Legal guardians used to invest the wealth of the orphans under their care in joint business activities. Sometimes it was difficult to distribute the revenues fairly among the different partners and the orphans may not get their fair share. When the Qur’an warned against this practice, some legal guardians became overzealous in protecting the interest of the orphans under their care. In some cases, this resulted in a hardship to the guardian and lost opportunities to the orphans. This verse came down to rectify this situation. Joint business activities are allowed as long as the intention is to promote the interests of the orphan. Deeds are not judged according to superficial technicalities but by the substance and the results they achieve. God does not want people to suffer unnecessarily, and He knows their intentions.

Verses: 221 to 242

221. Do not marry idolatresses, until they believe. A believing slave woman is better than an idolatress woman, even though she pleases you. Nor marry your girls to idolaters until they believe. A believing slave is better than an idolater, even though he pleases you. These beckon to the Fire. But God beckons by His Grace to paradise and forgiveness, and makes His signs clear to humankind, that they may remember.
222. They ask you (Prophet) about menstruation. Say, “It is a painful condition, so let women alone at such times and do not approach them till they are cleansed. And when they have purified themselves, then go in unto them as God has enjoined upon you. Truly, God loves those who turn to Him often, and loves those who purify themselves.
223. Your wives are your tilth so approach your tilth as you may desire; but do some good act for your souls beforehand; and be conscious of God. And know that you are to meet Him (in the Hereafter), and give good tidings to the believers.
224. And do not let your oaths in the name of God to become a hindrance to your being righteous and conscious of Him and making peace among people. God is All-Hearing, Omniscient.
225. God will not take you to task for your unintentional oaths. But He will take you to task for the intention in your hearts; and He is All-Forgiving, Most Forbearing.
226. Those who take an oath for abstention from their wives must wait for four months. If then they change their minds, God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.
227. And if they decide upon divorce, then indeed God is All-Hearing, Omniscient.
228. Divorced women shall wait, before remarrying, for three monthly periods. It is unlawful for them to hide what God has created in their wombs, if they have faith in God and the Last Day. And their husbands would be better to take them back during this period, if they wish for reconciliation. The wives are owed obligations the like of those they owe, in an honorable way. But men have a degree (of precedence) over them. And God is Eminent, Wise.

229. A divorce is only permissible twice. After that, the parties should either hold together on equitable terms, or separate with kindness. It is not lawful for you, (Men), to take back any of your gifts (from your wives), except when both parties fear that they would be unable to keep the limits ordained by God. If you (judges) do indeed fear that they would be unable to keep the limits ordained by God, there is no blame on either of them if she gives something for her freedom. These are the limits ordained by God; so do not transgress them. If any do transgress the limits ordained by God, such persons are wrongdoers.
230. So if a husband divorces his wife irrevocably, he cannot, after that, re-marry her until after she has married another husband and that husband has divorced her. In that case, there is no blame on either of them if they remarry; provided they feel that they can keep the limits ordained by God. Such are the limits ordained by God, which He makes plain to those who know.
231. When you divorce women, and they have fulfilled the appointed waiting period, either take them back on equitable terms or set them free on equitable terms; but do not take them back to harm them, or to take undue advantage; if any one does that; He wrongs his own soul. Do not treat God's verses as a jest, but remember God's blessings on you, and the fact that He sent down to you the Book and Wisdom, for your instruction. And be conscious of God, and know that God is well acquainted with all things.
232. When you divorce women, and they have fulfilled the appointed waiting period, do not prevent them from marrying their (former) husbands, if they mutually agree on equitable terms. This is an admonition for him among you who believe in God and the Last Day. That is more virtuous for you and purer. God knows and you know not.
233. Mothers shall suckle their children for two whole years for those who wish to complete the suckling. The duty of feeding and clothing nursing mothers in a seemly manner is upon the father of the child. No one should be charged beyond his capacity. A mother should not be made to suffer because of her child, nor should he to whom the child is born be made to suffer because of his child. And it is incumbent on the father's heir the like of that which was incumbent on the father. If they desire to wean the child by mutual consent and after consultation, it is no sin for them. And if you wish to give your children out to nurse, it is no sin for you, provided that you pay what is due from you in kindness. Remain conscious of God, and know that God sees all what you do.
234. If any of you die and leave widows behind, they shall wait for four months and ten days before they remarry. When they have fulfilled their term, there is no blame on you if they dispose of themselves in a just and reasonable manner. And God is well acquainted with what you do.
235. There is no blame on you if you make an offer of betrothal or hold it in your hearts. God knows that you cherish them in your hearts. But do not make a secret contract with them except in honourable terms, nor resolve on the tie of marriage till the prescribed term is fulfilled. And know that God knows what is in your hearts, and take heed of Him; and know that God is All-Forgiving, Most Forbearing.
236. There is no blame on you if you divorce women before consummation of marriage or the fixation of their dower; but make fair provision for them; the rich according to his

- means, and the poor according to his means. A provision of a reasonable amount is due from those who wish to do the right thing.*
237. And if you divorce them before consummation of marriage, but after the fixation of a dower for them, then give them half the dower, unless they waive their right or the person in whose hands is the marriage tie waives the right. To waive the right is nearest to God consciousness. And do not forget kindness between yourselves. For God sees well all that you do.
238. Maintain with care the obligatory prayers, especially the Middle Prayer; and stand up before God in complete devotion.
239. If you are in danger, pray on foot, or riding, but when you are in security, remember God in the manner He has taught you, which you knew not before.
240. Those of you who die and leave widows should bequest for their widows a year's maintenance and residence. But if they leave (the residence), there is no blame on you for what they do with themselves, provided it is reasonable. And God is Eminent, Wise.
241. For divorced women a fair maintenance should be provided. This is a duty for all who are conscious of God
242. Thus, God makes clear His revelations to you, in order that you may understand. (2:221-242)

“Do not marry idolatresses, until they believe. A believing slave woman is better than an idolatress woman, even though she pleases you. Nor marry your girls to idolaters until they believe. A believing slave is better than an idolater, even though he pleases you. These beckon you to the Fire. But God beckons by His Grace to paradise and forgiveness, and makes His signs clear to humankind, that they may remember.” Marriage is the most intimate, the strongest, and the most exclusive relationship between two members of the human race. For the relationship to continue it must be based on two strongly bonded loving hearts. A strong bond between two hearts has to be based on an agreement of the fundamental principles on which their way of life will be built. The most important factor that shapes a way of life is the faith of the person. This verse came to determine some of the basic characteristics of marriage in Islam. These rules applied only to new marriages which were consummated after these verses had been revealed. Old marriages which were in existence at that time were exempted from these rules until year 6 (H), when a verse in Sura 60 was revealed to disallow such marriages, “Believers, when there come to you believing women as refugees, examine them, God knows best as to their faith; if you ascertain that they are believers, then do not send them back to the disbelievers. They are not lawful (wives) for the disbelievers, nor are the (disbelievers) lawful (husbands) for them. But pay the disbelievers what they have spent (on their dower), and there will be no blame on you if you marry them on payment of their dower to them. But hold not to the guardianship of disbelieving women;” (60:10).

The verse prohibits marriage between Muslim men and idolatresses, and between Muslim women and idolaters. It is felt that a bond between two people who do not share the same faith is a shaky bond. A meeting of the hearts around the love of God produces a strong bond between them and protects the bond from being easily dissolvable. A marriage relationship should not be based only on physical infatuation but also on a spiritual bond between the spouses. This spiritual bond connects the two hearts with God, hence the unequivocal statement, “Do not marry idolatresses, until they believe.” The obstacle in the way of such marriage is cleared once they become believers. Physical infatuation alone is not a good basis to build a successful marriage relationship on. Therefore, “A believing slave woman is better than an idolatress woman, even though she pleases you.” The same principle applies to marriages between idolaters and believing women for the same reasons. The reason is emphasized, “These beckon to the Fire. But God beckons by His Grace to paradise and forgiveness.” The idolaters and the believers lead different ways of life based on different sets of beliefs. Such differences cannot be reconciled and usually result in the eventual failure of the marriage. But, do the idolaters actually beckon their spouses to Hell fire? Who would want to beckon himself/herself or others to Hell fire? The verse states the end result of a way of life which is based on idolatry. Idolatry promotes practices which lead to Hell fire. Joining an idolater in matrimony is like being beckoned to Hell fire.

It should be pointed out that God did not prohibit marriage between a Muslim man and a woman from the People of the Scripture, even though each one of them would profess a different religion. Judaism, Christianity and Islam may differ in the details and the laws of each but they all share the essence of the belief in God.

Some scholars raised the question about whether the belief in the Trinity renders a Christian woman an idolatress. There is a consensus among the scholars that the verse in Sura 5, “Today all good things have been made lawful for you. The food of the People of the Scripture is lawful for you as your food is lawful for them. So are chaste believing women as well as chaste women of the people who were given the Scripture before you, as long as you have given them their bridal-gifts and married them, not taking them as lovers or secret mistresses. The deeds of anyone who disbelieve will come to nothing, and in the Hereafter he will be one of the losers,” (5:5) applies to Christian and Jewish women even if some of them may believe in the Trinity. However, some scholars disagree with this opinion. Al-Bukhari narrated that ‘Umar bin Al-Khattab (RA) has this opinion, he said, “I don’t know a stronger statement that indicates associating partners with God than saying Jesus is the son of God.”

A Muslim woman, on the other hand, is not allowed to marry a Christian man or a Jew. When a Muslim woman is married to a non-Muslim, she follows her husband and joins his family. This deprive the children of having the opportunity to grow in an Islamic environment. The situation is further aggravated by the fact that the husband may not recognize the right of his wife to practice her faith. Islam grants Christian and Jewish women who marry Muslim men the right to practice their religion. A Christian or a Jewish man has no such obligation. He may allow or does not allow his wife to practice her religion depending on his own attitude.

“They ask you (Prophet) about menstruation. Say, ‘It is a painful condition, so let women alone at such times and do not approach them till they are cleansed. And when they have purified themselves, then go in unto them as God has enjoined upon you. Truly God loves those who turn to Him, and loves those who purify themselves.’ Your wives are your tilth so approach your tilth as you may desire; but do some good act for your souls beforehand; and be conscious of God. And know that you are to meet Him (in the Hereafter), and give good tidings to the believers.” This is a fine gesture that raises the objectives of the relationship between husband and wife to higher levels even when discussing physical intimacy between the two spouses. Sexual intercourse is not an end in itself but it is a means to a higher goal, the goal of the continuation of life on earth. Sexual intercourse during menstruation, in addition to the inauspicious health consequences for both the man and the woman, does not contribute to the achievement of this higher goal. The physical uncleanness associated with this condition is not conducive to the expected physical enjoyment. The verse disallows sexual intercourse during menstruation, but once women are cleansed then it is allowable to, “go in unto them as God has enjoined upon you,” which indicates that sexual intercourse should be only through the female reproductive organs. Sexual pleasure is not the only objective but the goal is the continuation of life and seeking and enjoying what God has made lawful. A Muslim should seek and enjoy what has been made lawful, because God allows that which purifies His servants; the servants who repent when they err and return to God seeking His forgiveness, “Truly God loves those who turn to Him, and loves those who purify themselves.”

The narrative continued to discuss another aspect of the intimate relationship between husband and wife, “Your wives are your tilth, so approach your tilth as you may desire;” This precise expression points to the nature and objective of this relationship. However, it does not give a comprehensive treatment of the topic. Other dimensions of the relationship between a husband and his wife have been addressed in verses in Sura 2 and Sura 30, “They are your garments and you are their garments.” (2:187) and, “And among His Signs is that He created for you mates from among yourselves, that you may dwell in with them in tranquility, and He has put love and mercy between your (hearts).” (30:21) These verses address different dimensions of the relationship between husbands and wives. However, the focus of the present verses is on procreation, hence the use of the word “tilth.” The word “tilth” brings the connotation of tillage, fertility, and growth to the picture, which is most fitting to the subject of procreation. Sexual intercourse is allowed any way the couple desire, as long as it is done through the female reproduction organs. In the meantime, one should keep in mind the fact that sexual intercourse is only one aspect of the husband-wife relationship. One should also keep in mind that all human activities are acts of worship provided that the intention is to seek the pleasure of God. This is achieved through God consciousness. God gives His glad tidings to those who follow His commands.

“And do not let your oaths in the name of God to become a hindrance to your being righteous and conscious of Him and making peace among humankind. God is All-Hearing, Omniscient.” Ibn ‘Abbas (RA) said, “Do not take an oath that prevents you from doing something good. If you do, you should absolve yourself of this oath by offering a ransom.” Doing good for the benefit of people and society takes precedence over keeping an oath. A practical example for this was given by Abu Bakr (RA); he used to give charity to one of his relatives by the name of Mostah. When he came to know that Mostah was slandering his daughter, ‘Aiysha (the mother of the believers - RA), he vowed to stop giving Mostah the charity he used to give. When the verse, “And let not those who possess dignity and abundance of wealth among you swear not to give to the near of kin and to the needy, and those who migrated for the cause of God. Let them pardon and forbear. Do not you love that God may forgive you? God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy,” (24:22) was revealed Abu Bakr (RA) broke his oath and paid the ransom. God is merciful to people, so He decreed that ransom should be paid only in case of breaking a premeditated oath. Breaking an unintentional oath is forgiven and does not warrant a ransom, “God will not take you to task for your unintentional oaths. But He will take you to task for the intention in your hearts;

and He is All-Forgiving, Most Forbearing.” Abu Dawoud narrated on the authority of ‘Aiysha (RA), that the Prophet (PBUH) said, “Unintentional oaths are the oaths that one makes as part of normal speech and come out spontaneously, like saying, ‘by God no.’” It was also narrated that Ibn Abbas (RA) said, “Unintentional oaths are the oaths that one makes in anger.” He also said, “Unintentional oaths are oaths which may attempt to render unlawful that what God made lawful.”

It may be concluded from these traditions that breaking unintentional oaths which come out inadvertently during one’s usual speech without a well thought out intention behind them are forgiven without a ransom. Breaking a premeditated oath which is made by a person who has the full intention to follow on with his/her oath is a sin and a ransom has to be paid to atone for the sin. A premeditated oath that will result in good to cease or evil to befall should be broken. The person who made the oath should pay the ransom in this case. The verse commanding the believers to break an oath if it is going to hinder doing good ends by stating that God is, “All-Hearing, Omniscient,” to remind the believers that God hears everything and knows what is best for them. The verse talking about the unintentional oaths ends by stating that God is, “All-Forgiving, Most Forbearing,” to emphasize the kindness and mercy of God in dealing with the shortcomings of the believers.

“Those who take an oath for abstention from their wives must wait for four months. If then they change their minds, God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy. And if they decide upon divorce, then God is surely All-Hearing, Omniscient.” Some husbands, for one reason or another, may take an oath not to have sexual relationship with their wives. This may be caused by tensions between a husband and his wife. This practice is hurtful and degrading to the wife. It usually results in the creation of an inimical environment at home which leads to family life disruption and eventually to the breaking up of the marriage. This practice was prevalent in the pre-Islamic society. Islam did not disallow this practice in the beginning because it may have been a solution to some marital problems. However, Islam established certain rules that govern the procedure with the purpose of curbing the power of the husband and to protect the rights of the wives. Thus, the verse came with a ruling to limit the duration of the abstention to a maximum of four months.

“Divorced women shall wait before remarrying for three monthly periods. It is unlawful for them to hide what God has created in their wombs, if they have faith in God and the Last Day. And their husbands would be better to take them back during this period, if they wish for reconciliation. The wives are owed obligations the like of those they owe, in an honorable way. But men have a degree (of precedence) over them. And God is Eminent, Wise.”

The expression “three monthly periods” was interpreted to mean three menstruation periods or three menstruation-free periods depending on the school of thought. The word used for “waiting” in the verse has a far deeper meaning than just waiting. Reflecting on this word in Arabic leads one to conclude that it has the connotation of “waiting with anticipation.” Linguistically it means waiting without marriage until the specified period has passed, but the word used in the Qur’an describes a mental state where the divorcee is looking forward eagerly for the waiting period to end so that she can remarry. This is a natural feeling since someone in that situation would be eager to prove that the breakup of the marriage was not her fault and that she is still capable of entering into a new successful marriage relationship. The man may not have the same predicament since he is the one who initiated the divorce.

The reason a divorcee has to wait for a period of three months before remarrying is to make sure that she is not pregnant. The verse refers to pregnancy as God's creation to evoke feelings of God consciousness in the heart of the would-be mother so she does not conceal the fact that she is pregnant. Concealment of pregnancy goes against the fact that she believes in God and the Last Day.

Another reason for the waiting period is to use it as a cooling off period. Reconciliation may still be possible if the husband and wife get the opportunity to think it over, after the initial state of anger that may have precipitated the divorce has subsided.

Divorce is allowed; but it is the most hated thing in the sight of God. It is a terminal solution that must not be sought until all other possible means to mend the differences between the husband and wife have been tried and failed. Other verses in the Qur'an describe the process that a couple should follow when they have differences that may lead to a divorce. Divorce can only be effected during a period of ritual cleanliness for the wife after she had finished a menstruation period. This shorter waiting period may also be used to help mend the relationship between the husband and wife. The first revocable divorce is followed by a waiting period which serves as a time for the couple to discover their true feelings about living together. If they discover that they are able to sort out their differences and resume their married life again, then they are allowed to resume their marital life, "And their husbands would be better to take them back during this period, if they wish for reconciliation." This is provided that they truly wish for reconciliation. "The wives are owed obligations the like of those they owe, in an honorable way. But men have a degree (of precedence) over them. And God is Eminent, Wise." I think that the degree of precedence mentioned here is specific to this situation and it is not a universal right for men. It may mean that if the man is the one who initiated the divorce, then he has the right to annul the divorce allowing marital life to resume again. God is Eminent and Wise. He knows what is best for people, so they should follow these rules carefully. It must be emphasized that the verse only allows this degree of precedence in the present context. It is not a universal right for men as may be understood by some.

The next verse deals with the details of the process of divorce before it becomes final, "A divorce is only permissible twice. After that, the parties should either hold together on equitable terms, or separate with kindness. It is not lawful for you, (Men), to take back any of your gifts (from your wives), except when both parties fear that they would be unable to keep the limits ordained by God. If you (judges) do indeed fear that they would be unable to keep the limits ordained by God, there is no blame on either of them if she gives something for her freedom. These are the limits ordained by God; so do not transgress them. If any do transgress the limits ordained by God, such persons are wrongdoers." A couple is allowed two revocable divorces before a divorce becomes final. After each of the revocable divorces, the couple may resume their married life again if they so wish. A third divorce is final. Once the divorce became final, it is illegal for them to resume their married life again. If the wife gets married to someone else and gets another final divorce, then she can remarry the first husband if they so wished.

This rule was revealed to rectify a bad practice that was prevalent among the Arabs before Islam. Some men who wanted to torment their wives took recourse to a bad practice. A husband would divorce his wife, then reconcile with her and they would return back to their married life; then he would divorce her again, and they resume their married life, only to repeat the whole process again. Life thus, is spent in a vicious circle. The situation becomes so overwhelming and the woman would be immersed in a dilemma to the extent that she would not know the current state of her marriage. In the mean time she cannot get a final divorce to enable her to marry someone else. So, the Islamic rule limited the number of revocable divorces to two after which the divorce becomes final.

“So if a husband divorces his wife irrevocably, he cannot, after that, remarry her until after she has married another husband and that husband has divorced her. In that case, there is no blame on either of them if they remarry; provided they feel that they can keep the limits ordained by God. Such are the limits ordained by God, which He makes plain to those who know.” There is no hope that couples who reach the stage of final divorce can lead a normal married life together. In this case, it is best that each one of them gets the chance to try another partner. This process is a deterrent for those men who do not take these issues seriously. However, if the woman married someone else and was later divorced from her second husband and wanted to remarry the first one, then they are allowed to remarry, provided that they thought about it deeply and accepted the limits ordained by God. These limits have been made very clear.

Women were badly treated before Islam. A woman was oppressed as a baby. She was either put to death as a victim of infanticide or let to live a humiliating life. A woman was oppressed as wife by being treated as chattel. A woman was oppressed as a divorcee. She did not have the right to remarry unless she was granted permission by her previous husband and her family. Islam came to change all this. Islam declared that men and women share the same origin of life. Men were commanded to treat their wives kindly, because treating one's wife kindly is an act of worship. God blessed the humanity with these rights without anyone asking for them.

Before the end of the waiting period referred to previously, they have to make up their minds: either mend things up and pick up their lives from where they left it before the occurrence of the revocable divorce, or finalize the divorce. This is what meant by, “either take them back on equitable terms or set them free on equitable terms; but do not take them back to harm them, or to take undue advantage.” Men were commanded not to harm their wives. An example of the bad practices against women at that time is exemplified in a man’s saying to his wife, “I will neither take you back as a wife, nor will I divorce you.” This is the kind of treatment that was abolished by Islam. Islam accomplished this by establishing the principle that whoever treats his wife badly has transgressed against himself. A wife is a sister in Islam, he who wrongs his sister in Islam wronged himself. In addition, these verses expound the rules that govern the relationship between a husband and his wife, he who does not take these rules seriously has wronged himself because he took God’s Book in jest. Then men are reminded of the power of God and their duty toward Him, “And be conscious of God, and know that God is well acquainted with all things.”

The rules also indicated the right of a divorced woman to remarry her previous husband after the waiting period has elapsed, “When you divorce women, and they have fulfilled the appointed waiting period, do not prevent them from marrying their (former) husbands, if they mutually agree on equitable terms.”

Termidhi narrated on the authority of Mo’qal bin Yassar (RA), he said, “My sister was married to a man, during the time of the Prophet (PBUH). They stayed together for some time, and then they were divorced. After the waiting period had elapsed her previous husband proposed to her again but I refused to let my sister accept her previous husband’s proposal. When the verse, ‘When you divorce women, and they have fulfilled the appointed waiting period, do not prevent them from marrying their (former) husbands, if they mutually agree on equitable terms,’ was revealed, I had no choice but to obey the command and bless my sister’s marriage to her previous husband.”

These rules aimed at addressing the needs of people and simplifying their lives. The rules exemplify the grace of God on His servants, “This is an admonition for him among you who believes in God and the Last Day. That is more virtuous for you and purer. God knows and you know not.” This verse aims at touching the hearts of people to listen and obey. Reminding them that following the rules is more virtuous and purer for them is an incentive for them to follow the rules. This is an admonition from God to those who believe in God and the Last Day. The belief in God and the Last Day opens the hearts to receive God’s admonitions. The heart of a believer yearns to a way to please God and enjoy the security and purity that this belief brings. The connection between laws that govern the issues of daily life and the worship of God is emphasized, which highlights the Islamic holistic approach to life.

“Mothers shall suckle their children for two whole years for those who wish to complete the suckling. The duty of feeding and clothing nursing mothers in a seemly manner is upon the father of the child. No one should be charged beyond his capacity. A mother should not be made to suffer because of her child, nor should he to whom the child is born be made to suffer because of his child. And it is incumbent on the father's heir the like of that which was incumbent on the father. If they desire to wean the child by mutual consent and after consultation, it is no sin for them. And if you wish to give your children out to nurse, it is no sin for you, provided that you pay what is due from you in kindness. Remain conscious of God, and know that God sees all what you do.” The initial natural disposition of a mother would normally prevent her from relinquishing her responsibility to suckle her newborn. But the Qur’an does not leave such a serious responsibility for the disposition of the mother because the dispute between the husband and the wife which precipitated a divorce may affect that disposition. To protect the right of the vulnerable newborn, the Qur’an commands divorced mothers to suckle their newborn babies for a period of two years. This seems to be an ideal suckling period which provides sufficient physical and mental nourishment for the newborn. In return, the husband has the responsibility to provide decent levels of feeding and clothing for the nursing mother. Thus, the baby continues to enjoy the collaborative efforts of his parents even after they were divorced. This collaboration has to be done kindly and decently, neither the mother nor the father should take this as an excuse to make the other suffer. God is Merciful and Kind and He does not burden any soul beyond its capacity. If the father dies, his heir should carry out that undertaking on his behalf. The heir should ensure that the rights of the nursing mother and her baby are fulfilled.

The parents can, after a mutual agreement has been reached, wean the baby before the end of the two-year term mentioned earlier, if it is in the best interest of the baby. In addition, the father can hire someone to nurse the baby if it is the wish of the parents and it is deemed to be in the best interest of the baby to do so. All of these rules are rooted in the concept of God consciousness.

“If any of you die and leave widows behind, they shall wait for four months and ten days before they remarry. When they have fulfilled their term, there is no blame on you if they dispose of themselves in a just and reasonable manner. And God is well acquainted with what you do. There is no blame on you if you make an indirect offer of betrothal or hold it in your hearts. God knows that you cherish them in your hearts. But do not make a secret contract with them except in honourable terms, nor resolve on the tie of marriage till the prescribed term is fulfilled. And know that God knows what is in your hearts, and take heed of Him; and know that God is All-Forgiving, Most Forbearing.” Widows used to be subjected to a great deal of suffering in the pre-Islamic Arabian society. The mourning period for a widow in pre-Islamic Arabian society was a full year, during such time the widow would stay in seclusion, badly dressed, and she would not be allowed to touch perfume. At the end of the year the widow would perform a number of silly and absurd rituals. Islam abolished these practices and limited the mourning period to four months and ten days. Once the mourning period is completed, a widow is free to entertain a marriage proposal if someone showed interest and if she so wished.

Men are also taught the etiquette of dealing with widows during their mourning period. A man is not allowed to propose to a widow during her mourning period. A mourning period is a period of anguish, sadness, and uncertainty. Open marriage proposals during this period may subject a widow to further stress and uncertainty. It is therefore only permissible to intimate an interest in marriage during this period. However, it is allowable for a man to entertain the desire to marry a woman while she is still in the mourning period. Marriage desires are natural feelings and Islam does not suppress natural feelings but only refines them. But, it is not allowed to propose secretly before the end of the mourning period nor should a man even have the resolve to tie the marriage knot. The verse ends with a warning, “God knows what is in your hearts, and take heed of Him,”

This is a link between legal matters and inner feelings. Believers are exhorted to refine their inner feelings to go along with the rules which govern the lawful and unlawful. But God is, “All-Forgiving, Most Forbearing,” the opportunity to repent is always there.

“There is no blame on you if you divorce women before consummation of marriage or the fixation of their dower; but make fair provision for them; the rich according to his means, and the poor according to his means. A provision of a reasonable amount is due from those who wish to do the right thing. And if you divorce them before consummation of marriage, but after the fixation of a dower for them, then give them half the dower, unless they waive their right or the person in whose hands is the marriage tie waives the right. To waive the right is nearest to God consciousness. And do not forget kindness between yourselves, for God sees well all that you do.” These verses explain the rules which govern the cases of women who were divorced before their marriages had been consummated. There are two cases.

The first case is the case of a woman who was divorced before the consummation of the marriage and a dower was not yet specified. Since, it is a legal duty for a man to give his bride a dower; he has to give his divorcee a gift according to his means. In a way, it is a gift that may make up partly for the bad experience that the divorced woman went through. Giving a gift at such time may ameliorate the bad feelings that accompany a broken marriage. The amount of the gift should be according to the means of the man, “the rich according to his means, and the poor according to his means,” no one should carry a burden beyond his capability. However, men should remember that this is the right thing to do.

The second case is the case of a woman who was divorced before the consummation of the marriage but the dower had been specified. In this case the man has to pay half the specified dower. But the divorced woman, or the person that the woman delegated to conduct the marriage procedure on her behalf (in case of a young woman), may agree to waive her legal right to the dower. Waiving the legal right out of her own free will creates an atmosphere of generosity and amity. This reflects the true essence of Islam which makes kindness and generosity in treating people an act of worship.

A reminder of the obligatory prayer is squeezed in the middle of verses dealing with divorce rules. “Maintain with care the obligatory prayers, especially the Middle Prayer; and stand up before God in complete devotion. If you are in danger, pray on foot, or riding, but when you are in security, remember God in the manner He has taught you, which you knew not before.” This is a command to perform prayers at the set times and in the best form. There is a difference in opinion about what was meant by the middle prayer. However, there is a strong indication that it refers to afternoon (‘Asr) prayer. This is based on a tradition that the Prophet (PBUH) during the battle of the Trench said, “They distracted us to pray the middle prayer, the ‘Asr prayer, and may God fill their hearts and their homes with fire.” At that time, Muslims used sometimes to speak to each other while they were performing prayer. The command to stand in complete devotion to God during prayers indicates that during prayer people should not busy themselves with anything except the prayer. When this verse was revealed, the rule that talking while prayer is not permitted was established.

Prayer should be performed at all times as prescribed, even when the believers are in a state of fear of an impending attack from the enemy. However, at times of fear, a different format for prayer is used to suit the situation. In this case, Muslims are allowed to pray while on their mounts and not necessarily facing toward the Qibla. Kneeling and prostrating are replaced with light gestures by the head. This format differs from the one described in Sura 4. The format mentioned in Sura 4, indicates that Muslims would be divided into two groups, one group would perform the prayer and the second would stand guard behind them. Then the two groups exchange places. The present verse gives the format when fighting is going on and there is no chance to form lines. This underscores the importance which Islam attaches to prayers. Prayer plays a cardinal role in Islam. It is the support that the Muslim relies on in times of adversity or fear. The sword in the hand and the prayer in the heart are the weapons that the believers use to defend themselves against the enemy. “But when you are in security, remember God in the manner He has taught you, which you knew not before,” and if it were not for the knowledge bestowed by God, how can humans know?

After this brief interjection, which emphasized a fundamental principle in Islam: obeying God’s law in all aspects of life is an act of worship, the narrative returns to the discussion of marriage and divorce rules. “Those of you who die and leave widows should bequest for their widows a year’s maintenance and residence. But if they leave (the residence), there is no blame on you for what they do with themselves, provided it is reasonable. And God is Eminent Wise.” The verse determines the right of a widow to be supported by her deceased husband for a period of one year. The mourning period, as has been mentioned before, is only four months and ten days after which the woman can enjoy her normal life but she still maintains her right for the support for a period of one year. Some scholars are of the opinion that the previous verse abrogates this one, but there is no need to conclude that there is a contradiction between the two verses which requires that one of them abrogates the other. The rationale for our argument is that the first verse states a duty that the woman should fulfill while the present verse states a right the woman should enjoy. So there is no contradiction between the two verses.

“For divorced women a fair maintenance should be provided. This is a duty for all who are conscious of God.” This is a fair recompense for any divorced woman to mend the wounds that have been caused by the process of divorce. The rules have been detailed in a clear exposition for the believers to reflect on the rationale behind them, the mercy that engulfs them, and the blessings which they represent, “Thus, God makes clear His revelations to you, in order that you may understand.”

Verses: 243 to 252

243. Have you not considered those who went forth from their homes, for fear of death, and they were thousands, then God said to them, “Die!” And then He brought them to life again. Most surely God is gracious to people, but most people are not grateful.

244. Fight in the cause of God, and know that God is All-Hearing, Omniscient.

245. Who is he that will lend God a beautiful loan, which God will multiply to him manifold? It is God who withholds and who gives abundantly, and to Him shall be your return.

246. Have you not considered the chiefs of the Children of Israel after Moses, when they said to a prophet of theirs, “Raise up for us a king that we may fight in the way of God?” He said,

“May it not be that you would not fight if fighting is ordained for you?” They said, “And what reason have we that we should not fight in the way of God, when we and our children have indeed been driven out of our homes?” But when fighting was ordained for them, they turned back, except a few of them, and God knows the wrongdoers.

247. Their Prophet said to them, “God has appointed Saul as king over you.” They said, “How can he have dominion over us when we are more deserving of the dominion than him, and he is not even gifted with wealth in abundance?” He said, “God has chosen him above you, and has gifted him abundantly with knowledge and bodily prowess. God grants His authority to whom He pleases. God is Vast, Omniscient.”

248. And their Prophet said to them, “A Sign of his dominion is that there shall come to you the Ark of the covenant. In it peace from your Lord, and the relics left by the family of Moses and the family of Aaron, carried by the angels. In this is a sign for you if you are indeed believers.”

249. When Saul set out with the armies, he said, “God will test you with a stream, whoever drinks of its water will not belong with me. Only those who do not taste it will belong with me. A mere sip out of the hand is excused.” But they all drank of it, except a few. When they crossed the river, he and the faithful ones with him, they said, “This day we cannot cope with Goliath and his forces.” But those who were certain that they will meet God, said, “How often, by God's will, has a small force overcome a mighty one? God is with those who persevere.”

250. When they advanced to meet Goliath and his forces, they prayed, “Our Lord, bestow perseverance on us and make our foothold firm. Help us against the disbelievers.”

251. So they defeated them by God's leave and David slew Goliath; and God gave him the dominion and the wisdom, and taught him of that which He wills. And if God had not repelled some people by others the earth would have been corrupted. But God is Gracious to all the worlds.

252. These are the revelations of God. We recite them to you in truth. Verily you are one of the messengers. (2:243-252)

“Have you not considered those who went forth from their homes, for fear of death, and they were thousands, then God said to them, ‘Die!’ And then He brought them to life again. Most surely God is gracious to people, but most people are not grateful.” The verse does not specify who the people who went out of their homes were, where they lived, nor when this incident took place. We don't want to speculate on answers to these questions because if God wanted us to know the specific answers to these questions He would have mentioned these details. The narrative's objective is to reflect on the meaning of life and death. The moral of the story is that life and death are controlled by the will of God. No one can avoid death and no amount of care can delay its occurrence. God gives life and only He controls its end. There is a great divine wisdom behind the cycle of life and death. Life and death are blessings from God, and His divine power guarantees the benefit of humankind in either case. This large group of people went out from their homes in a panic, fleeing death. It is not known exactly what type of death causing danger they were fleeing. They may have been fleeing death at the hands of an enemy or because of an epidemic. However, they did not succeed in their attempt because God wanted them dead. He said, “Die!” and they died. How God said this, and how they died, no one knows, and it is not relevant here to know the answers to these questions. What is important is that they thought they were fleeing death but they were actually going forward to meet their death. Then God brought them back to life. They returned back to life by the will of God without any effort on their part.

This introduction sets the stage for the following command, “Then fight in the cause of God, and know that God All-Hearing, Omniscient.” Do not let the fear of death or the love of life prevent you from complying when the call to fight in the cause of God is made. Life and death are controlled by God and He hears and knows what we say. No good deed will be lost. Fighting in the cause of God is usually mentioned in association with spending in the cause of God in the Qur’an. Both involve a great sacrifice. In addition, the army in the early days of Islam was an army of volunteers who depended solely on donations to prepare for war. The believers were urged not only to enrol in the army but also to make donations in support of the army, “Who is he that will lend God a beautiful loan, which God will multiply to him manifold. It is God who withholds and who gives abundantly, and to Him shall be your return.” If life and death are controlled by God so is the wealth. Avoiding war does not mean that one may live longer; similarly avoiding spending in the cause of God does not guarantee the maintenance of wealth. On the contrary, a donation in the cause of God is a guaranteed loan to God. He will pay it back in multitude. The payback will be blessings in this life and a great reward in the Hereafter.

“Have you not considered the chiefs of the Children of Israel after Moses, when they said to a prophet of theirs, ‘Raise up for us a king that we may fight in the way of God.’ He said, ‘May it not be that you would not fight if fighting is ordained for you?’ They said, ‘And what reason have we that we should not fight in the way of God? We have indeed been compelled to abandon our homes and our children.’ But when fighting was ordained for them, they turned back, except a few of them, and God knows the wrongdoers.” The verse paints a lively image as if one is watching the events unfold. It describes a discussion between a group of the chiefs of the Children of Israel and one of their prophets who wanted to test their resolve to fight if they received a command to fight in the cause of God. They responded enthusiastically that they are ready to fight once the command is given, however, when the command was given only few obliged.

“Their Prophet said to them, ‘God has appointed Saul as king over you.’ They said, ‘How can he have dominion over us when we are more deserving of the dominion than him, and he is not even gifted with wealth in abundance?’ He said, ‘God has chosen him above you, and has gifted him abundantly with knowledge and bodily prowess. God grants His authority to whom He pleases. God is Vast, Omniscient.’” They asked God for a king to lead them, but when a king was appointed they started casting doubts about his right and ability to lead. Their prophet explained the rationale behind this appointment and outlined the deserving qualities that the king enjoys. God has chosen him and bestowed upon him gifts of knowledge and strength. In the final analysis, it is God’s privilege to appoint whomsoever He wishes. Their prophet gave them signs to identify the king, “And their Prophet said to them, ‘A Sign of his dominion is that there shall come to you the Ark of the covenant. In it peace from your Lord, and the relics left by the family of Moses and the family of Aaron, carried by angels. In this is a sign for you if you are indeed believers.’” The Ark of the Covenant was stolen from them when they were forced out of the Holy Land. God brought the stolen Ark as a miracle to identify the king appointed by Him.

“When Saul set out with the armies, he said, ‘God will test you with a stream; whoever drinks of its water will not belong with me. Only those who do not taste it will belong with me. A mere sip out of the hand is excused.’ But they all drank of it, except a few.” Discipline for the soldiers is an essential trait for an army to secure victory, especially when the enemy has superior power. This test was a training exercise to prepare the army for the coming battle but many failed the test. Only those who were steadfast remained with the army. However, those who remained were few in number, when they saw how large the army of the enemy was, doubts started to rise in their minds, “When they crossed the river, he and the faithful ones with him, they said, ‘This day we cannot cope with Goliath and his forces.’ But the true believers never doubted, “But those who were certain that they will meet God, said, ‘How often, by God's will, has a small force overcome a mighty one? God is with those who persevere.’” Perseverance and the belief that meeting God is inevitable more than balance the disparity in power on the battle ground. These feelings provide strength and resolve and bring about victory. In the final analysis, victory is a gift from God which He will bestow on those who persevere.

“When they advanced to meet Goliath and his forces, they prayed, ‘Our Lord, bestow perseverance on us and make our foothold firm. Help us against the disbelievers.’” The believers offered a beautiful prayer. They asked God to inundate them with patience and endurance, strengthen their foothold, and bestow His victory on them. God accepted their prayer, “So they defeated them by God's leave and David slew Goliath; and God gave him the dominion and the wisdom, and taught him of that which He wills. And if God had not repelled some men by others the earth would have been corrupted. But God is gracious to the worlds.” The verse emphasized the fact that victory was granted by God’s leave, so that there would be no doubt in the minds of the believers about the realities of life. It is a fact that fills the hearts of the believers with peace, security, and certitude. God’s volition will prevail. Truth will prevail over falsehood and goodness will prevail over evil only by God’s will. The believers are chosen by God to implement His plan.

“These are the revelations of God. We recite them to you in truth. Verily you are one of the messengers.” These are God’s revelations recited by the One who has the right to recite them. They embody the truth that should govern the lives of God’s servants.

Verses: 253 to 257

253. Those messengers We endowed with gifts, some above others. To some, God spoke; others He raised to degrees of honour. We gave Jesus the son of Mary clear revelations, and strengthened him with the Holy Spirit. If God had so willed, succeeding generations would not have fought among each other, after clear revelations had come to them, but they chose to wrangle, some believing and others disbelieving. If God had so willed, they would not have fought each other; but God does what He wills.

254. Believers, spend out of the bounties We have provided for you, before the Day comes when there will be no bargaining, friendship, nor intercession. The disbelievers are the wrongdoers.

255. God, there is no deity but Him, the Living, the Self-Subsisting. Neither slumber can seize Him nor sleep. His are all things in the heavens and on earth. Who is there can intercede in His presence except by His permission? He knows what is before them and what is behind them. Nor shall they encompass aught of His knowledge except as He wills. His throne does extend over the heavens and the earth, and He feels no fatigue in guarding and preserving them for He is the Most High, the Tremendous.

256. Let there be no compulsion in religion. Truth stands out clear from error. Whoever rejects evil and believes in God has grasped the most trustworthy handhold that never breaks. And God is All-Hearing, Omniscient.

257. God is the Protecting Guardian of the believers. He leads them from the depths of darkness into light. As for the disbelievers, their patrons are false deities. They lead them from light into darkness. They will be companions of the fire, to dwell therein forever. (2:253-257)

“Those messengers We endowed with gifts, some above others.” The endowment may have been related to the scope of the responsibility of the messenger. A messenger may be sent to a tribe, to a nation, to a generation, or to the whole humanity. The endowment may also be related to the attributes of the messenger or to the nature of the message itself. The verse refers to Prophet Moses (PBUH) and other messengers, but cites Jesus (PBUH) by name, “To some God spoke; others He raised to degrees of honour. We gave Jesus the son of Mary clear revelations, and strengthened him with the Holy Spirit.” When we read about those to whom God spoke, Prophet Moses (PBUH) comes automatically to mind. The Qur’an usually calls Prophet Jesus (PBUH), “Jesus the son of Mary” to emphasize the human nature of Jesus (PBUH). The Holy Spirit refers to the Archangel Gabriel (PBUH) who had the responsibility of transmitting the revelation to the messengers. Gabriel (PBUH) provided the support to the messengers during their arduous missions; he helped them along the hard way to deliver the message; and he filled their hearts with peace and security. The clear revelations that were given to Jesus (PBUH) included the Bible and the miracles that he was able to perform as a proof of his prophet-hood. There was no need to mention Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) in this verse because the narrative is addressed to him. Muhammad (PBUH) was the Messenger that was sent to the whole humanity. The Message he brought was not supported by physical miracles but was supported by intellectual articulation signalling the era of the maturity of the human race. His message embodied the details of a way of life for the humanity that is in accordance with the divine plan. He was therefore, the seal of the prophets and his message was the last link in a series of messages. No revelation appeared after his death.

Fighting erupted among the followers of these messengers. The oneness of the Message did not prevent them from fighting, “If God had so willed, succeeding generations would not have fought among each other, after clear revelations had come to them, but they chose to wrangle, some believing and others disbelieving. If God had so willed, they would not have fought each other; but God does what He wills.” This fight did not occur against God’s will, nothing happens in this universe except by God’s leave, but God willed that humankind should have free will to be able to choose between right and wrong.

Diversity is a part of the deliberate divine plan. Diversity is God’s tool for humankind to be able to fulfill the various tasks necessary for human life to continue on earth. The variety of the tasks that are needed to keep the wheel of life running requires diversity in the creation. Only through collaboration can humankind survive on earth. Humankind was given the free will to decide between right and wrong. God created humankind with an initial natural disposition which allows them to differentiate between truth and falsehood; He filled the universe with signs that lead to Him; and He sent the messengers with guidance. However, people differed “Some believing and others disbelieving.” When people differ along the lines of belief and disbelief, then fighting is inevitable. This verse describes to some extent the situation in Medina at that time. The idolaters of Mecca claimed that they were following the faith of Prophet Abraham (PBUH); the Jews in Medina claimed that they are the followers of the religion of Moses (PBUH); the Christians claimed that they are the followers of Jesus (PBUH). The Muslims were already fighting the idolaters and the fight against the People of the Scripture was eminent. “If God had so willed, they would not have fought each other; but God does what He wills,” But fighting was necessary to repel the rejection of faith and to state the essence of the true Message which was given to all messengers of God and was later corrupted. God knew that falsehood will not stand by watching while guidance is spreading among people. He knew that falsehood is aggressive and it will do its best to sway people away from the straight path. It is therefore, imperative that falsehood should be fought and stopped.

God’s will is absolute and His power is overwhelming. It was His will to establish a diverse creation on earth. It was His will to give humankind free will to choose between right and wrong. It was His will to let those who fail in their choice become misguided. It was His will that evil-doers become transgressors and that fight erupts between the guided and the misguided. It was His will that the believers fight to establish the truth.

“Believers, spend out of the bounties We have provided for you, before the Day comes when there will be no bargaining, friendship, nor intercession. The disbelievers are the wrongdoers.” The believers are addressed with the endearing adjective that they like to be called with, the adjective that connects them to the One they believe in, to spend out of that which He has provided them with. It is a timed invitation and limited opportunity. They should take advantage of it before it is too late. The verse points to the rationale behind the invitation, it is to repel the injustice of the disbelievers, those who committed injustice against God by rejecting the truth, committed injustice against people by blocking their way to guidance, and committed injustice against themselves when they chose to follow the crooked way.

The discussion of faith and rejection of faith is followed by a central verse which lays down the fundamentals of the Islamic perspective of faith and outlines some of the attributes of God which are central to the concept of the Oneness of God. The first of these is “God, there is no deity but Him.” This is an unequivocal statement of the oneness and uniqueness of God. This concept lays the foundation for the principle of God as the absolute and only ruler. He is the only source of all laws that govern life on earth. God determines the values that shape the way of life of people on earth.

He is “The Living, the Self-Subsisting.” God’s life is unique, independent and eternal. God’s life is not like the life we know. It is eternal with no beginning and no end. God is Self-Subsisting. He is in control of all existing things and nothing can exist except by His will and under His control.

“Neither slumber can seize Him nor sleep.” This emphasizes His Self-Subsistence and His continuous control of everything.

“His are all things in the heavens and on earth.” His dominion is absolute, comprehensive, and unconditional. No one shares His dominion. He is the absolute owner of everything. Once we understand that everything on earth and in heaven belong to God, we realize that no one can claim ownership of anything. We have been delegated to run things without real ownership. The conditions governing this delegation have been explained in God’s law. This statement is not only a statement of faith but it lays down the fundamental rule which govern human life on earth.

“Who is there can intercede in His presence except as He permits?” “This is another attribute of God. It juxtaposes the different roles of the Creator and the created. The created are the servants of God. When they are in His presence, they stand in awe unable to speak unless they are given permission.

“He knows what is before them and what is behind them. Nor shall they encompass aught of His knowledge except as He wills.” God’s knowledge is infinite and comprehensive. He knows what is happening, what will happen and what already had happened. He knows what people know and what they don’t know. This has two implications. The first is that God knows our intentions, our thoughts, and our feelings. We cannot hide or escape from God. This knowledge leads to our complete submission to God. The second implication is that people know only what God wants them to know. He reveals His knowledge to people according to His will. People get impressed with new discoveries and forget that it is God who reveals this knowledge to people so that they can discover the nature of the universe they live in. God created Adam and He taught him. He gave him the ability to learn because knowledge is needed for the humankind to fulfill their role as vicegerents of God on earth. God also promised that He will reveal His signs to them, so that they can learn about themselves and about the universe they live in. God fulfilled His promise. Each day we discover something new about ourselves and about the universe. There are still secrets that God did not open up for us to discover yet, some of them we may never discover.

“His throne does extend over the heavens and the earth, and He feels no fatigue in guarding and preserving them for He is the Most High, the Tremendous.” The verse uses a metaphorical image that can be felt by the heart of the believer. God’s throne extends over the heavens and earth. This is the dominion of God. Furthermore, He is able to control His dominion without the slightest sign of fatigue or tiredness. He is the Most High and Tremendous.

Having explained the fundamentals of the Islamic perspective of God, it is important that the role of Muslims in connection to the call to Islam is explained, “Let there be no compulsion in religion. Truth stands out clear from error. Whoever rejects evil and believes in God has grasped the most trustworthy handhold that never breaks. And God hears and knows all things. God is the Protecting Guardian of the believers. He leads them from the depths of darkness into light. As for the disbelievers, their patrons are false deities. They lead them from light into darkness. They will be companions of the fire, to dwell therein forever.” Islam does not subscribe to compulsion regarding matters of faith. The belief in God should be based on thinking, reasoning, and understanding. A person who adopts Islam should do it freely and on the basis of persuasion not compulsion. Islam appeals to rational reasoning as well as to the initial natural disposition of the human being. Islam appeals to the spirit that feels as well as to the mind that thinks. Islam does not rely on miracles as a tool for persuasion. Thus, its banner declares that there should be no compulsion in matters of faith. This clearly reflects the honour that God bestowed on humankind. God decreed that humankind's feelings, thoughts, and will are respected. Humankind has the free will to choose between right and wrong. Each freedom comes with a responsibility.

Islam places the freedom of faith at the top of the list of human rights. Those who deprive people of their freedom of faith deprive them of their humanity. The right of free speech goes hand in hand with the freedom of faith. The freedom for free speech implies that each one is able to advocate freely for one's cause.

"Truth stands out clear from error," Faith is the truth revealed from God and error is the rejection of this truth. This is further elaborated upon, "Whoever rejects evil and believes in God has grasped the most trustworthy handhold that never breaks." Evil should be rejected because evil is a form of oppression. Evil oppresses the ability of a person to think and to see the truth. This is a transgression against God. Those who reject evil are saved. They are secure as if they are holding tightly to a ring; nothing can push them away. "And God is All-Hearing, Omniscient." He hears and knows everything.

"God is the Protecting Guardian of the believers. He leads them from the depths of darkness into light. As for the disbelievers, their patrons are false deities. They lead them from light into darkness." Faith is light, and rejection of faith is darkness. The verse used the word light in the singular form while it used the word darkness in the plural form. This implies that there is only one truth, while there are different types of falsehoods but they are all the same at the end and all of them lead to darkness. Those who rejected the light will be the, "companions of the fire, to dwell therein forever."

Verses: 258 to 260

258. Have you not considered him who disputed with Abraham about his Lord, because God had granted him power? Abraham said, "My Lord is He who gives life and death." He said, "I give life and death." Said Abraham, "But it is God that causes the sun to rise from the east. Can you cause it to rise from the west?" Thus, the disbeliever was dumbfounded. God does not guide the wrongdoers.

259. Or take the example of one who passed by a town, all in ruins to its roofs. He said, "How shall God bring this ever to life, after its death?" but God caused him to die for a hundred years, then raised him up again. He said, "How long did you stay like that?" he (the man) said, "Perhaps a day or part of a day." He (God) said, "No, you stayed like that for a hundred years, look at your food and your drink, they show no signs of age; and look at your donkey. We will make you a sign for the people. Look further at the bones, how We bring them together and cloth them with flesh." When this was shown clearly to him, he said, "I know that God has power over all things."

260. When Abraham said, "Show me, Lord, how You will raise the dead," He (God) replied, "Have you no faith?" He said, "Yes, but just to reassure my heart." He (God) said, "Take four birds, draw them to you, and cut their bodies into pieces. Scatter them over the mountain-tops, and then call them back. They will come swiftly to you. Know that God is Eminent, Wise.” (2:258-260).

A verse which quotes an argument between Prophet Abraham (PBUH) and one of the kings of his time is given next. The Qur’an does not specify the name of the king, because it is irrelevant to the moral of the story, “Have you not considered him who disputed with Abraham about his Lord, because God had granted him power? Abraham said, ‘My Lord is He who gives life and death.’ He said, ‘I give life and death.’ Said Abraham, ‘But it is God that causes the sun to rise from the east. Can you cause it to rise from the west?’ Thus, the disbeliever was dumbfounded. God does not guide the wrongdoers.” The tone of the story reflects the amazement at the audacity of the king to maximize the dramatic effect of the narrative. The king was not an atheist. He simply thought that the power he has which allows him to control the destiny of people raises him to the rank of a god. He forgot that the power he has is a gift from God, he should have been grateful to God for this gift. When the king asked Prophet Abraham (PBUH) who is your Lord? Prophet Abraham (PBUH) answered, “My Lord is He who gives life and death.” This is a unique divine attribute. God is the One who gives life and He is the One who puts people to death. No human being controls life and death. However, the king, in his arrogance, thought he also can control life and death, he said, “I give life and death.” Prophet Abraham (PBUH) realized that the king does not understand the subtlety of the argument, but did not want to waste time arguing this point further. Instead, he put forward a physical fact that cannot be disputed. He said, “He causes the sun to rise from the east. Can you cause it to rise from the west?” He wanted to tell the king that with all the power he has, he can only control a minute part of the universe. The true God has control over everything. That challenge ended the argument, “Thus, the disbeliever was dumbfounded.”

“Or take the example of one who passed by a town, all in ruins to its roofs. He said, ‘How shall God bring it ever to life, after its death?’ but God caused him to die for a hundred years, then raised him up again. He said, ‘How long did you stay like that?’ he (the man) said, ‘Perhaps a day or part of a day.’ He (God) said, ‘No, you stayed like that for a hundred years, look at your food and your drink, they show no signs of age; and look at your donkey. We will make you a sign for the people. Look further at the bones, how We bring them together and cloth them with flesh.’ When this was shown clearly to him, he said, ‘I know that God has power over all things.’” Again, the Qur’an did not reveal the identity of the person mentioned in these verses, nor did the verses mention the name of the town. The Qur’an mentioned only the relevant details. The verses describe an emotive picture of the scene of this town which has been completely destroyed and deserted. One can imagine how the shadow of death was cast on this town. One can sense the absolute feeling of despair that filled the heart of the man as he looked at it. He must have wondered, is there any remote possibility that life would come back to this town? He knew that God existed, but he could not imagine the possibility of the revival of this town after the death and destruction it suffered. God wanted him to see for himself how this can happen. God did not answer him in words but he put him through an experience of life and death. He was put to death and after a period of a hundred years had elapsed, he was resurrected to life again. He was asked, “How long did you stay like that?” His answer was, a day or may be a part of a day. God told him that he had been dead for a hundred years. There must have been changes around the man that told him how long he had stayed in the state of death. However, his food was kept fresh, but the effect of the passing years was shown on the man’s donkey. The donkey perished and only his bones were there. God put back the bones of the donkey together and covered them with flesh and brought the donkey back to life in front of his eyes.

This is another lesson for the believers to learn. God does not only control life and death, but He also has the absolute power over all things. God does what He wills, whenever He wills, and whatever way He wills.

“When Abraham said, ‘Show me, Lord, how You will raise the dead,’ He replied, ‘Have you no faith?’ He said, ‘Yes, but just to reassure my heart.’ He (God) said, ‘Take four birds, draw them to you, and cut their bodies to pieces. Scatter them over the mountain-tops, and then call them back. They will come swiftly to you. Know that God is Eminent, Wise.’” The verse described the state of mind of Prophet Abraham (PBUH) who wanted to know the secrets of the resurrection. When someone like Prophet Abraham (PBUH), who is a believer, a friend of God, and a person who has submitted to God, entertains such thoughts, we know that it is normal for other people to entertain such thoughts as well. Prophet Abraham (PBUH) wanted to feel the reassurance in his heart seeing the power of God at work. He wanted to understand the secrets of life and death. God knew that Prophet Abraham (PBUH) was a true believer. Prophet Abraham’s (PBUH) request was not the request of a person who was in doubt of the power of God, but it was the request of a curious person. God satisfied his curiosity, “Take four birds, draw them to you, and cut their bodies to pieces. Scatter them over the mountain-tops, and then call them back. They will come swiftly to you. Know that God is Eminent, Wise.” God asked Prophet Abraham (PBUH) to pick up four birds, inspect them closely to be able to recognize them later, slaughter them and cut them into pieces, scatter the pieces over different mountain-tops, and call for them to come to him. He was told that, when he calls them back, they will be resurrected to life again and they will hasten toward him. Prophet Abraham (PBUH) saw the secret of the process of resurrection unfold in front of his eyes.

Verses: 261 to 274

261. The parable of those who spend their wealth in the way of God is that of a grain of corn. It grows seven ears and each ear has a hundred grains. God gives manifold increase to whom He pleases. And God is Vast, Omniscient.
262. Those who spend their wealth in the cause of God, and follow not up their gifts with reminders of their generosity or with injury, for them their reward is with their Lord. On them shall be no fear, nor shall they grieve.
263. A kind word with forgiveness is better than charity followed by injury. God is Self-Sufficient, and He is Most-Forbearing.
264. Believers, do not render your charity in vain by reproach or by injury like him who spends his wealth to be seen by people, but he neither believes in God nor the Last Day. His example is like a hard barren rock on which is a little soil, heavy rain falls on it and leaves it just a bare stone. They will not be able to do anything with what they have earned. And God does not guide those who disbelieve.
265. And the example of those who spend their wealth, seeking to please God and to strengthen their souls, is like a garden, high and fertile. When heavy rain falls on it, it yields double its normal harvest, and if it does not receive heavy rain, light moisture will be sufficient. God sees well whatever you do.

266. Would any of you wish that he should have a garden with date-palms and vines and streams flowing underneath, and all kinds of fruit, and then he is stricken with old age, and his children are not strong (enough to look after themselves) that it should be caught in a fiery whirlwind and then consumed by fire? Thus, does God make clear to you His revelations that you may reflect.

267. You who believe, give of the good things which you have earned, and of the fruits of the earth which We have produced for you, and do not seek the bad with the intent that you spend from it in charity, when you yourselves would not accept it except with closed eyes. And know that God is Self-Sufficient, and Praiseworthy.

268. The devil threatens you with poverty and commands you to act immorally. God promises you His forgiveness and bounties. God is indeed Vast, Omniscient.

269. He grants wisdom to whom He pleases; and he to whom wisdom is granted receives indeed abundant good; but none will grasp this but men of understanding.

270. Whatever you spend in charity or devotion, rest assured that God knows it all. But the wrongdoers have no helpers.

271. If you give charity openly, it is well, and if you hide it and give it to the poor, it is better for you. This will atone for some of your evil deeds, and God is Totally-Aware of what you do.

272. It is not required of you (Messenger), to guide them, but God guides whom He pleases. Whatever good you give will benefit your own souls, and you shall only do so seeking to please God. Whatever good you give, shall be rendered back to you, and you shall not be dealt with unjustly.

273. Give to those in need, who, are preoccupied in God's cause and are restricted from travel, and cannot move about in the land, seeking trade or work. The ignorant person thinks, because of their modesty, that they are not needy. You shall know them by their unfailing mark: they beg not importunately. And whatever of good you give, be assured God knows it well.

274. Those who spend of their wealth in charity by night and by day, in secret and in public, have their reward with their Lord. On them shall be no fear, nor shall they grieve. (2:261-274)

“The parable of those who spend their wealth in the way of God is that of a grain of corn. It grows seven ears and each ear has a hundred grains. God gives manifold increase to whom He pleases. And God is Vast, Omniscient.” The mathematics is intriguing, how can a single grain become seven hundred? But the more important message is the one given by the image of a grain put in the ground, producing a plant that comes out carrying a multitude of grains. This is an image of the growth of life which inculcates the ideal of giving in the consciousness of people. Giving is actually taking and wealth does not decrease by giving but it actually increases. Wealth grows by giving because God rewards in multitude, because God is “Vast, Omniscient.” He has limitless resources and He knows what is in people’s hearts. What kind of spending is meant here? It is the spending in the way of God that is not tarnished by hurting the feelings of people on the receiving end. Reminding people that they are on the receiving end is a mean act. It is only done by those who want to show off or want to humiliate others. This charity is not intended to please God. This behaviour is unacceptable since it is God’s wealth, not ours that we give away. Those who do not commit this mean act should not suffer any feeling of fear of deprivation or injustice. They should not be saddened that they gave away their money in this life nor by the spectre of a bad ending in the Hereafter. The same message is reemphasized, “A kind word with forgiveness is better than charity followed by injury. God is Self-Sufficient, and

He is Most-Forbearing.” Charity that is followed by hurting the feelings of those who are on the receiving end is useless. Charity should be followed by a kind word and a good feeling. Charity should be followed by a kind word that heals the wounds of the hearts of the deprived and cleanse their souls. One of the objectives of charity is to bring comfort to the deprived and to make them enjoy a sense of brotherhood and friendship. This objective can only be achieved through a kind word and forgiveness. Charity is not in reality a favour that the wealthy bestows on the poor, but it is an obligation for seeking the pleasure of God. If it is not done right, then it will not be accepted by God. God is Most-Forbearing toward His servants. Their ingratitude after He had bestowed His bounty on them does not anger Him. So, people should learn how to treat others nicely when they seem slightly ungrateful.

“Believers, do not render your charity in vain by reproach or by injury like him who spends his wealth to be seen by people, but neither believes in God nor the Last Day. His example is like a hard barren rock on which is a little soil, heavy rain falls on it and leaves it just a bare stone. They will not be able to do anything with what they have earned. And God does not guide those who disbelieve.” This verse describes metaphorically the situation of a person with a hard heart. It is so hard that it does not feel the beauty of faith. This hard heart is enshrouded in a thin veil of hypocrisy. The verse likens the hard heart to a hard rock. The hard rock is covered with a thin layer of soil that cannot support any plant life. The scene of the thin layer of soil that hides the hardness of the rock is juxtaposed against the scene of the thin layer of hypocrisy that hides the hardness of the heart. When the rain water comes down on the rock, the thin layer of soil quickly vanishes leaving behind a bare rock very much similar to the heart of a person who spent his money to show off. It was not much of use to people nor did it help grow life.

Juxtapose this scene with the scene of a person who has a heart full of faith and who spends money generously seeking the pleasure of God. His spending is motivated by his faith and the impetus to do good. The parable of this heart is the parable of a paradise with thick and fertile soil that produces a multitude of plant life even if it only receives a few drops of rain.

The narrative creates a scene that depicts the evil end of those who hurt people after giving them charity. In that scene, one sees a person who used to hurt the feelings of people who receive charity at a time when he/she grows old and becomes helpless and suddenly he/she loses everything he/she owns, “Would any of you wish that he should have a garden with date-palms and vines and streams flowing underneath, and all kinds of fruit, and then he is stricken with old age, and his children are not strong (enough to look after themselves) that it should be caught in a fiery whirlwind and then consumed by fire? Thus, does God make clear to you His revelations that you may reflect.” Giving charity is similar to planting a garden. The garden gives shade and fruits so does charity. Charity has positive effects for both the person who gives and the person who receives. Who would like to have a garden like this, and then want to see it destroyed, at a time when he/she is least able to save it and in most need for its shade and fruits?

“Believers, give of the good things which you have earned, and of the fruits of the earth which We have produced for you, and do not seek the bad with the intent that you spend from it in charity, when you yourselves would not accept it except with closed eyes. And know that God is Self-sufficient, and Praiseworthy.” This is a fundamental principle in Islam, one should give in charity out of the best that one has. One should not give away something in charity that he/she would not accept. God does not accept worthless charity. This is a general principle that should be heeded by all believers, at all times.

“The devil threatens you with poverty and commands you to act immorally. God promises you His forgiveness and bounties. God is indeed Vast, Omniscient. He grants wisdom to whom He pleases; and he to whom wisdom is granted receives indeed abundant good; but none will grasp this but men of understanding.” The devil instils in your hearts the fear of becoming poor if you spend in charity. This makes you stingy. The devil also seduces you to commit sins. Infanticide was one of the wicked habits that the Arabs adopted before Islam because of the fear of becoming poor. This was a sin motivated by the fear of becoming poor which the devil instilled in the disbelievers. On the other hand, God promises you forgiveness and bounty. One notices that forgiveness was promised before bounty, because bounty goes beyond forgiveness. In addition to forgiveness, bounty includes all types of provision that God bestows on His servants as a reward for their charity. God has limitless bounty and He knows everything. God further blesses His servants with wisdom. Those who have wisdom have insight into life, they understand the rationale behind things and events, and they deal moderately and justly with people. Only those who were given the talent of understanding are able to remind themselves continuously so they do not go astray. God bestows wisdom on whosoever He wishes. This brings us again to the principle that God’s will is absolute.

“Whatever you spend in charity or devotion, rest assured that God knows it all. But the wrongdoers have no helpers. If you give charity openly, it is well, and if you hide it and give it to the poor, it is better for you. This will atone for some of your evil deeds, and God is Totally-Aware of what you do.” Spending in the way of God includes all types of obligatory and voluntary charity, and what one spends in devotion. Spending in devotion is to dedicate a specific charity to God. It is an obligation that the person puts on himself/herself voluntarily seeking the pleasure of God. Knowing that God knows all what the believer does is an incentive to be conscious of God in all our deeds. Those who are not grateful to God for His blessings are truly wrongdoers. They will have no support. Giving charity in secret is better because it eliminates, beyond the shadow of a doubt, the sin of showing off. However, one may give the obligatory charity openly because it is an expression of obedience to God. The verse also allows the believer to give openly or secretly depending on which is more fitting to the situation at hand.

Islam recognized two main impediments in the way of inculcating the trait of being charitable in the believers. The first impediment is the inherent human weakness toward hoarding money and the reluctance to give it away in charity. Islam’s strategy consisted of a continuous reminder and a repeated inducement to inspire the believers to spend in the way of God and to rid themselves of the hateful trait of stinginess. The second impediment is one of the main characteristics of Arabs. Arabs were known for their generosity; however, this generosity was motivated by the desire to be known for their generosity. They wanted people to write poetry praising them for being generous. Islam aimed at changing this behaviour. Islam established the principle that charity should be done for the sole purpose of pleasing God. It took a long training program to establish this principle.

“It is not required of you (Messenger), to guide them, but God guides whom He pleases. Whatever good you give will benefit your own souls, and you shall only do so seeking to please God. Whatever good you give, shall be rendered back to you, and you shall not be dealt with unjustly.” Ibn Abi Hatem narrated on the authority of Ibn Abbas (RA) that the Prophet (PBUH) used to tell the believers to give charity only to Muslims until this verse was revealed. When this verse was revealed the Prophet (PBUH) commanded the believers to give charity to any one in need irrespective of her/his faith. Only God is privy to the secrets of people’s hearts and only He controls guidance. Not even the Prophet (PBUH) has the authority or the responsibility to guide people. The Prophet’s (PBUH) only responsibility is to deliver the message, and it is up to people to heed it or ignore it. It is incumbent on the Prophet (PBUH), and all Muslims, to open their hearts to people, to treat them kindly, and to offer help to those who need help, irrespective of their religious affiliation and with no expectation of any worldly reward. God rewards good deeds. Islam does not only sanctify the freedom of religion, but it goes beyond this by commanding Muslims to treat adherents of other faiths kindly. The believers are once more reminded that their main objective in giving charity is to seek the pleasure of God.

The following verse specified a group of people who were worthy of charity, “Give to those in need, who, are preoccupied in God's cause and are restricted from travel, and cannot move about in the land, seeking trade or work. The ignorant man thinks, because of their modesty, that they are not needy. You shall know them by their unfailing mark: they beg not importunately. And whatever of good you give, be assured God knows it well.” The verse describes a group of people who migrated from Mecca to Medina, leaving their families and wealth behind. In Medina they devoted themselves to guarding the Prophet (PBUH) and striving in the way of God. These duties occupied their time and did not allow them to seek any paid employment to support themselves. However, they were too proud to ask any one for help. Those who did not know them well thought that they were self-sufficient. The verse advised the believers to help these people. However, the advice given in this verse is a general advice that applies to any similar group of people.

The verses on charity end by a general statement, “Those who spend of their wealth in charity by night and by day, in secret and in public, have their reward with their Lord. On them shall be no fear, nor shall they grieve.” The verse promised those who spend in any way and at all times that they will not only get their reward, but they will never experience any fear nor sadness.

Verses: 275 to 281

275. Those who devour usury will not stand except as a person who was touched by the devil and driven to madness. That is because they say, “Trade is like usury,” but God has permitted trade and forbidden usury. Those who desist, after receiving admonition from their Lord, shall be pardoned for the past; their case is for God to judge. But those who repeat the offence are companions of the fire. They will abide therein forever.

276. God will deprive usury of all blessing, whereas He will bless deeds of charity with manifold increase. God does not love the ungrateful, the sinner.

277. Those who believe, and do good deeds, and establish regular prayers and pay poor-dues, will have their reward with their Lord. On them shall be no fear, nor shall they grieve.

278. Believers, be conscious of God and give up all outstanding gains from usury, if you are indeed believers.

279. If you do not, then be warned of war from God and His Messenger. But if you repent you shall have your capital sums. Deal not unjustly, and you shall not be dealt with unjustly.

280. If the debtor is in a difficulty, grant him time till it is easy for him to repay. But if you forgive the debt by way of charity, that is best for you if you only knew.

281. And fear the Day when you shall be brought back to God. Then shall every soul be paid what it earned, and none shall be dealt with unjustly. (2:275-281)

“Those who devour usury will not stand except as a person who was touched by the devil and driven to madness. That is because they say, ‘Trade is like usury,’ but God has permitted trade and forbidden usury. Those who after receiving admonition from their Lord, desist, shall be pardoned for the past; their case is for God to judge. But those who repeat the offence are companions of the fire. They will abide therein forever.” This verse paints a very ugly picture for those who deal in usury. There were two types of usury dealings known to the Arabs before Islam: Naseeah, and Faddal.

There are several traditions that define the Naseeah. Katada said, “In the pre-Islamic era, a buyer requests a delay in paying the price of a commodity he/she bought, when the payment became due the buyer would ask for another delay in paying the seller in exchange for an increase in the price”. Abu Bakr Al-Gassass said, “It is known that Naseeah consisted of a debt that should be paid back with an additional amount of money to be agreed upon by the lender and debtor.” Imam Razi mentioned in his interpretation of the Qur’an, “Naseeah consisted of a debt with a monthly interest, in addition to the capital that would be paid back in full at the end of the lending period.”

Faddal consists of trading a specific amount of a certain commodity for a smaller amount of the same commodity but of a higher quality. This practice was called usury because it shares some of the characteristics of usury. It involves a trade-off of two different amounts of the same commodity. The difference in the amounts may be due to a difference in the quality of the commodity being exchanged. This may result in a perception of injustice or abuse.

Islam not only abolished both types of usury, but also aimed at changing the mentality of the business people. Business people claimed that the act of lending money at an exorbitant interest rate is a legitimate way of conducting business. They said, “Trade is like usury” Their reasoning is that both practices aim at investing money. But these are two different models. In a regular trading model, the rate of return is not guaranteed, there is always a possibility for gain or loss. In the usury model the rate of return is guaranteed. Trade has been made lawful because the whole society stands to benefit from its activities.

The verse indicated that the command should be implemented and all usury practices should cease immediately. Previous deals were forgiven and people should trust their affairs to God. This stresses the fact that salvation is contingent on God's will and mercy. Those who do not heed this admonition and repeat the offence are threatened with a long lasting torment in the Hereafter. Another reminder is given for those who procrastinate, thinking that there is still time for repentance, "God will deprive usury of all blessing, but will give increase for deeds of charity. God does not love the ungrateful, the sinner." This will not only happen in this life but also in the Hereafter. Those who are determined to practice what God has made unlawful, claiming that it is lawful are deprived of God's love. Islam is not a lip service but it is a way of life.

In contrast to the scene describing the sinful practices of those who adopt a system of usury and the promise that they will be scourged by the wrath of God, we see another scene describing those who believe and do good deeds. These are the attributes of the believers whose way of life embodies a system of obligatory charity, "Those who believe, and do good deeds, and establish regular prayers and pay the poor-dues, will have their reward with their Lord. On them shall be no fear, nor shall they grieve." The requirement to pay poor-dues is a salient feature of the Islamic system. Poor-dues are an obligatory charity, which form the foundation of the collective social responsibility of the community. Those who are constant in paying the poor-dues will have their reward with their Lord, in addition to a promise that they will never suffer fear or sadness.

"Believers, be conscious of God and give up all outstanding gains from usury, if you are indeed believers". There was no retroactive punishment and previous offences involving the practice of usury were forgiven. This is one of the policies of Islamic legislation, the enactment of the law starts when the law is legislated. The law cannot be applied retroactively. This policy protected the economy of the Muslim community at that time from collapsing. For a law to be successful, it has to be both respected and enforceable. Connecting the concept of God consciousness to the obedience of the law highlights the concept of respecting the law. This provides an inner incentive to follow the law. The external incentive is provided by the enforcement, "If you do not, then be warned of war from God and His Messenger. But if you repent you shall have your capital sums. Deal not unjustly, and you shall not be dealt with unjustly." A tremendous punishment was promised. Those who disobey the law will face a war against God and His Messenger.

When this verse was revealed, the Prophet (PBUH) commanded the governor of Mecca to fight the family of Al-Mughira if they do not cease practicing usury. In his sermon upon securing Mecca, the Prophet (PBUH) announced that all previous interest charges have been forgiven. All debtors were asked to pay back only the original capital which they had borrowed.

Those debtors who were facing a hard time paying back their debt needed a break. The lenders were commanded to allow those debtors more time to pay back their debts. It was indicated that it is even better if they were able to forgive the debt, "If the debtor is in a difficulty, grant him time till it is easy for him to repay. But if you forgive the debt by way of charity, that is best for you if you only knew”. The lenders are reminded of the Day of Reckoning as an incentive for treating the debtors nicely, “And fear the Day when you shall be brought back to God. Then shall every soul be paid what it earned, and none shall be dealt with unjustly.”

282. Believers, when you contract a debt for a stated term, put it down in writing. Have a scribe write down justly the terms between the parties. No scribe should refuse to write, as God has taught him, so let him write. Let him who incurs the liability dictate, but let him be conscious of his Lord God, and not diminish anything of what he owes. If the party liable is mentally deficient, or weak, or unable himself to dictate, then let his guardian dictate justly. Call two witnesses, out of your own men, and if there are not two men, then a man and two women, such as you choose, for witnesses, so that if one of them errs, the other can remind her. The witnesses should not refuse when they are called upon. Do not disdain to put it in writing for a future period, whether it is small or big. It is more equitable in the sight of God, more suitable as evidence, and more convenient to prevent doubts among yourselves; but if it be a transaction which you carry out on the spot among yourselves, there is no blame on you if you do not put it in writing. Have witnesses present whenever you make a commercial contract; and let no harm to be suffered by neither a scribe nor a witness. If you do such harm, it will be sinful conduct on your part. So be conscious of God. God teaches you. And God is well acquainted with all things.
283. If you are on a journey, and cannot find a scribe, a security deposit may serve the purpose. And if one of you deposits a thing on trust with another, Let the trustee faithfully discharge his trust, and let him be conscious of God his Lord. Conceal not evidence; for whoever conceals it, his heart is tainted with sin. And God knows all that you do.
284. To God belongs all that is in the heavens and on earth. Whether you show what is in your minds or conceal it, God will bring you to account for it. He forgives whom He pleases, and torments whom He pleases, for God has power over all things. (2:282-284)

“Believers, when you contract a debt for a stated term, put it down in writing.” Documenting transactions which involve lending and borrowing is a general principle in Islam. All debts have to be documented. An independent person (a scribe) should prepare the document and should observe total fairness to both parties involved in the transaction, “Have a scribe write down justly the terms between the parties.” God commands that, “No scribe should refuse to write, as God has taught him, so let him write.” The verse also details how the document is prepared, “Let him who incurs the liability dictate, but let him be conscious of his Lord God, and not diminish anything of what he owes. If the party liable is mentally deficient, or weak, or unable himself to dictate, then let his guardian dictate justly.” The debtor, who incurs the liability, should dictate to the scribe all information regarding the amount of the debt and when it should be paid back. This way the rights of the debtor are protected.

“Call two witnesses, out of your own men, and if there are not two men, then a man and two women, such as you choose, for witnesses, so that if one of them errs, the other can remind her.” Two witnesses are required. The witnesses should be known for their integrity, and they should be acceptable to both parties involved in the transaction. The verse offers an alternative to having two men as witnesses. If securing two male witnesses proved to be difficult, then one man and two women can become the witnesses. The reason for accepting the testimony of two females in lieu of a single male is mentioned, “so that if one of them errs, the other can remind her.” The error referred to here may result from the lack of business experience. Having another woman allows the two women to remind each other of the conditions of the transaction.

Giving testimony is an obligation, “The witnesses should not refuse when they are called upon,” because it is a necessary tool for establishing justice and protecting the rights of people engaged in business transactions. It is God’s command to accept the duty of a witness and one should do it willingly. Witnesses should not entertain the notion that they are doing those who are involved in the transaction a favour.

“Do not disdain to put it in writing for a future period, whether it is small or big. It is more equitable in the sight of God, more suitable as evidence, and more convenient to prevent doubts among yourselves.” The verse warns against the feeling that one may sometime experience when one thinks that it is not worth it to spend all this effort and time to document a small debt. A written document which outlines the details and conditions of the debt eliminates all sources of doubts or dispute. Unless it is, “a transaction which you carry out on the spot among yourselves, there is no blame on you if you do not put in writing.” In this case, the requirement of a written document is dropped but the requirement of witnesses still stands. Some narrations indicate that in this situation having witnesses is recommended but not obligatory. However, it is most probable that having witnesses is still a requirement in this case.

Having prescribed the responsibilities of the scribes and witnesses earlier, it is now the time for prescribing their rights. Scribes and witnesses should be protected so that they can fulfill their responsibility, “and let neither a scribe nor a witness suffer harm. If you do such harm, it will be sinful conduct on your part. So be conscious of God. God teaches you. And God is well acquainted with all things.”

Another alternative for a written document is suggested when the parties are travelling and they cannot find a scribe, “If you are on a journey, and cannot find a scribe, a security deposit may serve the purpose. And if one of you deposits a thing on trust with another, Let the trustee faithfully discharge his trust, and let him be conscious of God his Lord. Conceal not evidence; for whoever conceals it, his heart is tainted with sin. And God knows all that you do.” The written document is replaced by an oral agreement supported by a collateral that the debtor has to give the creditor. The concept of God consciousness is mentioned to remind the believers that it is their duty to discharge their trusts. The debt is a trust that the debtor has to pay back and the collateral is a trust that the creditor has to give back when the debt is paid.

Giving testimony in a court of law is another important duty for the believers. Those who conceal evidence will have sinful hearts. God knows what is in your hearts. The following verse refers to the power of God as an incentive to the believers to have clean hearts. God is the owner of heavens and earth, He knows what is in the hearts of the believers, He controls the destiny of His servants, and His power is limitless. “To God belongs all that is in the heavens and on earth. Whether you show what is in your minds or conceal it, God will bring you to account for it. He forgives whom He pleases, and torments whom He pleases, for God has power over all things.” This verse comes at the end of verses which addressed rules used in the management of civil affairs of the society to emphasize the relationship between the Creator and the rules which govern the civil affairs of the society. It points to the link which connects the created with the Creator, a link that consists of a mix of fear and hope. It prepares the hearts of the believers to accept Islamic legislation and comply with it. This creates an inner incentive for people to live according to the way of life that God has decreed.

Verses: 285 to 286

285. The Messenger believed in what has been revealed to him from his Lord, as did the believers. Each one of them believes in God, His angels, His books, and His messengers, (saying) “We make no distinction between one and another of His messengers.” And they say, “We hear, and we obey, we seek Your forgiveness, our Lord, and to You is the end of all journeys.”
286. On no soul does God place a burden greater than it can bear. It gets every good that it earns, and it suffers every ill that it earns. “Our Lord, condemn us not if we forget or fall into error; our Lord, lay not on us a burden like that which You did lay on those before us; Our Lord, lay not on us a burden greater than we have strength to bear. Pardon us, and grant us forgiveness. Have mercy on us. You are our Protecting Guardian; Help us against the disbelievers.” (2:285-286)

“The Messenger believed in what has been revealed to him from his Lord, as did the believers. Each one of them believes in God, His angels, His books, and His messengers, (saying) ‘We make no distinction between one and another of His messengers.’ And they say, ‘We hear, and we obey, we seek Your forgiveness, our Lord, and to You is the end of all journeys.’” This is the image of true believers, those who understand the true meaning of the belief in God. They are honoured when God addresses them together with the Messenger in the same verse. The Messenger’s belief in God was the result of a direct revelation that filled his heart with faith. This revelation connected the pure heart of the Prophet (PBUH) with the truth through a direct link. It is a rank of faith that cannot be described. Yet, God includes the believers in this rank to honour them. The articles of faith are spelled out, they include the belief in: God, His angels, His books, and His messengers. It is a comprehensive set of articles of faith which form the basis of this religion, a religion worthy of the human race which extends from the beginning of history to the end of time. The belief in God implies the belief in the oneness and uniqueness of God the Lord of everything. Only He is worthy of our worship. He has control over all aspects of life. The belief in the angels is an aspect of the belief in the unseen. It takes the human being out of the realm of the physical to the realm of the spiritual thus allowing the human being to access dimensions of knowledge which would be otherwise inaccessible. The belief in angels who also believe in God, who ask God to forgive the believers, and who provide support to the believers when support is needed, warms the hearts of the believers and fills them with security and tranquility.

It is natural for the believers to believe in all of God's books and messengers. This implies the belief in the oneness of the message and the continuity of the messengers. God sent messengers with the same message to guide humankind to the straight path. The fundamentals of the message that each messenger brought were the same but the details were different to suit the place and time of the specific messenger. This continued until God sent Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) with the final form of the message for the whole of humankind. Thus, the message of Islam is the comprehensive message which embodies all previous messages.

Those who believe in God, His angels, His books, and His messengers submit to the will of their Lord, express obedience to His commands, and are cognizant of the fact that they will return to Him, "And they say, 'We hear, and we obey, we seek Your forgiveness, our Lord, and to You is the end of all journeys'". The impact of the belief in God, His angels, His books, and His messengers is clearly portrayed in the submission and obedience expressed by the believers. They listen to His words and obey His commands. Submission is not perfect until obedience is exercised. Faith is not complete without following the commands of God. Faith is what rests deep in one's heart and is reflected on one's deeds. The believers always feel that they have not perfected their tasks, so they ask for forgiveness for what has been inadvertently missed, "we seek Your forgiveness, our Lord and to You is the end of all journeys". The admission of the fact that all will return to God is an expression of the belief in the Day of Judgment. This is an essential component of the articles of faith. God created humankind to act as vicegerents of God on earth. The terms of the vicegerency were spelled out in the covenant between God and humankind. The covenant with God delineated the details of the way of life that humankind should lead. Life is a testing ground for the compliance with the covenant and on the Day of Judgment the results of the test will be announced. Those who did well will be rewarded, and those who failed will be punished. Thus, the belief in the Day of Judgment is a fundamental underpinning of the life of the believer on earth. It is the incentive for the believers to work hard, to follow God's commands, and to promote goodness irrespective of the enormity of the required sacrifice. The believer knows that he/she should fulfill their duties without any expectation of a reward in this life. The great reward will be awarded at the end of the journey on the Day of Judgment.

The articles of faith constitute a comprehensive set of compatible beliefs that reflect the continuity of the message that God sent, through a succession of messengers, to guide humankind from the beginning of life on earth to the last day to happiness in this life and in the Hereafter. This is a set of beliefs that recognizes human nature with its strengths and weaknesses. It recognizes the duality of the body and the soul of the human being and addresses the needs of both with equal care. A set of beliefs that does not burden people beyond their abilities, it allows the human beings to have the freedom of choice between right and wrong, and expects them to accept the consequences of their choices.

"On no soul does God place a burden greater than it can bear. It gets every good that it earns, and it suffers every ill that it earns." This outlines God's fair plan and His mercy in dealing with His servants. No servant is burdened beyond his ability whether the burden is a command to comply with or a trial that one is subjected to; and at the end, a just reward awaits the servant. God's mercy and justice provide the support necessary for the believers to accomplish their mission on earth without complaints or hesitation. Islam is a personal responsibility; each one is rewarded according to his/her deeds.

“Our Lord, condemn us not if we forget or fall into error; our Lord, lay not on us a burden like that which You did lay on those before us; Our Lord, lay not on us a burden greater than we have strength to bear. Pardon us, and grant us forgiveness. Have mercy on us. You are our Protecting Guide; Help us against the disbelievers.” This is a supplication that the believers address to their Lord that depicts their mindset. The believers are cognizant of the fact that they are weak and helpless, they are in need for God’s mercy, forgiveness, help, and support. They are cognizant of the fact that they are prone to sin and forgetfulness and they can only achieve salvation through God’s mercy and forgiveness. They admit any misdeed they commit and ask for forgiveness rather than be stubborn. They ask God to relieve them from burdens that they are not able to carry and to help them fulfill their mission. The quest for God’s mercy and forgiveness is reiterated again. This is the only guarantee for salvation. The verse ends with a declaration of their hope that God would bring them closer to Him, He is their Lord, and they raise His banner, establish His way of life, strive in His way, and seek His support.

These last verses summarize the Sura, the articles of faith, and the relationship between the believers and their Lord at all times.

Sūra 3: Al- Imran (The House of ‘Imran)

In the name of God, the Lord of Mercy, the Giver of Mercy

The Qur’an is the book, the soul, the source, the spine, the guide, the constitution and the proclamation of this faith. In the ultimate analysis, it is the reference which delineates the strategies and tactics to be used in the call to Islam.

There will always be a gap that separates us from the Qur’an if we do not realize that the Qur’an was revealed to address a real people living in a real world, to help them manage major events in their lives, and to reshape their character. A thick wall will always separate us from the Qur’an if we only treat its verses as a ritualistic tool to be recited or listened to without having any effect on the daily life of the creature we call the human being and the nation we call the Muslim nation.

The Qur’an was revealed to address a specific people living in a specific environment at a specific time. However, the real miracle of the Qur’an lies in the fact that its revelation did not only bring dramatic changes to the lives of the people who received it, but it remained also, over the years, in an interactive relationship with the Muslim nation, almost as if the process of revelation never ceased. In order that we gain the greatest benefit from the Qur’an, appreciate its vitality, and tap into its never ending resource to help us lead a better life; we have to envision the life of the early Muslim community. We have to envision how the early Muslims interacted with the rapidly changing events they met, how they interacted with their foes and friends, and how they dealt with their human desires and whims. We have to relive in our minds the experience of the first Muslim community.

This Sura presents a dramatic segment of the life of the Muslim community in Medina. This segment of life spans the period between the time of the battle of Badr, which took place in the second year after Hijra (2 H), and the battle of Uhud which took place in the third year after Hijra (3 H). During this period, the Muslim community started to settle down somewhat in Medina. The results of the miraculous victory of Muslims in the battle of Badr were starting to unfold. One of these results, was Abd-Allah bin Saloul’s acceptance of Islam. Abd-Allah was one of the major chiefs of the tribe of Al-Khazraj. He hated Islam and hated the Prophet (PBUH) but realized that it would be prudent on his part to adopt Islam even though he did not like it.

Hawwa suggests that the Sura consists of five well-defined sections. The first section is comprised of the first thirty-two verses. The second section is comprised of the following thirty-one verses. The third section is comprised of the verses sixty-four to ninety-three. The fourth section is comprised of the verses one hundred to one hundred and eighty-four. The fifth section is comprised of the last fifty-two verses.

Verses: 1 to 32

1. Alif. Lam. Mim.
2. God, there is no deity but He, the Ever Living, the Self-Subsisting.

3. It is He Who sent down to you the Book (step by step), setting forth the truth, confirming what went before it; and He sent down the Torah and the Gospel
4. Before this, as a guide to people, and He sent down the Criterion (of judgment between right and wrong). Those who rejected the revelations of God will suffer grievous torment. God is Eminent<sup>1</sup>, Avenger of evil.
5. Nothing on the earth or in the heavens is hidden from God.
6. It is He Who shapes you in the wombs as He pleases. There is no god but He, the Eminent, the Wise.
7. It is He Who has sent down to you the Book. In it are unequivocal verses, they are the foundation of the Book. Others are allegorical. But those in whose hearts is perversity follow the part thereof that is allegorical, seeking discord, and searching for its hidden meanings, but no one knows its hidden meanings except God. And those who are firmly grounded in knowledge say, "We believe in it (the Book); the whole of it is from our Lord", and only those who have understanding really heed.
8. Our Lord, let not our hearts deviate now after You have guided us, but grant us mercy from Your Own Presence; for You are the Grantor of bounties.
9. Our Lord, You will gather humankind together on a day about which there is no doubt; for God never fails in His promise.
10. On that Day neither the riches nor the progeny of those who disbelieved will avail them in the least against God. They will be fuel for fire.
11. Like Pharaoh's folk and those who were before them, they denied Our revelations and so God seized them for their sins. And God is severe in punishment.
12. Say (Muhammad) to the disbelievers, "You shall be overcome and gathered in Hell, an evil resting-place."
13. There has already been for you a sign in the two armies that met (in combat). One was fighting for God's cause, and the other made up of disbelievers, whom they saw with their own eyes as twice their number. But God does support with His aid whom He pleases. In this is a lesson for those who have eyes to see.
14. Made alluring to humankind is the love of things they covet: women and sons; heaped-up hoards of gold and silver; horses branded (for blood and excellence); and (wealth of) cattle and well-tilled land. Such are the possessions of this worldly life; but with God is the best abode to return to.
15. Say, "Shall I give you glad tidings of things far better than those? For those who remain conscious of God are Gardens, a reward from their Lord, under which rivers flow; therein is their eternal home; with pure companions; and the good pleasure of God." God is All-Seeing of (His) servants-
16. Those who say, "Our Lord, we have indeed believed, forgive us our sins, and save us from the torment of the Fire;"
17. The perseverant, the truthful, who worship devoutly, who spend (in the way of God), and who pray for forgiveness before dawn.
18. God bears witness that there is no deity but He, and (so do) the angels and those who are endowed with knowledge; maintaining His creation with justice; there is no deity but He, the Eminent, the Wise.

<sup>1</sup> The Arabic word "al-'Aziz," which has been translated here as the Eminent has a much wider meaning. There is no single English which can capture its full meaning.

19. True religion in the sight of God is the submission to His Will. Those who received the Scripture differed only after knowledge had come to them, through transgression among themselves. Whoso rejects the revelations of God, then God is swift in reckoning.
20. And if they argue with you, (Muhammad) say, "I have submitted myself entirely to God and (so have) those who follow me." And say to those who have received the Scripture as well as the unlettered people, "Have you submitted?" If they submit, then truly they are rightly guided, and if they turn away, then it is your duty only to convey the message (to them). God is All-Seeing of the servants.
21. Those who reject the revelations of God, and slay the prophets wrongfully, and slay people who enjoin equity promise them a painful torment.
22. The deeds of such people will neither bear fruit in this world nor in the Hereafter, nor will they have anyone to help.
23. Have you not considered those who have been given a portion of the Scripture? They are invited to the Book of God, to settle their disputes, but a party of them turns away and declines (the arbitration).
24. This is because they say, "The fire shall not touch us but for a few numbered days". The forgeries they made caused them to betray their own faith.
25. How will they fare when we gather them together on a Day about which there is no doubt, and each soul will be paid in full what it has earned, and they will not be wronged?
26. Say, "God, Owner of Sovereignty, You give power to whom You please, and You strip off power from whom You please. You endue with honour whom You please, and You abase whom You please. In Your hand is all good. Verily, over all things You have power.
27. You cause the night to merge into the day, and You cause the day to merge into the night; You bring the living out of the dead, and You bring the dead out of the living; and You give sustenance to whom You please, without measure."
28. Let not the believers make the disbelievers their protecting guardians in preference to the believers. Whosoever does that shall cut himself from God, unless you are guarding yourselves against them. But God cautions you to beware of Him; for the final return is to God.
29. Say, "Whether you hide what is in your hearts or reveal it, God knows it all. He knows what is in the heavens, and what is on earth. And God has power over all things."
30. On the Day when every soul will be confronted with all the good it has done and all the evil it has done. It will wish there were a great distance between it and its evil. But God cautions you to beware of Him. And God is All-Pitying towards all those who serve Him.
31. Say, "If you do love God, follow me, God will love you and forgive you your sins. God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy."
32. Say, "Obey God and His Messenger." But if they turn back, God does not love the disbelievers. (3:1-32)

"Alif Lam Mim." It was mentioned in the beginning of the previous Sura that we believe that these letters were probably used to remind us of the fact that the Book is composed using the letters of the alphabet of the language that the Arabs were familiar with at that time. The Qur'an challenged the Arabs repeatedly to use these same letters which they were familiar with to compose a book similar to the Qur'an. We choose this interpretation as a probable but not a certain explanation for the use of the letters in the beginning of some Qur'anic Suras. This interpretation seems logical since it is directly related to the theme that appears in the subsequent verses. In Sura 2, "The Cow," a challenge was posed to the disbelievers to compose a Sura similar to the Suras of the Qur'an. In the present Sura, it is stressed that the Qur'an is God's revelation similar to the previous revelations which have already been accepted by the People of the Scripture.

"God! There is no deity but He, the Ever Living, the Self-Subsisting." This is a statement of the pure belief in the Oneness of God, it is the corner stone of the Islamic creed. God has no partners, He is the Ever-Living, and He is unique in His attributes. God is the source of existence of everything. The belief in the oneness and uniqueness of God is the criterion which sets the Muslim faith apart from all other faiths. It also forms the foundation on which the Muslims' way of life is based.

"It is He Who sent down to you the Book (step by step), setting forth the truth, confirming what went before it; and He sent down the Torah and the Gospel before this, as a guide to people, and He sent down the criterion (of judgment between right and wrong). Those who rejected the revelations of God, will suffer grievous torment. God is Eminent, avenger of evil." The first part of the verse establishes certain facts that set the perspective of the faith. It also responds to those who denied Muhammad's (PBUH) message. The verse states that all revelations come only from God. He is the one who revealed this Qur'an as well as the Torah and Gospel. The verse also emphasizes the oneness of the Message which was brought by all these Books. All the revealed Books embody a single truth which brings guidance to people. This new Book sets the truth embodied in the revealed Scripture apart from the falsehood that people fabricated motivated by their political attitudes, whims, and desires.

"Nothing on the earth or in the heavens is hidden from God." God has complete knowledge of everything. This statement is congruent with the previous statements emphasizing the Oneness of God. It supports God's power of retribution mentioned in the previous verse by stressing the fact that nothing can escape God's knowledge. It is not possible to hide one's intentions or thoughts from God. The comprehensive knowledge is like a great tree that extends the comfort of its shade to one of the most intimate aspects of human life: the origin of human life. "It is He Who shapes you in the wombs as He pleases. There is no deity but He, the Eminent, the Wise." God gives you the shape and the form, with all the attributes, that He has decreed for you. It is God and only He who is able to shape and form people as He pleases.

"It is He Who has sent down to you the Book. In it are unequivocal verses, they are the foundation of the Book. Others are allegorical. But those in whose hearts is perversity follow the part thereof that is allegorical, seeking discord, and searching for its hidden meanings, but no one knows its hidden meanings except God. And those who are firmly grounded in knowledge say, 'We believe in the Book; the whole of it is from our Lord', and only those who have understanding really heed. 'Our Lord, let not our hearts deviate now after You have guided us, but grant us mercy from Your Own Presence; for You are the Grantor of bounties. Our Lord, You will gather humankind together on a Day about which there is no doubt; for God never fails in His promise.'"

This verse was revealed to refute the argument made by the Christians of Najran when they asked the Prophet (PBUH), “Don’t you say that Jesus is God’s word and spirit?” They wanted to use this description to prove that Jesus is not a human being and he is the spirit of God. So, the verse came to establish unequivocally the doctrine of the Oneness of God.

This verse establishes a basic principle. The verse states that the Qur’an includes unambiguous verses which are unequivocal in establishing the fundamentals of the faith and the law. There are also verses which deal with the unseen, like the verses dealing with the birth of Jesus for example which are allegorical in nature. Believers should believe the truthfulness of these verses and take them at their face value without delving into questioning how and why. The answers to these questions are not within the realm of knowledge of human beings. The belief in the truthfulness of these verses is a matter of faith because it is beyond the ability of human mind to comprehend the how and why of these matters.

The reactions of people when they listen to these verses divide them into two groups. The people whose hearts are perverted will ignore the clear unambiguous fundamentals of faith and will engage into vain discussions of the allegorical verses. But those who are grounded in knowledge and who appreciate the limitations of human mind will say with confidence, “We believe in the Book; the whole of it is from our Lord.” Their confidence is grounded in the belief that this is a revelation from God and it must be true. God’s words are the truth, a truth that does not need a proof. They realize that the human mind is incapable of finding a proof even if it tried very hard to find one.

Only those who have understanding will heed the meaning of these verses. They have a sound initial natural disposition which only needs a slight reminder to get them to see the truth. Their sound initial natural disposition is filled with the truth which connects them to their Creator. It makes their tongues and hearts join in asking God in humility to set them on the straight path, to prevent their hearts from deviating from the truth, and to endow them with His mercy and blessings. They remember the Day which will certainly come. The Day on which all humankind will be gathered together, no one will miss it. This is how those who are grounded in knowledge will react to God’s words. It is a reaction motivated by a strong faith that emanates from their confidence in the truthfulness of God’s word, the hope in His mercy, and the fear of His wrath. It is a strong faith that implants in the believer a continuous feeling of the consciousness of God. The believer’s heart recognizes the value of guidance after being lost, the value of clear vision after having a cloudy vision, the value of the straight path after being lost in crooked ways, and the value of freedom after suffering from servitude. This is the freedom that one gains when one serves God alone rather than serving a multitude of human masters.

The supplication to God of those with understanding reflects their realization that nothing can be attained except by the will of God. It has been narrated by ‘Ayesha (RA) that the Prophet (PBUH) used to pray God saying, “You are the God in whose hands are the conditions of people’s hearts, establish my heart firmly on Your path.” When ‘Ayesha (RA) asked the Prophet (PBUH) why he says this supplication often, he said, “No human heart but rests in the hand of God. If God wills, He can set the heart on the straight path, and if He wills, He can make it deviate from the straight path.”

“On that Day neither the riches nor the progeny of those who disbelieved will avail them in the least against God. They will be fuel for fire. Like Pharaoh's folk and those who were before them, they denied Our revelations and so God seized them for their sins. And God is severe in punishment. Say (Muhammad) to the disbelievers, ‘You shall be overcome and gathered in Hell, an evil resting-place.’ There has already been for you a sign in the two armies that met (in combat). One was fighting for God’s cause, and the other made up of disbelievers, whom they saw with their own eyes as twice their number. But God does support with His aid whom He pleases. In this is a lesson for those who have eyes to see.”

Those who disbelieved think that their wealth and progeny can provide protection for them, but on the Day of Judgment all of this will be useless. On that Day, God’s promise will be fulfilled and they will become fuel for the fire. This image takes away all human attributes from them and reduces them to a solid fuel for the fire. Even in their lifetime, wealth, progeny, and power can still be of no use to them as in the case of Pharaoh. History has often repeated the story of Pharaoh and the Qur’an narrates it in great details. It exemplifies one of the principles decreed by God as part of the set of rules that govern life on this earth. Those who disbelieved and denied the revelations of God will meet a fate similar to Pharaoh’s fate in this life as well as in the Hereafter. The verse asked the Prophet (PBUH) to warn and remind the idolaters of Mecca with what happened in the battle of Badr. The story of Pharaoh may have been long forgotten but the battle of Badr was still fresh in their minds. There are two probable interpretations for the expression, “they saw with their own eyes as twice their number.” One interpretation could be that the disbelievers saw the Muslim army as if it were twice as big as it actually was. They were scared to battle such a large army. Another interpretation could be that the Muslims thought that the idolater’s army is twice as big as their own army, while in reality the idolater’s army was threefold the Muslim army. Either way, the Muslims persevered and won. The victory was only possible by the grace of God. This principle will always be valid. The believers have to understand this truth. They should trust in God’s promise, do their best to prepare for the battle, and persevere when the time comes. They should not despair if victory is delayed. God only knows what is best for them.

“Made alluring to humankind is the love of things they covet: women and sons; heaped-up hoards of gold and silver; horses branded (for blood and excellence); and (wealth of) cattle and well-tilled land. Such are the possessions of this worldly life; but with God is the best abode to return to. Say, ‘Shall I give you glad tidings of things far better than those? In store for those who remain conscious of God are Gardens, a reward from their Lord, under which rivers flow; therein is their eternal home; with pure companions; and the good pleasure of God.’ God is All-Seeing (His) servants- those who say, ‘Our Lord, we have indeed believed, forgive us our sins, and save us from the agony of the Fire;’ the perseverant, the truthful, who worship devoutly, who spend (in the way of God), and who pray for forgiveness before dawn.”

The passive tense used in the sentence suggests that covetousness is embedded in humankind’s initial natural disposition. This is a natural attribute of the human psyche; there is no need to deny or suppress it. These natural feelings are essential in the development of human mental welfare. However, this natural instinct is balanced by another instinct which is embedded in the initial natural disposition of the human being. It is a disposition which provides the human being with the ability to control his/her desires. It is a disposition towards the spiritual that connects the human being with God and makes him/her aspire to the Hereafter and God's reward. These two initial natural dispositions should always be kept in balance to keep the human being on safe grounds. The balance of these two dispositions protects the human being from being overwhelmed by the material aspects of life, allows him/her to entertain lofty aspirations towards God, and enhances the feeling of God consciousness in his/her heart.

Coveting women and sons has been always a strong human desire; add to this the love of hoarding money. Human beings are not only interested in money which satisfies their needs but they are fond of owning heaps of wealth. Hoarding is in itself one of the weaknesses of human beings. Horses are beautiful animals, people love to own, ride, or even just watch them. Animals and fertile farmland are examples of the love of ownership.

These are examples of the worldly desires of human beings, but what is their real worth? They are the, "possessions of this worldly life," they will not last forever. Those who aspire to the everlasting reward, an aspiration that elevates the human being from the level of material desires to the level of heavenly spirituality, should seek it with God, "Shall I give you glad tidings of things far better than those? In store for those who remain conscious of God are Gardens, a reward from their Lord, under which rivers flow; therein is their eternal home; with pure companions; and the good pleasure of God." This everlasting reward which the Prophet (PBUH) was commanded to promise the believers was in fact a material reward. However, there is a basic difference between the material things in this worldly life and the material things in the Hereafter. In addition, there is the invaluable reward, "the good pleasure of God." This is a pleasure that outweigh all the pleasures of this life and the Hereafter combined. "God is All-Seeing of (His) servants," God sees and knows what is in the hearts of His servants. He knows their feelings, their thoughts, and their desires and He knows what is best for them.

The characters of those servants are then outlined, "those who say, 'Our Lord, we have indeed believed, forgive us our sins, and save us from the agony of the Fire;' the perseverant, the truthful, who worship devoutly, who spend (in the way of God), and who pray for forgiveness before dawn." Their supplication reflects the depth of their consciousness of God. It is a proclamation of faith in God. They use it to seek God's forgiveness and salvation. These characters delineate the high moral ground that should be assumed by all Muslims.

They are perseverant. They do not cower when inflicted by pain. They persevere in performing their difficult undertakings. They submit to God's will and they are content with God's decrees.

They are truthful. They take pride in upholding what is right. They refrain from lying, because lying is a symptom of a deficient character motivated by the fear of loss or the extreme desire of gain.

They worship devoutly. They fulfill their duty to God. They dignify their souls by being devout to God alone.

They spend. They free themselves from the shackles of stinginess. They raise the value of human brotherhood above the personal desire of hoarding. They fulfill their share in the social collective duty towards the human community to make it a community befitting humans.

They pray for forgiveness before dawn. This is an image of highly spiritual beings in a highly spiritual environment. Before dawn, life is calm, the spirit is alert, and the thoughts are heavenly. The spirit of the human joins the spirit of the universe in a prayer to God, the Creator of both the human and the universe.

“God bears witness that there is no deity but He, and (so do) the angels and those who are endowed with knowledge; maintaining His creation with justice; there is no deity but He, the Eminent, the Wise.” The belief in the Oneness of God is the corner stone of faith from an Islamic perspective. He is the only God and it is He who maintains His creation with justice. The verse states unequivocally this truth in the form of a testimony from God which is sufficient for any believer. However, it may be said that only those who believe in God would be happy to accept such a testimony as a proof of the Oneness of God. But the fact is that the People of the Scripture believed in God, however, they claimed that He has a son. The idolaters did believe in God, but they associated partners with Him.

The narrative indicates that the statement of the Oneness of God has far reaching consequences and deeper dimensions of understanding. God accepts nothing of His servants except absolute submission. Not only they have to believe and feel that there is only one God, but they also have to act accordingly. They have to follow the divine plan which is detailed in the rules and laws given in His Book. Those who claim that they believe in God but accept rules and laws which contravene the divine plan are, in actuality, associating partners with God.

The testimony of the angels and those who are endowed with knowledge is exemplified in their complete compliance with God’s commands and their absolute submission to His will. The statement reflects their belief in the truth of the Oneness of God, their obedience, and their submission to God alone.

The testimony that God is One leads to the testimony that He maintains His creation with justice. This is a reference to the second verse in the Sura, “There is no deity but He, the Ever Living, the Self-Subsisting.” Maintaining His creation with justice is a component of His Self-Subsistence. Justice in life will not be achieved until the way of life that God has chosen for people is established. This way of life has been delineated in His Book.

“There is no deity but He, the Eminent, the Wise.” Power and wisdom are necessary attributes for maintaining the creation and the establishment of justice. These are attributes of positive effectiveness. They motivate the believer to put his trust in God and accept His will. They transform faith from being an abstract concept into a dynamic propelling force.

“True religion in the sight of God is the submission to His Will. Those who received the Scripture differed only after knowledge came to them, through transgression among themselves. Whoso rejects the revelations of God, then God is swift in reckoning. And if they argue with you, (Muhammad) say, ‘I have submitted myself entirely to God and (so have) those who follow me.’ And say to those who have received the Scripture as well as the unlettered people, ‘Have you submitted?’ If they submit, then truly they are rightly guided, and if they turn away, then it is your duty only to convey the message (to them). God is All-Seeing of the servants.”

It is One God and one faith that bring people together under the banner of submission to God. But submission to God is not a slogan to be raised nor is it words to be uttered. It is not an abstract concept that resides in the heart, nor mere rituals to be performed. Submission is complete obedience to God. It is the use of God's revelation as the source for rules that govern the lives of people.

“Those who received the Scripture differed only after knowledge came to them, through transgression among themselves.” Their dispute was not caused by ignorance, because the proof for the Oneness of God was given clearly in the revelations they received. Their difference in opinion was caused by their transgression. Disputing the Oneness of God is a rejection of the belief in God. Those who commit this transgression are warned, “Whoso rejects the revelations of God, then God is swift in reckoning.”

God then told His Prophet (PBUH) how to settle this argument, “And if they argue with you, (Muhammad) say, ‘I have submitted myself entirely to God and (so have) those who follow me.’ And say to those who have received the Scripture as well as the unlettered people, ‘Have you submitted?’ If they submit, then truly they are rightly guided, and if they turn away, then it is your duty only to convey the message (to them). God is All-Seeing of the servants.”

This is the challenge that God asked His Prophet (PBUH) to pose to those who argue about the concept of the Oneness of God: call people to submit to God alone. The meaning of submission was given above. If they submit, then they are guided. But if they do not accept the challenge then it is your duty only to deliver the message.

“Those who reject the revelations of God, and slay the prophets wrongfully, and slay those of humankind who enjoin equity promise them a painful torment. The deeds of such people will neither bear fruit in this world nor in the Hereafter, nor will they have anyone to help.”

This is the fate of those who reject the revelations of God. Their deeds will be frustrated in this life and in the Hereafter. They did not only reject the revelations of God but they also murdered the prophets and those who tried to establish justice.

“Have you not considered those who have been given a portion of the Scripture? They are invited to the Book of God, to settle their dispute, but a party of them turns away and declines (The arbitration).” It is amazing how some of the People of Scripture (not all of them) turn away from referring to the rules in God's Book regarding matters of belief and daily life. This is similar to the situation of Muslims who say that they are Muslims but refrain from applying God's law in their lives.

“This is because they say, ‘The fire shall not touch us but for a few numbered days’. The forgeries they made caused them to betray their own faith.” This is the reason behind their refusal to apply the rule of God's Book. They do not truly believe in a Day of Judgment nor do they truly believe in the divine justice. The fear of God and shying away from displeasing Him cannot settle in one heart side by side to the refusal to apply God's law; the law that has been delineated in His Book. Unfortunately, there are those who claim that they are Muslims but refuse to apply the rules of God's Book in their lives. They claim that there is no place for these rules in the daily lives of people. They claim that religion should not interfere with the social and economic practices of people.

“How will they fare when we gather them together on a Day about which there is no doubt, and each soul will be paid in full what it has earned, and they will not be wronged?” This is a real warning posed in the form of a question left unanswered so that people would reflect on it.

“Say, ‘God, Owner of Sovereignty, You give power to whom You please, and You strip off power from whom You please. You endue with honour whom You please, and You abase whom You please. In Your hand is all good. Verily, over all things You have power. You cause the night to merge into the day, and You cause the day to merge into the night; You bring the living out of the dead, and You bring the dead out of the living; and You give sustenance to whom You please, without measure.’” This is a humble invocation which reiterates a fundamental fact, God is One. He is the sole owner of everything, He has no partner. He bestows on whomsoever He pleases whatever He pleases. Wealth bestowed on people does not become their own. It is a trust that has been entrusted to them so that they manage it according to the rules that pleases God. God can take it back whenever He pleases. He endows with honour whomsoever He pleases and He abases whosoever He pleases. No one has the power to dispute God’s decrees. He maintains everything in the universe with justice and in His hand is all the good.

The image of merging the day into the night and the night into the day is a moving image. The verse could be understood to refer to the change in the lengths of the day and the night from one season to another. It could also be a reference to the gradual change from the light of day to the darkness of night which takes place every day. Either way, the image alerts the heart of the believer to God’s management of the universe. This is a gentle touch which returns the human heart to the great truth, the truth of the Oneness of God, the truth of the Oneness of the maintainer of the universe, the truth of the Oneness of the doer, and the truth of the Oneness of the planner. He is the sole owner and He is the sole giver. He is God the Self-Subsisting, the Sovereign, the One who bestows honor, the One who humbles, the Supreme Life-Giver, the Supreme Death-Bringer, the Grantor, and the Preventer. He manages all the affairs of the universe and people with justice and goodness.

“Let not the believers make the disbelievers their protecting guardians in preference to the believers. Whosoever does that shall cut himself from God, unless you are guarding yourselves against them. But God cautions you to beware of Him; for the final return is to God. Say, ‘Whether you hide what is in your hearts or reveal it, God knows it all. He knows what is in the heavens, and what is on earth. And God has power over all things.’ On the day when every soul will be confronted with all the good it has done and all the evil it has done. It will wish there were a great distance between it and its evil. But God cautions you to beware of Him. And God is All-Pitying towards all those who serve Him. Say, ‘If you do love God, follow me, God will love you and forgive you your sins. God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.’ Say, ‘Obey God and His Messenger’. But if they turn back, God does not love the disbelievers.”

Islam does not command nor allow Muslims to treat others who do not fight Muslims unkindly. An alliance is a different form of relationship. The word alliance in the verse refers to a bond based on love and loyalty. Members of an alliance subscribe to the same values and principles. It is difficult that such a bond would exist between Muslims and others who do not subscribe to Islamic values.

To love God means to follow in the footsteps of the Prophet (PBUH) and to lead a life according to his example. The belief in God is not words to be enunciated, feelings that fill the heart, nor rituals to be performed. The belief in God is obedience to God and His messenger, an obedience that is reflected on the deeds of the believer.

Ibn Katheer says, "This verse establishes a criterion which tests the truthfulness of those who claim that they love God. If they truly love God then they have to follow Muhammad's (PBUH) way in words and deeds." The Prophet (PBUH) has been quoted to have said, "Whoever does something that contravenes our principles, he is not one of us."

Ibn Katheer also said, "These verses suggest that disobeying God and the Messenger is synonymous to the disbelief in God; God does not love the disbelievers even though they may claim that they love God,"

Verses: 33 to 64

33. God did choose Adam and Noah, the family of Abraham, and the family of 'Imran above all people,
34. Offspring, one of the other. And God is All-Hearing, Omniscient.
35. When the wife of 'Imran said, "My Lord, I do dedicate what is in my womb entirely for Your special service. So accept this of me. You are the All-Hearing, the Omniscient."
36. When she was delivered, she said, "My Lord, I am delivered of a female child" - and God knew best what she brought forth - "And the male is not like the female. I have named her Mary, and I commend her and her offspring to Your protection from Satan, the rejected."
37. Her Lord graciously accepted her. He made her grow in purity and beauty under the care of Zachary. Whenever Zachary went into the sanctuary where she was, he found her supplied with sustenance. He said, "Mary, whence comes this to you?" She said, "From God. God provides sustenance to whom He pleases without measure."
38. Then did Zachary pray to his Lord, saying, "My Lord, grant me from Your grace a progeny that is pure. You are Hearer of prayer."
39. The angels called to him while he was standing in prayer in the sanctuary, "God gives you the glad tidings of John, confirming a Word from God. He will be noble, chaste, and a prophet from among the righteous."
40. He said, "My Lord, how shall I have a son when old age has overtaken me, and my wife is barren?" He (the angel) said, "So it will be. God does whatever He wills."
41. He said, "My Lord, give me a sign." He (the angel) said, "Your sign is that you shall not speak to anyone for three days except with signals. Then remember your Lord often, and glorify Him in the evening and in the morning."
42. And when the angels said, "Mary, God has chosen you, purified you, and chosen you above the women of the world."
43. Mary, worship your Lord devoutly. Prostrate yourself, and bow down with those who bow down in prayer."

44. This is part of the tidings of the things unseen, which We reveal to you (Muhammad). You were not with them when they cast lots with their pens, as to which of them should be charged with the care of Mary, nor were you with them when they disputed (the point).
45. The angels said, "Mary, God gives you glad tidings of a Word from Him. His name will be the Messiah Jesus, son of Mary, held in honour in this world and the Hereafter and one of those drawn near to God.
46. He shall speak to the people in his cradle and in maturity. And he shall be of the righteous."
47. She said, "My Lord, how shall I give birth to a child when no man has touched me?" He said, "So it will be, God creates what He wills. If He decrees a thing, He only says, 'Be' and it is.
48. And God will teach him the Book and the Wisdom; the Torah, and the Gospel.
49. And will make him a messenger to the Children of Israel, (who will say), 'I have come to you, with a sign from your Lord, in that I make for you out of clay, as it were, the figure of a bird, and breathe into it, and it becomes a bird by God's leave. And I heal him the blind, and the leper, and I raise the dead, by God's leave; and I tell you what you eat, and what you store in your houses. Surely therein is a sign for you if you are believers.
50. And I have come to confirm that which was before me of the Torah, and to make lawful to you some of what was forbidden to you; I have come to you with a sign from your Lord. So be conscious of God, and obey me.
51. It is God Who is my Lord and your Lord; then worship Him. This is the straight path."
52. But when Jesus became conscious of their disbelief, he said, "Who will be my helpers in the cause of God?" The disciples said, "We will be God's helpers. We believe in God, and bear you witness that we have submitted to Him.
53. Our Lord, we believe in that which You have revealed and we follow the messenger. Enrol us among those who bear witness (to the truth)."
54. And (the disbelievers) schemed, and God too schemed, and God is the Best of the Schemers.
55. When God said, "Jesus, I will cause you to die and I will raise you to Me, and I am cleansing you of those who disbelieve and I am setting those who follow you above those who disbelieve until the Day of Resurrection. Then unto Me you will (all) return, and I shall judge among you as to that wherein you used to differ.
56. As for those who rejected faith, I will torment them with terrible torment in this world and in the Hereafter, and they will not have anyone to help them.
57. But as for those who believe and do good deeds, God will pay them (in full) their reward; but God does not love the wrongdoers."
58. This is what We recite to you of the revelations and the Message of Wisdom.
59. The similitude of Jesus in the sight of God is as that of Adam; He created him from dust, then said to him, "Be," and he was.
60. This is the truth coming from your Lord, so be not of those who doubt.
61. If any one disputes in this matter with you after (full) knowledge has come to you, say, "Come, let us gather together - our sons and your sons, our women and your women, ourselves and yourselves - then let us humbly pray, and invoke the curse of God on those who lie."
62. This is verily the true account. There is no deity except God; and God is indeed the Eminent, the Wise.

63. But if they turn away, God has full knowledge of those who are mischief-makers.
64. Say, "People of the Scripture, come to an agreement between us and you. That we worship none but God; that we associate no partners with him; and that none of us shall take others for lords beside God." If then they turn away, say you, "Bear witness that we are the ones who submitted to God. (3: 33-64)

This group of verses starts with a mention of those whom God has chosen from among His servants to carry the responsibility of bringing His guidance to people. This is a continuous chain of messengers that were chosen to deliver God's message. It is the single message that was revealed to humankind over the years since the beginning of time, "God did choose Adam and Noah, the family of Abraham, and the family of 'Imran above all people, offspring, one of the other. And God is All-Hearing, Omniscient." The word "offspring" does not necessarily mean that there is a blood relationship between the messengers however, they all are the offspring of Adam and Noah (PBUT). The verse mentions two people, Adam and Noah (PBUT) and two families, the families of Abraham and 'Imran. This indicates that Adam and Noah were chosen by God as individuals, while in the case of Abraham and 'Imran (PBUT), not only they were chosen as individuals, but their offspring were also chosen as well. The meaning of "offspring" has been explained in Surat Al-Baqarah (Chapter 2), to indicate that prophet-hood is not bestowed according to rules of hereditary succession on the basis of blood relationships but it is bestowed on the basis of the legacy of faith.

The verses then continue to narrate the story of the birth of Mary, "When the wife of 'Imran said, 'My Lord, I do dedicate what is in my womb entirely for Your special service. So accept this of me. You are the All-Hearing, the Omniscient.'" But the baby came out to be a female, "When she was delivered, she said, 'My Lord, I am delivered of a female child'- and God knew best what she brought forth – 'And the male is not like the female. I have named her Mary, and I commend her and her offspring to Your protection from Satan, the rejected.'"

The story of the vow that the wife of 'Imran, the mother of Mary, made reveals a heart full of faith. She vowed to commit the most precious thing she had, her child yet still in her womb, to the service of God. The voluntary dedication of her child to the service of God is an act laden with emotion. It suggests that absolute freedom can only be attained by those who dedicate themselves fully to God. This is the essence of the belief in the Oneness of God. The belief in the Oneness of God and the application of His law frees human beings from any kind of slavery to others. The humble invocation made by the wife of 'Imran reflected her absolute submission to God. However, she was hoping for a son because the tradition at that time was that only males are accepted to serve in the temple. The verses express Mary's mother's apology and her appeal to God to accept her offering asking Him in simple and humble words, the words of a person who feels the closeness to God, to protect her gift and her progeny from the cursed one. God responded to her sincerity and accepted her gift, "Her Lord graciously accepted her. He made her grow in purity and beauty under the care of Zachary. Whenever Zachary went into the sanctuary where she was, he found her supplied with sustenance. He said, 'Mary, whence comes this to you?' She said, 'From God. God provides sustenance to whom He pleases without measure.'"

This was God's reward for the sincerity that filled the heart of the mother. God entrusted Mary to the care of Zachary (PBUH), a descendent of the Prophet Aaron (PBUH) and the chief of the temple. She grew up in a pure environment and was supplied by provisions from God. There is no need to discuss the details of the provisions; we will simply say that she was given provisions that made Zachary (PBUH) wonder. He asked her about this, her response was the response of a humble believer who does not boast or brag about the blessings bestowed on her. She simply said it is, "From God. God provides sustenance to whom He pleases without measure." This was a harbinger for the miracles of the births of John and Jesus (PBUT).

Zachary (PBUH) did not have progeny but he was yearning for a child of his own. Seeing what was happening to Mary, the hope in the mercy of God grew in his heart, "Then did Zachary pray to his Lord, saying, 'My Lord, grant me from Your grace a progeny that is pure. You are Hearer of prayer.'" Zachary's (PBUH) humble invocation was accepted by God. Zachary (PBUH), the old man, and his barren wife were promised a child. The prayer that emanated from a pure heart and was directed to God who is able to grant what He pleases whenever He pleases has been accepted. The glad tidings of a son who was named before he was even born were carried by the angels, "The angels called to him while he was standing in prayer in the sanctuary, 'God gives you the glad tidings of John, confirming a Word from God. He will be noble, chaste, and a prophet from among the righteous.' He said, 'My Lord, how shall I have a son when old age has overtaken me, and my wife is barren?' He (the angel) said, 'So it will be, God does whatever He wills.'"

Zachary (PBUH) was taken by surprise, to have a son born to an old man and a barren woman is a miracle. But God does what He wills. Zachary (PBUH) wanted a sign to reassure his heart, "He said, 'My Lord, give me a sign', He (the angel) said 'Your sign is that you shall not speak to anyone for three days except with signals. Then remember your Lord often, and glorify Him in the evening and in the morning.'" God gave him a sign which illustrated how miracles take place. He was told that he will not be able to speak to people for a period of three days, but at the same time, he will be able to use his tongue to celebrate the praise of God.

"And when the angels said, 'Mary, God has chosen you, purified you, and chosen you above the women of the world. Mary, worship your Lord devoutly. Prostrate yourself, and bow down with those who bow down in prayer.'" God chose her to receive this direct blessing from Him, exactly as the father of humanity was chosen to receive God's blessing. It is a great blessing. But, she did not realize the real impact of this news. The verses point to the purity of Mary. This has great significance in view of the doubts that were cast about the birth of Jesus. This also illustrates the beauty of this religion and reveals its source. At the time, Muhammad (PBUH) was facing great difficulties in dealing with the People of the Scripture, but in spite of that, here he is talking about the purity of Mary and her unique status among the women of the world. This is the same Mary that the Christians believe in and use as an excuse for not believing in Muhammad (PBUH). It is the truth that Muhammad (PBUH) received from his Lord. Had this religion not come from God, Muhammad (PBUH) would not have said it.

"This is part of the tidings of the things unseen, which We reveal to you (Muhammad). You were not with them when they cast lots with their pens, as to which of them should be charged with the care of Mary, nor were you with them when they disputed (the point).” The verse points to what happened when Mary’s mother brought her to the temple in fulfillment of her vow to God. The rabbis were competing with each other to get the honour of taking care of Mary. This story was neither narrated in the old nor in the new testaments, but it must have been known to the rabbis at that time. The Qur’an does not give many details about this incident, but we know that the care of Mary was entrusted to Zachary (PBUH). This story was not known to the Prophet (PBUH) either. It may have been one of the secrets of the temple and it was used by the Qur’an to challenge the People of the Scripture. The story in the Qur’an was never challenged by the People of the Scripture which attests to its veracity.

Now we come to the account of the birth of Jesus (PBUH), a miracle for human beings but a normal thing for the Divine will. The angels brought the glad tidings to Mary of a word from God; his name is Jesus the son of Mary. The verse refers to him as Jesus, the son of Mary. Thus, not only his name was given but also his lineage. “The angels said, ‘Mary, God gives you glad tidings of a Word from Him. His name will be the Messiah Jesus, son of Mary, held in honour in this world and the Hereafter and one of those drawn near to God. He shall speak to the people in his cradle and in maturity. And he shall be of the righteous.’” The verses also described his relationship to God. He will be, “held in honour in this world and the Hereafter and one of those drawn near to God.” The verses refer to another miracle that he was endowed with: he will be able to speak to people as a young baby in the cradle, and in maturity. He will be one of the righteous.

Mary the virgin, was puzzled as anyone in her place would be, she called upon her Lord, “My Lord, how shall I give birth to a child when no man has touched me?” The answer came to remind her of the simple fact that human beings often forget, “So it will be; God creates what He wills. If He decrees a thing, He only says, ‘Be’ and it is.” This reminder is enough to resolve the puzzle, clear the confusion, and secure the heart. One would ask after that; how could I miss this simple fact? The verses continue to talk about Jesus (PBUH), “And God will teach him the Scripture and the Wisdom; the Torah, and the Gospel.” The Scripture could be construed as writings, or as the actual books, the Torah and the Gospel. Wisdom is a state of mind which grants people insight and allows them to make the right decisions. It is a great blessing. The Torah was Jesus’ (PBUH) Scripture as well as the Gospel. It was the foundation of the religion that Jesus (PBUH) believed in.

“And will make him a messenger to the Children of Israel, (saying) ‘I have come to you, with a sign from your Lord, in that I make for you out of clay, as it were, the figure of a bird, and breathe into it, and it becomes a bird by God’s leave. And I heal him the blind, and the leper, and I raise the dead, by God’s leave; and I declare to you what you eat, and what you store in your houses. Surely therein is a sign for you if you are believers.’” The verse shows that Jesus’ (PBUH) message was directed to the Children of Israel. He was one of their prophets. The verse also refers to the miracles that Jesus (PBUH) performed in front of the Children of Israel, “I make for you out of clay, as it were, the figure of a bird, and breathe into it, and it becomes a bird by God’s leave. And I heal him the blind, and the leper, and I raise the dead, by God’s leave; and I declare to you what you eat, and what you store in your houses.” Jesus (PBUH) insisted, each time he performed these miracles, that he is able to perform these miracles only by the leave of God. These powers that were given to Prophet Jesus (PBUH) complement the miracle of his birth and show that God is able to make anyone of His servants perform such miracles.

“And I have come to confirm that which was before me of the Torah, and to make lawful to you some of what was forbidden to you; I have come to you with a Sign from your Lord. So be conscious of God, and obey me. It is God Who is my Lord and your Lord; then worship Him. This is the straight path.” These verses which summarize Jesus’ (PBUH) call to the Children of Israel reveal the original features of Christianity. Jesus’ (PBUH) message came to confirm the law revealed in the Torah with some modification. The modifications included the removal of some restrictions given in the Torah, thus rendering lawful some of the things that were originally prohibited. He also clarified the fundamental truth on which the religion of God was established: all the miracles which he performed were made possible by the grace of God. Jesus (PBUH) is a human being; he has no supernatural power which enables him to perform miracles out of his own accord. His message to them is to be conscious of God and obey Him and His Messenger. God is the only deity to be worshiped. To be on the straight path is to believe in the Oneness of God, to worship Him, to obey His Messenger, and to follow the Message which the Messenger brought.

“But when Jesus became conscious of their disbelief, he cried, ‘Who will be my helpers in the cause of God?’ The disciples said, ‘We will be God's helpers. We believe in God, and bear you witness that we have submitted to Him. Our Lord, we believe in that which You have revealed and we follow the messenger. Enrol us among those who bear witness (to the truth).’”

We can see the sudden change in the narrative. The details of the birth of Jesus and the description of the encounter between Mary and her people after Jesus was delivered are omitted. These details are mentioned in another Sura, Surat Mary (Chapter 19). The narrative moves to speak about the discussion between Jesus (PBUH) and his disciples when he realized the lack of support for his mission from the Children of Israel. He called upon those who believed in him to join him, “Who will be my helpers?” Each messenger or leader should have supporters to support his cause. Jesus’ (PBUH) disciples responded saying, “We will be God's helpers. We believe in God, and bear you witness that we have submitted to Him.” They asked Jesus (PBUH) to bear witness that they have submitted to God and they will help establish God’s way on earth. They also made a pledge to God. This pledge embodies their consent on a covenant between them and God. The task of the messenger is to deliver the message. Once the believer received the message and believed in it then he/she has to pledge allegiance to God. This is a pledge to follow the way of life that came in the message.

“And (the disbelievers) schemed, and God too schemed, and God is the Best of the Schemers. When God said, ‘Jesus, I will cause you to die and I will raise you to Me, and I am cleansing you of those who disbelieve and I am setting those who follow you above those who disbelieve until the Day of Resurrection. Then unto Me you will (all) return, and I shall judge between you as to that wherein you used to differ. As for those who disbelieve, I will torment them with terrible torment in this world and in the Hereafter, and they will not have anyone to help them. But as for those who believe and do good deeds, God will pay them (in full) their reward; but God does not love the wrongdoers.’” Those who did not believe in Jesus (PBUH) schemed. They accused his mother of adultery and accused him of lying and sorcery. They complained to the Roman ruler accusing Jesus (PBUH) of being an agitator. The Roman ruler delivered Jesus (PBUH) to them to try him and punish him according to their law. They wanted Jesus (PBUH) to be crucified, but God wanted to take him back to Him, raise him, and honour him. How did God take him back and how did God raise him? These are matters of the unseen; we better not delve into them.

“This is what We recite to you of the revelations and the Message of Wisdom.” These stories and the lessons that one can learn from them are a revelation from God. The tone of the verse is endearing to the Prophet (PBUH). When God narrates stories to His Prophet (PBUH) it indicates certain closeness between the two. Then the miraculous birth of Jesus (PBUH) is explained, “The similitude of Jesus in the sight of God is as that of Adam; He created him from dust, and then said to him, ‘Be,’ and he was.” How can the creation of Jesus be more difficult than the creation of Adam?

“This is the truth coming from your Lord, so be not of those who doubt.” The Prophet (PBUH) never doubted the words of God, but the statement is meant to strengthen the Prophet’s (PBUH) argument when he deals with the doubters. If they continue in their arguments, then call them to a challenge, “If any one disputes in this matter with you, now after (full) knowledge has come to you, say, ‘Come, let us gather together - our sons and your sons, our women and your women, ourselves and yourselves - then let us humbly pray, and invoke the curse of God on those who lie.’” The Prophet (PBUH) posed that challenge to those who were arguing about the truth of the Qur’an, but they declined.

“This is verily the true account. There is no deity except God; and God is indeed the Eminent, the Wise.” When they declined the challenge they admitted the truth of the Qur’an. The Qur’an describes those who turned away as, “mischief-makers.” Those who do not believe in the Oneness of God are committing great mischief. The belief in the Oneness of God frees human beings from all sorts of slavery. It establishes a way of life that is based on God’s law. The values and morals of this way of life are dictated by God’s message.

“Say, ‘People of the Scripture, come to an agreement between us and you. That we worship none but God; that we associate no partners with him; that none of us shall take others for lords beside God.’ If then they turn away, say you, ‘Bear witness that we are the ones who submitted to God.’” This is a fair invitation. It aims at putting all people on an equal footing in front of God. No people are better than other people and no human being is obliged to worship another. All people have one God. But if they turn away, then say to them, “we are the ones who submitted to God.”

Verses: 65 to 92

65. People of the Scripture, why do you dispute about Abraham, when the Torah and the Gospel were not revealed until after him? Do you have no sense?
66. Here you are arguing about matters of which you had some knowledge, but why do you argue about matters of which you have no knowledge? It is God Who knows, and you do not know.
67. Abraham was neither a Jew nor a Christian; but he was an upright man who had submitted to God, and he was never an idolater.
68. Indeed, the people who have the best claim to Abraham are those who followed him, this Prophet, and the believers; and God is the Protecting Guardian of the believers.
69. A party of the People of the Scripture long to make you go astray; and they make none to go astray except themselves, but they realize it not.
70. People of the Scripture, why do you reject God's revelations, when you (yourselves) bear witness (to their truth)?
71. People of the Scripture, why do you mask the truth with falsehood and knowingly conceal the truth?
72. A party of the People of the Scripture say, "Believe in that which has been revealed to those who believe at the opening of the day, and then reject it at the end of the day, in order that they may return.
73. And believe no one unless he follows your religion. Say, 'True guidance is the Guidance of God.' Lest anyone is given the like of that which was given to you or that they may argue with you in the presence of your Lord". Say (Muhammad), "The bounty is in God's hand. He bestows it on whom He wills". God is Vast, Omniscient.
74. He chooses for His mercy whom He wills. God's Bounty is Great.
75. Among the People of the Scripture there is he who, if you trust him with a treasure, will return it to you. And among them there is he who, if you trust him with a piece of gold, will not return it to you unless you keep standing over him. That is because they say, "We are under no obligation towards the gentiles." They tell a lie against God knowingly.
76. Nay, whoever fulfills his promise and is conscious of God, then surely God loves those who are conscious of Him.
77. Those who purchase a small gain at the cost of God's covenant and their oaths, they have no share in the Hereafter. God will neither speak to them nor look upon them on the Day of Resurrection, nor will He purify them. Theirs will be a painful torment.
78. There is among them a party, who distorts the Scripture with their tongues, so that you may think it is a part of the Scripture, but it is not part of the Scripture; and they say, "It is from God," but it is not from God. They tell a lie against God knowingly.
79. It is not possible that any human being, to whom God has given the Scripture and the Wisdom and the prophet-hood, would say to people, "Worship me rather than worship God." On the contrary he would say, "Be faithful servants of God, for you have taught the Scripture and you have studied it earnestly."
80. Nor would he instruct you to take the angels and the prophets for lords. Would he command you to disbelieve after you have submitted to God?
81. God took the covenant of the prophets, saying, "I give you the Scripture and the Wisdom; then when a messenger comes to you, confirming that which you have; you shall believe in him and you shall help him." God said, "Do you agree, and take my Covenant as binding on you?" They said, "We agree." He said, "Then bear witness, and I am with you among the witnesses."

82. Then whosoever turns away after this, these are the transgressors.
83. Do they seek other than the religion of God? All creatures in the heavens and on earth have, willingly or unwillingly, submitted to Him. To Him they shall be returned.
84. Say, "We believe in God, and in what has been revealed to us and what was revealed to Abraham, Ishmael, Isaac, Jacob, and the Tribes, and in what has been given to Moses, Jesus, and the Prophets, from their Lord. We make no distinction between one and another among them, and we have submitted to God."
85. And whoso seeks as religion other than the complete submission to God, it will not be accepted from him, and he will be a loser in the Hereafter.
86. How shall God guide a people who rejected faith after they have accepted it and bore witness that the Messenger was true and that clear signs had come to them? God does not guide the wrongdoers.
87. The recompense for such people is a curse from God, from the angels, and from all people.
88. They will abide therein. The torment which they will be subjected to will not be lightened; neither will they be reprieved;
89. Except for those who repent afterward and make amends; for verily God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.
90. But those who rejected faith after they have accepted it, and then increased in their rejection of faith, their repentance will never be accepted. And such are those who have gone astray.
91. As to those who reject faith, and die while rejecting faith, never would be accepted from any such as much gold as the earth contains, if it were offered as a ransom; for such is a grievous torment and they will find no helpers.
92. By no means shall you attain righteousness unless you spend of that which you love; and whatever you spend God knows it well. (3:65-92)

"People of the Scripture, why do you dispute about Abraham, when the Torah and the Gospel were not revealed until after him? Do you have no sense? Here you are arguing about matters of which you had some knowledge, but why do you argue about matters of which you have no knowledge? It is God Who knows, and you do not know. Abraham was neither a Jew nor a Christian; but he was an upright man who had submitted to God, and he was never an idolater. Those of humankind who have the best claim to Abraham are those who followed him, this Prophet, and those who believe; and God is the Protecting Guardian of the believers."

It is narrated that these verses were revealed to address a situation that arose during a discussion between the Christians of Najran and some Jewish scholars who were at a meeting with the Prophet (PBUH). The two groups argued together: The Jewish scholars said Abraham (PBUH) was a Jew, and the Christians said Abraham (PBUH) was a Christian. Whether this is true or not, it seems that the verses came to address claims made by the Christians and Jews about Prophet Abraham (PBUH). Each group claimed that they are the only carrier of Abraham's (PBUH) legacy. These verses refuted these claims. How can Abraham (PBUH) be a Jew or a Christian when the Torah and the Gospel were revealed long after he passed away? The verses state unequivocally that Abraham (PBUH) was, “an upright man who had submitted to God, and he was never an idolater.” This statement puts forward three points. First, the distortions that crept into Judaism and Christianity brought them into the circle of associating partners with God. This is something that Abraham (PBUH) would not have accepted. Second, Islam (absolute submission to God) and associating partners with God can never be congruent, since they contradict each other. Third, the idolaters of Mecca cannot claim that they are followers of Abraham (PBUH), as they used to claim, because Abraham (PBUH) was never an idolater.

“Those of humankind who have the best claim to Abraham are those who followed him, this Prophet, and the believers; and God is the Protecting Guardian of the believers.” Only those who accepted Prophet Abraham’s (PBUH) call when he was alive, Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) - who followed in the footsteps of Prophet Abraham (PBUH) in submitting himself to God – and those who submitted themselves to God with Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) can claim that they carry the legacy of Prophet Abraham (PBUH).

The verses then warn the believers of the trickery of a party of the People of the Scripture, “A party of the People of the Scripture long to make you go astray; and they make none to go astray except themselves, but they realize it not.” This trickery is motivated by a desire in their hearts that makes them long to leading you astray, but they only lead themselves astray without even being aware of it.

The warning to the believers is followed by a rebuke to the group of the People of the Scripture who were involved in this deception, “People of the Scripture, why do you reject God’s revelations, when you (yourselves) bear witness (to their truth)? People of the Scripture, why do you mask the truth with falsehood and knowingly conceal the truth?” The verses address the group of the People of the Scripture who were involved in these acts of deception in spite of the fact that they recognized the truth in Prophet Muhammad’s (PBUH) call. There were signs and harbingers in their Scripture which paved the way to the appearance of Prophet Muhammad (PBUH). However, they chose not to believe in him, not because of lack of evidence supporting his prophet-hood but because of their stubbornness. However, the Qur’an continued to address them as People of the Scripture even after they had transgressed and distorted the Scripture.

“A party of the People of the Scripture say, ‘Believe in that which has been revealed to those who believe at the opening of the day, and then reject it at the end of the day, in order that they may return.’” This was a clever way to create confusion in the hearts of those Muslims who were not sure of their faith. This trick aimed at planting the seeds of doubt in the hearts of some Muslims who would think that those who left Islam did so because they discovered its fallacy. For this plan to succeed, it had to be kept in confidence, so they commanded complete secrecy, “And believe no one unless he follows your religion.”

God’s response to this trickery was to command His Prophet (PBUH) to say, “True guidance is the Guidance of God” There is no other way except God’s way to receive guidance.

The verses continue to elaborate on the efforts of some of the People of Scripture to lead the Muslims astray and the motivations behind these efforts. They were motivated by envy and fear that the Muslims would take away from them their place with God as if God does not know who deserves to be recognized by Him, “Lest anyone is given the like of that which was given to you or that they may argue with you in the presence of your Lord”. So, the Prophet (PBUH) was commanded to set the record straight, “Say (Muhammad), ‘The bounty is in God's hand. He bestows it on whom He wills.’ God is Vast, Omniscient. He chooses for His mercy whom He wills. God’s Bounty is Great.”

The Qur’an was fair to the People of the Scripture even if they were unfair to Muslims. It recognized that some were honest in their dealings and some were not. Hence, it praised those who were honest, “Among the People of the Scripture there is he who, if you trust him with a treasure, will return it to you.” But it deprecated those who were dishonest in their dealings, “And among them there is he who, if you trust him with a piece of gold, will not return it to you unless you keep standing over him. That is because they say, ‘We are under no obligation towards the gentiles.’ They tell a lie against God knowingly.”

Not only they were dishonest, but they also made the claim that it is their religion that commanded them to behave in such a despicable way. They were telling a lie, because God did not command them to use a double standard in dealing with people. The Qur’an states the golden standard with which all dealings are measured, “Nay, whoever fulfills his promise and is conscious of God, then surely God loves those who are conscious of Him. Those who purchase a small gain at the cost of God's covenant and their oaths, they have no share in the Hereafter. God will neither speak to them nor look upon them on the Day of Resurrection, nor will He purify them. Theirs will be a painful torment.” It is a single standard that should be followed. The Qur’an promised those who apply this standard, out of being conscious of God and seeking to please Him, to be loved and honoured by God. Those who chose not to use this standard, and bartered the covenant of God for a miserable price – it is a miserable price even if they gained the whole world - they have no share in the Hereafter, God will not look at them nor will He purify them. They will suffer a painful doom. One notices here that the principle of the fulfillment of promises is closely related to the concept of God consciousness. Therefore, one cannot use a double standard in dealing with people because ultimately the dealing is with God whether the person on the other side of the deal is a friend or foe.

“There is among them a party who distorts the Scripture with their tongues, so that you may think it is a part of the Scripture, but it is not part of the Scripture; and they say, ‘It is from God’, but it is not from God. They tell a lie against God knowingly.” This is the problem when clergy or religious scholars become corrupt. We know how they twist the verses to provide statements which may contradict the essence of the religion. We can see this happening from people who belong to various faiths. They speak in the name of religion while they are acting against the religion. They twist the verses and extrapolate it wrongly to please their masters or to attain a worldly gain. They claim that, “It is from God, but it is not from God. They tell a lie against God knowingly.” This problem is not unique to the People of the Scripture but it applies to corrupt scholars and clergy in any religion. It is mentioned here to warn Muslims of the dangers of corrupt religious leaders.

“It is not possible that any human being, to whom God has given the Scripture and the Wisdom and the prophet-hood, would say to people, ‘Be my servants rather than God’s’. On the contrary he would say, ‘Be faithful servants of God, for you have taught the Scripture and you have studied it earnestly.’ Nor would he instruct you to take the angels and the prophets for lords. Would he command you to disbelief after you have submitted to God?” Any prophet knows that he is a servant of God. God alone is the Lord who deserves to be worshiped. It is impossible for any prophet to claim that he is a god. A prophet would only say to the people that they should submit only to God; they should worship Him alone; and they should follow His commands. This is what they have been told in God’s Scripture which they are familiar with. Similarly, a prophet will never ask people to take the angels or the prophets for lords, because this means he would be commanding them to reject faith in God. A prophet’s task is to guide people to God’s path not to lead them astray. The verses at hand describe also the transgressions committed by some present day self-proclaimed Muslim scholars. They conveniently select verses from the Qur’an and twist them to serve the purpose of their human gods.

“God took the covenant of the prophets, saying, ‘I give you the Scripture and the Wisdom; then when a messenger comes to you, confirming that which you have; you shall believe in him and you shall help him.’ God said, ‘Do you agree, and take my Covenant as binding on you?’ They said, ‘We agree.’ He said, ‘Then bear witness, and I am with you among the witnesses.’ Then whosoever turns away after this, these are the transgressors. Do they seek other than the religion of God? All creatures in the heavens and on earth have, willingly or unwillingly, submitted to Him. To Him they shall be returned.” God has taken a sacred covenant from all messengers, He gathered all messengers to witness the ratification of the covenant, and He, Himself was a witness. The covenant commanded each messenger to follow what the subsequent messengers will bring, even though each one of them was given a Scripture and Wisdom from God. Each messenger should support subsequent messengers. The verse wraps up time and brings all messengers together in one scene to ratify the covenant. They were asked by God if they agree to take God’s Covenant as binding to all of them. They all agreed. The verse paints a majestic scene, a procession of honoured messengers submitting to the divine guidance and announcing the unity of the message and the brotherhood of the messengers. The messengers are a group of chosen people. Each messenger came to complete the work that has been done by his predecessor. They neither had ego nor personal ambitions to hinder the completion of the mission. The religion of God is free of any shadow of chauvinism caused by ethnicity or nationalism. In the light of this, one may conclude that the People of the Scripture broke the covenant of God when they refused to believe in the revelations that Muhammad (PBUH) brought.

Those who do not follow the Prophet (PBUH) are transgressors. God revealed one message that was delivered through a succession of messengers. All of them delivered the same single message. The message commanded complete submission to God. Submission is achieved through following God’s law and the way of life that He has decreed for His servants.

The Prophet (PBUH) was commanded to proclaim to the whole world that the Muslim nation recognizes God’s covenant which has been ratified by all the prophets. The Prophet (PBUH) was commanded to say, “We believe in God, and in what has been revealed to us and what was revealed to Abraham, Ishmael, Isaac, Jacob, and the Tribes, and in what has been given to Moses, Jesus, and the prophets, from their Lord. We make no distinction between one and another among them, and we have submitted to God.”

It should be noted that the list of the beliefs mentioned in the verse is crowned by the statement of submission. Submission to God means absolute obedience to God’s commands, law, and rules. It is clear from the previous verse, “Do they seek other than the religion of God? All creatures in the heavens and on earth have, willingly or unwillingly, submitted to Him. To Him they shall be returned,” that submission of the celestial creatures means that they follow God’s law. The Qur’an reiterates the meaning of the word Islam (submission) over and over again to emphasize that it is not only a word to be uttered nor a belief to settle in the heart, but it is also a practical application of God’s law in our daily life.

Finally, the ultimate conclusion is made, “And whoso seeks as religion other than the complete submission to God, it will not be accepted from him, and he will be a loser in the Hereafter.” After this detailed discourse, there is no chance whatsoever for any doubt regarding the meaning of the word “Islam,” (submission). It is not sufficient to proclaim that “there is no deity except God,” but we have to follow that with applying the true meaning of the statement of the Oneness of God, the maintainer of the universe. It is not sufficient to proclaim that Muhammad (PBUH) is the messenger of God, but we have to follow that by following the way of life and the law that Muhammad (PBUH) brought to us. Islam is not only a belief that rests deep in our hearts, but also deeds and actions that reflect this belief. Rituals are not an end in themselves but they are a vehicle which keeps us close to God.

“How shall God guide a people who rejected faith after they have accepted it and bore witness that the Messenger was true and that clear signs had come to them? God does not guide the wrongdoers. The recompense for such people is a curse from God, from the angels, and from all people. They will abide therein. The torment which they will be subjected to will not be lightened; neither will they be reprieved.” This is a frightening warning that fills any believing heart with anxiety. The warning highlights the seriousness of the matter. However, the chance for forgiveness is still available, all it takes is a knock on the door for repentance, “Except for those who repent afterward and make amends; for verily God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.”

“By no means shall you attain righteousness unless you spend of that which you love; and whatever you spend God knows it well.” The early Muslims realized the implication of this verse and they sought righteousness by spending out of that which was dearest to them.

It has been narrated by Imam Ahmed, on the authority of Abi Ishaq bin Abdullah bin Abi Talha who heard Anas bin Malek (RA) says, “Abu Talha was one of the richest people in Medina. He had a well facing the Messenger’s Mosque. Abu Talha was fond of the well because it had fresh water and the water tasted good. The Prophet (PBUH) used to drink out of this well. When this verse was revealed, Abu Talha came to the Prophet (PBUH) and said, ‘God says you will not attain righteousness unless you spend out of that which you love and I am fond of this well, so I would like to donate it to the Muslims. I will put it under your control and you do whatever God commands you to do.' The Prophet (PBUH) admired this deed and said to him, 'This is a profitable bargain. I see that you should give it to your kinsfolk.' Abu Talha said, 'I will do that.' And he gave the ownership of the well to his cousins."

Verses: 93 to 120

93. All food was lawful to the Children of Israel, except that which Israel made unlawful for himself, before the Torah was revealed. Say, "Bring you the Torah and read it, if you are truthful."
94. Then whosoever shall invent a lie and attributes it to God, these are indeed the wrongdoers.
95. Say, "God speaks the truth. So follow the religion of Abraham, the upright. He was not of the idolaters."
96. The first House (of worship) appointed for humankind was that at Bakka, a blessed place, and (source of) guidance for all humankind.
97. In it are clear signs, the place where Abraham once stood; whoever enters it attains security. Pilgrimage to the House is a duty to God for those who can afford it. But if any disbelieves, God does not stand in need of any of His creatures.
98. Say, "People of the Scripture, why do you reject the revelations of God, when God is Himself a witness to all what you do?"
99. Say, "People of the Scripture, why you obstruct those who believe, from the path of God, seeking to make it crooked, while you were yourselves witnesses (to God's Covenant)? But God is not unaware of what you do."
100. You who believe, if you obey a party of the people who were given the Scripture, they would (indeed) turn you back as disbelievers after you have believed.
101. And how would you disbelieve while God's revelations are being recited to you and His messenger is in your midst? Whoever holds firmly to God will be guided to a straight path.
102. You who believe, be conscious of God with all the consciousness that is due to Him, and do not die except in a state of submission to God.
103. And hold fast, all together, to the rope of God, and do not be divided among yourselves; and remember with gratitude God's Blessings on you; for you were enemies and He joined your hearts in love, so that by His Blessing, you became brethren; and you were on the brink of the pit of fire, and He saved you from it. Thus, does God make His revelations clear to you, so you may be guided.
104. And from among you there should be a party who invite to what is good, enjoin what is right and forbid what is wrong, and these are the successful.
105. Be not like those who are divided amongst themselves and fall into disputations after receiving clear revelations. For such is a dreadful torment.
106. On the Day when some faces will be brightened, and some faces will be darkened, it will be said to those whose faces are darkened, "Did you reject faith after accepting it? Then taste the torment for rejecting faith."
107. But those whose faces will be brightened, they will be in God's mercy, therein to dwell (for ever).

108. These are God's revelations. We recite them to you with the truth. And God wills no injustice to any of His creatures.
109. To God belongs all that is in the heavens and on earth. To Him all things will return.
110. You are the best community that has been raised up for humankind. You enjoin what is right, forbid what is wrong, and believe in God. If only the People of the Scripture had believed, it would have been best for them. Among them are some who believe, but most of them are transgressors.
111. They will do you no harm, barring a trifling annoyance. If they come out to fight you, they will turn their backs to you and flee, and no help shall they get.
112. Overshadowed by ignominy wherever they are found save if they clutch a rope from God and a rope from people. They have incurred anger from God, and wretchedness is laid upon them. That is because they used to reject the revelations of God, and slew the prophets wrongfully. That is because they were rebellious and used to transgress.
113. Not all of them are alike. Of the People of the Scripture there is a party that stands upright. They recite the revelations of God all night long, and they prostrate themselves in adoration.
114. They believe in God and the Last Day; they enjoin what is right, and forbid what is wrong; and they vie one another in doing good deeds. These are in the ranks of the righteous.
115. And whatever good they do, it will not be rejected. God is aware of those who are conscious of Him.
116. Those who disbelieve, neither their possessions nor their progeny will help them against God. They will be the companions of the fire, dwelling therein (for ever).
117. The likeness of that which they spend in this worldly life is as a biting, icy wind which smites the harvest of a people who have wronged themselves and destroys it. God wronged them not, but they wronged themselves.
118. You who believe, do not take as your intimate friends people who are not your kind. They will spare no pains to ruin you and they love to see you in distress. Hatred has already appeared in the utterance from their mouths, and what their hearts conceal is far worse. We have made plain to you the revelations, if you will understand.
119. Here you are, you love them but they do not love you, though you believe in the whole of the Book. When they meet you, they say, "We believe." But when they are alone, they bite their fingertips at you in their rage. Say, "Perish in your rage; God knows well all the secrets of the hearts."
120. If good befalls you, it grieves them; but if some misfortune overtakes you, they rejoice at it. But if you persevere and do right, their cunning will not do you the least harm. God encompasses all what they do. (3:93-120)

"All food was lawful to the Children of Israel, except that which Israel made unlawful for himself, before the Torah was revealed. Say, 'Bring you the Torah and read it, if you are truthful.'" Some Jews criticized the Qur'an because it made lawful some food which they were forbidden to eat, in spite of the fact that the Qur'an states that it came to confirm the Torah. It was narrated that the food they referred to was camel meat and milk. The verse came to remind them of a historical fact: it is Prophet Jacob (PBUH) who made this food unlawful before the Torah was revealed. Prophet Jacob (PBUH) was also called Israel. It is narrated that he suffered a severe illness. His favourite food was camel's meat and milk; he vowed to give up his favourite food voluntarily upon his recovery. God accepted his vow and healed him. The Children of Israel followed their father in keeping this vow, hence the prohibition. God made unlawful other types of food to the Children of Israel as punishment for their transgression. These foods are mentioned in Surat Al-Ana'am (Chapter 6). The present verse stated the basic Qur'anic rule regarding prohibited food. Food, in general, is made lawful by God except that which has been explicitly declared prohibited for a specific reason. The reasons behind the earlier prohibitions did not apply to Muslims. Thus, these types of food were made lawful to Muslims. The challenge was made, "Bring you the Torah and read it, if you are truthful." Those who invent lies about God are not only lying, but they are also committing an injustice against themselves and the people. The punishment for those who commit injustice is known, so it is sufficient to identify the crime and the culprit for the people to recognize the kind of punishment which they should expect.

"Say, 'God speaks the truth. So follow the religion of Abraham, the upright. He was not of the idolaters.' The first House (of worship) appointed for humankind was that at Bakka, a blessed place, and (source of) guidance for all humankind. In it are clear signs, the place where Abraham once stood; whoever enters it attains security. Pilgrimage to the House is a duty to God for those who can afford it. But if any disbelieves, God does not stand in need of any of His creatures." The statement, "God speaks the truth" may refer to the previous discussion made in regard to the realignment of Qibla from Jerusalem to Mecca. The Sacred Mosque in Mecca was built by Abraham and Ishmael (PBUT) to be a Qibla for people and a place of safety and security. It is a Qibla for the believers, hence the command to follow Abraham's (PBUH) religion. It is a religion free of idolatry. This House was dedicated to those who prostrate themselves in worship to God. The sign indicating the place where Abraham (PBUH) once stood may be a reference to an old stone that was found attached to the K'aba. It is thought that Prophet Abraham (PBUH) used to stand upon this stone while building the K'aba. It was separated from the K'aba at the time of 'Umar (RA) to clear the path for people to circle around the K'aba.

God decreed that this House is a place of safety and security for whomsoever enters it. This decree was respected even at the time when the Arabs abandoned Abraham's (PBUH) religion and became idolaters. It is narrated that very often a murderer would seek asylum in the House. He would stay safe from any retribution as long as he remains inside the House, even if the murdered person's family knows his whereabouts. The Prophet (PBUH) has been quoted to have said on the day of Mecca's conquest, "This city has been made sacred on the day God created the heavens and earth. It is going to be sacred till the Day of Resurrection. Fighting has been made unlawful until today, when I was allowed to fight but only for an hour. Fighting, hunting, and destruction of plants are prohibited in this city till the Day of Resurrection."

The verses state that Pilgrimage has been prescribed as a ritual for those who can afford it. God is not in need of those who turn away from guidance. It is interesting to note that the command to perform Pilgrimage has been addressed to "the people." The command was not issued to the Muslims alone, it is, thus, a command to all people.

Pilgrimage is a duty to be performed once in a lifetime, for those who can afford it. Affordability means financial ability and health capability, in addition to the safety of the road. Several scholars argued about the date on which Pilgrimage was made obligatory. Some say it was made obligatory during the 9th year of Hijra based on the fact the Prophet (PBUH) performed Pilgrimage on the 10th year of Hijra. Another view holds that Pilgrimage was made obligatory after the battle of Uhud, but the Prophet (PBUH) was not able to perform it right away for one reason or another. Either way, this verse is quite clear in making Pilgrimage an obligatory religious duty for those who can afford it.

“Say, ‘People of the Scripture, why do you reject the revelations of God, when God is Himself witness to all you do?’” This verse denounces the People of the Scripture who rejected the Qur’an. The verse describes those who reject the Qur’an as disbelievers. This denouncement is followed with a harsh warning, “God is Himself witness to all you do.” An even harsher rebuke is expressed in the subsequent verse, “Say, ‘People of the Scripture, why do you obstruct those who believe, from the path of God, seeking to make it crooked, while you were yourselves witnesses (to God’s Covenant)? But God is not unaware of what you do.’” The straight path leads to God; all other paths are crooked because they do not lead to God. Corruption prevails when the way to God is obstructed and people are prevented from pursuing this path.

“You who believe, if you listen to a party of the people who were given the Scripture, they would (indeed) turn you back as disbelievers after you have believed. And how would you disbelieve while God’s revelations are being recited to you and His messenger is in your midst? Whoever holds firmly to God will be guided to a straight path.” The Muslim nation was not only commanded to lead a way of life based on God’s commands, but also to illustrate the viability of such a way of life for the whole humanity. The Muslim nation was commanded to be the model that shows all human beings that it is possible to lead a way of life which translates the revelation into practical actions, feelings, morals, and dealings. The Muslim nation would not be able to fulfill its undertaking unless it follows God’s commands.

The verse stated that it is certainly a capital sin for a believer to reject faith during these favourable conditions. This statement is valid today as it was valid then, because even if the Prophet (PBUH) is no longer alive; we still have the Qur’an which addresses us today as it used to address the Muslims at the time of the Prophet (PBUH). The salvation lies in holding tight to God’s path.

The Prophet (PBUH) used to be very strict with his companions when it came to matters of faith. However, he used to be flexible with his companions in matters of daily life. He used to listen to their opinions, heed their advice, and benefit from their experience.

The Qur’an then addressed the believers stating two fundamental principles that the Muslim nation should adhere to if it desires to fulfill its responsibility. The first is to remain always conscious of God and the second is to maintain a strong sense of brotherhood among the believers. The role of the Muslims nation as a nation which commands what is good and forbids what is evil will not be fulfilled without a strong faith in God which makes it remain always conscious of Him at all times and a strong feeling of brotherhood among the believers which strengthens the structure of the society.

Let us elaborate on these two fundamental principles. The first principle is to remain, “conscious of God with all the consciousness that is due to Him, and do not die except in a state of submission to God.” God consciousness keeps the heart of the believer on the alert at all times. The pursuit of God consciousness is an endless endeavour for the heart of the believer. No one is certain when he/she will die. Death can overtake the human being at any time. It is part of the unseen no one knows when its time will come. If someone wants to die in a state of submission, then one has always to remain conscious of God.

The second principle is the principle of the brotherhood in faith, “And hold fast, all together, to the rope of God, and do not be divided among yourselves; and remember with gratitude God's Blessings on you; for you were enemies and He joined your hearts in love, so that by His Blessing, you became brethren; and you were on the brink of the pit of fire, and He saved you from it. Thus does God make His revelations clear to you, so you may be guided.” It is a brotherhood that is rooted in Islam and God consciousness. The way to establish this brotherhood, is to hold fast to the rope of God. Its philosophy is to fulfill the covenant of God and to follow His commands. It is a favour that God bestows on whom He loves from among His servants. The Muslims are reminded that before God bestowed His favour on them, they were fighting each other in Medina. Only through Islam, the two tribes of Aws and Khazraj were able to forget their enmity and become brethren under the banner of Islam. The verse used the expression, “joined your hearts,” rather than saying “joined you,” because the hearts are the home for feelings such as love and hate. The verse paints a picture of a group of hearts gathered closely together around God’s covenant. They were about to fall in the pit of fire and suddenly the hearts remembered God’s covenant and held tight to God’s rope which saved them from falling into the abyss.

Having mentioned the two basic principles which shape the community of the believers, the verses continued to state the role that the Muslim nation was entrusted with, “And from among you there should be a party who invite to what is good, enjoin what is right, and forbid what is wrong, and these are the successful.” It is absolutely necessary to have a group of people who invite people to what is good, enjoin what is right, and forbid what is evil. It may be possible for anyone to play the role of inviting to what is good, but it is the responsibility of the government to command what is right and forbid what is wrong.

The narrative continued to warn the Muslim community of falling into the pitfall of disputes that divide the community as has happened to communities before them, “Be not like those who became divided amongst themselves and fell into disputations after receiving clear revelations. For such is a dreadful torment. On the Day when some faces will be brightened, and some faces will be darkened, it will be said to those whose faces are darkened, 'Did you reject faith after accepting it? Then taste the torment for rejecting faith.' But those whose faces will be brightened, they will be in God's mercy, therein to dwell (for ever).” This is a lively image that describes different kinds of human beings, some with bright faces and some with darkened faces. Those with darkened faces are rebuked for choosing to reject faith after they had recognized the truth. These verses visualize the consequences of disputations and divisions among the members of the community, and alert the Muslim community to the perils of disputes that lead to divisions. The narrative is ended by a statement supporting the truth of the message, highlighting the seriousness of the reckoning on the Day of Judgment, stressing the absolute fairness with which people will be judged, and emphasizing the sovereignty of the Creator, “These are God’s revelations. We recite them to you with the truth. And God wills no injustice to any of His creatures. To God belongs all that is in the heavens and on earth. To Him all things will return.”

“You are the best community that has been raised up for humankind. You enjoin what is right, forbid what is wrong, and believe in God.” The passive tense used here points to the subtle power of God that fashioned this nation and pushed it forward to assume its responsibility. The words underscore the specific role that the nation was entrusted with. This is what the Muslim nation should realize: this nation has been created to lead humanity on the way of goodness. It is incumbent on this nation, in order to fulfill its role, to be always a source of inspiration. The nation should be a role model for humanity. The tools for achieving such a status include true beliefs, sound perspective, excellent organization, good characters, and knowledge. The role of leadership cannot be assumed by force; it has to be earned by hard work. The Muslim nation has to earn its status as a leader on the basis of its qualifications and characteristics. It is a great responsibility and major undertaking. The first prerequisite for leadership is to have the strength to be able to promote goodness and protect against evil in the world. Strong and true faith is necessary for the nation to fulfill its role. Through true faith the correct moral standards can be established on the basis of the correct understanding of the relationship between God and the human being, and the correct understanding of the role of the human being on earth.

Strong faith is required to provide the necessary support for those who promote goodness and enable them to overcome the difficulties that will face them. Strong faith is the only source for genuine support; it will be still there when all other forms of support are exhausted.

Previous verses called upon the Muslim community to delegate a group from among themselves to carry the responsibility of promoting goodness, enjoining what is right, and forbidding what is evil. The present verse describes the nation as a whole as a nation which promotes goodness, enjoins what is right, and forbids what is evil. These are the necessary conditions for the existence of a Muslim nation. There are many places in the Qur’an where this fact is stated. There are also Prophetic traditions which emphasize this.

On the authority of Ibn Sa’eed Al-Khodry (RA), he said, “I heard the Prophet (PBUH) say, ‘Whoever saw an evil being committed, he should raise his hand against it, if he could not stop it by hand, he should speak against, and if he is unable to speak against it, he should at least condemn it in his heart.’” On the authority of Jaber bin ‘Abdullah (RA) that the Prophet (PBUH) said, “The greatest Jihad is to speak the truth in the court of a tyrant.”

“If only the People of the Scripture had believed, it would have been best for them. Among them are some who believe, but most of them are transgressors.” This is a verse which encourages the People of the Scripture to accept the faith of Islam. Their belief will benefit them both in this life and in the Hereafter. Belief will unite them in a single nation in this life and will guarantee their salvation in the Hereafter. The verse provides a fair description: some are believers but many are transgressors. Examples of People of the Scripture who accepted Islam include: ‘Abdullah bin Sallam (RA), Asad bin ‘Obaid (RA), Tha’labah bin Sho’bah (RA), and K’ab bin Malek (RA).

“They will do you no harm, barring a trifling annoyance. If they come out to fight you, they will turn their backs to you and flee, and no help shall they get.” The verse indicates that no serious harm will be inflicted on the Muslims by their enemy, whatever harm that they will suffer will not affect their existence as a community nor it will ever amount to displacing them from their land. Muslims were promised victory over their enemy if the enemy chooses to engage them in a fight. The disbelievers will not only lose the battle but they will also be humiliated. They will only be saved by the protection offered to them by the believers and God, if they choose to take advantage of this protection, “Overshadowed by ignominy wherever they are found save if they clutch a rope from God and a rope from people. They have incurred anger from God, and wretchedness is laid upon them.” History tells that the events foretold by these verses materialized at later times. The Muslims were able to gain victory over those who waged wars against them from the People of the Scripture. Those who fought Muslims incurred the anger of God because they “used to reject the revelations of God, and slew the prophets wrongfully. That is because they were rebellious and used to transgress.”

But this does not apply to all of the People of the Scripture, “Not all of them are alike. Of the People of the Scripture there is a party that stands upright. They recite the revelations of God all night long, and they prostrate themselves in adoration.” There are among them believers who are true to God, “They believe in God and the Last Day; they enjoin what is right, and forbid what is wrong; and they vie one another in doing good deeds. They are in the ranks of the righteous.” The verse depicts a bright picture for the believers among the People of the Scripture. Their faith is true, complete, and comprehensive. They joined their Muslim brethren and carried out their responsibility the best they can. They became part of the best nation raised for people and they enjoined what is good and forbade what is evil. They competed with one another in doing good deeds. They deserved a divine testimony that they were righteous and they were promised a great reward, “And whatever good they do, it will not be rejected. God is Aware of those who are conscious of Him.” God is fully aware of those who remain conscious of Him. This is a bright image that is held in front of those who look forward to earn a similar testimony, to show them the way for such an achievement.

But there is also the other side of the coin, “Those who disbelieve, neither their possessions nor their progeny will help them against God. They will be the companions of the fire, dwelling therein (for ever).” This is the image of those who reject faith. Nothing they earned in this life will be of benefit to them. Neither their wealth, nor their offspring will be of any help to them on the Day of Judgment. Not even the money they spent in good causes will be of benefit, because they lacked the intention of spending it in the way of God, “The likeness of that which they spend in this worldly life is as a biting, icy wind which smites the harvest of a people who have wronged themselves and destroys it. God wronged them not, but they wronged themselves.” Here we are in front of an image of a field ripe with plants that are waiting to be harvested and suddenly the field is hit by a storm of icy wind destroying all the plants. In one moment, in a sudden move, the harvest that they were looking for is lost. Similarly, those who reject faith will find out that they lost the work of a lifetime in one moment. God did not wrong them. It was their fault that they followed a crooked path that deviated from the straight path.

“You who believe, take not as your intimate friends people who are not your kind. They will spare no pains to ruin you and they love to see you in distress. Hatred has already appeared in the utterance from their mouths, and what their hearts conceal is far worse. We have made plain to you the revelations, if you will understand.” This is a fully expressive image that describes the intense hatred that filled the hearts of the enemy and exposed their feelings towards the Muslims. This is a classical image of the hypocrites, whose outward expressions show love and affection while their hearts are bent on hatred and malice. They returned the love and affection of the Muslims with malice and plots to plant discord among the ranks of the Muslims, “Here you are, you love them, but they love you not, though you believe in the whole of the Book. When they meet you, they say, ‘We believe.’ But when they are alone, they bite their fingertips at you in their rage. Say, ‘Perish in your rage; God knows well all the secrets of the heart.’ If good befalls you, it grieves them; but if some misfortune overtakes you, they rejoice at it.” The antidote of their venom is given by the Qur’an, “But if you persevere and do right, not the least harm will their cunning do to you. God encompasses all what they do.”

These verses describe a group of people in Medina who were bent on hating and hurting the Muslims. The verses warn the believers of the danger of trusting this group. The Muslims should then be careful in choosing their intimate friends. Those who harbour bad feelings towards the believers are not their kind and should not be entrusted with their friendship. However, it is important to emphasize Islam’s tolerance in dealing with the other, even when the other is a foe. Muslims are commanded not to reciprocate the feelings of hatred. Muslims are commanded to treat all people nicely and kindly. Muslims’ behaviour should reflect Islam’s policy of promoting good will towards all people. That does not mean that Muslims should not be prudent in dealing with their enemy. They should protect their community and their faith against the danger of those who hate them, even if this means that Muslims should bear arms against the aggressors.

Verses: 121 to 179

121. Remember that morning, when you left your household to post the faithful at their stations for battle. And God is All-Hearing, Omniscient.
122. Remember when two of your parties almost lost courage, and God was their Protecting Friend. In God let the believers put their trust.
123. God had helped you at Badr when you were a contemptible little force. Be conscious of God in order that you may show your gratitude.
124. Remember when you said to the believers, “Is it not enough for you that God should support you with three thousand angels sent down?”
125. Well, if you persevere and remain conscious of God, even if the enemy should attack you suddenly, your Lord would help you with five thousand angels having marks (of distinction).
126. God made it a message of hope for you, and an assurance to your hearts. Victory comes only from God, the Eminent, the Wise.
127. That He might cut off a group of the disbelievers or expose them to infamy, and they should then be turned back, frustrated of their purpose.
128. It is no concern of you (Muhammad) whether He relents toward them or torments them; for they are wrongdoers.
129. To God belongs all that is in the heavens and on earth. He forgives whom He wills and torments whom He wills; indeed, God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.

130. You who believe, do not devour usury, doubled and multiplied; but remain conscious of God; that you may be successful.
131. And guard yourselves against the fire which has been prepared for the disbelievers.
132. And obey God and the Messenger; so that you may obtain mercy.
133. And vie one with another for forgiveness from your Lord, and for a paradise as wide as are the heavens and the earth, prepared for those who are conscious of God.
134. Those who spend (freely), whether in prosperity, or in adversity, who restrain their anger and pardon people. God loves those who do good deeds.
135. And those who, having committed an immoral act, or wronged themselves, remember God, and ask for forgiveness for their sins - and who can forgive sins except God? - and they never persist knowingly in doing whatever wrong they may have done.
136. The reward of such will be forgiveness from their Lord, and Gardens underneath which rivers flow, wherein they will abide forever, an excellent reward for the workers (of righteousness).
137. Many ways of life have passed away before you. Travel in the land, and see what the end of those who rejected the truth was.
138. This is a declaration for humankind, guidance, and an admonition to those who are conscious of God.
139. So do not lose heart, nor grieve. You will have the upper hand if you are indeed believers.
140. If a wound has touched you, a similar wound has certainly touched the others. These are (only) the vicissitudes which We cause to follow one another for humankind, so that God may know those who believe and may take witnesses from among you; and God does not love the wrongdoers.
141. God's object is to purge those who are true believers and to destroy the disbelievers.
142. Did you think that you would enter paradise without God knowing those of you who fought hard (In His cause) and those who remained perseverant?
143. You did indeed wish for death before you met it. Now you have seen it with your own eyes.
144. Muhammad is no more than a messenger, many messengers (like him) passed away before him. If he died or were slain, will you then turn back on your heels? If any did turn back on his heels, not the least harm will he do to God; but God will reward those who are grateful.
145. No soul can ever die except by God's leave at an appointed term. Whosoever desires a reward in this life, We shall give it to him; and whosoever desires a reward in the Hereafter, We shall give it to him. And We shall reward those who are grateful.
146. How many of the prophets fought (in God's way), and with them (fought) large bands of godly men? But they never lost heart when they met with a disaster in God's way, nor did they weaken (in will) nor give in. And God loves those who are perseverant.
147. All that they said was, "Our Lord, forgive us our sins and the excesses which we have committed in our affairs, establish our feet firmly, and help us against the disbelievers."
148. So God gave them a reward in this world, and the excellent reward of the Hereafter, for God loves those who do good deeds.

149. You who believe, if you obey those who disbelieve, they will make you turn back on your heels, and you will become losers.
150. But God is your Protecting Guide, and He is the Best of Helpers.
151. Soon shall We cast terror into the hearts of those who disbelieve, because they associated partners with God, for which He had not send authority. Their refuge will be the fire, and evil is the abode of the wrongdoers.
152. God did indeed fulfill His promise to you when you, with His permission, were about to annihilate your enemy, until you faltered, disputed the command, and disobeyed after He had shown you what you covet. Among you are some who hanker after the gains of this world and some who desire the Hereafter. Then did He divert you from your foes in order to test you but He pardoned you. God is Gracious to the believers.
153. When you climbed (the hill) and paid no heed to anyone, while the messenger, in your rear, was calling you (to fight). Therefore, He rewarded you grief for grief to teach you not to grieve for that which you missed or for that which befell you. God is Totally-Aware of what you do.
154. Then, after grief, He sent down a sense of security on a band of you – who were overcome with slumber - while another band was anxious about themselves. They thought wrongly about God, the thought of ignorance. They say, “Do we have a say in this?” Say to them, “Indeed, everything to do with this affair is in God’s hand”. They hide in their hearts what they dare not reveal to you. They say (to themselves), “If we had any say about this affair, we would not have been killed here.” Say, “Even if you had remained in your homes, those for whom death was decreed would certainly have gone forth to the place of their death.” All this has been in order that God might test what is in your breasts and purge what is in your hearts. God knows well the secrets of your hearts.
155. Those of you who turned back on the day the two hosts met, it is Satan who caused them to fail, because of some of that which they have earned. Now God has pardoned them. God is All-Forgiving, Forbearing.
156. You who believe, do not be like those who disbelieved and said to their brothers, when they traveled in the land or were engaged in fighting, “if they had stayed with us, they would not have died, or been slain.” God will make these thoughts a source of anguish in their hearts. God gives life and causes death; and God sees all what you do.
157. And if you are slain, or die, in the way of God, forgiveness and mercy from God are far better than all they could amass.
158. And if you die, or are slain, it is to God that you are brought together.
159. It was by an act of mercy from God that you were gentle in dealing with them. Were you severe or harsh-hearted, they would have dispersed from around you. So pardon them, ask for God’s forgiveness for them, and consult them in the conduct of the affairs. Then, when you have made a decision put your trust in God. God loves those who put their trust (in Him).
160. If God helps you, none can overcome you. If He forsakes you, who is there, after that, who can help you? In God, let the believers put their trust.
161. It is inconceivable that a prophet could (ever) embezzle. Whosoever embezzles will bring what he embezzled with him on the Day of Resurrection. Then every soul will be paid in full what it had earned; and they will not be wronged.

162. Is the one who follows the good pleasure of God like the one who has earned condemnation from God and whose refuge is the fire – an evil destination?
163. They have different ranks in the sight of God, and God is All-Seeing of what they do.
164. God did confer a great favour on the believers when He sent to them a messenger from among themselves, who recites to them God's revelations, purifies them, and teaches them the Book and the Wisdom, while, before that, they had been in manifest error.
165. And do you, when a calamity has befallen you after you have inflicted twice as much on your foes, say, "How did this happen?" Say (Muhammad), "You brought it upon yourselves. God is Able to do all things."
166. That which befell you, on the day when the two armies met, was by God's leave; so that He might know the true believers.
167. And that He might know the hypocrites, to whom it was said, "Come, fight in the way of God or defend yourselves." They answered, "If we knew that there will be fighting we would have followed you." On that day, they were nearer to disbelief than belief. They utter with their mouths that which is not in their hearts. God knows best what they conceal.
168. Those who, while they sat at home, said about their brothers (who were fighting for the cause of God), "Had they obeyed us they would not have been slain." Say to them (Muhammad), "Then avert death from yourselves if you are truthful."
169. Think not of those who are slain in God's way as dead. Nay, they are alive, finding their sustenance in the presence of their Lord.
170. They rejoice in the bounty bestowed upon them by God. They rejoice for the sake of those who have not joined them but are left behind, that there shall be no fear to come upon them neither shall they grieve.
171. They rejoice in God's blessing and favour and that God does not let the reward of the believers be lost.
172. Those who answered the call of God and the Messenger, even after being wounded -those from among them- who do right and are conscious of God will have a great reward.
173. Those to whom people said, "The people have amassed a great army against you, therefore fear them." But this only strengthened their faith and they said, "God is Sufficient for us, He is our best Guardian."
174. So they returned with blessings and favour from God, and no harm ever touched them. They followed the good pleasure of God. God's favour is great.
175. It is only Satan who instils fear in his votaries. Do not fear them but fear Me, if you are true believers.
176. Do not let the conduct of those who rush headlong into disbelief grieve you. Not the least harm will they do to God. God will give them no share in the Hereafter and they will have immense torment.
177. Those who purchase disbelief at the price of faith will not harm God in the least. They will have a painful torment.
178. Let not those who disbelieve think that our respite to them is good for themselves. We grant them respite so that they become more sinful. They will have a shameful torment.

179. God will not leave the believers in the state in which you are now, until He separates what is evil from what is good, nor will He disclose to you the secrets of the unseen. But He chooses from His Messengers whom He wills. So believe in God, and His messengers. And if you believe and remain conscious of God, you will have a great reward. (3:121-179)

These verses deal with the events that transpired during the battle of Uhud. The idolaters of Mecca, having lost the battle of Badr to the Muslims, vowed to take revenge. So, they amassed a large army to attack Medina. The Prophet (PBUH) consulted with his companions about the strategy of the looming battle. The Muslims were divided into two groups: one was of the opinion that the Muslims should stay within the borders of Medina and fortify the city to be able to repel the enemy, while the second group thought it is best to meet the attacking army outside of the borders of Medina. After a lengthy discussion it was agreed that the Muslim army should go out to meet the attacking army outside the borders of Medina, “Remember that morning when you left your household to post the faithful at their stations for battle. And God hears and knows all things.” After the decision was made, the Prophet (PBUH) put on his shield and went out early in the day to arrange the army positions and to give his last commands to the believers. The strategy was for the army to camp in front of a mountain called Uhud. The Prophet (PBUH) assigned a group of archers to camp on top of the mountain so that they could protect the army against any attack that may be launched from the back. One setback that faced the Muslim army occurred when Abdullah bin Saloul and his group broke up from the Muslim army and returned back to Medina. The verse ends with a subtle touch on the major issues of the event. God sees and knows everything. He knows what the people say, what is hidden in their conscious, and what motivates their deeds and actions.

The setback caused by the breakup of Abd-Allah bin Saloul and his group from the army created confusion in the ranks of the Muslims. Two other groups were about to follow suit, “Remember when two of your parties almost lost courage and God was their Protecting Friend. In God let the believers put their trust.” These two groups were Banu Harithah and Banu Salamah, they were about to be swayed by Ibn Saloul’s move. However, God’s protection saved them. Jaber bin Abd-Allah (RA) said, “We were the two groups mentioned in this verse, Banu Harithah and Banu Salamah. The only reason for being happy about the revelation of this verse was that it mentioned that God is our Protecting Friend.”

Thus, God knew what was hidden in the hearts of the members of these two groups as they were contemplating to follow the example of Ibn Saloul and break up from the Muslim army. But God protected them against this fall and gave them the courage and strength to continue their mission with the rest of the Muslims. The verse is meant to emphasize God’s knowledge of everything and to show the believers the way out from such falls. Salvation is attained only by the grace of God, therefore, “In God let the believers put their trust.”

The two morals that come out of this narrative are the realization that God’s knowledge is unlimited and that the road to salvation is through seeking God’s support: God sees and hears everything, so let the believers put their trust in God.

The victory in Badr was a miracle. All the material elements required to achieve victory were missing. The Muslim army consisted of three hundred ill equipped men, while the idolaters' army consisted of one thousand of well equipped men. The objective of the Muslim army was to capture the idolaters' caravan, while the idolaters' army came from Mecca to fight the Muslims. The Muslims had not fully recovered from their experience as new migrants. They barely had enough time to fully settle in Medina. In addition, they were surrounded by a hostile environment. They were reminded by all of this on their way to Uhud, "God had helped you at Badr, when you were a contemptible little force. Be conscious of God in order that you may show your gratitude." They won their victory in Badr by the grace of God for no victory can be achieved without God's grace. They should then fear God and remain conscious of Him because all power and sovereignty belong to God alone. God consciousness may lead them to show gratitude befitting the grace of God that He bestowed upon them. Details of the battle of Badr are reiterated, "Remember when you said to the believers, 'Is it not enough for you that God should support you with three thousand angels sent down?' Well, if you persevere and remain conscious of God, even if the enemy should attack you suddenly, your Lord would help you with five thousand angels having marks (of distinction)." These were the words that the Prophet (PBUH) used to provide comfort and support to the believers, who went out with him to capture the idolaters' caravan, when they realized that the caravan had escaped and that it is the idolaters' army that they were going to fight. The Prophet's words echoed God's promise of help. As humans they needed the material support, even though they should know that, in the final analysis, it is God's will that decides the result. They were also told that there are conditions for getting God's help. These conditions are perseverance and God consciousness. The angels were a tool to comfort and reassure the believers that they are being helped, "God made it a message of hope for you, and an assurance to your hearts. Victory comes only from God, the Eminent, the Wise."

This principle has been reiterated over and over again so that it became inculcated in the believers' psyche, "Victory comes only from God, the Eminent, the Wise." Muslims are commanded to do their best in material preparation for the war, but the ultimate result is in God's hand. Victory and loss occur according to a divine plan. The Prophet (PBUH) and those who fought with him had no say in achieving victory, nor should they have a personal stake in it. They were only a tool that was used to execute the divine plan. The Prophet (PBUH) and the believers were neither the makers nor the owners of victory.

"That He might cut off a group of the disbelievers or expose them to infamy, and they should then be turned back, frustrated of their purpose. It is no concern at all of you (Muhammad) whether He relents toward them or torments them; for they are wrongdoers." Cutting off the disbelievers may occur as a result of killing some of them in battle, making them lose their land to the believers, reducing their power by occupation, making them lose their wealth to the believers, or forcing them to capitulate. God may force them to retreat in infamy or He may forgive them. Their fight with the believers may open the doors of guidance for them and they may repent, or God may torment them for their transgression. Either way, it is God's decision and no one can interfere with His decision.

“To God belong all that is in the heavens and on earth. He forgives whom He wills and torments whom He wills; but God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.” God has the absolute will, the absolute sovereignty, and the absolute power. God does not wrong any of His servants, nor does He favour any of His servants. His decrees are based on justice, wisdom, mercy, and forgiveness.

Before resuming the discussion of the battle of Uhud we find a group of verses which discuss several other topics: the institution of usury, the attributes of those who remain conscious of God, and the spending in the way of God. It may seem strange to have such a mix of topics, but there is a logical rationale behind this. The discussion of this variety of topics together demonstrates the comprehensiveness of this religion. These topics deal with a variety of human activities. The religion of Islam as a whole revolves around one theme: worshiping God alone. Worshiping God encompasses the whole array of human activities. This is a comprehensive religion which is based on the belief in the Oneness of God. The practical product of this belief is a way of life that reflects the impact of this belief on every aspect of human life.

“You who believe, do not devour usury, doubled and multiplied; but remain conscious of God; that you may be successful. And guard yourselves against the fire which has been prepared for those who disbelieved.” The institution of usury has been previously discussed, but we would like to stop at the expression used here to describe the return of debt, “doubled and multiplied.” At the present time, there is an argument which is being put forward by some advocating a twisted explanation for this term. It claims that the forbidden usury is the kind of usury which requires an exorbitant return on the debt but if the interest rate was reasonable (say 4% or even 9% for example) then this form of lending becomes permissible. It should be pointed out that the reference to a rate of return is simply a statement of details of transactions that were common practice at the time the Qur’an was revealed. It should not be used as a criterion for defining usury. The verse in Surat Al-Baqara (Chapter 2) is an unequivocal statement which prohibits usury.

“And obey God and the Messenger; so that you may obtain mercy.” This is a general command to obey God and His messenger so that one can enjoy God’s mercy. However, the fact that it came after the discussion of usury points to the fact that obedience of God and His messenger cannot be achieved in a society whose financial transactions are all based on usury.

“And vie one with another for forgiveness from your Lord, and for a paradise as wide as are the heavens and the earth, prepared for those who are conscious of God.” Hasten, the paradise is waiting for those who are conscious of God. What are the salient attributes of those who are conscious of God? “Those who spend (freely), whether in prosperity, or in adversity,” They are constant in their spending whether they are in a state of affluence or a state of need. Affluence does not spoil them and adversity does not frustrate them. They are aware of their duties and they are keen to free themselves from the shackles of stinginess. The verses regarding spending may have been included here to motivate the believers to support the army in its upcoming battle.

“Who restrain their anger and pardon people. God loves those who do good.” Anger is a human emotion which cannot be eliminated but should be controlled and managed; God consciousness is one of the best tools to manage one's anger. However, one should not stop at anger management. Anger restraint should be combined by pardoning people. This eliminates the chance of channelling anger into destructive feelings of hate and frustration. The combination of anger restraint and pardoning people provide a mix which cleanses the heart of any destructive emotions. Those who are able to spend money in prosperity and adversity, to restrain their anger, and pardon people are good doers. God loves those who do good deeds. The term "God's love" is used to express God's affection for His servants. It induces the believer to do good deeds. These individuals form a community that God loves; a community that is established on the feelings of mutual interdependence, brotherhood, and forgiveness. These characters were needed for a community that will soon engage the enemy.

"And those who, having committed an immoral act, or wronged themselves, remember God, and ask for forgiveness for their sins - and who can forgive sins except God? - and they never persist knowingly in doing whatever wrong they may have done." Look at the levels of tolerance in this religion. Before asking people to be tolerant, God shows people how tolerant He is. Those who are conscious of God rank high in status among the believers. God's leniency towards His servants opens the doors of hope to those who, "having committed an immoral act, or wronged themselves, remember God, and ask for forgiveness for their sins." The mercy of God engulfs those who commit sins and allows them to join the ranks of those who are conscious of Him, provided they recognize their error, are willing to seek God's forgiveness, and do not persist in their sin.

What is the reward for those who are conscious of God? "The reward of such will be forgiveness from their Lord, and Gardens underneath which rivers flow, wherein they will abide forever, an excellent reward for the workers (of righteousness)." Those who are God conscious are not indifferent. They are hard working. They are fully engaged in the daily life while practicing the pursuit of forgiveness, managing their anger, pardoning people, and spending in the way of God.

The verses imply a relationship between the characters of the individuals forming an army and the ability of this army to win against its enemy. Individuals who are able to overcome their stinginess, control their anger, overpower their desire to sin, and seek God's forgiveness are well prepared to win victory in the battle field. The decisions that such individuals make are dictated by rational thinking not by whims and desires. They lead a well disciplined life according to God's law. These are necessary qualifications for the army to win its battle.

"Many ways of life have passed away before you. Travel in the land, and see what the end of those who rejected the truth was. This is a declaration for humankind, guidance, and an admonition to those who are conscious of God. So do not lose heart, nor grieve. You will have the upper hand if you are indeed believers. If a wound has touched you, a similar wound has certainly touched the others. These are (only) the vicissitudes which We cause to follow one another for humankind, so that God may know those who believe and may take witnesses from among you; and God does not love the wrongdoers. God's object is to purge those who are true believers and to deprive of His blessing those who disbelieved. Did you think that you would enter paradise without God knowing those of you who fought hard (in His Cause) and those who remained perseverant? You did indeed wish for death before you met it. Now you have seen it with your own eyes,” The Muslims were hurt badly in this battle, they were defeated and some were killed. The hurt was both physical and psychological. Seventy people were killed and the Prophet (PBUH) was wounded. Muslims were shocked for the change in their fortune especially after they had won a miraculous victory in the battle of Badr. They were wondering what happened? What has changed? The Qur’an reminded them of God’s natural law, the law that govern life on earth. In order for people to succeed in their endeavours, they have to study and understand this law. They need to prepare the tools necessary for success. Muslims were reminded with lessons from history and they were asked to study and learn from them. These lessons include the inevitable end for those who reject faith, the fluctuations in life conditions and circumstances, and the perseverance that people should exercise in face of the tests that they are destined to meet during life. There is a law that govern how life progresses on earth and there is a rationale behind that law. This law will continue in effect till the Day of Judgment. This assured the believers that they will win the war at the end but they need to persevere in face of the current adversity. The Qur’an interjected these lessons with messages of hope and encouragement: others have also been wounded like you, and you have a high calling that needs sacrifice.

This is a general proclamation to all people to heed the guidance, but only a few will make use of it. Only those who are God conscious will benefit from this proclamation. Only hearts seeking guidance can receive guidance. The problem is not in being able to differentiate between what is right and what is wrong - many people can differentiate between right and wrong - but only few people are willing to abide by what is right. Few people are willing to do what is right because of the sacrifices that they may have to make. Only those people whose hearts are always conscious of God are able to overcome these difficulties. The desire to accept the truth and to do what is right is initiated by a heart full of faith and is supported by a heart which is always conscious of God. That is why the Qur’an often reiterates the statement that only those who believe and are God conscious will benefit from the truth revealed in this Book, the guidance that it embodies, and the lessons that are detailed in it. Faith and God consciousness open up the hearts to receive guidance and encourage the mind to choose the path of light, and support the human being to persevere in face of the adversity that will be encountered on the path to the truth. This is the crux of the matter, being able to differentiate between right and wrong is not sufficient for salvation but the ability to choose the right path and endure the difficulties along this path is what really matters.

The proclamation is followed by a message of encouragement, “do not lose heart, nor grieve. You will have the upper hand if you are indeed believers.” Your faith elevates you above the enemy. You submit to God alone, while they submit to false deities. You follow God’s way of life and they lead a life that is fashioned by creatures like them. If you are true believers, then you will have the upper hand over them.

“If a wound has touched you, a similar wound has certainly touched the others. These are (only) the vicissitudes which We cause to follow one another for humankind, so that God may know those who believe and may take witnesses from among you; and God does not love the wrongdoers.” This may be a reference to the defeat that the idolaters suffered in the battle of Badr at the hands of the Muslims. Or it may be a reference to the battle of Uhud. In the battle of Uhud the Muslims won at first, then they were overcome by their enemy when the Muslim archers left their positions on the mountain top and the back of the Muslim army was open to a counter attack by the idolaters' army. This is an example of how God's natural law works. The Muslim army was overtaken by the idolaters because the Muslim archers, motivated by greed and the desire to put their hands on the spoils of war, disobeyed their leader and left their assigned positions undefended. God has decreed that in battles of Jihad, those who fight only for His sake deserve to win. Another rule of God's natural law is the fluctuations of good and bad times. These are tools to differentiate between who is a true believer and who is a hypocrite. True believers persevere during times of prosperity and times of adversity, while hypocrites suffer anxiety and panic when faced by adversity. God knows who is a true believer and who is a hypocrite, and He knows the secrets of the hearts, but He will not hold people accountable on the basis of His knowledge. Reckoning is based on deeds. The fluctuations in life conditions are meant to bring what is hidden in the hearts to the realm of the deeds. The belief and the hypocrisy in the hearts of the believers and the hypocrites will be reflected on their reactions to the fluctuations in life conditions, respectively. Their reward and punishment will be based on their deeds.

God will choose those who will die as martyrs. Therefore, dying for God's cause is not a loss but is an honour. It is an honour that God bestows on select people. They are also witnesses chosen by God. They will bear witness that the message they fought and died for is the truth. Their fight and death in the way of God is an expression of their testament.

Not everyone who pronounces the testament that there is no deity except God and that Muhammad (PBUH) is His messenger is called a witness. Only those who act upon this testament can claim that they bore witness to the truth of the testament. Acting upon it means the belief in the Oneness of God. One of the consequences of the testament is to accept God as the only law maker, no one else has the right to legislate for people. God legislates and servants accept. The other consequence is that the only way to receive the message is through Prophet Muhammad (PBUH). He is the conduit through which God transmitted His message, His guidance, and the way of life that He has decreed for people on earth. A person who dies in the cause of establishing this testament is a martyr.

God does not love the wrongdoers. The Qur'an often refers to associating partners with God as injustice or wrongdoing, "Associating partners with God is a great injustice." On the authority of Ibn Mass'oud (RA), he said, 'I asked the Messenger of God, which kind of injustice is worst?' He said, 'To associate partners with Him who created you.'"

"God's object is to purge those who are true believers and to deprive of His blessing those who disbelieved." Purging is a step higher than sifting through. Purging is a process that runs through the inner self of a human being to assess her/his personality and to purify it. Purging rids the human being of bad attributes and inculcates good ones. Very often we are unaware of our strengths and weaknesses. The objective of fluctuating life conditions between prosperity and adversity is for the human being to discover points of strengths and weaknesses in his/her personality.

"Did you think that you would enter paradise without God knowing those of you who fought hard (in His Cause) and those who remained perseverant?" The Qur'an uses a disapprobation style to correct the understanding of the meaning of submission to God. It is not enough to make an oral statement, what really matter is the behaviour of the person. Those who submit are willing to strive in the way of God and persevere in the face of adversity. Fighting may be the least arduous duty that faces a believer. Daily challenges which are faced by the believer may be more demanding. There is the endless daily suffering caused by being constant on the path of God, the suffering felt in resisting temptations, and the suffering of observing the requirements of faith in face of inappropriate situations. The path to paradise is full of challenges which attempt to sway the believer away from the straight path. Paradise is not achieved by wishful thinking and rhetoric, but it is achieved by perseverance in face of the daily challenges that meet the believer.

“You did indeed wish for death before you met it. Now you have seen it with your own eyes,” The believers were looking to engage the enemy on the battle ground. The dreams of martyrdom filled their minds and the desire to die as martyrs was uttered. Now they have seen death with their own eyes. The verse poses the question to them so that they can feel the difference between the dream and the reality. It is a lesson for the future, to weigh every word uttered before committing oneself to a task. One should appreciate the gravity of real life actions, the responsibility attached to promises, and the consequences of oral statements. Actions speak louder than words.

God could have given victory to His Prophet (PBUH). He could have commanded the angels to fight with the believers and conquer the idolaters. But the point is not to gain victory in a battle. The point is to train the believers and prepare them for the undertaking of propagating the message of God. They have to assume a leadership role in providing guidance to humanity. Such an endeavour requires a solid character, perseverance in upholding the truth, patience in face of adversity, and an understanding of the human failings and strengths.

“Muhammad is no more than a messenger, many messengers (like him) passed away before him. If he died or were slain, will you then turn back on your heels? If any did turn back on his heels, not the least harm will he do to God; but God will reward those who are grateful.” The first part of this verse refers to a specific incident that occurred during the battle of Uhud, when the archers left their positions on the mountain top and allowed the idolaters to occupy it and attack the Muslim army from behind. When chaos spread in the Muslims’ ranks someone screamed that Muhammad (PBUH) was dead. Upon hearing this many Muslims, overwhelmed with the feeling of despair, decided to abandon the battle ground and go back to Medina, but the Prophet (PBUH) was still alive. He stood there wounded but persevered and rallied the troops around him. Muslims came back and resumed the fight. This incident took the Muslims by surprise and it was used by the Qur’an to teach the Muslims a lesson. Muhammad (PBUH) is only a messenger, there were many messengers before him, they all died and so will he. Muhammad (PBUH) came to deliver God’s message, God is eternal, He will never die neither will His message. The believers should not turn their backs if Muhammad (PBUH) dies or is killed. This is the simple truth that they should not forget. Humans will all perish, but the faith will last forever. It should be understood that there is a difference between God’s message and God’s messengers.

The expression used in the verse, “turn back on your heels,” does not only mean the physical movement of going back but its meaning extends to the spiritual turning away from the religion.

The term addresses the thought that filled the minds of the believers, after they heard the cry that Muhammad (PBUH) had died; they thought that the religion will die with the death of Muhammad (PBUH). This is exactly what the companion of the Prophet Al-Nader bin Ias (RA) said when he saw the Muslims throwing their arms. He said, “If Muhammad (PBUH) is dead, for what are you going to live? Let us fight to die and join our Prophet (PBUH).” Those who turn away from Islam will not inflict any harm on God; it is they who will be the losers. God does not need any one, but people are the ones who need God to help them live a happy life on this earth and in the Hereafter. God will reward those who are grateful. Gratitude can be shown by adopting the way of life which God has decreed. God will reward those who show gratitude because they appreciate the blessings that God bestowed on His servants.

The objective behind this incident may have been to wean the believers off the tremendous love they had for Muhammad (PBUH) and to direct them to the source of guidance that Muhammad (PBUH) brought. It is as if God wanted to take their hands to show them the way to hold tight to the strong link that connects them to Him. As if God wanted them to feel the direct link between them and Islam and to get them to recognize that their covenant is with God directly without any intercessors. It may have also meant to be a training session for the Muslims to be prepared when the time comes for the death of the Prophet (PBUH).

“No soul can ever die except by God's leave at an appointed term. Whosoever desires a reward in this life, We shall give it to him; and whosoever desires a reward in the Hereafter, We shall give it to him. And We shall reward those who are grateful.” Every soul has a specific set day on which it will die. No soul will die before this set day. Therefore, fear of death and cowardice will not elongate one's life, and courage and gallantry will not result in a premature death. This statement inculcates the concept of the inevitability of death in the hearts of the believer. We should not busy ourselves thinking about when we will die and how we are going to die. These thoughts should not also hinder our progress and should not dictate what to do and what not to do, especially when it comes to performing duties and responsibilities. We should lead a secure and confident life and put our trust in God who controls life and death. It is therefore, important to think about what do we want to achieve in life and how can we make this achievement. Do we want to live for this worldly life alone, or are we aiming at a higher goal? These are two different routes, those who chose to live for this worldly life alone will lead a lowly life, while those who are aiming at the Hereafter will lead an honoured and dignified life, however, both groups will die at their appointed times.

“How many of the prophets fought (in God's way), and with them (fought) large bands of godly men? but they never lost heart if they met with a disaster in God's way, nor did they weaken (in will) nor give in. And God loves those who are perseverant.” The believers who fought with many previous prophets fought with courage and determination, they never lost heart or wavered no matter how hard the difficulties they faced were. God loves those who persevere and are steadfast. The expression “God loves” intimates the power of this love in healing the wounds, removing the suffering, and compensating the hard work.

“All that they said was, ‘Our Lord, forgive us our sins and the excesses which we have committed in our affairs, establish our feet firmly, and help us against those who disbelieve.’”

They did not ask for wealth or material compensation; they did not even ask for a reward in this life or the Hereafter, but they asked God to strengthen them and to affirm their steps in face of the enemy. They did not ask for personal victory, but they asked for a victory over disbelief. However, God gave them everything without asking. He gave them, “A reward in this world, and the excellent reward of the Hereafter, for God loves those who do good deeds.” God described them as doers of good deeds, because they did well on the battle ground and they did well when they prayed for God’s favor.

The following verses talk about the battle of Uhud, but before doing this, a warning was issued to the believers. Islam and Muslims were still new to Medina. Muslims in Medina gained a great deal of respect after the victory in the battle of Badr, but the setback in the battle of Uhud was an opportunity for the disbelievers and the hypocrites to plant the seeds of doubt and sedition in the hearts of weak willed Muslims especially those who were directly affected by the defeat. Hence a warning was issued to the Muslims not to fall in the traps that are laid by the disbelievers and the hypocrites, “You who believe, if you obey those who disbelieved, they will make you turn back on your heels, and you will lose.” Remember that, “God is your Protecting Guardian, and He is the Best of Helpers.” So, ask God for help. Who can provide better support than God? Who can secure better victory than God? The support of God is coming, “Soon shall We cast terror into the hearts of those who disbelieved, because they associated partners with God, for which He had not send authority. Their refuge will be the fire, and evil is the abode of the wrongdoers.” This is a promise from God whenever belief and disbelief are confronting each other. Whenever there is a battle between the believers and those who disbelieved, God will cast fear in the hearts of the disbelievers. However, the believers have to have true faith. They should have the firm conviction that only God can provide support and protection. Their faith should be devoted to God alone, a faith that is not blemished by any residue of doubt in God’s power. The disbelievers will not only suffer fear in this world, but will also abide in Hell fire in the Hereafter.

The believers were reminded by the fulfillment of God’s promise in the early stages of the battle, “God did indeed fulfill His promise to you when you, with His permission, were about to annihilate your enemy” This was in the beginning when the Muslims were obedient and before they became bedazzled by the spoils of war, “Until you faltered, disputed the command, and disobeyed after He had shown you what you covet. Among you are some who hanker after the gains of this world and some who desire the Hereafter.” This is what happened when the archers left their positions which they were commanded to hold. They disputed among themselves, a group was tempted by the spoils and another wanted to stay put in their positions until the battle was completely finished. The first group was interested in the quick reward of this life, while the second group was more interested in the permanent reward of the Hereafter. The army became divided and the unity around the objective was lost. They lost the most important ingredient of victory, they lost the pure intention that this battle is for God’s sake. God does not provide His help and support unless the effort is purely dedicated to Him.

The verse also uncovers the secrets of the hearts. Ibn Mass’oud (RA) said, “I never thought that any of the companions of the Prophet (PBUH) would be interested in the gains of this worldly life, until the verse, ‘Among you are some who hanker after the gains of this world and some who desire the Hereafter. ' was revealed." The verse thus, uncovers the desires for worldly gains that some of the believers harboured and led them to disobedience thus causing the defeat. This was also a test for the believers, "Then did He divert you from your foes in order to test you but He pardoned you. God is Gracious to the believers." But God has forgiven you. God forgave your wavering, your disobedience, your disputation, and your fleeing the battle ground. These sins were committed because of human weaknesses which were forgiven by the grace of God.

"When you climbed (the hill) and paid no heed to anyone, while the messenger, in your rear, was calling you (to fight)." This is a dramatization of the scene of the battle; this was intended to shame those who fled because of their weakness, their dispute, and their disobedience. The verse draws an image of a group of people climbing the mountain, fleeing the battle ground in confusion and fear. Nobody is paying attention to anyone else. The Prophet (PBUH) is calling to reassure them that he is still alive. They were rewarded for the misery that they inflicted on the Prophet (PBUH) a similar misery, "Therefore, He rewarded you grief for grief to teach you not to grieve for that which you missed or for that which befell you. God is Totally-Aware of what you do." Misery filled their hearts when they realized that they left the Prophet (PBUH) alone and fled the battle ground. This sadness in their hearts was greater than the sadness they may have felt for any other loss. God was fully aware of what they did. A strange calm descended on them after the confusion and the overwhelming fear that followed the defeat. They remembered their Lord and remembered their Prophet (PBUH) and they were cloaked with a mysterious slumber, "Then, after grief, He sent down calm on a band of you overcome with slumber," This was a strange phenomenon that reflected the mercy of God when it descends over His believing servants. Slumber even for a few minutes reenergizes the fighters and fills their hearts with confidence and security. But there was another group who only cared about themselves, "While another band was anxious about itself. They thought wrongly about God, the thought of ignorance. They say, 'Do we have a say in this?' Say to them, 'Indeed, everything to do with this affair is in God's hand.'" They criticized the policy and strategy that were used to conduct the battle. This may be a reference to the group of people who were of the opinion that Muslims should have stayed in Medina and fought to defend the city. They lamented the fact that their view was overruled by those who wanted to meet the idolaters' army outside Medina. They were angry that their opinion was not adopted. The response came to tell them that "This affair is in God's hand." All affairs are in God's hand. In a previous verse, the Prophet (PBUH) was told, "You have no say in the affairs." All matters of faith, fighting for God's cause, and guiding hearts are all in God's hand. Human beings have no say in these matters. But this group had ill feelings in their hearts. "They hide in their hearts what they dare not reveal to you. They say (to themselves), 'If we had any say about this affair, we would not have been in the slaughter here.'" Their hearts were filled with misgivings. This points to a weakness of faith that became apparent when they were put to the test of defeat. The understanding is corrected, "Say, 'Even if you had remained in your homes, those for whom death was decreed would certainly have gone forth to the place of their death.' All this has been in order that God might test what is in your breasts and purge what is in your hearts. God knows well the secrets of your hearts." Death will be met by those whose time has come, even if they had chosen to stay home and not to go out with the army. Death is inevitable, no one can escape death. This whole episode was a means to test what is in your breasts, to make you aware of your faults, and to purify your hearts. God is fully aware with what in people's hearts. He knew the inner thoughts of those who fled the battle ground. He knew their weakness which opened the door for Satan to control them, “Those of you who turned back on the day the two hosts met, it is Satan who caused them to fail, because of some of that which they have earned. Now God has pardoned them. God is All-Forgiving, Forbearing.” This may have been a reference to the archers who were lured away from their positions by the desire to collect the spoils of war. They ended up losing their share in the spoils of war by the Prophet’s (PBUH) decree. But it is a general rule that applies in many situations. Usually committing sins weakens the connection between the human being and God and opens the door for Satan who fills the heart with misgivings and bad thoughts. Satan then finds its way to seduce the person to more sinful acts. This is why it is advisable to seek forgiveness from God whenever one has committed a sinful act. Seeking forgiveness from God strengthens the relationship with God, closes the doors in face of Satan, clears the hearts of the bad thoughts, and puts the person back on the straight path away from the influence of Satan.

“You who believe, do not be like those who disbelieved and said to their brothers, when they travel in the land or engage in fighting, ‘if they had stayed with us, they would not have died, or been slain.’ God will make these thoughts a source of anguish in their hearts. God gives life and causes death; and God is All-Seeing of what you do.” It seems that this is what the hypocrites and the idolaters of Medina, whose family members became Muslims, said to the believers upon their return defeated from the battle ground. They took advantage of the defeat that the Muslims suffered at the hands of the idolaters of Mecca to spread the seeds of sedition among the ranks of the Muslims by arousing in their hearts the feelings of loss of their loved ones in the battle. The verse came to put things in the right perspective. The saying, “If they had stayed with us, they would not have died, or been slain,” illustrates the basic difference between those who have strong faith and those who are lacking in faith. Those who believe recognize God’s laws which control life on earth. They are confident of God’s fairness. They know that nothing will befall them except that which God has decreed. They neither panic when a calamity befalls them, nor do they boast when a gain accrues to them. They accept God’s decrees with secure and contented hearts. They are happy to accept God’s decrees in any form or shape. However, they recognize that they have to consult, plan, and do their best to achieve their goals, but the end result is in God’s hands. Once, they have discharged their responsibility they do not worry about the results because they cannot control the results, only God is in control of the end results. They maintain a delicate balance between actions and submission; and between taking the initiative and putting their trust in God. Those who have been deprived of faith live with an inner struggle that never ends. They are always thinking of “what if”, and “I wish.” The verse warns the believers not to be like those who are saddened by the loss of a relative if he died while traveling to earn a living or to strive in the way of God. Those who think that traveling is the cause of death simply do not understand God’s law. They should realize that death is inevitable and the length of life is predestined. God has power over life and death.

However, death is not the ultimate end, “And if you are slain, or die, in the way of God, forgiveness and mercy from God are far better than all they could amass. And if you die, or are slain, it is to God that you are brought together.” Death in the way of God is better than this worldly life because God’s mercy and forgiveness are better than what people amass in this life. The believers should not be interested in personal fame and glory but they should be more interested in what God has for them: His mercy and forgiveness. All people, those who die in their beds or on battle grounds, will return to God at the end. The end is same for all but the reward will be different.

“It was by an act of mercy from God that you were gentle in dealing with them. Were you severe or harsh-hearted, they would have dispersed from around you.” God bestowed His mercy on the Prophet (PBUH) and the believers, a mercy that made the Prophet (PBUH) gentle with the believers. Had he treated them harshly their hearts would not have flocked around him. People need to be treated kindly. They need a leader who cares for them, helps them with their problems, and appreciates their shortcomings. They need a leader who opens his heart to them, and who is willing to help whenever help is needed. This was how the Prophet (PBUH) treated people and that is why he was loved by everyone who dealt with him.

“So pardon them, ask for God’s forgiveness for them, and consult them in the conduct of the affairs.” This unequivocal statement establishes a fundamental principle of governing in Islam: the principle of consultation. Every Muslim ruler has to abide with this principle, even if he were a prophet. An Islamic government should be built on this fundamental principle. However, the details of the process are left for people to decide. This verse was revealed at a point in time when the consequences of consultation seemed to lead to undesirable results. On the face of it, consultation resulted in a difference of opinion which led to disunity among Muslims: a group of Muslims wanted to stay in Medina waiting for the enemy to come, while the second group wanted to fight the enemy outside the boundaries of the city. As a result of this difference in opinion, one third of the army lead by Abdullah bin Saloul abandoned the Muslims ranks and went back to Medina. The plan that was decided upon as a result of the consultation process may have not been the best military strategy to be adopted. Muslims did learn this lesson, so when they were attacked in a later battle, the battle of the Trench, they stayed in Medina and waited for the enemy to attack the city which was protected by a trench.

The Prophet (PBUH) was cognizant of these consequences, he himself was in favour of fortifying the city and letting the enemy come to them; he had been alarmed by a dream which he saw earlier which described what may happen if they take the fight outside of Medina. He also had the right as a supreme leader to veto the decision that was reached by the majority, but he chose to go ahead with the majority’s decision to establish the principle of consultation. He saw that establishing the principle and giving the example is worth the sacrifices that were made.

The Prophet (PBUH) could have taken the failure in the plan that was reached by consultation as an excuse for abandoning the institution of consultation, but he did not, because this was part of the training program for the Muslim nation. This was a training program for the nation and for the leaders who will assume the responsibility after the Prophet (PBUH) has gone. These training programs were essential for the nation to mature and to be able to lead a stable life. Maturity cannot be achieved without sacrifices, but it is worth it at the end.

One of the attributes of a successful leader is resolve, “Then, when you have made a decision put your trust in God. God loves those who put their trust (in Him).” Consultation involves brain storming to explore all possible available alternatives and to choose the best alternative. Once a decision has been made, the implementation phase starts. The leader should be resolute in implementing the decision, putting his trust in God. God loves those who put their trust in Him.

The narrative continues to explain the true meaning of putting one's trust in God, "If God helps you, none can overcome you. If He forsakes you, who is there, after that, that can help you? In God let the believers put their trust." One of the characteristics of the Islamic perspective is the ability to maintain a delicate balance between recognizing the ability of God to do what He wills and the human effort which is dedicated to achieve this will. God decreed that results are to be achieved through means, but the means do not guarantee the results. The human being has to work hard, do his/her best, and make use of all available tools to achieve the set objective. Once this has been completed, the human being should put his/her trust in God and accept whatever result God wills. In the case of a battle the two expected outcomes are victory and defeat. Believers should put their trust in God, if God willed that they secure victory so it will be, and if God willed that they would be defeated no one else could provide them a road to victory. Recognizing the fact that God's power does effectuate His will is not an excuse for Muslims not to seek the means: results are to be sought through appropriate means.

"It is inconceivable that a prophet could (ever) embezzle. Whosoever embezzles will bring what he embezzled with him on the Day of Resurrection. Then every soul will be paid in full what it has earned; and they will not be wronged." One of the reasons that the archers abandoned their designated positions during the battle was that they were worried that they would not get their share of the spoils of war. In addition, some of the hypocrites spread a rumour about the disappearance of some of the spoils of war that were obtained from the battle of Badr and they did not shy away from suggesting that the Prophet (PBUH) had a hand in their disappearance. The verse came to state, beyond a shadow of a doubt, not only that it does not befit prophets to commit such acts, but also to emphasize that prophets by their nature cannot assume such characters.

Another recitation implies that the verse commands the believers not to betray the Prophet (PBUH). The verse continues to threaten those who embezzle the Muslims money with appropriate punishment on the Day of the Resurrection.

It has been narrated by Abu Hameed Al-Sa'di (RA) on the authority of Imam Ahmed, that the Prophet (PBUH) appointed a person by the name of Ibn Al-Lateebah, from the tribe of Azad, to collect Zakat proceeds. Ibn Al-Lateebah brought the Zakat he collected to the Prophet (PBUH), but he kept some articles for himself, when the Prophet (PBUH) asked about the articles that Ibn Al-Lateebah kept for himself, Ibn Al-Lateebah answered that these were given to him as a gift. The Prophet (PBUH) went to the podium and said, "Why do people we employ come back with articles that they claim it was given to them as gifts? Why do not they stay home and see if anybody would care to give them gifts?" This verse and the Prophetic traditions played a major role in educating and training Muslims not to betray the trust. Stories about how the fighters were meticulous in bringing the spoils of war back to the leader of the army are abundant. When the battle of Qadisiyah was won, the soldiers brought to the Caliph Umar (RA) the treasures of the king of Persia intact. Umar (RA) was impressed by their honesty.

"Is the one who follows the good pleasure of God like the one who has earned condemnation from God and whose refuge is the fire – an evil destination?" These are the standards and these are the choices. One either aims at winning the pleasure of God or aims at losing it. God will assign different ranks to the different categories, “They have different ranks in the sight of God, and God is All-Seeing what they do.”

“God did confer a great favour on the believers when He sent to them a messenger from among themselves,” It is out of God’s grace that He bestowed this blessing on His servants. It is a blessing that has been bestowed without being requested. The expression used is also indicative of God’s mercy. The verse says, “A messenger from among themselves,” and did not say, “One of you.” The expression used intimated the existence of a personal relationship between the Prophet (PBUH) and each and every one of his followers. God has blessed them twice: first, by guiding them to the faith and the second blessing by connecting them to the messenger. The messenger, “Who recites to them God’s revelations, purifies them, and teaches them the Book and the Wisdom, while, before that, they had been in manifest error.” It is a great blessing that God addresses them with His words, these words which describe God and His attributes. These words address human feelings and the issues that are important to people. These words chart a way for salvation and purification of the souls. God wants to purify humankind and elevate them above old traditions which denigrate their humanity. Ja’fer bin Abi Taleb (RA) addressed the King of Abyssinia saying, “King, before Islam, we were living in ignorance. We worshipped idols, ate dead animals, committed sins, cut our kinfolks, abused our neighbours, and the rich oppressed the poor. God sent a messenger from among ourselves, whom we know and trust. He called us to believe in the Oneness of God, to worship God alone, to be truthful, to be honest, to join our kinfolks, to be good to our neighbours, to abstain from sin, to abstain from giving false testimony, and to abstain from devouring orphans’ money.”

“And teaches them the Book and the Wisdom.” The Arabs to whom this verse was addressed, were illiterates. They had no civilization. They were transformed by this message into people who carried the flame of knowledge and wisdom to the whole world. The message changed the environment in which they were living and that spilled over to countries all over the world. They were at a loss both in faith and in life and were completely changed by this message.

“And do you, when a calamity has befallen you after you have inflicted twice as much on your foes, say, ‘How did this happen?’ Say (Muhammad), ‘You brought it upon yourselves. God is able to do all things.’ The verse refers to the final defeat in Uhud. Before that they had two victories: one at Badr and the second in the early stages of the battle of Uhud when they inflicted a great loss on the idolaters before the balance of the battle was turned around when the archers left their assigned positions on the mountain top. The verse addressed the astonishment of the Muslims when they said, “Why is this happening?” The answer to this question was given clearly, “You brought it upon yourselves,” when you wavered and disputed among yourselves. You brought defeat upon yourselves when you broke the covenant with God and His messenger. You brought defeat upon yourselves when you allowed your selfish greed to control your actions and to lead you to disobedience. “God is able to do all things,” God is able to maintain His rule over the world. He has decreed certain laws to govern the universe. God is able to maintain these laws.

There is always a rationale behind God’s decrees, “That which befell you, on the day when the two armies met, was by God’s leave; so that He might know the true believers.” What happened in the battle was not a coincidence, it was God's Will. God willed that this would happen for a certain reason and to teach the believers a lesson. "And that He might know the hypocrites, to whom it was said, 'Come, fight in the way of God or defend yourselves.' They answered, 'If we knew that there will be fighting we would have followed you.' On that day they were nearer to disbelief than belief. They utter with their mouths that which is not in their hearts. God knows best what they conceal." This is a reference to the actions taken by Ibn Saloul and his group. The verse called them, "the hypocrites". They "were nearer to disbelief than belief." They claimed that they returned to Medina because they were not aware that there would be a fight. This was not the truth, "They utter with their mouths that which is not in their hearts." Their hearts were replete with hypocrisy which left no place for faith, and their actions were controlled by their egotistical nature. Ibn Saloul felt bad that the Prophet (PBUH) did not follow his advice when the consultation process about how to conduct of the battle of Uhud was held. Before the arrival of the Prophet (PBUH) to Medina, Ibn Saloul had big plans to assume the leadership of Medina. He was in the process of being appointed by the people as their chief. The arrival of the Prophet (PBUH) rescinded all these plans. Ibn Saloul harboured a grudge against the Prophet (PBUH), thinking that the Prophet (PBUH) usurped his right for leadership. But God knows what is in their hearts.

They did not only abandon the Muslim army but they also tried to dissuade others from fighting, "Those who, while they sat at home, said about their brothers (who were fighting for the cause of God), 'Had they obeyed us they would not have been slain.' Say to them (Muhammad), 'Then avert death from yourselves if you are truthful.'" They tried to spread fear among Muslims by saying that those who were going to fight would be killed. The verse answered their claim with a statement of the inevitable truth: can you avert death from yourselves? Death is inevitable, it will befall everyone. No one can escape death no matter how careful he/she is. This answer refuted the claim and reassured the Muslims.

It is interesting that the Qur'an mentions the incident of Ibn Saloul's desertion after the account of the battle of Uhud has been dealt with, in spite of the fact that this incident occurred before the battle started. We may think of two reasons behind this organization of the text. The Qur'an wanted to outline the basic principles of consultation, life and death, unity and obedience of the Prophet (PBUH) from an Islamic perspective before dealing with this incident. The Qur'an wanted to define the characteristics of the believers before talking about the characteristics of the hypocrites, so that the difference is clearly seen and the people are able to judge fairly on the basis of clear criteria. The other reason may have been that the Qur'an did not want to attach an undue importance to the hypocrites. Thus, it was appropriate to delay this account after major issues related to the battle of Uhud have been dealt with. The Qur'an did not even mention Ibn Saloul by name as a sign of disrespect for him and his actions. The Qur'an alluded to him as part of the hypocrites.

Having dealt with the issue of death, the Qur'an wanted to reassure the Muslims of the destiny of the martyrs who were killed in the way of God. These martyrs are alive and they are enjoying all the characteristics of life: they get provisions from their Lord, they are pleased with the blessings that God bestowed on them, and they are looking forward for the others to join them. If this is their situation, why would the living feel sad about their martyrdom? "Think not of those who are slain in God's way as dead. Nay, they are alive, finding their sustenance in the presence of their Lord."

Although we, who live in this world, have no firsthand information about the nature of the life that the martyrs lead after death, but we have authentic prophetic traditions and we have the present verse which tells us that things are not as they seem to be. Many things are different in their reality than what they seem to be if we take them at their face value. These people who were killed in the way of God look dead to us, they seem to have lost all signs of life as we know it, but they are living with their Lord. They, "rejoice in the bounty bestowed upon them by God." They also remember their brothers who are still fighting in the way of God and, "they rejoice for the sake of those who have not joined them but are left behind, that there shall be no fear to come upon them neither shall they grieve. They rejoice in God's blessing and favour and that God does not let the reward of the believers be lost."

This is a new formulation of the concept of dying in the way of God which changes the attitude of the believers who are fighting in the way of God and their loved ones whom they leave behind. Life extends beyond this world. The Hereafter holds great pleasures for those who seek martyrdom. This new understanding inculcated in the believers an ardent zeal for seeking martyrdom.

The narrative went on to describe the believers who continued to fight even after they had been wounded, "Those who answered the call of God and the Messenger, even after being wounded, those who do right and are conscious of God have a great reward." These are the believers whom the Prophet (PBUH) asked to join him in pursuit of the idolaters' army. This occurred the following day after the battle of Uhud took place. They barely escaped death on the battle field, and their wounds were still fresh and painful. But the Prophet (PBUH) called upon them, and did not call upon any other, to join him in his mission. He did not allow any one of those who did not participate in the first battle to join them. They responded favourably to the Prophet's call. It was not only the Prophet's call but it was God's call as well.

What was the rationale behind this move on the part of the Prophet (PBUH)? The group of Muslims that he asked to join him in pursuit of the idolaters were fewer in number than the army that fought the idolaters on the previous day. The memory of defeat was still fresh in their minds, the sadness of losing the battle and losing their comrades filled their hearts. The Prophet (PBUH) objective may have been to efface these feelings off their minds. He did not want the Muslims to return home with a memory of defeat. He may have wanted to convince his companions that what happened in the previous day was only a setback, and that the Muslims are still strong and are capable of fighting their enemy. He may have also wanted to send a message to Quraish. He did not want Quraish to go home with the prize of victory. He did not want Quraish to go home thinking that they have defeated the Muslims once and for all. The Prophet (PBUH) may have wanted to send a message to all the Arabs that the Muslims have a strong faith, and they are willing to embark on any endeavour for the sake of defending this faith. This was a new phenomenon. The phenomenon was dramatically illustrated in the move that the Prophet (PBUH) and his companions took in pursuit of their enemy. The move also illustrated their trust in God, and their confidence in their faith, "Those to whom people said, 'The people have amassed a great army against you, therefore fear them.’ But this only strengthened their faith and they said, ‘God is Sufficient for us, He is our Best Guardian.’”

There are many traditions which describe the difficulties that faced the believers and how they dealt with them to join the Prophet (PBUH) in his pursuit of the idolaters. It is on the authority of Muhammad bin Ishaq that one of the companions of the Prophet (PBUH) who participated in the battle of Uhud said, “My brother and I fought in the battle of Uhud with the Messenger of God (PBUH) and came back wounded. When the call came to join the Messenger of God (PBUH) the following day, my brother said, ‘Are we going to miss a battle with the Messenger of God (PBUH)?’ We did not have a ride, and we were heavily wounded. However, we joined the Messenger of God (PBUH); my wounds were less severe than my brother’s, so whenever he got tired I would carry him.”

These images combine to illustrate the birth of this new phenomenon in the souls of people who did not recognize other than God as their Protecting Guardian. They were happy with having God as their Protector, a happiness that increased as difficulties grew. They responded to those who were trying to scare them, “God is Sufficient for us, He is our Best Guardian.”

The consequences were just as they expected from their Lord, “So they returned with blessing and favour from God, and no harm ever touched them. They followed the good pleasure of God. God’s favour is great.” By the grace of God, they were not hurt in the least.

This group of verses ends with an explanation of the source of fear that human beings may experience in situations like this, “It is only Satan that instils fear in his votaries. Do not fear them but fear Me, if you are true believers.” Satan tries to aggrandize the image of his agents and to magnify their power and abilities to plant fear in the hearts of the believers. The believers should be aware of Satan’s tricks.

“Do not let the conduct of those who rush headlong into disbelief grieve you. Not the least harm will they do to God. God will give them no share in the Hereafter. They will have a severe torment.” This verse provided solace to the Prophet (PBUH) who was saddened by those who hastened to reject faith. They were not able to inflict any harm on God. God is giving them respite because they will have no share in the Hereafter and they will suffer severe torment.

They meet that dreadful doom in the Hereafter because they “purchase disbelief at the price of faith.” They were offered the truth. The signs which support the truth are all around them. They could find the proof in the signs of the harmony of the universe and in their initial natural disposition which can open their eyes to the beauty and miracles of the creation. But they chose to reject the truth.

People may be fooled by the power, wealth, and success which the disbelievers amass. But let them not be fooled by this, “Let not those who disbelieve think that our respite to them is good for themselves. We grant them respite so that they become more sinful. They will have a shameful torment.” Although adversity is a trial; but it is also a blessing from God. It touches only those whom God loves.

God used the battle of Uhud to test people. The test was used to differentiate between the true believers and the hypocrites who joined the ranks of the believers for different reasons, “God will not leave the believers in the state in which you are now, until He separates what is evil from what is good, nor will He disclose to you the secrets of the unseen. But He chooses of His messengers whom He wills. So believe in God, and His messengers. And if you believe and remain conscious of God, you will have a vast reward.” The verse indicates that it is one of God’s norms to subject the believers to tests so that the hypocrites would be exposed. It is also not the norm that God would reveal the secrets of the unseen to human beings. They are not prepared to cope with such experience and they do not need such knowledge, but God chooses messengers to transmit His message. Thus, we are commanded to believe in God and His messengers.

Let us now review some of the lessons that can be gleaned from the verses describing the battle of Uhud.

1. Some people expect miracles from this religion, ignoring the nature of human beings, their capabilities, their intellectual disposition, and their material abilities. These people become disappointed when these miracles fail to occur. The change that people should go through so that they can lead the way of life that God has chosen for them has to be achieved using normal human efforts. The religion adopts a methodology which helps people to change gradually from the state that they are in to the state that they should be in. It is a methodology that recognizes the reality of human nature and the initial natural disposition of people. It achieves its goals relying on normal human means and without taking recourse to miracles or supernatural means.

Naturally, God has the power to change people, with or without the help of this religion. God could have, if He willed, created humankind with a different initial natural disposition. But it was the will of God to create humans as they are, having a free will to decide and choose. It was the will of God that humankind be able to receive guidance. It was the will of God that people would have initial natural dispositions that guide them to make the right decisions.

2. Human beings are not perfect but they can work hard to improve and to rise to supreme levels. Those who failed the test in the battle of Uhud were believers, but they were at the beginning of the road. When, they failed the test they were neither excommunicated nor humiliated but they were taken into the fold and were taught how to deal with their weaknesses. God left them to experience the consequence of disobedience so that they learn the lesson, but He accepted their weakness and forgave them. They were trained and helped to reach the top.
3. A third principle that can be gleaned from this account is the close association between faith, behaviour and attitudes, whether the behaviour and attitudes are in the social, political, economical, or ethical realm. This association was emphasized by highlighting the importance of the concept of God consciousness.

4. Islam uses the analysis of real life occurrences and events to educate and train people. The Qur'an provided a deep and rational analysis of the battle of Uhud reflecting on human nature and its failings, the reasons behind victory and defeat, and the factors that influenced the progress of events. This is done in a dramatic and emotive way to have the strongest effect on people.
5. Islam does not offer abstract teachings that have no bearing on Muslims' daily life. It presents its teachings through real life experiences.
6. Islam does not condone any wrongdoing by anyone no matter how high the rank of this person in society is. Those who make mistakes are held accountable. People are all equal in front of God and in front of the law. No mistakes are swept under the rug because the perpetrator is one of the dignitaries. Mistakes committed by Muslims are their responsibility not the fault of Islam.

Verses: 180 to 189

180. Let not those who covetously withhold the bounty, which God has bestowed on them of His Grace, think that it is good for them. It is bad for them. The things which they covetously withheld will be tied to their necks like a twisted collar on the Day of Judgment. To God belongs the heritage of the heavens and the earth; and God is Totally-Aware of all that you do.
181. God has heard the words of those who say, "Truly, God is indigent and we are rich." We shall certainly record their words - as well the slaying of the prophets in defiance of all that is right - and We shall say to them, "Taste the torment of the scorching fire.
182. This is on account of that which your own hands have sent before (you to the judgment)." God is never unjust to His servants.
183. Those who said, "God took our promise not to believe in a messenger unless He brings us an offering which will be consumed by fire." Say, "There came to you messengers before me, with clear signs and even with what you asked for. Why then did you slay them, if you speak the truth?"
184. And if they reject you, so other messengers were rejected before you, who came with clear signs, Books, and the Book of enlightenment.
185. Every soul shall have a taste of death. And only on the Day of Judgment shall you be paid your full recompense. Only he who is pulled away from the fire and admitted to paradise will attain a supreme achievement. The life of this world is only an illusory pleasure.
186. You shall certainly be tried in your possessions and in your persons; and you shall certainly hear much that will grieve you, from those who received the Scripture before you and from the idolaters. But if you persevere, and remain conscious of God, then that will be the best course.
187. And remember when God took a covenant from the People of the Scripture, to make it known and clear to humankind, and not to hide it; but they threw it away behind their backs, and bartered it for a small price. And vile was the bargain they made.

188. Think not that those who exult in what they have done, and love to be praised for what they have not done, will escape the torment. A painful torment is theirs.
189. To God belong the dominion of the heavens and the earth; and God has power over all things. (3:180-189)

“Let not those who covetously withhold the bounty, which God has bestowed on them of His Grace, think that it is good for them. It is bad for them. The things which they covetously withheld will be tied to their necks like a twisted collar on the Day of Judgment. To God belongs the heritage of the heavens and the earth; and Allah is Totally-Aware of all that you do.” There is no authentic source which indicates which group of people this verse was referring to. However, this is a general statement that applies to all those who are stingy and do not want to share what God has provided them. They think that their wealth will be preserved if they do not spend it in the way of God. The Qur’an rebuts this claim and warns them that they will be tormented on the Day of Judgment with what they kept for themselves. It is a dire warning especially when they are reminded that their wealth has been provided by the grace God. They came to this world with nothing and only by the grace of God they were able to amass wealth, and now they refuse to give back some of what they received. Those who said, “Truly, God is indigent and we are rich.” God will certainly record, “their words - as well the slaying of the prophets in defiance of all that is right” God will say to them, “Taste the torment of the scorching fire.” Describing God as an indigent does not only reflect a crooked understanding of the nature of God, but it is also distasteful. How can the creature address His Creator in such a manner? Everything they say will be recorded and they will be held accountable on the Day of Judgment. They will also be held accountable for killing the messengers of God who were sent to them. This seems to be a reference to some Jews who committed these sins. The punishment that they will receive on the Day of Judgment is on account of that, “Which your own hands have sent before. God is never unjust to His servants.”

“Those who said, ‘God took our promise not to believe in a messenger unless He showed us a sacrifice consumed by fire.’ Say, ‘There came to you messengers before me, with clear signs and even with what you asked for. Why then did you slay them, if you speak the truth?’” They did not believe in Muhammad’s (PBUH) message because he did not perform the miracle of a fire descending from heaven to burn his offering. This seems to be a miracle that was given to some of the prophets who were sent earlier to the Jews. The Qur’an confronts them with the historical account of what happened when the earlier prophets performed the miracle they requested. Then the Qur’an offers a consolation to the Prophet (PBUH), “And if they reject you, so other messengers were rejected before you, who came with clear signs, Scriptures, and the Book of enlightenment.” He was not the first prophet to be denied by his people. Many a prophet came before him, they were supported with miracles and a Scripture from God, but they were also rejected by their people.

The Qur’an then addresses the believers and outlines certain values that they should cherish and persevere in protecting them, “Every soul shall have a taste of death. And only on the Day of Judgment shall you be paid your full recompense. Only he who is pulled away from the fire and admitted to paradise will attain a supreme achievement. The life of this world is only an illusory pleasure.” This is a truth that should rest deep in everyone’s consciousness: our stay on this earth is only temporary. Death is the inevitable truth. All humans will meet the same destiny, but what differentiates people from one another is the reward on the Day of the Resurrection. The expression “pulled away” intimates an image of Hell fire that has a gravity which pulls people towards it. One needs help to be pulled away from Hell fire. Those who were able to get the necessary help are the successful. It is a dramatic image which involves pulling and pushing. It alludes to the pulling force of sin. The desire to sin pulls people towards Hellfire; they need a strong force to counteract this pull. No matter how vigilant human beings are in resisting the pull of sin they would not be saved except by the grace of God. Worldly life has many pleasures but they are all transient pleasures, nothing will remain forever. The true everlasting pleasure is obtained when one is admitted to paradise after one was pulled away from Hellfire. Realizing this fact, one is ready to sacrifice and persevere in the face of adversity, “You shall certainly be tried in your possessions and in your persons; and you shall certainly hear much that will grieve you, from those who received the Scripture before you and from the idolaters. But if you persevere, and remain conscious of God, then that will be the best course.” This is the standard route through which all who subscribe to a specific ideology will pass. Those who subscribe to a certain ideology are usually tested. In trying to be faithful to their ideology, they are usually faced with adverse conditions. There are many obstacles that one should cross on the road to paradise, but the fulfillment of carnal desires paves the road to Hellfire. Perseverance is the only way to remain on the road to paradise.

“And remember when God took a pledge from the People of the Scripture to make it known and clear to people and not to hide it; but they threw it away behind their backs, and bartered it for a small price. And vile was the bargain they made.” God has taken a pledge from the People of Scripture that they should transmit the knowledge that God gave them in the Scripture to humankind, but some of them chose to breach this covenant and hide the Scripture behind their backs for a miserable price.

“Think not that those who exult in what they have done, and love to be praised for what they have not done, will escape the torment. A painful torment is theirs.” It has been narrated on the authority of Al-Bukhari that this verse is referring to some of the hypocrites who did not want to join the Prophet (PBUH) whenever he went on a military expedition. They were happy that they were able to provide excuses to the Prophet (PBUH) after the battle and they would love being praised for their valor. However, this is a general statement that applies to all those who claim a credit for something that they did not do. They will not escape the punishment for their false claim. For God has, “The dominion of the heavens and the earth; and God has power over all things.”

Verses: 190 to 200

190. In the creation of the heavens and the earth and the alternation of night and day, there are indeed signs for men of understanding.
191. Those who celebrate the praise of God, standing, sitting, and lying down on their sides, and contemplate the (wonders of) the creation of the heavens and the earth, and say, "Our Lord, You have not created all of this in vain. Glory be to You. Protect us from the torment of the Fire.

192. Our Lord, You have indeed disgraced whomsoever You do admit to the Fire. The wrongdoers will never find any helpers.
193. Our Lord, we have heard someone calling to Faith, 'Believe you in your Lord,' and we have believed. Our Lord, forgive us our sins, absolve us of our evil deeds, and make us die the death of the righteous.
194. Our Lord, grant us what You did promise us through Your messengers, and save us from the disgrace on the Day of Resurrection. You never break Your promise."
195. And their Lord has heard them, and answered them, "Never will I let the work of any of you be lost, be he a male or a female, each like the other in reward. Those who emigrated, were driven out from their homes, suffered harm in My cause, fought, and were slain, verily, I will absolve them of their evil deeds, and admit them into gardens underneath which rivers flow. This is a reward from God, and God has the best of rewards."
196. Let not the vicissitude (of the success) of the disbelievers through the land deceives you.
197. It is but a brief enjoyment. Their ultimate refuge is hell - an evil resting place.
198. But those who remain conscious of God, for them are Gardens underneath which rivers flow, wherein they will be safe for ever as a reward from God. That which God has in store is better for the righteous.
199. And there are, certainly, among the People of the Scripture those who believe in God, in what has been revealed to you, and in what has been revealed to them. They bow in humility to God. They will not barter the revelations of God for a small price. For them is a reward with their Lord, and God is swift in reckoning.
200. You who believe persevere, vie in such perseverance, strengthen each other, and remain conscious of God that you may succeed. (3:190-200)

This is the last lesson in this Sura. The Sura dealt with a large number of issues which form a comprehensive Islamic perspective. The Sura offered clarifications of certain misunderstandings and rebuttals of myths in its dialogue with the People of Scripture, the idolaters, and the hypocrites. It also detailed a plan for the daily life to be followed by members of the Muslim community. The plan dealt with issues of spending in the way of God, fulfillment of responsibility, coping with adversity, and the willingness to sacrifice in the way of God.

This last part continues to deal with issues that are related to the main themes of Sura. The verses discuss the universe as a sign of the existence of God. The universe is an open book full of signs and truths that only those who reflect are able to read and understand. The verses also point to the close connection between the nature of the universe and the initial natural disposition of the human being, a connection which should shape the relationship between humankind and the universe.

“In the creation of the heavens and the earth and the alternation of night and day, there are indeed signs for men of understanding. Those who celebrate the praise of God, standing, sitting, and lying down on their sides, and contemplate the (wonders of) the creation of the heavens and the earth” What are the signs that those who reflect and celebrate the praise of God realize when they see the alternation of day and night? And how can they reach the conclusion, “Our Lord, You have not created all of this in vain.’ Glory be to You. Protect us from the torment of the Fire.” This is a conclusion that a person who has a sound understanding and who receives the correct signals from the universe is able to reach. The Qur’an urges humankind to continuously reflect on the creation of the universe. The Qur’an urges us to open our minds and our hearts to different cosmic phenomena and try to reach to the secrets of this universe which God created.

If we open our hearts and minds and reflect on the scenes of heaven and earth, of the alternating day and night, we would reach the conclusion that there is a single power behind the planning, the organization, and the harmony of the universe. There is no randomness in the creation of the universe. Every part of the universe moves according to a plan. The verses connect between celebrating the praise of God and the contemplation of the heavens and earth. It implies that this contemplation is a part of the rituals of worship of God. This establishes two basic Islamic principles. The first one is that thinking and reflecting on the God’s creation is an essential component of the worship of God. The sciences which aim at the discovery of the secrets of the creation and the laws that govern the universe are part and parcel of the worship of God when this study is done with the intention of the remembrance of God and celebrating His praise. The second principle is that the truth of the cosmic phenomena can only be understood and appreciated fully by hearts which are intensely involved in the remembrance and praise of God.

“Our Lord, You have indeed shamed whomsoever You do admit to the Fire. The wrongdoers will never find any helpers.” This supplication points to the fact that their fear of Hellfire is actually a fear of being shamed. The believers find the pain of experiencing the humiliation which the companions of the Hellfire will suffer to be more painful than the fire itself. They fear displeasing God more than they fear the pain that they would experience by the fire. They believe that only God can help them, and the wrongdoers will have no helper.

“Our Lord, We have heard someone calling to faith, ‘Believe you in your Lord,’ and we have believed. Our Lord, forgive us our sins, absolve us of our evil deeds, and make us die the death of the righteous.” They have open and sensitive hearts, open to accept what they receive and they are cautious to commit anything that is tainted by the shadow of a sin. They hasten to seek God’s forgiveness for their sins and they long to die as righteous people.

This supplication is compatible with one of the main themes of the Sura which revolves around the desirability of seeking God’s forgiveness often. Seeking God’s forgiveness often provides support in the never ending battle against the temptation to indulge in carnal desires. The results of this basic battle determine the outcome of all battles that the believers will be engaged in during their life on earth.

The supplication ends on a note of appeal, hope, trust in God, and certitude in His fulfillment of the promise, “Our Lord, grant us what You did promise us through Your messengers, and save us from shame on the Day of Resurrection. You never break Your promise.”

What is the relationship between the reflection on heavens and earth, the alternation of day and night and this passionate supplication? Those who are able to reflect will reach the conclusion that the process which runs the lives of people living in this universe is a process which has been carefully planned. It is a rationale process that has goals and objectives, and it aims at establishing the truth with justice. People living according to such a plan must be held accountable for what they do. There must then, be another life in which people will reap the reward for what they have done in the previous life.

“And their Lord has heard them, and answered them, ‘Never will I let the work of any of you be lost, be he a male or a female, each like the other in reward. Those who emigrated, were driven out from their homes, suffered harm in My Cause, fought, and were slain, verily, I will absolve them of their evil deeds, and admit them into Gardens under which rivers flow. This is a reward from God, and God has the best of rewards.’” God’s response to the supplication was given in detail. First, it starts with an assurance that the supplication will be accepted, then, the characteristics of those whose supplication will be accepted are given. The supplication is not a lip service but it is a mandate to “act.” Action is the practical application of the principles of reflection, planning, celebrating the praise of God, and seeking His forgiveness. God does not promise those who remain conscious of Him worldly benefits, but He promises them a reward from Him and He has the best of rewards.

“Let not the vicissitude (of the success) of the disbelievers through the land deceives you. It is but a brief enjoyment. Their ultimate refuge is Hell - an evil resting place. But those who remain conscious of God, for them are Gardens underneath which rivers flow, wherein they will be safe for ever as a reward from God. That which God has in store is better for the righteous.” The vicissitude of the success of the disbelievers is a sign of the enjoyment of life and a sign of power and influence. This may overwhelm the hearts of the believers with feelings of envy, for they work hard and sometimes they get nothing in return. The message to the believers is that do not let this deceive you. This is only a transient enjoyment, it will not last long, and it is going to lead to a bad abode. On the other hand, there are gardens underneath which rivers flow waiting for the believers who are conscious of God. The choice should be clear for all.

“And there are, certainly, among the People of the Scripture those who believe in God, in what has been revealed to you, and in what has been revealed to them, bowing in humility to God. They will not barter the revelations of God for a small price. For them is a reward with their Lord, and God is swift in reckoning.” Having mentioned the scenes of the believers supplicating to God and God responding favourably to them, the People of the Scripture are not forgotten. Those of them who believed in God, believed in what was revealed to them, and in what has been revealed to Muhammad (PBUH) their reward awaits them with their Lord.

The very last verse embodied a command to the believers, “You who believe persevere, vie in such perseverance, strengthen each other, and remain conscious of God that you may succeed.” The command is to persevere and remain conscious of God. Perseverance and God consciousness are mentioned often in this Sura. Sometimes they are mentioned together and sometimes they are mentioned separately. These are two important attributes that the believers need in their fight against their enemy. Perseverance is the sustenance for the believers which support them along the path of God. It is a long path full of difficulties and obstacles. Perseverance is needed to ward off temptations of carnal desires, to provide support in face of adversity, and to provide strength in face of human weakness. God consciousness goes hand in hand with perseverance; it is the attentive guard that evokes feelings of God observance in the conscious of the believer. This command sums up the Sura in a beautiful finale.

Sura 4: Al-Nisaa (The Women)

In the name of God, the Lord of Mercy, the Giver of Mercy

This Sura was revealed in Medina. It is the second longest Sura in the Quran. It was revealed after Surat Al-Mumtahina (Chapter 60). It has been narrated that some verses from Al-Mumtahina were revealed during the battle of Al-Hudaiybiah in the sixth year (H), while others were revealed after the conquest of Mecca in the eighth year (H). However, as we have noted before, the narrations which provide a chronological order for the revelation of the different Suras of the Quran may not be accurate. In addition, no Sura was revealed in its entirety all at once. Whenever a group of verses was revealed to the Prophet (PBUH), he used to instruct his scribes where exactly they should place these verses. Thus, the contents of many of the Suras were not finalized until the revelation of the whole Quran had been completed. It seems that the revelation of this Sura started shortly after the Prophet (PBUH) had migrated to Medina. Verses in this Sura continued to be revealed over the subsequent eight years.

This Sura reflects the efforts that were spent to establish and protect the Muslim nation; and to build and nurture the Muslim society. It presents an example of the impact of the Quran on this fledgling society, a society whose values were deeply rooted in the verses of the Quran. This is a society which was fashioned according to a divinely inspired project. The verses of the Sura portray the efforts that were involved in implementing the divine project to move humankind from the lowermost level of vain desires to the uppermost level of pure faith along a path full of the obstacles of temptation and desires. The verses of the previous Sura dealt with a similar theme but each Sura of the Quran has its own way of addressing the issues. Each Sura has its own characteristics which sets it apart from other Suras.

The verses of this Sura express the serious effort that the Quran devoted to erase the characteristics of the pre-Islamic society from which the new Muslim society emerged. The verses provided a program to cleanse the Muslim society of all the impurities of the Pre-Islamic society and shape the new society according to the divinely inspired way of life. This is done by stating clearly the characteristics which set the new society apart from the old one and by exposing the attempts of the enemies of Islam which aimed at swaying the Muslims away from the straight path which they have chosen.

The verses also record the struggle between the remnants of the old society and the principles which are shaping the new society. The term "age of ignorance" does not only apply to the pre-Islamic society but it applies also to any society which allows human beings to enslave their fellow human beings. This phenomenon exists to a varying degrees in all societies controlled by man-made laws. Islam provides the only way of life which frees all people from the servitude imposed on them by their fellow human beings. In this divinely inspired way of life, human beings serve God alone, worship God alone, lower their head to God alone, and follow laws decreed by God alone. Their servitude to God frees them from any other kind of servitude. This is the criterion which differentiates an Islamic society from a society which lives in the age of ignorance. The verses in this Sura depict very clearly the demarcation line between the two societies.

It is understood that the Quranic commands addressed situations which were prevalent in the pre-Islamic society. The commands were meant to establish new rules or to rescind existing ones. However, the rules that the Quran decreed were meant to apply to Muslims societies in general. It is a fundamental principle that Quranic commands provide general rulings even though they may have been revealed to address specific situations. Quranic commands were meant to apply at all times and for all places.

This may explain the choice of Arabia to be the birth place of this message. The genius of the message can only be realized by observing how the message was able to transform the primitive idolater society into a highly civilized one. The idolater society in Arabia was a backward society in all aspects of life: religious, moral, social, or political. The message was successful in transforming the society of the idolater savages to a highly refined and civilized society. This transformation took place as a result of a divine project that addressed the needs and aspirations of human nature. This transformational program can be applied by any society, anywhere and at any time.

When we read this Sura, we can understand some of the oppressing practices that existed in the pre-Islamic society. The verses describe how the rights of the orphans, especially female orphans, were usurped by their guardians. These guardians, motivated by greed, were anxious to arrogate the orphans' wealth before they grow up and become able to claim their rights. Greedy guardians married female orphans under their care to seize their property. The rights of the most vulnerable - children and women - were trampled upon by powerful men who deprived them of their rightful share in inheritance. In addition, women were ill- treated and abused.

Al-Maraghi summarizes the topics which the Sura dealt with. These are

- Commanding God consciousness.
- Stating that the whole human race was created from one soul.
- Defining permissible relations between family members.
- Stating the rules of inheritance.
- Stating the rules of war.
- Rebuttal of claims made by the People of the Scripture.
- Narrating stories about the hypocrites.

Verses: 1 to14

1. People, be conscious of your Lord, Who created you from a single being and from it created its mate and spread from these two, many men and women; and be conscious of God, in Whose name you demand your mutual rights, Beware of severing the ties of the wombs; certainly God is ever watching over you.

2. And give to the orphans their property, and do not substitute worthless (things) for (their) good (ones), and do not devour their property (by mixing it up) with your own; this is certainly a major sin.
3. And if you fear that you cannot act equitably towards orphans, then marry such women who seem good to you, two or three or four; but if you fear that you will not do justice (between them), then (marry) only one or what your right hand possesses; this is more proper, that you may not deviate from the right course.
4. And give women their bridal gift upon marriage, but if they of themselves be pleased to give up a portion of it and give it to you, then take it with enjoyment.
5. And do not give away your property which God has made for you a means of support to the weak of understanding, and maintain them out of its profit, and clothe them and speak kindly to them.
6. And test the orphans until they reach the age of marriage; then if you find in them maturity of intellect, release their property to them, and do not consume it extravagantly and hastily, lest they should grow up; and whoever is rich, let him abstain altogether (from taking of the property), and whoever is poor, let him have for himself what is just and reasonable; then when you release their property to them, have (the transaction) witnessed in their presence; and God is enough as a Reckoner.
7. From what is left by parents and near relatives, there is a share for men and a share for women, whether the property is small or large, a legal share.
8. But if at the time of the division of the legacy other relatives, or orphans or poor, are present, give them a portion of the (property), and speak kindly to them.
9. And let those who, should they leave behind them helpless offspring would fear for their future, be conscious of God, and let them speak justly.
10. Certainly, those who devour the property of the orphans unjustly, they only devour fire into their bellies and they will soon endure blazing fire.
11. God commands you regarding your children: the male shall have the equal of the portion of two females; then if they are more than two females, they shall have two-thirds of what the deceased has left, and if there is one, she shall have one-half; and as for his parents, each of them shall have one-sixth of what he has left if he has a child, but if he has no child and (only) his two parents inherited him, then his mother shall have one-third; but if he has brothers, then his mother shall have one-sixth after (the payment of) a bequest he may have bequeathed or a debt he may have incurred; your parents and your children, you do not know which of them is more beneficial to you; this is an injunction from God, certainly God is Omniscient, Wise.
12. And you shall have half of what your wives leave if they have no child, but if they have a child, then you shall have one-fourth of what they leave after (payment of) any bequest they may have bequeathed or a debt they may have incurred; and they shall have one-fourth of what you leave if you have no child, but if you have a child then they shall have one-eighth of what you leave after (payment of) a bequest you may have bequeathed or a debt you may have incurred; and if a man or a woman dies leaving no parents or offspring, but he (or she) has a brother or a sister, then each of them shall have one-sixth of the inheritance, but if there are more siblings, they shall share one-third of the inheritance between them, after (payment of) any bequest that may have been bequeathed or a debt that may have been incurred with no harm done to others; this is ordained by God, and God is Omniscient, Forbearing.

13. These are the limits set by God, and whoever obeys God and His Messenger will be admitted to gardens beneath which rivers flow, in which he will dwell forever; and this is the supreme achievement.

14. And whoever disobeys God and His Messenger and transgresses the limits set by God, will be admitted fire to abide therein, and he shall have a humiliating torment. (4:1-14)

“People, be conscious of your Lord, Who created you from a single being and from it created its mate and spread from these two, many men and women. Be conscious of God, in whose name you demand your mutual rights. Beware of severing the ties of the wombs; certainly God is ever watching over you.” This is an address to the whole humanity to remind them of the concept of the oneness of the Creator and the common root of their race. People need to reflect on these statements. How did humankind come to this world? Who brought them? Before being created they were nothing, they came to life by God’s will. They were given unique characteristics and talents to cope with life on earth. The power that brought them to existence knows everything about them. This power has the right to organize their lives and to determine the norms and principles which should govern their societies.

Human life started with a single decision from God and the whole humanity sprung from one common root. This makes the whole humanity a single family, and all people are related to each other. Understanding this fact should help diminish the differences that divide people and break up the ties between them. The evils of race discrimination and genocide would have been avoided had the human race recognized and understood this fact. All traditions that discriminate between people on the basis of skin color, gender, or class have no real justification. The long history of discrimination practices on the basis of gender should have been avoided. Souls of males and females are the same. Males and females share the same nature and the same human characteristics. They were created to complement each other. Each has a mission to fulfill and each has been created with the appropriate aptitude to fulfill this mission.

The verse also underscores the importance of the family as the building block of the human society. Humanity started with a single soul and it was complemented with its mate, both formed a single family from which sprang the whole human race. Had God willed He would have created many men and women in the first instance. The idea of starting the creation with a single family highlights the important role that the family plays in enhancing the human ties between the members of the human society. The social system in Islam paid great attention to developing and strengthening the means which support and protect the family structure. This is one of the major themes dealt with in this Sura as well as in many others. The family starts with two partners. A strong family structure cannot be established while one of the partners is being ill-treated, abused or wronged in any way. Islam paid great attention to establishing women’s rights as human beings and giving them their due respect.

When we reflect further on this verse, we cannot but wonder of how many different men and women sprang from one single family. People born over the centuries, since the beginning of the creation, are all different. They are different in form and shape. They are different in their aptitudes and abilities. They are different in their dispositions and feelings. Who else is able to do this except God, the Creator?

The verse urges people to remain conscious of their Lord in whose name they conduct their transactions and request their rights from each other. It urges them to remain conscious of God when they deal with each other. The meaning of the expression “God consciousness” is understood and it is oft repeated in the Quran. However, the expression “conscious of the wombs” is a different one, it is an amazing expression and difficult to explain. It enlivens the feelings of the human being. The expression exhorts the believer to be sensitive to the needs and rights of family relationships. It exhorts the believers to avoid hurting, or committing injustice against those with whom we share a relationship through the wombs. Remember that God is ever watching over us. He is the Creator who knows His creation. There is nothing we can hide from Him. He is fully aware of our deeds and our thoughts.

“And give to the orphans their property, and do not substitute worthless (things) for (their) good (ones), and do not devour their property (by mixing it up) with your own; this is certainly a major sin.” The strong beginning of the Sura lays the foundation for the social system in Islam. This is a system which is determined to protect the vulnerable, secure women’s rights and dignity, establish means for the protection of society’s wealth, and establish a fair system for inheritance.

It starts by commanding the guardians of orphans to return the wealth to its rightful owners when they reach the age of maturity. The wealth should be protected and guardians should not usurp any of it or replace a property with another of lesser quality. Guardians are warned that it is a major sin not to heed these commands. Such warnings are needed to complement the legislated laws. People may break the law if they feel that they are able to get away with it, but realizing that God is ever watching provides a strong incentive not to break the law, even if they are able to escape the consequences in this life.

“And if you fear that you cannot act equitably towards orphans, then marry such women who seem good to you, two or three or four; but if you fear that you will not do justice (between them), then (marry) only one or what your right hand possesses; this is more proper, that you may not deviate from the right course.” ‘Urwah bin Al-Zubair (RA) asked ‘Aisha (RA) about this verse. She said, “Son of my sister, this is regarding wealthy female orphans whose guardians marry them for the sake of their wealth and beauty but they don’t give them their bridal gifts as they would have given other women.” The verse came to abolish this unfair practice. If the guardians are not able to treat their charges fairly, they should seek matrimony with other women. This removes any chance of abuse of the vulnerable charges. This tradition shows that Muslims continued to practice some pre-Islamic unfair traditions until the Quran commanded the believers to relinquish these practices and to be careful in their treatment of orphans. The verse exhorts guardians to exercise justice. Justice is a moral value in Islam that needs to be heeded in all its forms and in any circumstance.

The verse provides a license for polygamy with a certain caveat: fairness has to be observed in treating the wives. When a man fears that he will be unable to treat all his wives with absolute fairness, he should not marry more than one wife. This license is a source of debate between those who are against and those who are pro the practice of polygamy. It has also been used as a spring board to launch attacks against Islam. We need to consider this carefully to show the rationale behind this license and the historical background for the practice.

Before the advent of Islam, the practice of polygamy was prevalent in Arabia. There was no limit on how many wives a man can have. Authentic traditions talk about men who had ten or more wives and were asked to keep only four and divorce the rest when they wanted to embrace Islam. The verse was revealed not to establish a new norm but to modify an existing norm. Men are not allowed to marry more than four wives with the caveat that they should treat them all fairly. Equal and fair treatment is a condition that needs to be fulfilled, otherwise polygamy is not permissible.

However, one can also ask, why did Islam allow the practice of polygamy to continue? Islam is a system which caters to realistic, legitimate, and necessary human needs. Islam provides a system in harmony with the initial natural disposition of humankind. It provides a system which endeavors to refine human behavior, neither ignoring the initial natural disposition nor allowing the indulgence in worldly desires without limits.

A system of polygamy which is based on the establishment of justice and the approval of all parties concerned provides practical solution to social problems that existed in human societies since the dawn of history and will continue to exist till the end of time. These include the disparity between the number of marriageable men and women, the difference between the sexual norms of men and women, and the various situations in which polygamy represents a better alternative to divorce. Such is the choice of Islam. A system of legal and restricted polygamy that ensures the rights and preserves the dignity of all parties involved.

Those who understand the spirit of Islam recognize that Islam does not condone polygamy for its own sake nor as a mechanism to abuse women for the sake of satisfying uncontrolled and unwarranted sexual desires. Islam recognizes polygamy as a necessary solution to certain social problems. It is the exception rather than the norm. It is not left without constraints or controls. It should only be exercised in special circumstances and not as a requirement that has to be fulfilled by every man. The permission to take recourse to this solution is controlled by the requirement of the fair treatment of all wives. The husband has to treat all wives equally in all aspects of life. Islam recognizes that humans have no control over their inner feelings. So, it is not logical to create laws controlling human emotions. Thus, the scope of the treatment that requires fairness does not include inner feelings or emotions. This exemption has been mentioned in the verse: “and you will not be able to treat women with absolute fairness, even if you tried keenly” (4:129). Some tried to argue that this verse is a proof that polygamy is not allowed in Islam. This is not so. We cannot imagine that the Quran allows a practice in one verse and prohibits it in another. The scope of fairness in treatment mentioned in the first verse encompasses material and physical aspects of life e.g. maintenance, daily interactions, and intimate relationships. Fairness has to be observed in satisfying the material and physical needs of the different wives. The second verse points to the inability of human beings to control their inner feelings. Matters of the heart lie in God’s domain of control.

To reiterate, polygamy existed before the advent of Islam. Islam introduced controls and constraints to the practice of polygamy. Islam does not consider polygamy to be the norm but it is an exception that can be used in special circumstances. The fact that some Muslims abuse this license does not warrant its abolishment. The right to marry more than one wife is conditional on the ability of the man to be fair in treating his wives. Fairness in treating all wives is a condition for the license to practice polygamy. Fairness should be observed by the husband in providing for his wives, and allotting equal shares of his time and attention. This condition does not apply to feelings and emotions, since these are beyond the control of human beings.

Marrying a slave girl was one of the devices that Islam introduced to end slavery. Marrying a slave girl removes the stigma cast upon slaves. Very often a slave girl is freed upon marrying a free man. Even if she was not freed at the time of marriage, she would be freed once she gives birth or when her husband dies. Her children are born free. At the time of the advent of Islam, slavery was a well-established practice in the world. Islam instituted several ways to eradicate slavery; however, it could not abolish the practice completely. Islam does not condone buying and selling of human beings as slaves, and it does not condone using slave girls as a tool for sexual pleasures.

The verse ends by explaining the rationale behind all these rules, “that you may not deviate from the right course.” The right course is the just course. Justice is an objective of all Islamic laws and social justice is a requirement for a sound and healthy society.

“And give women their bridal gift upon marriage, but if they of themselves be pleased to give up a portion of it and give it to you, then take it with enjoyment. And do not give away your property which God has made for you a means of support to the weak of understanding, but maintain them out of its profit, and clothe them and speak kindly to them.” This verse establishes the right of the bride to receive a wedding gift as her own property. She has the right to receive it and dispose of it as she wishes. The verse abolished practices that were prevalent in the pre-Islamic society which robbed women of their rights in receiving and disposing of their wedding gifts as they wish. A girl’s guardian had a free hand in deciding whom she should marry; he had the right to receive the wedding gift on her behalf and to dispose of it according to his own will. Many of these marriages were conducted as business deals to benefit the guardians. This verse came to abolish these bad practices and give a girl the right to decide for herself. She can choose freely and under no compulsion to share her wedding gift with her husband.

The wealth that God endowed individual orphans with is also intended for the benefit of the community. It can be looked at as a community property entrusted to individuals to invest and enjoy the accruing benefits. Wealth has to be protected, so it should be entrusted to those who are capable of managing it. Guardians should be appointed to manage the property of orphans who are weak minded or unable to manage their property appropriately. The needs of the orphans should be satisfied using the accrued benefit. This provides protection of the orphans’ wealth.

“And test the orphans until they reach the age of marriage; then if you find in them maturity of intellect, release their property to them, and do not consume it extravagantly and hastily, lest they should grow up; and whoever is rich, let him abstain altogether (from taking of the property), and whoever is poor, let him have for himself what is just and reasonable; then when you release their property to them, have (the transaction) witnessed in their presence; and God is enough as a Reckoner.” When orphans reach the age of maturity, they should be tested to determine whether or not they are able to manage their property. If it is determined that they are able to manage their property, the property has to be delivered to them in perfect condition. The guardians are admonished not to squander the property before the orphan reaches the age of maturity. The guardians should protect the wealth placed in their trust and do their best to grow it. If the guardian is a needy person then he should be recompensed reasonably for his efforts, but if the guardian is wealthy then he should not seek any compensation for his efforts. Witnesses should be present at the time of the transfer of the property. Guardians should remember that God is the best of those who reckon.

These verses show the enormous care that the divine project took to eradicate the corrupt practices which were prevalent in the pre-Islamic society. These practices which allowed guardians to squander the wealth under their trust were abolished by Islam and rules were established to protect the vulnerable orphans.

“From what is left by parents and near relatives, there is a share for men and a share for women, whether the property is small or large, a legal share. But if at the time of the division of the legacy other relatives, or orphans or poor, are present, give them a portion of the (property), and speak kindly to them. And let those who, should they leave behind them helpless offspring would fear for their future, be conscious of God, and let them speak justly. Certainly, those who devour the property of the orphans unjustly, they only devour fire into their bellies and they will soon endure blazing fire.” This is the fundamental principle that Islam introduced fourteen hundred years ago to establish women’s right to inheritance. In the pre-Islamic society people were given rights which were commensurate with their ability to contribute to society’s production or defense requirements. Islam established the principle of basic human rights. All human beings have equal worth irrespective of their material contribution to society. Having fulfilled the basic common human rights, the special needs of people can then be addressed according to their varying societal and family responsibilities.

Rules and traditions in the pre-Islamic society allowed only a small portion of the estate of a deceased person to be given to females and children heirs because females and children did not contribute to the fighting power of the tribe. Islamic law came to give all heirs fair shares. This is consistent with the Islamic premise of protecting the family structure. Depriving some members of a fair share in the inheritance creates animosity between the members of the family. Islamic inheritance law gives a fair share to each member of the family of the deceased taking into consideration their responsibilities in supporting other family members. Protecting the family structure is one of the objectives of the social system in Islam. Islam recognizes that a strong and healthy society can only be established if its building block, the family, is strong and healthy. Islamic laws are designed to strengthen the solidarity between family members.

The Quran addresses the hearts of the believers urging them to think of the orphan child under their guardianship as their own. It takes more than a law to protect the rights of the orphans. The Quran combines the strength of the law with the fear of God to ensure that the rights of the orphans are protected.

“God commands you regarding your children: the male shall have the equal of the portion of two females; then if they are more than two females, they shall have two-thirds of what the deceased has left, and if there is one, she shall have one half; and as for his parents, each of them shall have the sixth of what he has left if he has a child, but if he has no child and (only) his two parents inherit him, then his mother shall have the third; but if he has brothers, then his mother shall have the sixth after (the payment of) a bequest he may have bequeathed or a debt he may have incurred; your parents and your children, you do not know which of them is more beneficial to you; this is an injunction from God, certainly God is Omniscient, Wise. And you shall have half of what your wives leave if they have no child, but if they have a child, then you shall have one-fourth of what they leave after (payment of) any bequest they may have bequeathed or a debt they may have incurred; and they shall have one-fourth of what you leave if you have no child, but if you have a child then they shall have one-eighth of what you leave after (payment of) a bequest you may have bequeathed or a debt you may have incurred; and if a man or a woman dies leaving no parents or offspring, but he (or she) has a brother or a sister, then each of them shall have one-sixth of the inheritance, but if there are more siblings, they shall share one-third of inheritance between them, after (payment of) any bequest that may have been bequeathed or a debt that may have been incurred with no harm done to others; this is ordained by God, and God is Omniscient, Forbearing.” These two verses, in addition to a third one at the end of the Sura, establish the basis for the methodology of distributing an estate among the heirs of a deceased person. Further details of these rules were provided by the Prophet (PBUH) in some cases, and by the work of the scholars in other cases. We will reflect briefly on the interpretation of these verses. More details can be found in books on Islamic jurisprudence. The verses start by stating that these are God’s commands. He knows what is best for the believers. He is the Provider, and it is He who divides the shares among people. The male has twice the share of the female. When these verses were revealed, many of the Arabs who embraced Islam expressed their dissatisfaction with the new rules. They were used to the practice of giving most of the estate to those who can fight and provide protection for the tribe and they wanted this practice to continue. These objections were not appropriate nor were they warranted. God knows best what is beneficial for His servants. Thus, Islam came to change all of this; the female shall have the right to inherit. However, the female share is half that of the male. This division is not rooted in a feeling of patriarchal supremacy. It is congruent with the obligations that males are expected to undertake. It is the husband’s responsibility to provide for his wife and their children. The wife has no obligation to provide for her family. It is only fair that the male’s share of the inheritance to be twice the share of a female in the same category.

If the heirs were all females, then they inherit two thirds of the estate. If the deceased left behind only one daughter, then she would inherit half the estate; and the remainder goes to the nearest blood-relation of the deceased.

The verses continue to prescribe the shares of the parents of the deceased through different scenarios. Debts should be settled first before the shares are distributed among the heirs. If the deceased bequeathed a part of his/her estate, then the will has to be fulfilled before the shares are determined. Bequests are limited to one third of the estate. They are meant to address situations where the deceased would like to compensate a person who has no legal right to inherit according to the law. These bequests should not be used to deprive the rightful heirs of their rights.

People are reminded that there is a rationale behind the legislation of these laws. Heirs whether parents or children should be treated fairly and objectively. God knows better who of them is more deserving than the other. These are God's commands and they should be obeyed. God is Omniscient, Wise.

The share of the husband in his wife's estate and the wife in her husband's estate are described depending on whether they have children or not. The last rule is regarding a person who does not leave behind children or parents.

The verses end by reminding people not to use the right to bequest a portion of the estate to inflict any harm on any of the rightful heirs. Debts should be settled before the rules are applied. These are the commands of God the Omniscient, the Forbearing.

“These are the limits set by God, and whoever obeys God and His Messenger will be admitted to gardens beneath which rivers flow, in which he will dwell forever; and this is the supreme achievement. And whoever disobeys God and His Messenger and transgresses the limits set by God, will be admitted fire to abide therein, and he shall have a humiliating torment.” The two verses emphasize the importance of being obedient to God. Disobedience may be interpreted as rejecting faith or apostasy. The verses identify the commands that are given regarding the distribution of the estate as limits set by God. Those who obey God and His Prophet (PBUH) are rewarded with an eternal abode in paradise. This is certainly a great achievement. Those who disobey will be destined to Hellfire and a humiliating torment. These are grave consequences. The consequences may seem to be disproportionate to such infractions of the details of the law. But is it? The answer to this question is dealt with in different places of this Sura. We will deal with it in the appropriate places. However, we will address this very briefly here in connection with the above two verses. The fundamental question, in this religion as well as in all divinely revealed religions sent to guide humankind since the time of Adam (PBUH), is who has the right to control people's lives? And who has the right to legislate the laws that organize people's lives? A believer's answer to both questions is God, the Lord has the right to legislate laws that organize people's lives and the right to set the limits that should not be transgressed; trespassing these limits for any reason represents a breach of the belief in the Oneness of God and His right to be in control. So the verses refer to grave transgressions of the law not mere infractions of the details.

The inheritance system in Islam is based on a fair methodology for the distribution of shares among the rightful heirs. The methodology is congruent with the initial natural disposition of the human being, the realities of family life, and the responsibilities of the different members of the family. It aims at the preservation of family unity. The system does not exclude any family member from having a share. This includes females as well as young children. The difference in the shares allotted to males and females is justified on the basis of the requirement that males are required to provide for their families while women are exempt from such obligation. The system takes into consideration the initial natural human disposition and its innate bias towards its progeny. The children of the deceased are given priority over other relatives. The system also considers the interest of the community at large. Its methodology aims at the redistribution of wealth from one generation to the next. This prevents the concentration of wealth in few hands. The system provides a solution to economic and social problems without the interference of the state. Redistribution of wealth may not be acceptable if it is mandated by the government, but it may be easily accepted if it is God's command.

Verses:15 to 23

- 15. If any of your women are guilty of immoral conduct, call to witness four (witnesses) from among you; then if they bear witness to the truth of the allegation, confine them to the houses until death claims them or God ordains some other way for them.*
- 16. If two men are guilty of lewdness, punish them both; then if they repent and amend, leave them alone; certainly God is an acceptor of repentance, Giver of Mercy.*
- 17. God only accepts the repentance of those who do evil in ignorance and repent soon afterwards; to them God will turn mercifully, and God is ever Omniscient, Wise.*
- 18. Repentance is not accepted from those who go on doing evil deeds until death faces one of them, then he says, "Now, I repent;" nor (for) those who die while they are disbelievers. For them We have prepared a painful torment.*
- 19. You who believe, it is not lawful for you to inherit women against their will, nor should you treat your wives harshly in order that you may take back part of what you have given them, unless they are guilty of manifest immoral conduct; and treat them kindly, for if you hate them, it may be that you dislike a thing while God brings about abundant good through it.*
- 20. But if you decide to take one wife in place of another and you have given one of them a heap of gold, then do not take anything from it; would you take it by slandering (her) and (doing her) manifest wrong?*
- 21. And how can you take it when you have become so intimate with each other and they have taken from you a solemn covenant?*
- 22. And marry not women whom your fathers married, except what has already been done in the past; this was certainly an immoral act, hateful act, and an evil way.*
- 23. You are forbidden to take as wives your mothers and your daughters and your sisters and your paternal aunts and your maternal aunts and your brothers' daughters and your sisters' daughters and your mothers that have suckled you and your sisters by suckling and the mothers of your wives and the stepdaughters who are under your guardianship - born of women with whom you have consummated marriage, but if you have not consummated the marriage, then there is no blame on you - and the wives of your sons who are of your own loins and that you should marry two sisters at the same time, except what has already been done in the past; certainly God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy. (4:15-23)*

This group of verses deals with two topics. The first topic is the abolishment of indecent practices which were prevalent in the pre-Islamic society. The second topic is the prohibition of certain types of consanguineous marriages.

“If any of your women are guilty of immoral conduct, call to witnesses four (witnesses) from among you; then if they bear witness to the truth of the allegation, confine them to the houses until death claims them or God ordains some other way for them. If two men are guilty of lewdness, punish them both; then if they repent and amend, leave them alone; certainly God is an acceptor of repentance, Giver of Mercy.” The verse outlines the ways which Islam has devised to cleanse and purify the society of various indecencies. Initially, Islam opted to isolate women who are guilty of lewdness from society and to punish men who commit homosexual acts; however, the punishment was not stated at first. The punishment for adultery for both men and women was later detailed in Surat Al-Noor (Chapter 24) and the in Prophetic tradition as flogging and stoning. The objective of the punishment is to maintain the purity of the society and to protect it against the practice of lewd and indecent acts.

Islam ensures that only the guilty is punished. The legal process is designed with great care and encompasses provisions which guarantee error-free convictions. The verses carefully identify who are the women to which this ruling applies and the procedure that should be followed to deal with an accusation. The ruling applies only to Muslim women. Four eye witnesses are required to prove the guilt. Four Muslim men should testify that they have personally witnessed the act while it was being performed. These Muslim men are members of the Muslim society, they know its rules, obey its laws, and care for its welfare. If they testify, then the guilty woman is confined to her house. She is not allowed to mingle in society, get married, nor seek employment until death claims her or God ordains a way for her. The reference to a decree from God indicates that house confinement was not meant to be the final punishment for this crime. This was a transitional sentence that was replaced by the permanent punishment which was expounded in Surat Al-Noor (Chapter 24). Only the punishment was changed but the guarantees to ensure an error-free conviction remained.

The second verse deals with male homosexuality. The Quran discourages the practice and admonishes men not to practice it. Methods suggested for dealing with those who engage in such practice include chiding or even beating. However, if they desist and repent then the punishment should be stopped and they should be accepted in society.

There are two lessons to be gleaned from ending the verse by, “certainly God is an acceptor of repentance, Giver of Mercy.” God is the One who legislated the punishment and He is the one who determines its extent. People should not take matters into their own hands; they should only apply God’s law. God accepts repentance and He is Merciful. The second lesson is exhorting people to build their characters around the beautiful attributes of God. One of these attributes is mercy, so people should be merciful to each other. The society should forgive and forget once a person repents and makes amends. Repentant sinners should be helped to integrate into the society once they acknowledge their mistakes and take steps towards correcting them. The punishment for homosexuality was later modified. It has been narrated by Ibn ‘Abbas (RA) that the Messenger of God (PBUH) told his companions that men who practice homosexuality should be punished by death (The chain of the narrators of this tradition was not connected directly to Ibn ‘Abbas (RA)).

These verses and others show that the Islamic project intention from the start was to cleanse the society of any indecent practices. These verses were revealed in Mecca before the establishment of a Muslim state. Muslims had no government to legislate laws preventing such practices. So these verses came to set the stage for abolishing indecent practices by raising awareness of the devastating consequences of such behavior on the society. However, such goal cannot be achieved by admonition alone but laws had to be legislated and enacted for abolishing such practices.

“God will only accept the repentance of those who do evil in ignorance and repent soon afterwards; to them God will turn mercifully, and God is Omniscient, Wise.” Islam does not close the door in the face of sinners nor excommunicate them if they wanted to repent. On the contrary, sinners were encouraged to repent. The verse gives a promise to accept the repentance of those who are sincere in their repentance.

Repentance was discussed before in Surat Al-‘Imran (Chapter 3), however the present verse addresses another aspect of repentance. The verse addresses the kind of repentance that God has promised to forgive. It is a repentance that is rooted in the regret that fills the heart of the sinner once he/she realizes the consequence of what they have committed. This is a repentance which changes the whole life of the sinner and pushes him/her to purify themselves and to seek God’s forgiveness.

Most scholars agree that the word “ignorance” used in the verse applies to those who commit a sin while they are misguided. It does not matter how long the state of misguidance continued as long as it ended before the final signs of death approaches the person. Those who “repent soon afterwards” are those who repent well before they realize that they are on the verge of death. In this case, it is a repentance that is motivated by remorse and a desire to make amends. It is a rebirth for the person. God promised to forgive them and give them a second chance to return to a life of piety.

“Repentance is not accepted from those who go on doing evil deeds, until death faces one of them and he says, “Now, I repent;” nor (for) those who die while they are disbelievers. For them We have prepared a painful torment.” Repentance is accepted because it is a way to change the life of sinners and rehabilitate them into society. Repentance is of no use for those who seek it when they realize that they are on the verge of death. They repent because they are no longer able to commit sins. Repentance in this case is not motivated by remorse nor will it result in a change of the life style for the sinner. Those who die while rejecting faith severed all ties between them and repentance and they missed all chances of being forgiven. For them, a painful torment has been prepared.

“You who believe, it is not lawful for you to inherit women against their will, nor should you treat your wives harshly in order that you may take back part of what you have given them, unless they are guilty of manifest immoral conduct; and treat them kindly, for if you hate them, it may be that you dislike a thing while God brings about abundant good through it. But if you decide to take one wife in place of another and you have given one of them a heap of gold, then do not take anything back from it; would you take it by slandering (her) and (doing her) manifest wrong?

And how can you take it when you have become so intimate with each other and they have taken from you a solemn covenant? And marry not women whom your fathers married, except what has already been done in the past; this was certainly a lewd, hateful act, and an evil way.”

Women were treated badly in the pre-Islamic Arabia. Some women were treated like chattel. A woman was considered part of the estate of her deceased husband to be inherited by his family. If one of the heirs wished, he could marry her. Alternatively, they could give her in marriage to someone else and take her wedding gift, or they may confine her to the house until she ransoms herself with a certain amount of money. In another practice, a man would divorce his wife and forces her to marry someone he chooses. She can avoid this by paying her ex-husband a ransom. There were other similar bad practices, all of which point to the degraded status of women and the abuse they used to suffer at the hands of men.

This was changed by Islam when it decreed that men and women are created from the same soul and that the relationship between the two should be based on mutual love and respect. These verses came to abolish several evil practices that were prevalent in pre-Islamic Arabia and to establish family life on the basis of love and kindness. Islam banned the practice which allowed a woman to be inherited as a part of the estate of her deceased husband. Islam banned the practice which allowed the husband to abandon his wife and in the meantime prevent her from marrying someone else of her choice.

The verse addresses the situation when the relationship between a husband and his wife becomes precarious. Men are reminded that there is a connection between the marriage relationship and the relationship between them and their Lord. Islam considers the family home a refuge where husband and wife find peace and security. The house should provide an environment full of love, kindness, and friendship. The intimate relationship between husband and wife should be rooted in understanding, compassion, and love. Therefore, marriage should be based on the free will of both husband and wife. No one should be forced into a marriage relationship against their will. God also reminds men that, “if you hate them, it may be that you dislike a thing while God brings about abundant good through it.” Men should be patient and do their best to keep the family intact. ‘Umar ibn Al-Khattab (RA) has been quoted to have said to a man who wanted to divorce his wife because he did not love her anymore, “Is love the only reason for a family life? What happened to the duty to care?”

But if family life is impossible to continue, then parting ways should be done in a way that does not inflict harm on the wife. The verse reminds man of the intimate relationship that once existed between him and his wife. The intimacy that was not only physical but was also emotional should be treasured. The verse inspires the imagination of the husband to remember the good times he spent with his wife. It also reminds men of the sanctity of the marriage contract. Usurping the rights of the wife is a clear violation of the marriage contract that was struck between the two at the time when the wedding took place. A marriage contract is a sacred contract that should be respected.

The final command in these verses addresses another evil practice that was prevalent in pre-Islamic Arabia: a son was allowed to marry his widowed stepmother. The verses decree that this is a lewd and hateful act. This is a hateful act for various reasons. A stepmother plays the role of a mother to her stepchildren. A son is prohibited to marry his mother. The Quran described this marriage as, “an immoral act, hateful act, and an evil way.” Marriages of this kind which have been consummated before the advent of Islam were forgiven.

The following group of verses deals with certain types of consanguineous marriages which Islam prohibited. “You are forbidden to take as wives your mothers and your daughters and your sisters and your paternal aunts and your maternal aunts and your brothers' daughters and your sisters' daughters and your mothers that have suckled you and your sisters by suckling and the mothers of your wives and the stepdaughters who are under your guardianship - born of women with whom you have consummated marriage, but if you have not consummated the marriage, then there is no blame on you - and the wives of your sons who are of your own loins and that you should marry two sisters at the same time, except what has already been done in the past; certainly God is Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.” Various cultures shunned certain types of marriages for different reasons. This verse, in addition to the one before and the one after, lists the consanguineous marriages that Islam prohibited. The reasons for the prohibitions vary. They include marriages prohibited because there is a certain blood relationship between the man and the woman, because there is a marriage relationship between the families of the man and the woman, or because the man and the woman were breastfed by the same woman (The man and woman in this case become siblings by virtue of being breastfed by the same woman.) On the other hand, Islam does not espouse the view that race, culture, language or the color of skin are acceptable reasons for preventing a man and a woman to be united in matrimony.

One can categorize the prohibited marriages which are based on blood relationship in four classes

- Marriage between a man and his mother, or grandmothers (paternal or maternal).
- Marriage between a man and his daughters or granddaughters.
- Marriage between a man and his sisters or nieces.
- Marriage between a man and his aunts (paternal and maternal), and the aunts of his uncles or his aunts.

Marriages prohibited on the basis of an existing marriage relationship between the families of the man and the woman include five cases

- Marriage between a man and his wife's mother or grandmothers. This prohibition comes into play once the original marriage contract has been signed whether the marriage has been consummated or not.
- Marriage between a man and his wife's daughters or granddaughters. This prohibition applies only after the original marriage has been consummated.
- Marriage between a man and the wives of his father or grandfathers.
- Marriage between a man and the wives of his sons or grandsons. This does not apply to the wife of an adopted son.
- A man is not allowed to marry two sisters at the same time.

Marriages prohibited on the basis of a breastfeeding relationship include

- A man is not allowed to marry a woman who breastfed him, her mother, or grandmother.
- A man is not allowed to marry a woman who was breastfed by the man's wife, or her daughters.
- A man is not allowed to marry a woman who was breastfed by a woman who breastfed him.
- A man is not allowed to marry the sister or the sister in law of a woman who breastfed him.
- A man is not allowed to marry a woman who breastfed his wife.
- A man is not allowed to marry a woman who was breast fed by his wife (before she married him).
- A man is not allowed to marry the second wife of a man whose first wife breast fed him.
- A man is not allowed to marry the wife of a man who was breast fed by his wife.
- A man is not allowed to marry two women who were breast fed by the same woman at the same time.

The first and second groups of prohibited marriage relationships listed above have been prohibited by Quranic verses. The third group of marriage relationships was made unlawful by a prophetic tradition. It has been reported by Al-Bukhari and Muslim that the Prophet (PBUH) has been quoted to have said that relationships resulting from breastfeeding are similar to blood relationships regarding the allowable and prohibited marriages.

These were the marriage relationships which were rendered unlawful by Islam. The Quran does not provide the rationale behind these prohibitions. Many scholars attempted to infer the rationale behind these prohibitions. However, these attempts remain in the realm of personal opinions. These laws have to be accepted by Muslims irrespective of whether we understand the rationale behind them or not.

All these relationships were traditionally prohibited in the pre-Islamic society except for two: a man was allowed to marry the widow of his father and to marry two sisters at the same time. These two forms of marriage were allowed by the pre-Islamic traditions however; they were not widely accepted. However, in deciding what is lawful and what is prohibited in the area of marriage relationships, as in all other areas of human interactions, Islam provides its own rules regardless of what existed before its advent. It is God's authority to determine what is lawful and what is prohibited for people. Deciding the lawful and forbidden is not a formality, but it is one of the basic foundations of religion. Only God has the authority to decide what is allowable and what is forbidden. No one other than God can claim such authority, claiming such authority is synonymous to claiming being god.

Verses: 24 to 35

24. Women who are already married are also prohibited, except those whom your right hand possesses. This is what God has decreed for you. Except for these, all others are lawful, provided that you seek them with gifts from your property in honest wedlock, not

- debauchery. Those whom you wish to enjoy through marriage, you are obligated to give them their bridal gift. But if after you have fulfilled the obligation, you mutually agree to do otherwise, you will not be blamed; certainly God is Omniscient, Wise.*
25. And whoever among you does not have the means to marry free believing women, let him marry from the believing maids whom your right hands possess; and God knows best your faith, you are (sprung) one from another; so marry them with the permission of their folk, and give them their bridal gifts kindly, they being chaste not fornicating, nor receiving paramours; and when they are honorably married, then if they are guilty of an immoral conduct, they shall suffer half the punishment which is prescribed upon free women. This permission is for those among you who are afraid to sin. But it is better for you to persevere and God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.
26. God wishes to make His laws clear to you, and to guide you into the ways of those before you, and to turn to you in mercy, and God is Omniscient, Wise.
27. And God wishes to turn to you in mercy, and those who follow their lusts wish that you go tremendously astray.
28. God wishes to lighten your burden, for the human being was created weak.
29. You who believe, do not devour your property among yourselves falsely, but trade by your mutual consent; and do not kill one another; certainly God is Merciful to you.
30. And whoever does this through aggression and injustice, We will soon cast him into fire; and this is easy for God.
31. If you avoid the major sins which you are forbidden to do, We will absolve you of your minor sins and cause you to enter at a noble gate.
32. And do not covet that which God has favored some of you over the others; men shall have the benefit of what they earn and women shall have the benefit of what they earn; and ask God of His grace; certainly God knows all things.
33. And to everyone We have appointed heirs of what parents and near relatives leave; and as to those with whom your right hands have ratified agreements, give them their due portion; certainly God is a witness over all things.
34. Men should take full care of their wives by virtue of the bounties God has given to some more than others and with what they spend out of their property; and the righteous women are the truly devout ones, guarding in secret that which God has guarded; and as for whom you fear rebellion, admonish them first, refuse to share their beds, and beat them lightly; then if they obey you, do not seek a way against them; certainly God is Most Exalted, Great.

35. And if you fear a breach between the two of them, then appoint an arbiter from his people and an arbiter from her people; if they both desire amendment, God will bring about reconciliation between them, certainly God is Omniscient, Totally-Aware. (4:24-35)

“Women who are already married are also prohibited, except those whom your right hand possesses. This is what God has decreed for you. Except for these, all others are lawful, provided that you seek them with gifts from your property in honest wedlock, not debauchery. Those whom you wish to enjoy through marriage, you are obligated to give them their bridal gift. But if after you have fulfilled the obligation, you mutually agree to do otherwise, you will not be blamed; certainly God is Omniscient, Wise.” The verse continues to list the prohibited marriage relationships. A man cannot marry a woman who is already married. This ruling strengthens the role of the family in Islam as the building block of society. This building block has to be protected and the transparency of the lineage has to be maintained. The family in Islam is based on a man and a woman joined in wedlock. Family provides a protection against adultery and is the logical answer to the needs of the initial natural human disposition.

It is observed that the human baby needs a longer period to grow up and become independent than the period required by a baby from any other species. Education of human children takes even a longer period of time. The objective of sexual relationship between couples in the animal species is the preservation of the species. The objective of the relationship in humans goes far beyond procreation and sexual pleasure. The relationship between human couples is a long term relationship to provide care and education for the children and prepare them to become active participants in the human society. The life between human couples does not revolve around sexual pleasure. Sexual pleasure has been ingrained in the initial natural human disposition to facilitate bringing couples together in the first instance to start a long term relationship. Thus, for humans the relationship between a man and woman is not controlled by the “desire” but it is controlled by the “duty to care,” the duty to care for the vulnerable progeny. These considerations support the notion of building the relationship between couples on the foundation of the concept of family. The sanctity of the institution of family should be protected. Practice of polyandry threatens this concept and confuses the transparency of lineage; therefore, it is not acceptable in Islam.

An exception is made in the case of married women who were captured in wars between the believers and non-believers and were made slaves according to the norms of the human society at that time. These women lost all relationship with their first husbands when they were captured and became legally unmarried. They have to wait until they have one menstruation to make sure that they are not pregnant before they can engage in a sexual relationship. These women could gain their freedom upon accepting Islam and becoming legally married, otherwise they would continue to be captives and they were allowed to engage in sexual relationship with their masters according to the norms of the society at that time.

The issue of slavery has been addressed in different places in the Quran. It has to be noted that rules regarding enslavement of captured enemy were well established before the advent of Islam. Islam made giant steps towards abolishing slavery as has been pointed out in other places in the Quran. In the interim, Muslims had to abide by the same rules that their enemy followed. However, Islam revolutionized the way the captured slaves were treated.

The rules which determine the lawful and the forbidden were decreed by God and they should be followed. The marriage relationship is based on honest and decent wedlock between the partners, neither prostitution nor debauchery are allowed. The woman gets her bridal gift as a part of the marriage contract. This is her right. However, once the condition has been fulfilled and she received her gift, she can do whatever she wants with it including giving part of the gift back to her husband

If a man is unable to marry a free woman, then an alternative is given, “And whoever among you does not have the means to marry free believing women, let him marry from the believing maids whom your right hand possesses; and God knows best your faith: you are (sprung) one from another; so marry them with the permission of their folk, and give them their bridal gifts kindly, they being chaste, not fornicating, nor receiving paramours; and when they are honorably married, then if they are guilty of immoral conduct, they shall suffer half the punishment which is prescribed upon free women. This permission is for those among you who are afraid to sin. But it is better for you to persevere, and God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.” The verse organizes marriage relationships that involve slave girls. The verse implies that it is preferable for a man to seek marriage from a free woman. However, if it was not feasible for a man to marry a free woman and he is unable to wait for a change in circumstances, then he is allowed to marry a believing (slave) girl on the condition that she receives her wedding gift. The relationship is a marriage relationship with all its characteristics and conditions. It is important to point out how the Quran dealt with the relationship between free people and slaves in the Islamic society at that time. First, the Quran calls the slave girls “believing girls” and calls their masters, their “family”, which shows how Islam was preparing people for the eradication of slavery. The verse points to the fact that Islam does not categorize masters and slaves as two different races but it reminds them that they all belong to the same human race. It reminds them that they are connected together through humanity and faith, “God knows best your faith: you are (sprung) one from another.” Second, all marriage rules that apply to a free woman apply also to a slave woman. The wedding gift is given to her personally and she cannot be forced to engage in extra marital sexual relationships. But if the married slave girl was tempted somehow and succumbed to the temptation to commit adultery, then she only gets half the punishment that a free woman would suffer for the same crime. The ruling recognizes the vulnerability of slave girls, even after they get married and this consideration is reflected on the reduction the punishment. The verse ends by iterating the preference of marrying a free girl, but allows an exception for those who are unable to exercise self-restraint although exercising self-restraint is better.

“God wishes to make His laws clear to you, and to guide you into the ways of those before you, and to turn to you in mercy and God is Omniscient, Wise. And God wishes to turn to you in mercy, and those who follow their lusts wish that you go tremendously astray. God wishes to lighten your burden, for man was created weak.” God wishes to make His rules clear to His believing servants and He wants to explain the rationale behind these rules. These rules are not an expression of senseless desire for control. The rules aim at elevating the status of humankind. They are part of a divine project that has been decreed for all believers since the beginning of time. God wants to guide the believers, turn to them in mercy, and forgive their sins. These rules are meant to guide people to the straight path, the path of mercy and forgiveness, while those who follow their lust wish to sway people away from the path of God. God wishes to lighten the burden of humankind by making rules that take into consideration human weaknesses.

Many people think that following these rules, especially the ones that deal with the organization of sexual relationships, place a burden on them and limits their freedom to satisfy their needs. They want to remove all restrictions on these relationships. They are seeking a hedonistic lifestyle. These people are in fact pursuing a mirage. The type of freedom they are seeking is not in the best interest of the human society and will result in catastrophic consequences for the society.

“You who believe, do not wrongfully devour each other property, but trade by mutual consent; and do not kill one another; certainly God is Merciful to you. And whoever does this through aggression and injustice, We will soon cast him into fire; and this is easy to God. If you avoid the major sins which you are forbidden to do, We will absolve you of your smaller sins and cause you to enter at a noble gate.” The verses present another lesson in the series of lessons for educating people as well as for introducing legislations. Education and legislation complement each other. Legislation takes into account real life conditions and the best way to implement laws. This is achieved through education and training people to be conscious of God. Education connects the heart of the believer to God, the source of laws; and instills in it the will to obey these laws.

These verses establish three principles which govern financial transactions. The verses provide a mixture of Islamic education and laws. This methodology has been used extensively by Islam because education and law go hand in hand. Education prepares people to accept the law and to believe that it is in their best interest to follow the law. However, there will always be a person who will not obey the law voluntarily. Hence, law enforcement is needed.

The first principle establishes the basis of Islamic financial dealings to guarantee the purity of transactions. It establishes the principle that profit should always be sought through lawful means. The verse addressed the believers and pointed to a methodology to eradicate the remnants of the pre-Islamic bad practices and to emphasize the relationship between faith and practice. The principle outlawed all bad financial practices including cheating, fraud, gambling, and usury, etc. The verse is specific in excluding fair business practices based on mutual agreement of all parties involved. These fair practices are allowed. It is not clear whether usury was prohibited before this verse was revealed or not, but either way, the Quran is clear on usury dealings. Usury is the worst form of financial dealings. The verse alluded to a link between the disastrous impact that bad financial practices can have on society and committing suicide. Bad financial practices cause the death of the society exactly as committing suicide puts an end to human life. God is merciful; He wishes to save the human society of the devastating consequences of bad financial dealings. Those who do not heed this principle are deemed transgressors and will be punished in Hellfire. On the other hand, those who avoid capital sins are promised a forgiveness for all other sins which they may have committed and will be admitted through a noble gate. This is a fair faith with an easy program for a better life. This is a program that attempts to purify the human soul and to establish a sound society. It provides a balance between the undertaking and the capacity, between what is desired and what is necessary, between the incentive and the drive, between what to do and what not to do, and between threats of punishment and promises of life in paradise. It offers a clear promise from God to forgive all sins, if one avoids the capital sins. The criterion is to try sincerely to avoid these capital sins. If a person tried sincerely to avoid these sins but succumbed to the temptation and committed one of the major sins, he/she can still repent and ask for forgiveness. There are a number of Prophetic traditions which list some of the major sins. It should not be difficult for Muslims to recognize which sins are major and which are not. The important thing is to be sincere in the intent to obey God's commandments and to try hard to follow these commands. God knows that we will commit mistakes and He promised to forgive these mistakes.

“And do not covet that with which God has favored some of you over the others; men shall have the benefit of what they earn and women shall have the benefit of what they earn; and ask God of His grace; certainly God knows all things. And to everyone We have appointed heirs of what parents and near relatives leave; and as to those with whom your right hands have ratified agreements, give them their due portion; certainly God is a witness over all things.” This is a general statement which forbids coveting the bounty of God that has been bestowed on others. Instead of coveting a position, a status, a talent, or wealth which God bestowed on others; one should ask God for a similar favor. Coveting will only result in creating bad feelings, envy, jealousy, and hatred. Asking God from His bounty, on the other hand, generates feelings of security and hope; and will induce the believers to seek the lawful means to achieve what they aspire to. This is a statement that applies in general, but its mention at this point gives it also a special significance. It deals with the apparent variance in the portions allotted to men and women in accordance with inheritance laws. The verse aims at reconciling the relationship between the two partners in the human society. The Islamic methodology for building a human society is based on the recognition that males and females are partners in the society, and they are created to play different but complimentary roles. Their relationship should not be based on competition but it should be based on collaboration. The methodology does not favor one gender over the other but it aims at realizing the interest of the society as whole.

The early Quranic commentaries mentioned that the verse was revealed in response to a question posed by Um Salmah (RA), to the Prophet (PBUH), she said, “Messenger of God, we don't participate in Jihad and therefore we are deprived of the opportunity of martyrdom.” God did neither prescribe Jihad for women nor prohibit them from participating in Jihad. Some women participated in battles against the enemy of Islam. Some participated by carrying food and water or as nurses and supporters. But there were also women who participated as fighters. Women's role as fighters was the exception rather than the rule as dictated by situation.

The other source for coveting between men and women is the variance in inheritance rules. This may seem unfair on the surface but if we consider the matter more carefully, we find that this variance reflects the requirements for an integrated scheme for building an Islamic society. The male has double the share of a female. This addresses the obligations that are placed on males in the society. A man is obliged to give his bride a wedding gift. A man is obliged to support his nuclear family and the needy members of his extended family. A man is obliged to support his divorcee. Women are exempt from all these obligations, even if they are wealthy and even if they can afford to participate in these financial obligations.

The verses continued to establish women's financial rights. Women have the right to engage in financial transactions and to own property the same way men do. This was a change in the status quo. The pre-Islamic society did not recognize women's right to own property. Great injustice was inflicted on wealthy women to deprive them of their wealth through crooked means. Islam came to rectify this. This verse established the equal rights of men and women to own property.

Finally, a reference is made to a number of contracts which were recognized in the pre-Islamic society and which were phased out by Islam. These contracts were known as "loyalty contracts." They included four types

- Loyalty contracts for a freed slave: this was a contract between a slave and his master that resulted in the slave being freed and adopted into the family of the master. The adopted member of the family enjoyed all the rights of the original members including inheritance rights.
- Loyalty contracts between an Arab and a non-Arab: this contract involved the adoption of a non-Arab into the family of an Arab. Consequently, the new member of the family enjoyed all the rights that the other family members enjoyed including the right of inheritance.
- Brotherhood pacts: these were pacts that the Prophet (PBUH) formed between the migrants (Muhajereen) and the supporters (Ansar) just after the migration of the Prophet (PBUH) from Mecca to Medina. According to this pact a man from Medina adopted a man from Mecca as his brother. This brotherhood was treated as a blood relationship and allowed the two brothers to inherit one another.
- Pre-Islamic adoption contract: this was a contract between two men to inherit one another.

Islam respected the contracts which were solemnized before the inheritance rules were revealed. However, it gradually phased out all these types of contracts and restricted the right of inheritance to members of the family who share blood or marriage relationships.

"Men should take full care of their wives with the bounties God has given to some more than others and with what they spend out of their property; and the righteous women are the truly devout ones, guarding in secret that which God has guarded; and as for whom you fear rebellion, admonish them first, refuse to share their beds, and beat them lightly; then if they obey you, do not seek a way against them; certainly God is Exalted, Great. And if you fear a breach between the two of them, then appoint an arbiter from his people and an arbiter from her people; if they both desire amendment, God will bring about reconciliation between them, certainly God is Omniscient, Totally-Aware." Before we deal with these verses, let us consider Islam's philosophy regarding the family as an institution and the measures it took to protect it and preserve its integrity.

God created the whole universe on the concept of duality “and from each thing We created a pair, if you remember,” (51:49). As a part of the universe, the human race is created on the basis of the concept of duality as well. So, living in pairs satisfies the initial natural human disposition. God created this pair from a single soul. God made each member of this pair to be a cause of tranquility, security, comfort, and protection to one another. He made their union a source for sustaining life on earth. Because they were created from the same soul, they stand equal in the sight of God. They are treated equally by God in matters of reward and punishment. They are equal in a court of law, when they are involved in a civil dispute. They have equal rights in owning property.

Men and women have equal worth as human beings but they were created to fulfill different roles. God created each with the appropriate physical and psychological form suitable for the achievement of their respective roles. Along with the appropriate capabilities came a fair distribution of responsibilities. It is the woman’s responsibility to bear children and it is the man’s responsibility to support his family. The verse alluded to the physical and psychological preparation of men and women to be able to carry out their respective tasks and also referred to the man’s responsibility in providing the financial support to his family.

This verse organized family life and allocated responsibilities to each of the two human beings who are necessary for the establishment of a family in the first place. Allocation of responsibilities removes potential friction and competition between the partners and establishes the basic rule that any dispute should be settled by referring to God’s rules. The verse established the principle that males are responsible for taking full care of their wives. Males have been given this leadership role because of their intrinsic characteristics and because they are responsible for maintaining the family. The verse also prescribed a procedure for dealing with family disputes. These organizational rules were necessary to maintain the integrity of family life.

The division of responsibilities between the male and the female in a family setting is imperative if fairness is to prevail. Each has a role to play and each has been prepared for that role. Females are given the responsibility of child birth and child care. These are major responsibilities, but females have been created with biological and psychological characteristics which enable them to undertake such responsibilities. It is only fair that the other partner in the family organization be given the responsibility of providing the financial necessities needed to maintain the family. Males are given biological and psychological characteristics which prepare them to fulfill their prescribed roles as well.

The rationale for asking men to be in charge and to take full care of their wives rests on two fundamental elements: the characteristics that they were given and the requirement of providing for the family.

The verse continued to describe the characteristics of believing women. The righteous woman is truly devout as well. A devout person is one who obey God willingly and voluntarily. The verse did not use the term obedient because obedience may be imposed by external forces. The word devout indicates obedience based on belief and choice. A devout woman obeys God because she is convinced that this is the right thing to do. Another character of righteous believing women is their ability to guard the sanctity of marriage as has been dictated by God. It is interesting to note that the verse was not worded in the form of a command to women, but it was phrased to indicate that devotion is not to be imposed but it comes natural with righteousness. The verse continued to outline the procedure for dealing with a rebellious woman, a shrew. The Arabic word used to describe this situation refers to mutinous behavior which challenges the natural order. Islam uses a proactive approach to deal with family problems. This proactive approach consists of three steps or phases. The intent of this approach is to deal with the early signs before they develop into a situation that cannot be remedied. This is a gradual approach which does not aim at humiliating or punishing wives. It aims at protecting the integrity of the family and bringing back stability and order to family life. Before talking about the procedure recommended for dealing with rebellious wives, we need to remember that God bestowed honor on the two partners in the human race. Women have God given rights that should be respected. Entrusting man with a leadership role in the family does not take away from a woman her right to choose her partner and to manage her personal and financial affairs independently. The verse laid the foundation to understand the rationale behind this procedure. It also provided an understanding of the way it should be implemented.

The steps are first to admonish, then refuse to share their beds, and finally to beat them lightly. These are measures to be followed when means for a discussion or a civil discourse have been exhausted. Several prophetic traditions commanded men to deal kindly with their wives. One of the prophet's (PBUH) companions asked him about the rights that a wife has. The Prophet (PBUH) said, "You feed her as you feed yourself, you dress her as you dress yourself, do not hit her on the face, do not call her names, and if you have to abandon her bed, do not leave the house." He also has been quoted to have said, "Do not hit God's women servants." The Prophet (PBUH) said, "The best among you is the one who treats his wife the best way, and I treat my wives the best way."

The verse continued to admonish men not to oppress their wives when they seek reconciliation. The reconciliation sought by a rebellious wife should be based on understanding and not on oppression. The verse reminded men that God is Exalted and Great. This should eliminate any feelings of pride or any desire for oppression.

When the means to mend the relationship between the husband and wife have been exhausted then, two arbiters, one from the husband's family and the other from the wife's family, are convened to mediate between the two. If the couple is interested in mending things, then God will guide their steps towards reconciliation.

Verses: 36 to 43

36. And worship God and do not associate anything with Him and be good to parents and to the near of kin and the orphans and the needy and the neighbor of your kin and the neighbor who is not kin, and the fellow traveler and the wayfarer and those whom your right hand possesses; certainly God does not love him who is arrogant and boastful;
37. Those who are niggardly and command people to be niggardly and hide what God has bestowed upon them; and We have prepared for the disbelievers a disgraceful torment.

38. And those who spend of their wealth to be seen and praised by people and do not believe in God nor in the last day; and whoso takes Satan for a comrade, what a dreadful comrade he is.
39. And what harm would it have done them if they had believed in God and the Last Day and spent benevolently of what God had bestowed upon them? And God has full knowledge of them.
40. Certainly God does not wrong anyone by as much as the weight of an atom, and if there is a good deed He multiplies it and gives the doer from His own presence an immense reward.
41. What will they do, when We bring from every people a witness and bring you as a witness against these?
42. On that Day, those who disbelieve and disobey the Messenger will wish that they were level with the ground, and they shall not hide any word from God.
43. You who believe, do not approach prayers while you are intoxicated until you know well what you say, nor when you are in a state of ritual impurity - unless you are passing through on the road- until you have washed yourselves; and if you are sick, or on a journey, or one of you comes from the privy or you have touched women, and you cannot find water, then take for yourselves clean earth, and wipe your faces and your hands; certainly God is Pardoning, All-Forgiving. (4:36-43)

All Islamic laws are rooted in the belief in the Oneness of God, “And worship God and do not associate anything with Him and be good to parents and to the near of kin and the orphans and the needy and the neighbor of your kin and the neighbor who is not kin, and the fellow traveler and the wayfarer and those whom your right hand possesses; certainly God does not love him who is arrogant and boastful;” These verses outline commands and directives to Muslims. All commands and directives in Islam are rooted in the belief in the Oneness of God. This basic principle provides the framework that brings all commands and guidelines into one cohesive structure. These verses list a number of commands and it is logical that the first command is to worship God. The second command prohibits associating partners with God. It is a very strong command not to associate anything with God. This is followed by a command to be kind to one’s parents in particular and to all kin in general. It is interesting to note that commands to be kind to parents are more prevalent in the Quran than commands to be kind to the progeny. Parents by nature are kind to their children, while children may not always be kind to their parents, hence, came the emphasis in the Quran on being kind to parents. This is a directive from the Giver of Mercy, the Compassionate who does not forget anybody. He takes care of all His creation.

Another point to note is that in this verse and in many similar verses in the Quran, the command starts with those who are nearest of kin then branches out to include people who have varying degrees of closeness to the person. This is congruent with the initial natural human disposition. People tend to care more about those who are closest to them, then the next of kin, then their friends and so forth. So, the verse lists people to whom one should be kind according to their priority. It starts first with the parents, then members of the family, followed by the needy and poor, then the neighbor who is kin, then the neighbor who is not kin, then the fellow traveler, then the traveling person who is away from his land and family, and finally the slaves. This is a reminder that slaves are our brothers in humanity whose misfortune deprived them from their freedom and made them slaves. The verse closes by disparaging boasting and arrogance. These are traits which tend to prevent people from being kind.

Those “who are niggardly and command people to be niggardly and hide what God has bestowed upon them; and We have prepared for the disbelievers a disgraceful torment. And those who spend of their wealth to be seen and praised by people and do not believe in God nor in the Last Day; and whoso takes Satan for a comrade, what a dreadful comrade he is.” Once again the relationship between the belief in the Oneness of God and human behavior is reiterated. Believing in God promotes kindness and generosity for the sake of receiving the pleasure of God alone. Knowing that whatever we spend is from the bounty of God and it is spent for the sake of God, eliminates the hateful traits of being boastful and arrogant. The verse puts human behavior in perspective. The belief in God and the sincere desire to seek His pleasure are strong incentives to behave nicely. Deeds are dedicated solely to God with no expectations for a reward from other human beings. These values are based on the belief in God and the Hereafter. These are standard values that are unchangeable. Values determined by human beings are “relative” values that change from one place to another and from one generation to the other. The verse says, “God does not love” God’s love is not like the love that human beings experience. The expression is used to denote the consequences of “God does not love.” The consequences of boasting and arrogance are punishment and disgrace. What is more disgraceful than being associated with Satan?

“And what harm would it have done them if they had believed in God and the Last Day and spent benevolently of what God had bestowed upon them? And God has full knowledge of them. Certainly God does not wrong anyone by as much as the weight of an atom, and if there is a good deed He multiplies it and gives the doer from His own presence an immense reward. What will they do?” And why don’t they believe in God and the Last Day? And why don’t they spend of that which was bestowed on them by God? Don’t they know that God knows all what they do and what motivates their deeds? Because of this knowledge, God does not wrong any one. On the contrary, if they do any good deed, they will be rewarded several fold and they will be recompensed nicely by God. The choice to believe brings security and gain, both in this life and in the Hereafter.

“When We bring from every people a witness and bring you as a witness against these? On that Day, those who disbelieve and disobey the Messenger will wish that they were level with the ground, but they shall not hide any word from God.” This verse laid the ground rules for how people will be treated on the Day of Judgment: God does not inflict even the magnitude of a small atom of injustice on people; His is absolute justice. He will multiply the reward for good deeds and will give more from His bounty. He will exercise His mercy and His blessing for those who believed, looked forward, and worked hard for this day. As for those who rejected faith and did not work for this day, how will they feel when they face the messenger of God who came to them, because God will bring all messengers as witnesses and He will bring Muhammad (PBUH) as a witness over them. Some scholars indicated that the word “these” refers to the pagans of Quraish. The verse paints a vivid image of the Day of Judgment. People from each nation will be crowded in a huge space. Each nation is faced with the messenger of God who was sent to them. Each messenger is a witness. All those who were arrogant and belied their messenger will be there. All their deeds will be declared. Their hypocrisy, their niggardliness, and their selfishness will become apparent. They will stand in front of God with all their sins feeling guilty and humiliated.

This group of verses started with the command to worship God. Prayer is one of the most important rituals in Islam and it is a fundamental part of worship. Hence, the verses continued with a description of some of the rules regarding the preparation for and the conduct of prayers. “You who believe, do not approach prayers while you are intoxicated until you know well what you say, nor when you are in a state of ritual impurity - unless you are travelling on the road- until you have washed yourselves; and if you are sick, or on a journey, or one of you come from the privy or you have touched women, and you cannot find water, then take for yourselves clean earth, and wipe your faces and your hands; certainly God is Effacer of sins, All-Forgiving.” This was a step in the spiritual education for Muslims to prepare them for the impending change of rules regarding drinking Alcohol. Drinking Alcohol was one of the oldest and deeply rooted traditions of the Arabic society before Islam. Drinking was a hallmark of the Arabic society before Islam as it was the hallmark of other societies: The Roman, the Persian, as well as western societies of the present day. Islam introduced a progressive program to abolish this bad habit. The program consisted of several stages that were revealed in various verses of the Quran over a period of time. This was Islam’s approach to eradicate the drinking habit which was so entrenched in the pre-Islamic society. The implementation of the plan went smoothly without waging wars or requiring major sacrifices. When the verse which brought the final decree prohibiting drinking alcohol was revealed, Muslims spilled the alcohol they had and they even spat out what was in their mouths. In the beginning, the Quran hinted that there is a difference between alcohol and good provision “And from the fruit of the date-palm and the vine, you get wine and wholesome food: behold, in this also is a sign for those who reason.” (16:67). This was an indirect way to state that there is a difference between wine and wholesome provision. This was a slight nudge to the fledgling Islamic consciousness to raise its awareness. Drinking was not only a strong tradition in the pre-Islamic society, but it was also a flourishing industry. More than just a nudge was needed to convince people of its bad impact on society. The second step came in Medina at a time when Muslims were in authority but the prohibition needed more than enacting and enforcing a law. It needed a psychological preparation. So, the Quran provided a lesson to be heeded by Muslims in the form of a question-answer style, “They ask you concerning wine and gambling. Say to them, ‘In them is great sin, and some profit, for people; but the sin is greater than the profit.’” [2:219]. This was a direct and loud call alerting people to the dangers of drinking and its adverse effects on society. The third stage aimed at limiting the amount of alcohol that a Muslim could consume. This was a transient stage to move from the stage that “there are good as well as bad things associated with alcohol” to the stage which completely banned the use of alcohol because it is unclean, “You who believe, do not approach prayers while you are intoxicated until you know well what you say,” [4:43]. The implementation of this verse limited the use of alcohol greatly, because keeping regular prayers requires one to pray five times every day. It became a challenge for those who want to keep up the regular prayers to find the time for drinking. Finally, and when people were ready to accept the change, the final verse came to completely prohibit drinking, “You who believe, intoxicants and gambling, (dedication of) stones, and (divination by) arrows, are an abomination, of Satan's handwork; eschew such (abomination), that you may prosper.” [5:90]. This verse brought an end to the tradition of drinking alcohol in Arabia. The Quranic plan succeeded without a civil authority to enact the law. This is a miracle which was only possible because the plan understood the human psyche and addressed its needs. The plan depended on instilling the love of God and the knowledge that He is ever watching in the hearts of people. It depended on filling the vacuum in people's lives with serious thoughts and interests and filling their hearts with a faith that freed them from the servitude of their worldly pleasures and desires.

After this slight digression we come back to the verse at hand, "You who believe, do not approach prayers while you are intoxicated until you know well what you say." There is some difference in opinion about what is meant by the two terms, "passing through" and "approach prayers." One opinion states that those who are ritually unclean are not allowed to enter or stay in a mosque until they perform the ritual wash. However, they would be allowed to pass through a mosque. This brought relief to some of the Prophet's companions who had houses which opened into the mosque and they had to pass through the mosque to get in or out of their houses. Another opinion states that a person who is ritually unclean is not allowed to pray, unless he was travelling and in this case he can head to the mosque, perform "Tayamum" and perform his prayer. It seems that the first interpretation makes more sense, since the state of travel was mentioned in the verse under the category of "on a journey." This implies unnecessary repetition of the same verdict.

Thus, those who are travelling, sick or have just satisfied a call of nature should not pray until they perform a ritual wash. If they are unable to perform a ritual wash, for the lack of water or because of fear of harm (for example, if the water was very cold) then they could perform Tayamum.

There is also a difference of opinion on the meaning of the term "touched women." Some say that this is a metaphor for sexual intercourse, which would require a ritual wash before one can perform prayers. Another opinion takes the word to mean literally touching women. This means that one has to perform ritual wash after touching any part of a woman's body.

We summarize the opinions of the different schools as follows:

- Touching a woman's body requires performance of ritual wash (ablution).
- Ablution is required if a man who can be easily aroused by touching a woman touches a woman who is sexually desirable.
- Ablution is required if the man felt that he was aroused as a result of the touch.
- Neither touching a woman nor hugging nor kissing one's wife require ablution.

These are opinions of the different schools of jurisprudence. Each school has its evidence and interpretation of the tradition of the Prophet (PBUH). However, we are of the opinion that "touching" here refers to the act of sexual intercourse which requires a major ritual wash (Ghusl).

The verse also introduces the concept of Tayamum as an alternative for minor ritual wash (Ablution) or major ritual wash (Ghusl) when water is not available or when the use of water may cause harm to the person. This involves tapping the clean dust (or any object that may be covered with enough dust such that the dust will blow away when the object is touched), rubbing the palms together to get rid of the dust, and then using the palms to wipe the face. The whole process is repeated again but this time the palms are used to wipe the hands. This is a convenient alternative when the use of water is not possible. The ending of the verse conveys the message that God wants to make things easy for people. He forgives our shortcomings.

We need to reflect on the rationale behind the concept of ritual wash and the concept of Tayamum. One may suggest that the objective behind requiring ritual wash is maintaining physical cleanliness. This may be true but it does not explain the use of Tayamum as an alternative. I am not absolutely certain of the rationale behind replacing the ritual wash by Tayamum. However, it seems to me that these rituals provide two functions. The first is preparing the person psychologically to engage in the prayers. Prayers are a meeting with God that requires such a preparation. The rituals provide a transition for the state of mind from a state completely absorbed in the regular daily activities to a state wholly devoted to a meeting with God. The other function may be that it allows the Muslim to establish prayers under any condition and in all circumstances. So that the communications between the person and His Lord continues whether he is sick or traveling and whether water is available or scarce.

Verses: 44 to 57

44. Do you not see those who were given a portion of the Scripture? They purchase error and desire that you should go astray from the right way.
45. And God knows best your enemies; and God suffices as a Protecting Guardian, and God suffices as a Helper.
46. Of those who are Jews, there are those, who distort the meanings of words and say, "We have heard and we disobey and hear, may you not be made to hear, and, 'Ra'ina,'" distorting the word with their tongues and slandering the faith; and if they had said (instead), "We have heard and we obey, and do hear, and do look at us," it would have been better for them and more upright; but God has cursed them on account of their disbelief, so but few of them will believe.
47. You who have been given the Scripture, believe in that which We have revealed, verifying what you have, before We obliterate faces then turn them on their backs, or curse them as We cursed the violators of the Sabbath, and the command of God shall be executed.
48. Certainly, God does not forgive that anything should be associated with Him, and forgives anything else to whomsoever He pleases; and whoever associates anything with God, he has indeed invented a great sin.
49. Have you not considered those who attribute purity to themselves? Nay, God will purify whom He pleases; and they shall not be wronged even, as much as the thread upon a date- stone.
50. See how they forge a lie against God? That of itself is a flagrant sin.
51. Have you not seen those to whom a portion of the Scripture has been given? They believe in idols and false deities and say of those who disbelieve, "These are better guided than the believers."
52. Those are they whom God has cursed, and whomever God curses you shall not find any helper for him.

53. Or have they a share in the dominion? But then they would not give people even what fills the groove on a date-stone.
54. Or do they envy people for what God has given them out of His grace? But indeed We have given the House of Abraham the Scripture and the wisdom, and We have given them a grand kingdom.
55. Some of them believed, and some turned away from it. And nothing can burn like Hell fire.
56. Those who reject Our revelations, We shall soon cast them into fire; so often as their skins are thoroughly burned, We will change them for fresh skins, that they may taste the torment; certainly God is Eminent, Wise.
57. But those who believe and do good deeds, We will admit them to gardens beneath which rivers flow, this will be their eternal home. They shall have therein pure mates, and We shall admit them to cool refreshing shade.” (4:44-57)

“Do you not see those who were given a portion of the Scripture? They purchase error and desire that you should go astray from the right way. And God knows best your enemies; and God suffices as a Protecting Guide, and God suffices as a Helper.” Those who were given the Scripture had every reason to be guided by it, but when they were called to guidance they chose misguidance. They would rather pay for misguidance than follow the free guidance given to them. Buying misguidance implies a predetermination on their part. This is a state of affairs that is both surprising and deplorable. They even go further by asking those who are guided to abandon guidance. They try to confuse people so that they do not follow guidance. It is therefore, important that Muslims know their enemies so that they would not be deceived by these attempts which aim at making them swerve away from the straight path. The verse alludes to the conflict that was going on between the Muslims and some of the Jews in Medina and alerted the Muslims to the danger of the attempts of their enemy, “God knows best your enemies.” God further assures the believers of His support and help, “God suffices as a Protecting Guardian, and God suffices as a Helper.”

The verses continue to name those enemies and to describe how this misbehaved in dealing with the Prophet (PBUH). “Of those who are Jews, there are those, who distort the meanings of words and say, ‘We have heard and we disobey and hear, may you not be made to hear. And, Ra’ina,’ distorting the word with their tongues and slandering the faith; and if they had said (instead), ‘We have heard and we obey, and do hear, and do look at us,’ it would have been better for them and more upright; but God has cursed them on account of their disbelief, so but few of them will believe.” Some of the Jews of Medina distorted the meaning of the word of God in the Torah which predicted the coming of a new revelation. They said to the Prophet (PBUH), “We listened to what you said, but we will disobey, and we will not believe or follow you.” They play on the words they say, saying words with double meaning. On the face of it, they speak to Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) in a polite way saying, “Hear, but you are not obliged to hear.” However, what they really mean is “Hear, may you not be able to hear.” They also use the word “Ra’ina” which may be understood as if they are asking for a special consideration because they are People of the Scripture, while what they really mean is to describe the Prophet (PBUH) to be stupid. So on the face of it, the dialogue sounds polite while in fact it embodied insults. The verse then stated that it would be better to use straight talk rather than words which have double meaning.

“You who have been given the Scripture, believe that which We have revealed, verifying what you have, before We obliterate faces then turn them on their backs, or curse them as We cursed the violators of the Sabbath, and the command of God shall be executed.” This is an invitation and a warning from God to those who were given the Scripture before, to believe in the new Book which came to support the Scripture which they already have. This is a reasonable request since they were given a similar revelation. Refusing to comply called for a strong threat: to obliterate their faces and turn them on their backs. There are different opinions about whether the warning should be considered physical or metaphorical. God’s command will certainly be executed.

“Certainly, God does not forgive that anything should be associated with Him, and forgives anything else to whomsoever He pleases” Al-Bukhari and Muslim both mentioned a prophetic tradition narrated by Abu Dharr (RA). Abu Dharr (RA) narrated that he was walking one night and saw the Prophet (PBUH) walking alone. Abu Dharr (RA) thought that the Prophet (PBUH) wanted to walk alone, so he followed him but did not approach him. However, the Prophet (PBUH) felt that there was someone following him so he called and Abu Dharr (RA) came to him. They walked together for a while then the Prophet (PBUH) said, “Those who have much will get little on the Day of Judgment, except those who spend freely out of that which God gave them.” Then he sat Abu Dharr (RA) in a place and went to a spot out of sight. When the Prophet (PBUH) came back after a while, Abu Dharr (RA) heard him saying, “And even if he stole and committed adultery.” Abu Dharr (RA) asked him, “Prophet of God what were you saying?” the Prophet (PBUH) said, “On my way back, the Archangel Gabriel came to me and said, ‘Muhammad, bring glad tidings to your people, whosoever dies without associating partners with God will be admitted to heaven.’” The Prophet (PBUH) asked Gabriel, “Even if the person committed the crimes of theft or adultery,” Gabriel said, “Even if he stole, committed adultery, or drank alcohol.”

Ibn Abi Hatem documented a tradition narrated by Jaber ibn ‘Abd-Allah (RA), quoting the Prophet (PBUH) to have said, “Any soul dies not associating anything with God has earned God’s forgiveness. It will be punished or forgiven according to God’s will. God forgives everything except associating partners with Him.”

On the authority of Al-Tabarani, Ibn ‘Abbas (RA) quoted the Prophet (PBUH) to have said, “God said, ‘Whosoever recognized that I have the power to forgive sins will be forgiven unless he associates partners with Me.’” This last tradition evinces the power of the deep inner feelings in the heart of a believing person. A person who recognizes the extent of the power of God will enjoy a mixture of feelings that include security, hope, fear, and love. These are feelings which promote God consciousness and open the door for forgiveness.

“Have you not considered those who attribute purity to themselves? Nay, God will purify whom He pleases; and they shall not be wronged even as much as the thread upon a date- stone. See how they forge a lie against Go? That of itself is a flagrant sin.”

The Jews claimed that they were the chosen people. This is true, they were chosen by God to carry the trust and to deliver God's message to people. God favored them over all people. God destroyed Pharaoh and his chiefs and saved them. God gave the Jews the holy land but they deviated away from the divine project and they became tyrants, committing sins, and spreading mischief in the land.

One wonders of the audacity of such people to claim purity for themselves. Similarly, one wonders at the situation of Muslims. Those who have Muslim names and live on Muslim land however, they abandon the way of life dictated by Islamic principles. How can such Muslims call to Islam while Islam is absent from their lives? They only distort the image of Islam. I think this verse applies to Muslims today who claim that they believe in God and His messenger while Islam and the divine project are strangers in our land. These Muslims, "forge a lie against God, and that of itself is a flagrant sin." Islam is a way of life; we can obey God only if we adopt this way of life. Obedience to God brings us closer to Him. Let us look at our situation, where do we stand with respect to the standard enunciated by this verse.

"Have you not seen those to whom a portion of the Scripture has been given? They believe in idols and false deities and say of those who disbelieve, 'These are better guided than the believers.' Those are they whom God has cursed, and whomever God curses you shall not find any helper for him. Or have they a share in the dominion? But then they would not give people even what fills the groove on a date-stone. Or do they envy people for what God has given them out of His grace? But indeed We have given the House of Abraham the Scripture and the wisdom, and We have given them a grand kingdom. Some of them believed, and some turned away from it. And nothing can burn like Hell fire." Don't you wonder at those who claim that they are purified while they believe in falsehood? They follow rules that contravene God's laws and they consider those who associate partners with God better guided than those who believe in the Oneness of God. Those who were given previous Scripture should have recognized the truth. They should have recognized the falsehood of associating partners with God. They should have followed God's law rather than man-made unjust laws. This refers to some of the Jewish tribes in Medina which sided with Quraish when they attacked Medina in the battle of the Ahzab.

They envy people for the blessings that God bestowed on them but when they have a share of the blessings, they behave niggardly. They don't give out even something as small as that which fills the groove on the back of a date-stone.

"Those who reject Our revelations, We shall soon cast them into fire; so often as their skins are thoroughly burned, We will change them for fresh skins, that they may taste the torment; certainly God is Eminent, Wise. But those who believe and do good deeds, We will admit them to gardens beneath which rivers flow, this will be their eternal home. They shall have therein pure mates, and We shall admit them to cool refreshing shade." What a horrifying image for those who will end up in Hellfire. As the skin burns, it will be replaced by new skin so they can taste the torment. In contrast to this, those who believed and did good deeds will abide in gardens under which rivers flow forever. They will enjoy purified spouses and will be covered with refreshing shades.

Verses: 58 to 70

58. Certainly, God commands you to render back the trusts to their owners and when you judge between people you judge with justice; certainly God admonishes you with what is excellent; certainly God is All-Seeing, All-Hearing.
59. You who believe, obey God and obey the Messenger and those in authority among you; then if you have a dispute concerning any matter, refer it to God and the Messenger, if you believe in God and the Last Day; this is better and more seemly in the end.
60. Have you not seen those who claim that they believe in what has been revealed to you and what was revealed before you, how they would go for judging their disputes to unjust tyrants when they have been commanded to reject them? Satan wants to lead them far astray.
61. And when it is said to them, "Come to what God has revealed and to the Messenger," you will see the hypocrites turning away from you with utter aversion.
62. But how will it be when misfortune befalls them as a result of what their hands have committed before. Then they will come to you swearing by God, "We did not seek anything except goodness and conciliation."
63. God knows what is in their hearts; therefore, ignore them and admonish them, and speak to them about themselves in an effectual way.
64. And We did not send a messenger but to be obeyed in accordance with God's will; and had they, when they wronged themselves, come to you and asked for God's forgiveness, and the Messenger had (also) asked forgiveness for them, they would have found God All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.
65. But no, by your Lord, they will not be true believers until they make you a judge in all disputes between them, and then they find no resistance in their hearts to what you have decided, and submit entirely.
66. If We had ordered them, "Lay down your lives or forsake your homes," they would not have done it except a few of them; if they had done what they were admonished, it would have certainly been better for them and more affirming for their faith.
67. Then We would certainly have given them from Ourselves a great reward;
68. We would certainly have guided them to a straight path.
69. All who obey God and the Messenger are in the company of those on whom God has bestowed His blessings; of those are the prophets and the truthful and the martyrs and the righteous. The best company they are.
70. This is a bounty from God, and God suffices as the Omniscient." (4:58-70)

"Certainly, God commands you to render back the trusts to their owners and when you judge between people you judge with justice; certainly, God admonishes you with what is excellent; certainly, God is All-Seeing, All-Hearing." These are commands for a Muslim nation. These commands form a framework for ethical behavior, a trust must be returned back to its rightful owner and people should be judged fairly according to the divine project.

The first most important trust is the trust that God has entrusted humankind with. This is the trust that heavens, earth and mountains refused to undertake but humankind accepted. It is the trust of guidance, knowledge and belief in God willingly and purposely. This is the trust that God inculcated in the initial natural human disposition. Only humankind was given the choice to believe or not to believe. Humankind was given initial natural disposition, intellect, knowledge, and free will to help him in pursuit of the truth. He was asked to strive to reach God with the help of God, “But We shall be sure to guide to Our ways those who strive hard for Our cause.” (29:69)

This is the basic trust that humankind must fulfill. It is the foundation of all other trusts that humankind was asked to undertake. One of these trusts is the trust to be a witness for the faith of Islam, by striving against one’s own desires and leading an Islamic way of life. The Muslim should be a living example of the ethical behavior that Islam promotes, for all people to see. The second level of being a witness for the faith of Islam is to convey its message to people. A third level of being a witness for this faith is to promote the Islamic way of life for the whole humanity.

The trust of dealing honestly with people is another trust. One should be honest in dealing with people in all aspects of human activities whether financial or social. Other trusts include raising children and protecting people’s lives and property. Muslims are commanded to be fair in their judgments. This is a comprehensive justice; it applies to all people whether Muslims or non-Muslims. Enjoying justice is a human right. All human beings have the right to be treated justly irrespective of their faith, ethnic origin, language, or color. The Muslim nation must uphold justice whenever possible. The verse ends by a reminder that God’s command are the best commands and that He is ever watching. It is interesting to note the correspondence between the command and the attributes of God used at the end of the verse. God listens and sees. To be just, one must listen and use one’s insight to arrive at a just rule.

“You who believe, obey God and obey the Messenger and those in authority among you; then if you have a dispute concerning any matter, refer it to God and the Messenger, if you believe in God and the Last Day; this is better and more seemly in the end.” What are the standards of honesty and justice? And how can they be determined and implemented? Do we leave the definitions of honesty and justice to be determined according to human whim, human intellect, and societal norms? It is true that human intellect is a valuable tool for gaining and articulating knowledge which can help humankind in its quest for guidance. But human intellect is a product of the environment in which it lives and the collective experience of the individuals living in this environment. The values that such human intellect produces are not absolute; they will vary from one place to another and from one society to another. But the values should be absolute. The verse outlines the source of all values and rules that should govern human life. God is the one who sets the standards and the values for the human society.

Obedience to God and His Messenger is a fundamental feature of the Muslim society. It is the criterion which defines the belief in God. The verse established the fundamental principle that God is the only source for legislation. God alone has the right to legislate for people and the Quran embodies God’s law. God sent a messenger to illustrate how this law can be applied. The Messenger (PBUH) behaved according to the revelation. So, the Messenger’s tradition is a component of God’s law. Obeying the Messenger (PBUH) is an integral part of obeying God.

The verse indicates that obedience to those who are in authority is conditional on their obedience to God and His Messenger. It also indicates that those who are in authority should be believers. Obedience to those who are in authority is not mandated when they transgress and make evil commands. Authentic traditions expand on this point by stating that obedience is only mandated when those in authority make commands which are in compliance with the fundamentals of Islamic practices. No obedience is mandated when a command to commit a sin is given. This leaves individuals with a responsibility to examine commands issued to them by those in authority. Islam does not mandate blind obedience. Those who perform a command have a responsibility to ensure that these commands are not meant to inflict harm.

A standard protocol to arrive at a verdict is stated. Obedience is mandated when there is a clear and unequivocal verdict given in the Quran or an authentic tradition. Difference in opinion regarding issues which emerge as a result of the changing needs of the society and local culture should be settled through referring it to “God and the Messenger.” Reference should be made to the verses that may apply to this issue. However, if there are no verses dealing with the issue at hand then a verdict may be sought which abides with the general principles of Islamic law. This methodology should be followed by those who believe in God and the Hereafter, this is better for them in this life and in the Hereafter.

This methodology is beneficial for humankind because it is devised by the Creator of humankind. The Creator is Totally Aware of His creation. This methodology is free of the ills that can accrue through humankind weaknesses, desires, whims, and ignorance. It is a fair methodology that does not favor an individual, a class, a people, a race, or a generation.

“Have you not seen those who claim that they believe in what has been revealed to you and what was revealed before you, how they would go for judging their disputes to unjust tyrants when they have been commanded to reject them? Satan wants to lead them far astray. And when it is said to them, ‘Come to what God has revealed and to the Messenger,’ you will see the hypocrites turning away from you with utter aversion. But how will it be when misfortune befalls them as a result of what their hands have committed before. Then they will come to you swearing by God, ‘We did not seek anything except goodness and conciliation.’ God knows what is in their hearts; therefore, ignore them and admonish them, and speak to them about themselves in an effectual way.” It seems that these verses were revealed to address the situation of the hypocrites in Medina during the first few years after Hijra. The verses also outline a fundamental criterion for a person to be deemed a believer. Those who want to “go for judging their disputes to unjust tyrants when they have been commanded to reject them” are not considered believers. They will not be true believers until they ask the Prophet (PBUH) to be the judge in all their disputes and they would accept his judgment willingly. They voluntarily accept the judgment of the Prophet (PBUH) feeling comfortable with whatever judgment decreed by the Prophet (PBUH).

The hypocrites claimed they believed in what was revealed to the messengers who came before the Prophet (PBUH) as well as in what has been revealed to the Prophet (PBUH), but at the same time they contravened this claim by seeking unjust tyrants as judges. The judgments of these false deities were based on their whims and desires not on the revelations of God. Moreover, the hypocrites were admonished not to use unjust tyrants as judges, but they chose deliberately to ignore this command and they succumbed to the deception of Satan who wanted to lead them far astray. They refused to let the Prophet (PBUH) judge according to God's revelations among them in their disputes, what a contradiction.

Symptoms of hypocrisy became apparent when an adversity befell the hypocrites. They came hurrying to the Prophet (PBUH), "swearing by God, 'We did not seek anything except goodness and conciliation.'" It was a humiliating situation. They were unable to declare their true intentions, so they lied to the Prophet (PBUH). This is an image of what will happen to all who choose not to refer to the laws of God to settle their affairs. These people hid their intentions, but God knew what was in their hearts. He told His Prophet (PBUH) that He knew what was in their hearts, however the Prophet (PBUH) was commanded to treat them kindly and to advise them to abandon their crooked behavior. The Prophet (PBUH) was commanded to treat them kindly and to educate them perhaps they might relinquish their crooked ways and join the ranks of the believers.

"And We did not send a messenger but to be obeyed in accordance with God's will; and had they, when they wronged themselves, come to you and asked for God's forgiveness, and the Messenger had (also) asked forgiveness for them, they would have found God All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy." This is an important rule. The mandate of God's messengers was not merely to give sermons and leave not knowing whether the message has been heeded or not, as some may argue. Religion is a way of life. It encompasses institutions, values, behavior, and rituals. For this way of life to be established, it must be supported by power. God sent His messengers to be obeyed, by His leave and within the constraints that He delineated. God ordained that His messengers should be obeyed so that the way of life that God has ordained can be established.

God is All-Forgiving; He accepts the repentance of those who seek God's forgiveness. He is Merciful for those who return to Him. When this verse was revealed, the Prophet (PBUH) was accessible for those who were mentioned earlier in the previous verses, they could have availed themselves of the opportunity of asking the Prophet (PBUH) to seek God's forgiveness for them. This opportunity is no longer available, since the Prophet (PBUH) is no longer available to help, but the door to God remains open and it will never be closed in the face of those who seek His forgiveness. The promise for forgiveness is still available to anyone who seeks God's forgiveness.

"But no, by your Lord, they will not be true believers until they make you a judge in all disputes between them, and then they find no resistance in their hearts to what you have decided, and submit entirely"

This is the criterion that needs to be met by true believers. It is stated with an oath from God. The true believers are those who accept the Prophet (PBUH) as their judge and they accept his ruling with hearts full of content. Some may argue that this criterion was meant only for the time during which it was revealed or that it was meant only for people living at the time of this revelation. This is an argument of someone who does not know much about Islam and has little understanding of the language of the Quran. The criterion was stated in unequivocal terms in the form of an oath by God. It means that Islamic jurisprudence should be used to settle the disputes between people. It does not mean that the Prophet (PBUH) personally should act as a judge. A similar argument was made by the apostates after the death of the Prophet (PBUH). They used this argument to challenge the right of the state to collect the Poor-Dues (Zakat). The first Caliph, Abu Bakr (RA) had to fight them over this.

Public acceptance of Islamic law and the Prophet's (PBUH) traditions as the standard in settling disputes may be sufficient for a person to be considered a Muslim, but to be a believer this acceptance has to come from a heart secure in its contentment and satisfaction with whatever judgment is made.

“And if We had ordered them, ‘Lay down your lives or forsake your homes,’ they would not have done it except a few of them; and if they had done what they were admonished, it would have certainly been better for them and more affirming for their faith; then We would certainly have given them from Ourselves a great reward. We would certainly have guided them to a straight path.” After posing the criterion that needs to be satisfied by people to be true believers, a reassurance is given that the way of life that they are asked to follow is actually a simple, easy, and merciful way of life. No one is burdened beyond his/her ability, and no one is asked to offer a dear sacrifice. God knows the ability of each person and He is Merciful. God also knows that if people were asked to perform difficult tasks, only few would be able to comply. He, therefore, does not burden people with tasks beyond their ability. God does not want people to lead a tough life, nor does He want to charge them with arduous duties. Had people met the reasonable obligations they were asked to do, they would have received God's great help. Asking people to lay down their lives or forsake their homes are examples of arduous tasks that many people would not have been able to comply with had they been mandated. But God mandates only tasks which are within the reach of everyone. In addition, God promised to extend His help and support to those who make the first step on the straight path. However, the ease built in this way of life does not mean that one should follow the path of least resistance. The Islamic way of life allows for exemptions that can be applied when extenuating circumstances do occur. One should try to perform the duties the best way one can and take recourse to the exemptions when it is absolutely necessary to do so.

“All who obey God and the Messenger are in the company of those on whom God has bestowed His blessings; of those are the prophets and the truthful and the martyrs and the righteous. The best company they are. This is a bounty from God, and God suffices as the Omniscient;” This is a gesture that arouses a feeling of anticipation in the hearts of all whose hearts are yearning to be in the company of those who were honored by God. This status can only be achieved by the blessings of God. It is appropriate to live a few moments with the companions of the Prophet (PBUH) who entertained these feelings. Said Ibn Jubair (RA) narrated that, “A man from Al-Ansar (people of the Medina), came to the Prophet (PBUH) and he looked sad. The Prophet (PBUH) asked him, ‘Why do I see you sad?’ The man said, ‘Prophet of God, something crossed my mind made me feel sad.’ The Prophet (PBUH) asked, ‘What is it that made you sad?’ The man said, ‘We are used to having you among us, we look at your face and we sit with you but tomorrow you will die and leave us.’ The Prophet (PBUH) did not answer the man. Then Gabriel came down with this verse, ‘All who obey God and the Messenger are in the company of those on whom God has bestowed His Blessing;’ The Prophet (PBUH) sent for the man who came to him earlier and gave him the glad tiding of being in his company.”

Another tradition that was narrated by Abu Bakr ibn Mardaweeh (RA), he said, “A man came to the Prophet (PBUH) and said, ‘Messenger of God, I love you more than I love myself, my family, and my child. Sometimes, when I am home I remember you, so I could not wait until I come to see you. I worry that after death you will be with the other prophets and I may not be able to see you again.’ The Prophet did not answer him until the above mentioned verses were revealed.”

A tradition given in Sahih Muslim states that Rabeah ibn Kaab Al-Aslam (RA) said, “I used to stay overnight at the house of the Messenger of God (PBUH) to serve him. The Messenger of God (PBUH) asked me to name a reward. So, I said that I would like to accompany him in heaven. The Prophet (PBUH) said, ‘Would you ask something else?’ I said no, this is what I want. The Prophet (PBUH) then said, ‘Prostrate yourself often (meaning pray often).’” A well authenticated (Mutawater) tradition narrated by a group of the companions of the Prophet (PBUH) and cited by Al-Bukhari stated that the Prophet (PBUH) said, “After death, a person will be with those whom he loves.” Muslims were extremely happy to hear this.

Verses: 71 to 86

- 71. You who believe, be on your guard, whether you go to war in small detachments or you go all together.*
- 72. Certainly, among you is he who would certainly tarry behind. If then a misfortune befalls you he says, “Certainly, God did bless me that I was not present with them.”*
- 73. And if God bestows a bounty on you, he would certainly say, as if there had not been any affection between you and him, “Had I been with them, then I would have attained a mighty achievement.”*
- 74. Therefore, let those who sell the life of this world for the Hereafter, fight in the way of God. Whoever fights in the way of God, then whether he is slain or victorious, We shall grant him a great reward.*
- 75. And why should you not fight in the way of God and for the sake of the oppressed among the men and the women and the children, who say, “Our Lord, rescue us from this town, whose people are oppressors, and give us from Your grace a protecting guardian and a helper.”*
- 76. Those who believe fight in the way of God, and those who rejected faith fight in the way of Satan. Fight therefore the allies of Satan; certainly Satan’s scheme is ever weak.*
- 77. Do you not see those to whom it was said, “Restrain your hands from fighting, and establish regular prayers and pay the poor-dues;” but when fighting was prescribed for them, a party of them feared people as – or even more than - they should have feared*

God. They said, "Our Lord, why did You ordain fighting for us? If only You give us a respite for a while." Say to them, "The enjoyment of this world is little, and the Hereafter is better for him who is conscious of God; and you shall not be wronged as much as the thread on the back of a date-stone."

- 78. Wherever you are, death will overtake you, even though you may be in lofty towers. If a benefit comes to them, they say, "This is from God;" and if a misfortune befalls them, they say, "This is from you." Say to them, "All is from God," but what is the matter with these people who fail to understand what was said to them?*
- 79. Whatever benefit comes to you (humankind), it is from God, and whatever misfortune befalls you, it is from yourself, and We have sent you (Prophet), to humankind as a messenger; and God is sufficient as a witness.*
- 80. Whoever obeys the Messenger, he indeed obeys God, but whoever turns away, We have not sent you as a keeper over them.*
- 81. And they say, "We obey you," but as soon as they leave you, a party of them spend the night plotting to do other than what you say; and God writes down what they plot by night. Therefore, ignore them and put your trust in God; God is sufficient as a Guardian.*
- 82. Do they not then reflect on the Quran? If it were from any other than God, would not they have found in it many a discrepancy.*
- 83. And when there comes to them news of some matter touching upon public security or fear, they spread it around. If they had referred it to the Messenger and to those in authority among them, those among them who are able to reach a correct conclusion, would have resolved it. Were it not for the grace of God upon you and His mercy, you would have certainly followed Satan save a few.*
- 84. Fight then in God's way; this is only imposed on you, and urge the believers maybe God will restrain the might of those who disbelieve; God is strongest in might and in punishment.*
- 85. Whoever recommends and helps in a good cause shall have a share of it, and whoever recommends and helps in an evil cause shall have a share of its consequences; God is the Controller of all things.*
- 86. And when you are greeted with a greeting, greet with a better (greeting) than it or return it; certainly God is a Reckoner of all things." (4:71- 86)*

It is likely that these verses were revealed during the period between of the two battles of Uhud and the Trench. The verses deal with the unity of Muslims. They allude to the existence of various groups among the Muslim community. Some of these groups may not have had a full understanding of the true meaning of Islam, or they may not have been truly believed but pretended to be among the believers. The verse touches upon the great effort that was needed to bring all these groups together as a united community in face of the challenges that the community was encountering. These were challenges related to the true understanding of the faith and the need to defend the fledgling community in the face of threats posed by its enemies. This may describe the condition of the community as a whole, however, it does not preclude the presence of Muslims who were shining examples and who strived hard and reached the top.

“You who believe, be on your guard, whether you go to war in small detachments or you go all together. And certainly among you is he who would certainly tarry behind. If then a misfortune befalls you he says, ‘Certainly, God did bless me that I was not present with them.’ And if God bestows a bounty on you, he would certainly say, as if there had not been any affection between you and him, ‘Had I been with them, then I would have attained a mighty achievement.’ This was an advice to the believers, an advice from the high command which plans the strategy and explains the tactics. One cannot but feel amazed at the Quran’s holistic approach to life. In one verse the general strategy for combating the enemy is explained, “You who believe, fight the disbelievers near you and let them find you standing firm; be aware that God is with those who are conscious of Him.” (9:123) In the verse at hand, the tactics of dealing with enemy are outlined, “Be on your guard, whether you go to war in small detachments or you go all together.” In a third verse yet a new tactic is explained, “If you gain the upper hand over them in war, use them to disperse those who follow them, that they may remember.” (8:57) This shows that Quranic verses were not limited in scope to teaching Muslims how to worship God, how to perform rituals, or how to behave but its scope encompassed all aspects of life. Islam looks at life as a whole and requests the believers to adopt a way of life that is consistent with the divine project. The Quran provides a code of conduct for the individuals which explains the rituals, the acts of worship, and the ethical expectations. In addition, the Quran formulates the basic fundamentals upon which the social, economic, and political systems, to be adopted by the Muslim community, should be established. Details of the systems may differ depending on the time and place but they have always to emanate from the same basic fundamentals.

The verse explains that when Muslims go to war they should go out in small or large groups depending on the situation but not as individuals. It is easy to eliminate individuals, especially when there are hypocrites around. They should always be on the alert, not only watching the enemy’s activities but also watching the actions of the defeatists among their ranks. The verse stressed the danger of the defeatists who were trying to hold the progress of the army. Those defeatists were hypocrites who wanted to maximize their profits. They did not participate in the campaign fearing death on the battle ground. They did not hide their happiness when a disaster befell the fighting believers. But, when the believers won then they were full of regret having lost their share in the spoils of war. Their sole concern was how much material gains they can accumulate. True believers loved to win and also to be safe; they prayed God to make them safe and winners. However, when they were requested to fight in the way of God, they answered the call without hesitation. They knew that they will win one of the two best rewards: martyrdom or victory.

The verse painted a despicable image for the defeatists to warn the rest of the Muslim community against falling in this category. The verse alerted the Muslim community to be aware of both the dangers that may come from within and the dangers that may come from outside the community. This is a typical situation that can be seen repeatedly over time. The strategy in dealing with inside dangers is to try to rehabilitate the defeatists to overcome their weakness and to find a way to integrate them into the community.

“Therefore let those fight in the way of God, who sell the life of this world for the hereafter; and whoever fights in the way of God, then whether he is slain or victorious, We shall grant him a great reward.” Do fight in the way of God. Islam does not recognize any other motive for fighting other than fighting in the way of God. Fighting to gain spoils of war, fighting to control land or people, or fighting to build personal or national glory are illegitimate motives for fighting. The only legitimate motive for fighting in Islam is to fight to proclaim the word of God and to give people the freedom to adopt a way of life of their choice. It is divine justice that dictates that people should have the chance to examine the word of God and to have the free will to adopt a way of life which they believe in. When a Muslim is killed in the course of fighting in the way of God, he/she becomes a martyr. But if he/she is killed fighting for any other reason he/she would not be considered a martyr.

“And why should you not fight in the way of God and for the sake of the oppressed among the men and the women and the children, who say, ‘Our Lord, rescue us from this town, whose people are oppressors, and give us from Your grace a protecting guardian and a helper.’” How can you not fight in the way of God to save those who are being persecuted from among the men, women and children? A question which paints an emotive image for the persecuted who need help, in an attempt to arouse feelings of chivalry in the hearts of the believers. It urged them to defend those who were persecuted by the Meccan Arabs because they chose to adopt Islam and to help them to escape the persecution at the hands of the unjust.

“Those who believe fight in the way of God, and those who disbelieve fight in the way of the Satan. Fight therefore the allies of Satan; certainly Satan’s scheme is ever weak.” The verse paints an image of two different groups of people, fighting under two different banners. Those who fight in the way of God, fight to proclaim the sovereignty of God’s law and to establish justice among people under the banner of God. They proclaim God as the only deity to be worshiped and, therefore, He is the Ruler. Those who fight in the way of Satan are trying to establish a way of life that is based on values which are deemed improper by God. Those who fight in the way of God get His support and protection. Those who fight in the way of Satan seek Satan’s protection. Believers are commanded to fight the allies of Satan and never fear them because Satan’s scheme is ever weak.

Thus, Muslims stand on firm grounds in their battle against those who are protected by Satan. They have a strong support from God because they have the strong belief that they are fighting in His way. They are not fighting for personal, tribal or national gains. It is a battle between the truth and falsehood. The truth is exemplified in the values and discipline deemed good by God, while falsehood is brought about by various programs and methodologies that is based on the whims and desires of human beings. Establishing the truth provides an environment in which justice is established. Muslims should not fear Satan because Satan strategy is weak.

“Do you not see those to whom it was said, ‘Restrain your hands from fighting, and establish regular prayers and pay the poor-dues;’ but when fighting is prescribed for them, a party of them fear people as – or even more than - they should have feared God. They said, ‘Our Lord, why did You ordain fighting for us? If only You give us a respite for a while.’ Say to them, ‘The enjoyment of this world is little, and the Hereafter is better for him who is conscious of God; and you shall not be wronged as much as the hair on the back of a date-stone.’ Wherever you are, death will overtake you, even though you may be in lofty towers. If a benefit comes to them, they say, ‘This is from God;’ and if a misfortune befalls them, they say, ‘This is from you.’ Say to them, ‘All is from God,’ but what is the matter with these people who fail to understand what was said to them?”

God wonders at the behavior of a group of people, who were anxious to fight in the beginning, before Muslims were allowed to fight back those who were persecuting them, but when the time came and Muslims were allowed to fight back those who were persecuting them, they became overwhelmed with fear. They feared people more than they feared God. They asked in humiliation why they were commanded to fight. They even asked for a respite to prepare themselves for carrying out the command.

The verse indicates that initially, Muslims were not allowed to fight back those who were persecuting them in Mecca, then the strategy changed and a command allowing the Muslims to fight back was issued. In the early days after the advent of Islam, Muslims were asked to persevere, establish prayers, and pay the poor dues. What was the wisdom behind the change in strategy? There is no certain and specific knowledge of the reasons behind the change in strategy, one can only speculate. Speculations may be right, may be wrong, or may provide only a partial explanation. The true reasons are only known to God and we have no way to be certain of the real reasons behind the change in the strategy. Our speculations are as follows:

- The Meccan period may have been considered a period for education and preparation for the Muslims for the task of establishing a Muslim community.
- The unarmed struggle may have been more effective in this period. The Arabs of Quraish were obstinate by nature. Armed struggle may have motivated even the moderates among them to become staunch enemies of Islam and would have closed the door in front of anyone who wanted to become a Muslim.
- Armed struggle may not have been practical, since there was no single identified army to fight against. Persecution was practiced by individuals and armed struggle may have turned many houses in Mecca into battle grounds. Armed struggle that takes place in individual households may have caused a great deal of destruction and chaos and would have reinforced the claim of the Arabs of Mecca that Muhammad’s message commands the father to kill his son and the son to kill his father.
- There may have been hopes that those who persecuted the Muslims in the beginning may turn around and adopt Islam and become its sincerest supporters. An example of this group was ‘Umar (RA), the second caliph.
- The strategy of the unarmed struggle did arouse the feelings of chivalry in the hearts of the non-Muslims and motivated them to save Muslims from persecution and torture. Some examples support this opinion. When Ibn Al-Daghna came to know that Abu Bakr (RA) was going to migrate from Mecca to flee the persecution, he felt ashamed. It was shameful, in his view, that someone like Abu Bakr (RA) was forced to leave his home in face of persecution and offered Abu Bakr (RA) his protection. Another example was shown when the gallantry of some non-Muslim men drove them to lift the boycott which was imposed on the Prophet's (PBUH) tribe when they realized how much devastation the boycott had caused.

- The Muslims were a minority in Mecca. All the tribes outside Mecca considered what is happening between the Muslims and non-Muslims in Mecca as an internal conflict. An armed struggle between the Muslims and non-Muslims may have ended in wiping out the Muslim minority.
- The priority at that time may have been for the call to Islam to continue. This was being achieved in spite of the price that was being paid.

These considerations may have helped in shaping the strategy of the unarmed struggle. Muslims were commanded to persevere, establish prayers, and pay the poor dues.

Then the command was given and those who were most anxious to participate in the armed struggle started to have second thoughts, fear of facing people on the battle ground filled their hearts. The presence of such a group could break up the unity of the community. The whole community should be ready to take up their responsibility and undertake the command to participate in the armed struggle with fearless hearts full of confidence and security. The Quran addressed this situation by educating this group, “The enjoyment of this world is little, and the Hereafter is better for him who is conscious of God; and you shall not be wronged as much as the thread on the back of a date-stone. Wherever you are, death will overtake you, even though you are in lofty towers.” They feared death and wanted to live. They wished that they had more time to enjoy life before they face death on the battle ground. The Quran told them that the enjoyment of this life is little. So, how long do they hope to live: days, weeks, months, or years? Life will end some day and the enjoyment of the whole worldly life is little. This worldly life is only one of the stages of the life of a human being. Death is not the end of the journey. Death is a bridge to the second stage, the everlasting life. The enjoyment in the Hereafter is not only everlasting but it is also better for those who remain conscious of God. God consciousness involves fearing God. It is appropriate to mention the fear of God here because it is God that one should fear not people. Those who are God conscious have nothing to fear. God will not treat them unjustly. If one misses the worldly enjoyment, then there is the fullest reward in the Hereafter. No one will be wronged.

Death overtakes everyone at the appointed time, no one can escape. Death is certain whether one engages in war or lives in peace; it is certain whether one is protected within the confines of a secure place or lives in the open. Delaying the undertaking of armed struggle will not then change the time of the death.

“If a benefit comes to them, they say, ‘This is from God;’ and if a misfortune befalls them, they say, ‘This is from you.’ Say to them, ‘All is from God,’ but what is the matter with these people who fail to understand what was said to them?” They may have said this for one or more of the following three reasons:

- They may have considered the Prophet (PBUH) to be a bad omen. If the land did not yield the crops they expected, the cattle did not multiply as they had hoped, or if they were touched by an adversity, then it must have been the Prophet's (PBUH) fault. But if everything is fine then, it is God who bestows the bounty.
- Or they may have wanted to berate the Prophet (PBUH) so that they would have the excuse to relieve themselves from the responsibilities which he commanded them to undertake, especially if the responsibility included taking up arms. This may have been their way of deflecting the blame from themselves to the Prophet (PBUH). Instead of blaming themselves for being weak and fearful, they blamed the Prophet (PBUH) for the evil he commanded them to do.
- Or they may not have understood the reality of life and the role of God's will in what happens to them and to the others. They may have not understood the role of the Prophet (PBUH) and the nature of the relationship between God and His Messenger.

These verses deal with one of the aspects of the concept of free will and predestination. The Quran has a simple approach in dealing with this concept. God is the only doer for what happens in the universe and what befalls people. A person can attempt to do something but it will only happen if God willed it to happen. The Prophet (PBUH) is a creature of God; he has no power to make things happen. The fact that they blame him for their good fortune or misfortune shows how little their understanding is. The point is people can try, using all the tools that God made available to them, to accomplish a certain task whether good or bad, but ultimately it is the will of God that determines whether or not the task will be achieved. It is the will of God which controls all things happening in this universe.

Then we come to the subsequent verse, “Whatever benefit comes to you (humankind), it is from God, and whatever misfortune befalls you, it is from yourself, and We have sent you (Prophet), to humankind as a messenger; and God is sufficient as a witness.” There is no contradiction between this verse and the previous one. God has established a clear way to be followed and He pointed out the way to goodness and warned people not to follow the way that leads to evil. God's way guides people to what is good and keeps them away from what is evil. Those who chose to follow God's way will be helped further by God, “But We shall certainly guide to Our ways those who strive hard for Our cause.” (29:69). When one follows this way, he/she will get the benefit. It may not look like a benefit in the eyes of many. But the true benefit is that which will be beneficial in God's balance because it is He who has drawn the way and it is He who set the standard for good and evil. Those who choose not to follow the way of God, refrain from doing good, and indulge in committing evil will gain the recompense for their evil deeds in this life, in the Hereafter, or in both. This is what they have gained as a consequence of their own deeds. There is no contradiction between the two statements. Thus, the Prophet (PBUH) was sent as a messenger to deliver God's message and not to control goodness or evil.

“Whoever obeys the Messenger, he indeed obeys God, and whoever turns away, We have not sent you as a keeper over them.” Whoever obeys the Prophet (PBUH) he/she indeed obeys God, because the Prophet (PBUH) is simply delivering God's message. The Prophet (PBUH) was not sent to force people to believe or to compel them to be guided. Forcing people to believe was neither the Prophet's (PBUH) mandate, nor was he prepared for doing it. Those who turn away should be left to God. God will deal with them as He chooses.

“And they say, ‘We obey you,’ but as soon as they leave you, a party of them spend the night plotting to do other than what you say; and God writes down what they plot by night, therefore ignore them and trust in God, and God is sufficient as a Guardian.” There are two possible interpretations for this verse. The first, the verse refers to a group of Muslims who expressed their unconditional acceptance of whatever the Prophet (PBUH) commanded them to do, as long as they were in his company. Once they parted company with the Prophet (PBUH) they started plotting to obviate the prophet’s (PBUH) commands.

An alternative interpretation is also plausible. When the Muslims were with the Prophet (PBUH) they expressed their obedience but once they parted company, a smaller group (the hypocrites) of them started plotting for disobedience. These plots jeopardized the unity of the Muslim community. Such threats could have been catastrophic since the danger of an outside enemy was eminent. God, however, assured the Prophet (PBUH) and the sincere Muslims that He is ever aware of those who plot and scheme against them. He also sent a warning to the hypocrites that they will not be successful in their plots.

The strategy that the Prophet (PBUH) was commanded to adopt in dealing with the hypocrites was to take what they say at its face value and not to try to dig deeper for their real intentions. This plan worked in the end and left them disgraced and weak. So, the Prophet (PBUH) was commanded to leave them alone and to put his trust in God. God is sufficient for those who put their trust in Him. They will be saved from those who plot evil against them.

“Do they not then reflect on the Quran? And if it were from any other than God, would not they have found in it many a discrepancy.” This is a criterion that they could have used to find out for themselves whether the Quran is God’s word: a criterion that respects humankind and honors his ability to think and understand. The criterion is to find for themselves whether there is any inconsistency in the Quran. Those who read and reflect on the Quran will discover that the Quran is a consistent book. There are different levels for this characteristic which are suitable for all generations and all different levels of intellectual attainment. Each generation is requested to reflect on the Quran and discover for themselves the consistent nature of the Quran.

“And when there comes to them news of some matter touching upon public security or fear, they spread it around; and if they had referred it to the Messenger and to those in authority among them, those among them who are able to reach a correct conclusion would have resolved it. Were it not for the grace of God upon you and His mercy, you would have certainly followed Satan save a few.” The verse depicts a scene of a group of people within the Muslim community who were lacking in self-discipline. They did not appreciate the danger of spreading rumors among a community getting ready for a battle. It may have been that they really did not care about the impact of their actions on the welfare of the community. Spreading rumors may have had serious repercussions on the preparations for war. Rumors spread very quickly from one person to another and may have had a devastating effect on the morale of the army and its readiness for combat. This is a typical example of an army which is either lacking in discipline, in loyalty to its command, or in both. It seems that the verse is describing a real situation which the army was experiencing, at that time. The verse directed the Muslims to the correct approach in dealing with such situations. Rather than spreading rumors, they should have gone back to the Prophet (PBUH) or to their commanders. Those who were in command should have been able to help in sorting out the situation. God's blessings are great and it is the only protection against Satan's temptation.

“Fight then in God's way; this is only imposed on you, and urge the believers maybe God will restrain the might of those who disbelieve and God is strongest in might and in punishment.”

Reading this verse and remembering the previous ones, lead us to make the following comments:

- The verse alludes to the shaky condition of the Muslim community. Rumors frustrated the unity of the Muslim ranks. God commanded His Prophet (PBUH) to fight, even if he had to fight alone. In the meantime, he should urge the believers to join him. In addition, the verse reiterates a fundamental principle that obeying God's command is a personal responsibility.
- The verse emphasizes how difficult it was for the Muslim community to take up arms against the polytheists. The verse indicates that that the ultimate hope of the Muslims was that God would support them against the polytheists. The verse brings a sense of security to the Muslims by reminding them of the superiority of God's power.
- The verses also outline the natural reluctance of people to undertake difficult tasks. Seeking the support of God and putting their trust in Him are the only tools to ease the burden of these difficult tasks and responsibilities.

“Whoever recommends and helps a good cause shall have a share of it, and whoever recommends and helps in an evil cause shall have his share of its consequences, and God is the Controller all things.” Those who encourage and urge people to fulfill their responsibilities will have a share in the reward, and those who hesitate in carrying out their responsibilities and dampen the drive of others will be recompensed for the consequences of their actions. This is a general rule that applies to all situations. The specific circumstances which constituted the subject of these verses were used to produce this general rule. This is one of the general features of Quran. The verse ends by stating that God is ever watching over everything; all power and provision is His.

“And when you are greeted with a greeting, greet with a better (greeting) than it or return it; certainly God is Reckoner of all things.” Answering the greetings offered by people is a social etiquette that helps in improving the relationships between people in the society. Islam has its own unique greeting. The greeting can be any one of the three forms: peace be with you; peace and mercy of God be with you; or peace, mercy, and blessings of God be with you. The second form is used to respond to the first form and the third form is used to respond to the second and the third forms. This way the response is either better or equal to the original greeting.

Verses: 87 to 94

87. There is no god but Him- He will most certainly gather you together on the Day of Resurrection, there is no doubt about that; who is truer in His speech than God?

88. Why should you be divided into two parties regarding the hypocrites? When God Himself rejected them because of what they have earned? Do you wish to guide those whom God

- has left to go astray? And whomsoever God leaves to go astray, you shall by no means find a way for them.*
89. They desire that you should reject faith as they have rejected faith, so that you might be (all) alike. Therefore, take no protecting guardians from their ranks until they migrate (to Medina) in God's way. If they turn their back, then seize them and kill them wherever you find them, and take no ally or a helper from among them.
  90. Except those who seek refuge with a people with whom you have a treaty, or who come to you, their hearts restraining them from fighting you or fighting their own people; and if God had pleased, He would have given them power over you, so that they should have certainly fought you; therefore, if they withdraw from you and do not fight you and offer you peace, then God has not given you a way against them.
  91. You will find others who wish to obtain security from you, as well as from their people, but every time they are back in a situation where they are tempted (to fight you), they succumb to it; therefore, if they do not withdraw from you, and offer you peace and restrain their hands, then seize them and kill them wherever you find them; and against these We have given you a clear authority.
  92. It is not for a believer to kill a believer except by mistake, and whoever kills a believer by mistake, he should free a believing slave, and blood-money should be paid to the victim's people unless they remit it as a charity, but if he be from a tribe hostile to you and he is a believer, then set free a believing slave, and if he is from a tribe with whom you have a treaty, the blood-money should be paid to the victim's people along with the freeing of a believing slave; but he who does not have the means should fast for two months successively: a penance from God, and God is Omniscient, Wise.
  93. And whoever kills a believer intentionally, his punishment is Hell; he shall abide in it, and God will send His wrath and curse on him and prepare for him a dreadful torment.
  94. You who believe, when you go to war in God's way, be careful to discern; and do not say to someone who offers you peace, "You are not a believer." Do you seek the chance profit of this life? God has abundant gains; you too were such before, then God conferred His favor on you; therefore, take care to discern; certainly God is Totally -Aware of what you do. (4:87-94)

"There is no god but Him - He will most certainly gather you together on the Day of Resurrection, there is no doubt about that. Who is truer in His speech than God?" The belief in the Oneness of God is the foundation of the divine project to educate individuals and to establish a Muslim society. It is also the basis of the Muslim society's laws and institutions. These laws and institutions organize life within the society as well the relationships between the Muslim society and other societies and organizations. It is appropriate to use this verse as an introduction to the subsequent verses which delineate basic rules that govern the relationships within the Muslim society as well as the relationships between the Muslim society and other societies.

"Why should you be divided into two parties regarding the hypocrites when God Himself rejected them because of what they have earned? Do you wish to guide those whom God has left to go astray? And whomsoever God leaves to go astray, you shall by no means find a way for them. They desire that you should reject faith as they have rejected faith, so that you might be

(all) alike. Therefore, take no ally from their ranks until they migrate (to Medina) in God's way; but if they turn their back, then seize them and kill them wherever you find them, and take no ally or a helper from among them.” The verse deplored the difference in opinion that existed between two groups of Muslims regarding how to deal with the hypocrites. It placed the issue in perspective setting up the grounds for dealing with the hypocrites. To build a unified front regarding the hypocrites, the Quran explained that the bad situation in which the hypocrites found themselves in was brought upon themselves as a result of their own deeds. A rhetorical question is posed to the Muslims who wanted to adopt a lenient position towards the hypocrites thinking that this might rectify the situation, “Do you wish to guide him whom God has left to go astray?” The answer is, “And whomsoever God leaves to go astray, you shall by no means find a way for him.” God leaves those who deliberately choose to be led astray to continue on the path of misguidance. They lose any hope in coming back to the straight path. Not only did they lose the way but they also wish that the believers be led astray as well, “They desire that you should reject faith as they have rejected faith, so that you might be (all) alike.” They recanted after they had adopted Islam. Their tongues proclaimed the testament of faith but their deeds confirmed their disbelief. Not only they supported the enemy of Islam, but they also worked very hard to sway the Muslims from the straight path, so that they would be all alike. The verse removed all doubts about who can be called a true Muslim. The deeds of a true Muslim should be a true reflection of his/her words. The verse excited the feelings of the believers, who recently tasted the sweetness of faith and appreciated the change in their life style which was brought about by the new faith and urged them to abhor what the hypocrites did.

Then the command was issued, “Therefore take no protecting guardians from their ranks until they migrate (to Medina) in God's way; but if they turn back, then seize them and kill them wherever you find them, and take no ally or a helper from among them.” We sense from this command that at the time these verses were revealed, there were still close family and tribal ties as well as economic and business transactions between the Muslims and the idolaters of Mecca. The command alluded to the type of bonds that should be observed by the members of the Muslim community. It explained that the Muslim community should not be built on tribal, family, or other interests. The common bond that should hold the Muslims together in a single entity is the belief in the Oneness of God. This means that no friendship can exist between the two warring parties: Muslims in Medina and the idolaters in Mecca. Those who adopted the faith of Islam but still lived in Mecca should migrate to Medina and become an integral part of the new Muslim community. Their migration should be in the way of God. Their sole purpose would be to flee with their faith and to contribute to the establishment of a community whose members lead an Islamic way of life. The verse stated clearly, that if they migrate then they can be considered members of the Muslim community, but if they do not migrate and remain in Mecca then their Islam is only a lip service. In this case, “Seize them and kill them wherever you find them, and take no ally or a helper from among them.” We believe, on the basis of this statement, that this verdict did not apply to the hypocrites in Medina.

Islam is tolerant towards people of different faiths. It is not Islam’s way to force people to abandon their faiths and convert to Islam. Non-Muslims living in a Muslim state have the right to practice their faith as long as they do not attack Islam or try to convert Muslims to their religion. They are treated as full citizens of the society enjoying the same rights that Muslims enjoy. They are allowed to use laws based on their faith to settle their own disputes in matters that are not part of national interest.

But, those who said that they were Muslims and testified that there is no deity except God and that Muhammad (PBUH) is His Messenger, then refused to migrate with the Muslims to Medina and they supported the enemies of Islam, do not deserve any leniency. Their actions showed that they were enemies of the Muslims. However, an exception is made “Except those who seek refuge with a people with whom you have a treaty, or who come to you, their hearts restraining them from fighting you or fighting their own people; and if God had pleased, He would have given them power over you, so that they should have certainly fought you; therefore, if they withdraw from you and do not fight you and offer you peace, then God has not given you a way against them.” The enemies of Islam who joined a group or a party who had a peace treaty with the Muslims were given the same privileges which the original subscribers to the treaty enjoyed. Muslims were not allowed to fight them. This command shows Islam’s inclination towards peace. Islam opts for peace whenever there is a way to settle disputes in a peaceful way, as long as the security and the freedom of speech of Muslims are not compromised.

Another exception is made for those who wanted to stay neutral and did not want to side with any of the warring factions. These were people who were living in Mecca and were members of the tribes that were at war with the Muslims but they chose to take a neutral position regarding the war. Islam respected their choice. The verse explained the logic behind the Quran’s stance towards these people. They could have sided with their people against the Muslims. So, their choice to take a neutral stand deserved to be respected by the Muslims. It is God’s will nevertheless. This is a reminder for the Muslims to incline to peace whenever it is possible as long as fundamental principles are not compromised.

“You will find others who wish to obtain security from you, as well as, from their people, but every time they are back in a situation where they are tempted (to fight you), they succumb to it; therefore, if they do not withdraw from you, and offer you peace and restrain their hands, then seize them and kill them wherever you find them; and against these We have given you a clear authority.” This was a group similar to the first one in its evil intentions towards the Muslims. They were not party to any peace treaty and they did not want to remain neutral. So, they were considered at war with the Muslims. Ibn Jareer quoted Mejahed who said that this verse tells the story of a group from the hypocrite Meccan Arabs. They used to come to the Prophet (PBUH) expressing their allegiance but they revert back to idolatry practices upon their return to their tribes. They wanted to hold the stick from the middle. The verse requested that these people should clarify their stand. If they did not restrain their hands and offer peace, then they should be considered at war with the Muslims.

These verses outline two basic principles for Muslims: be firm at war, but do opt for peace whenever there is a chance for peace. Being firm in dealing with serious situations does not contradict being tolerant when tolerance is required. Establishing these two principles side by side is a clear instruction for Muslims to practice moderation in their dealings. They indicate that extremism is not supported by Islam.

“It is not for a believer to kill a believer except by mistake, and whoever kills a believer by mistake, he should free a believing slave, and blood-money should be paid to the victim’s people unless they remit it as a charity, but if he be from a tribe hostile to you and he is a believer, then set free a believing slave, and if he is from a tribe with whom you have a treaty, the blood-money should be paid to the victim’s people along with the freeing of a believing slave; but he who does not have the means should fast for two months successively: a penance from God, and God is Omniscient, Wise.” The previous verses dealt with the relationship between the Muslim community and other communities at times of war. In this verse, the discourse turns to the relationships among Muslims. The rule that Muslims should not fight each other irrespective of differences in background and nationality has been stated. There is no good enough reason to justify killing a Muslim at the hands of his fellow Muslims, with two exceptions: killing by mistake or on account of retribution as dictated by the rule of law. The verse explains three different ways for dealing with situations when a person is killed by mistake.

The first scenario is when the victim and his family are residents of a Muslim state. In this case, a believing slave should be freed and a ransom should be paid to the victim’s family. Freeing a slave is a symbolic gesture to redress the loss that the Muslim community suffered. It is like giving life to a person in lieu of the life that was taken by death. The ransom is a means to compensate the victim’s family for their loss. The verse states that the victim’s family has the right to forgo the ransom if they so choose.

The second scenario deals with a situation where the victim is a Muslim but his family is not. The family of the deceased lives in a non-Muslim state. In this case, a Muslim slave has to be freed as a compensation for the loss of the Muslim community. No ransom should be paid to the non-Muslim family, since this money may be used to support the war against Muslims.

The third scenario involves a victim whose family is not Muslim but they reside in a state which has concluded a peace treaty with the Muslim state. In this case a ransom should be paid to his family and a slave should be freed. It is interesting to note that the verse does not mention explicitly in this last scenario whether the victim is a believer or not as it was explicitly stated in the previous two scenarios. This motivated some of the scholars to conclude that this is a general verdict that applies to murder victims whether they are Muslims or non-Muslims as long as the victim is a resident of a state that has a peace treaty with the Muslim state. However, it appears to me that these three scenarios only address the cases when a Muslim is killed by mistake as was stated in the beginning of the verse and the three scenarios provide details of the different situations that may be encountered.

It has been reported that the Prophet (PBUH) did pay a ransom for non-Muslims who were killed by mistake, but he did not free any slaves in these cases. Thus, the conclusion of the Muslim scholars mentioned above is supported by the Prophet’s (PBUH) actions not by the verses under discussion.

“And whoever kills a believer intentionally, his punishment is Hell; he shall abide in it, and God will send His wrath and curse on him and prepare for him a dreadful torment.” Premeditated killing of a fellow Muslim is a heinous crime. It is a crime that deliberately destroys human life, as well as severing the strong relationship created by the brotherhood of faith. This is a relationship which provides the bond that holds the community together. This crime has been grouped in one category with associating partners with God in many places in the Quran. Some scholars concluded- among them Ibn ‘Abbas (RA) - that the perpetrator, in this case, has no chance to repent. However, others cited the verse, “Certainly, God does not forgive that anything should be associated with Him, and forgives anything else to whomsoever He pleases,” (4:48) indicating that a repentant murderer may still be forgiven.

Early Muslims used to suffer a great deal of bitterness and sadness when they encounter fellow Muslims who murdered - before they embraced Islam - their parents, brothers or children, but they never thought of avenging their loss or treating them badly.

This leads to the following verse which clearly instructs Muslims to be careful when they fight not to kill anyone until they have verified that this person is fighting against Islam. The word of any person that declares himself a Muslim should be taken at its face value.

“You who believe, when you go to war in God's way, be careful to discern; and do not say to someone who offers you peace, ‘You are not a believer.’ Do you seek the chance profit of this life? God has abundant gains; you too were such before, then God conferred His favor on you; therefore, take care to discern; certainly God is Totally-Aware of what you do.”

The verse reminded Muslims of their recent past before they adopted Islam. This was a time when a fight would start for the most trivial reason, very often motivated by greed. It also reminded them of the security that they have gained after they reverted to Islam. This is a bounty from God.

95. The believers who sit back, except those who are suffering an injury, are not equal to those who strive and fight in the cause of God with their wealth and their persons. God has made those who strive with their wealth and their persons a rank higher than those who sit back and to each class God has promised a good reward. God has distinguished those who strive above those who sit back and will grant them a great reward.
96. High ranks are especially bestowed by Him and forgiveness and mercy, God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.
97. When the angels take the souls of those who wronged themselves, they shall say, “In what state were you?” They shall say, “We were weak and oppressed in the land.” The angels will say, “Was not God's earth spacious, so that you could have migrated therein?” Such people will find their refuge in Hell. What an evil destination.
98. Except those who are really weak and oppressed – men, women, and children - who have no means in their power and cannot find a way (to escape);
99. For these, there is hope that God will pardon them, God is Pardoning, All-Forgiving.
100. Whoever migrates in God's way, he will find much refuge and abundance in the earth, and whoever forsakes his home, seeking refuge with God and His Messenger, and then death overtakes him, his reward is indeed with God, God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.

101. And when you travel in the land, there is no blame on you if you shorten the prayer, if you fear that the disbelievers may attack you, certainly the disbelievers are your avowed enemy.
102. And when you are among them and standing to lead them in prayer, let a party of them stand up with you, and let them take their arms; then when they have prostrated themselves let them go to the rear, and let another party who have not prayed come forward and pray with you, taking all precaution and bearing arms; the disbelievers wish that you may be careless of your arms and your luggage, so that they may then assault you with a sudden united attack, and there is no blame on you, if you are inconvenienced with rain or if you are sick, that you lay down your arms, and take every precaution; certainly, God has prepared a disgraceful torment for the disbelievers.
103. When you have finished the prayer, remember God standing, sitting down, and reclining; but when you are safe from danger establish regular prayers; certainly, prayers are prescribed for the believers at stated times.
104. And be not weak hearted in pursuit of the enemy; if you suffer pain, they too suffer pain as you suffer pain, and you hope from God that which they do not hope; and God is Omniscient, Wise.” (4:95-104)

“The believers who sit back, except those who are suffering an injury, are not equal to those who strive and fight in the cause of God with their wealth and their persons. God has made those who strive with their wealth and their persons a rank higher than those who sit back and to each class God has promised a good reward. God has distinguished those who strive above those who sit back and will grant them a great reward. High ranks are specially bestowed by Him and forgiveness and mercy, God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.” This verse came down to deal with a special circumstance that the Muslim community was facing. Some Muslims were lacking in the drive to fight in the way of God. Both financial support and physical participation were needed. The verse came to urge this group to actively participate in the fight in the way of God. Although the verse came to address a special circumstance, but the rule stated is a general rule that can be applied to similar situations at any time as well. Muslims, who actively participate in Jihad, whether physically or through providing financial support, will have a better reward than Muslims who are able but for one reason or another choose not to participate. Those who are unable to participate because of health issues or are too poor to contribute financially are exempted from this rule.

The Prophet (PBUH) has been quoted to have said, “God prepared a hundred ranks in paradise for those who strive in His way. The distance between each two consecutive ranks is like the distance between heavens and earth.” However, all Muslims were promised a good reward. The rule was repeated twice in the verse to emphasize the benefit of active participation.

Two facts can be deduced from this verse. The first is that the verse came to deal with the reluctance of some Muslims to participate in fighting against the enemy of Islam. The second is the importance of active participation in fighting against the enemy of Islam, whether physically or through financial support. The need for defending Muslims against their enemy is not only limited to a certain phase in the history of Islam but the need will continue as long as life on earth continues.

“When the angels take the souls of those who wronged themselves, they shall say, ‘In what state were you?’ They shall say, ‘We were weak and oppressed in the land.’ The angels will say, ‘Was not God’s earth spacious, so that you could have migrated therein?’ Such people will find their refuge in Hell. What an evil destination. Except those who are really weak and oppressed – men, women, and children - who have no means in their power, and cannot find a way (to escape); For these, there is hope that God will pardon them, God is Pardoning, All-Forgiving.”

The Prophet (PBUH) migrated to Medina and established the new Muslim state there. However, some Muslims remained in their home town in Mecca and other places in the Arabian Peninsula. Migration meant that people leave their homes and property behind. Some Muslims did not want to undertake this sacrifice, some were apprehensive of the experience of moving to a new place, and some were too weak to endure the hardships of moving to Medina. Many Muslims who remained behind suffered different sorts of persecution and torture at the hands of the idolaters, especially after the battle of Badr in which the idolaters suffered defeat at the hands of the Muslims. The torture and persecution forced some Muslims to revert back to idolatry to save their lives. These verses came down to deal with this situation. Those who did not migrate and chose to stay behind for one reason or another were told that they will die in sin. They have deprived themselves a decent life in the newly established Muslim state. They preferred a life of persecution in their old homes to a life of freedom in a new home.

The verse aimed at reclaiming these souls who wronged themselves by staying behind. The verse painted a horrifying image for a dying person being questioned by the angels. Their behavior is questioned and their answers are rebutted. Why did they not flee the persecution? Why did they stay behind and accepted to be humiliated and tortured? The verse ended up by reminding them of the fearful result of their deeds. However, those who were truly weak and could not migrate were exempted. They will be forgiven because they had no choice.

“And whoever migrates in God’s way, he will find much refuge and abundance in the earth, and whoever forsakes his home, seeking refuge with God and His Messenger, and then death overtakes him, his reward is indeed with God, God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.” This verse exemplifies the Quranic approach to relieve human anxiety for those facing the prospect of migration. The approach is honest in recognizing the natural human fear of the unknown. It provided the assurance of safety and security. Those who migrate in the way of God are promised safe refuge and abundance of provision. The verse opened up horizons for safe and prosperous life. Earnings are not restricted to one place or one opportunity. God will provide for those who migrate in his way. Death can come at any time and it will happen at a specific time for each one irrespective of his/her place and condition. If it came on the road to Medina, then the reward is guaranteed and God’s forgiveness is abundant.

“And when you travel in the land, there is no blame on you if you shorten the prayer, if you fear that the disbeliever may attack you, certainly the disbelievers are your avowed enemy.” A traveler needs to be in constant contact with his Lord. This contact provides support to the traveler to overcome the obstacles on the road and to achieve the objective of the journey.

Prayers are the best method of contact with God. Prayers provide the support Muslims need at difficult times, “Seek help with perseverance and prayers.” (2:45) So, it is appropriate to remind those who were migrating of the benefit of prayers and provide them with a license to perform a shortened form of the prayer to maintain the connection with their Lord and in the meantime to avoid putting them in harm’s way. Regular prayers involve certain movements; a person performing regular prayers may attract the attention of the enemy. The enemy may find an opportunity to attack or capture Muslims while performing regular prayers. The verse allows Muslims to perform a shortened prayer in lieu of the regular prayer when they are travelling if they fear the enemy.

We should differentiate between the shortened prayers mentioned here and the shortened prayers that a traveler is allowed to perform. The shortened prayers in this verse are specific for those who are afraid to be attacked by the enemy. A normal traveler is allowed to perform a prayer similar in form to the regular prayer but shorter in length. For a person who is traveling and is also afraid to be attacked by an enemy, not only the length of the prayer is shortened but also the form is different. In this case, a person may perform the prayer standing up, and forgo kneeling and prostrating oneself which are integral components of the regular prayer. One can also perform prayers while walking or riding in this case. Gesturing with one’s head would replace kneeling and prostrating.

“And when you are among them and standing to lead them in prayer, let a party of them stand up with you, and let them take their arms; then when they have prostrated themselves let them go to your rear, and let another party who have not prayed come forward and pray with you, taking all precaution and bearing arms; the disbelievers wish that you may be careless of your arms and your luggage, so that they may then assault you with a sudden united attack, and there is no blame on you, if you are inconvenienced with rain or if you are sick, that you lay down your arms, and take every precaution; certainly, God has prepared a disgraceful torment for the disbelievers. When you have finished the prayer, remember God standing, sitting down, and reclining; but when you are safe from danger establish regular prayers; certainly prayers are prescribed for the believers at sated times.” When one reflects on the deep meanings underlying these verses, which illustrate the Quranic approach to deal with human psyche, one can see the subtle touches that reach the human soul. These touches were part of the training program for Muslims. The verses did not only address the mechanics of performing prayers on the battle ground, but they also emphasized the importance of prayers for a Muslim even when one is in the midst of a battle. Prayers were called the weapon of the Muslim. Early Muslims were able to prevail over their enemy because they understood the meaning and impact of this weapon and they used it effectively. They prevailed because their belief in the Oneness of God made them superior over their enemy. They prevailed because they understood the context of life and the objective of their existence. Prayers were the symbol of their faith and a guide to the route of achieving their goal.

The other interesting point that one can glean from these verses is their role in preparing the Muslims psychologically to meet their enemy on the battle ground. The verses warned the Muslims against being careless or negligent in keeping their arms. They were asked to take every precaution, however it assured them of the demise of their enemy. A balanced combination of warning and reassurance provided the recipe for victory.

There is some difference of opinion regarding the mechanics of the “Fear prayers.” It suffices to highlight the general characteristics of this prayer, without delving into the details of the different opinions. The army should be divided into two groups. While one group prays with the Prophet (PBUH) the other will keep watch in the rear, then they switch places. The first group will pray first one rakk’a with the Prophet while the second group is keeping watch, then they will switch places. When the Prophet (PBUH) has finished his prayers of two rakk’as, each group would have prayed a single rakk’a with the Prophet (PBUH). Each group should then proceed to complete the second rakk’a, separately. This way, both groups would have performed a part of their prayer with the Prophet (PBUH) and in the meantime, there was always a group watching and protecting the rest of the army. However, whenever you feel secure then establish prayers at the appointed times.

Few words touch upon the crux of the matter and outline the demarcation between the different situations of the believers and the non-believers. Pain will be endured by both factions, but the believers look forward to a reward from God while the disbelievers are lost.

Verses: 105 to 113

105. Certainly We have revealed to you the Book with the truth that you may judge between people according to what God has taught you; and be not an advocate on behalf of the treacherous.
106. And ask forgiveness of God; certainly, God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.
107. Do not plead on behalf of those who betray themselves; certainly, God does not love him who is treacherous, sinful;
108. They seek to hide from people but they cannot hide from God, and He is with them when they plot by night in words which do not please Him, and God is Totally-Aware of what they do.
109. There you are pleading for them in this world's life, but who will plead for them with God on the Day of Resurrection, or who shall be their guardian?
110. Whoever does evil or wrongs his own soul and then seeks God's forgiveness, he shall find God All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.
111. Whoever commits a sin, he is only committing it against his own soul; and God is Omniscient, Wise.
112. Whoever commits a fault or a sin and then throws the blame on to an innocent person, he indeed takes upon himself the burden of a calumny and a manifest sin.
113. Had it not been for God's grace upon you and His mercy, a party of them would have certainly resolved to lead you astray, but they only mislead themselves; they can do you no harm at all. God has revealed to you the Book and the wisdom. He taught you what you did not know; certainly, God's grace on you is great.” (4:105-113)

It was narrated that these verses were revealed advising the Prophet (PBUH) about a certain incident that occurred in Medina. The armor of a man from the Ansar (his name was Rifa'a) was stolen while he was on an expedition with the Prophet (PBUH). Another person (by the name of Basheer ibn Obairiq) from a different clan from the Ansar was accused of the theft. When Basheer realized that he became under suspicion he threw the armor inside the house of a Jew (by the name of Zaid). The thief asked a member of his family to go and tell the Prophet (PBUH) that Zaid is the one who stole the armor. When the armor was found in Zaid's house, the Prophet (PBUH) announced the innocence of Basheer and apologized to him in public. At this moment the above verses were revealed and the truth became known. Basheer fled Medina to avoid being prosecuted for the theft.

Although declaring the innocence of a person who was falsely accused is a noble feat, the verses were meant to address a much graver issue. The verses established the principle of maintaining the balance of justice for all people. This is a balance that is not swayed by whims, interest, or status. The verses came down to cleanse the society of the remnants of the pre-Islamic norms and values.

The Quran could have ignored this incident. Ignoring this incident could be justified, if we were to use present day political values. The victim was a Jew. Many Jews at that time were creating a great deal of difficulty for the Muslims. The culprit was one of the Ansar who provided home and protection for the Muslims migrating from Mecca. But the Quran chose not to ignore the incident in spite of all these considerations. The issue was that the Muslim society should be built on justice for any and everyone who lives within the boundaries of this society. The only way that Muslims can promote the goodness of Islam is by maintaining a standard of absolute justice in their dealings. Everyone should be treated according to the same standard of justice.

These verses embody three general principles that outline the framework for the relationship between the individual and God. The first principle is stated as, “And whoever does evil or wrongs his own soul, then seeks God’s forgiveness, he shall find God All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.” This verse opens the door for God’s forgiveness to everyone. God is the All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy. He is there for anyone who seeks His forgiveness and knocks on the door of His mercy. The second principle is stated in the following verse, “And whoever commits a sin, he is only committing it against his own soul; and God is Omniscient, Wise.” Sin is an individual responsibility. Islam does not accept the concept of the original sin and that man is born sinner. Everyone earns his sin or reward according to his own deeds. This is a manifestation of the absolute justice of God. The third principle is stated in the verse, “And whoever commits a fault or a sin, then throws the blame on to an innocent person, he indeed takes upon himself the burden of a calumny and a manifest sin.” It deals with framing others with a sin that they have not committed. If a person commits a sin and then attempts to frame another, then he/she will bear the burden of his/her deed. The culprit will be punished for his/her sin as well as for the calumny he/she committed. These three principles are an integral part of the framework of justice in Islam. They also provide a gateway for hope in the mercy of God for those who want to repent and seek God’s forgiveness.

“Had it not been for God's grace upon you and His mercy, a party of them would have certainly resolved to lead you astray, but they only mislead themselves; they can do you no harm at all. And God has revealed to you the Book and the wisdom, and He taught you what you did not know, and certainly God's grace on you is great.” The verse refers to the story told earlier about the theft of the armor and the attempt to frame a Jew to take the punishment. This is one of the many attempts that the enemies of the Prophet (PBUH) tried to mislead the Prophet (PBUH) and to get him to make wrong or unjust decisions. But God protected him from falling into the trap that his enemies laid for him. He was saved by the grace of God who bestowed many favors on His Prophet (PBUH). God also assured the Prophet (PBUH) of His continuous protection. The greatest favor that was bestowed on the Prophet (PBUH) was the favor of entrusting the Prophet (PBUH) with the responsibility to deliver God's message. It is a favor bestowed on all members of the human race. This is a favor that gave them a new birth and gave them the opportunity to taste the sweetness of guidance after they had been immersed in the ignorance of misguidance. The Prophet (PBUH) was favored by being the first to taste and appreciate the sweetness of guidance. He was taught by his Lord that which he did not know before.

Verses: 114 to 126

114. There is no good in most of their secret counsels save him who enjoins charitable act, goodness, or reconciliation between people; and whoever does this seeking God's pleasure, We will give him a mighty reward.
115. And whoever opposes the Messenger after guidance has been plainly conveyed to him, and follows other than the way of the believers, We shall leave him in the way he has chosen, and admit him to Hell; what an evil destination?
116. Certainly, God does not forgive that anything should be associated with Him, and He forgives other sins to whom He pleases; and whoever associates anything with God, he has indeed strayed far away.
117. In His place, the idolaters invoke only female idols and a rebellious Satan;
118. God has cursed him- but he (Satan) said, “Most certainly I will take a stated portion of your servants.
119. And most certainly I will lead them astray and I will arouse in them vain desires, and command them so that they shall slit the ears of the cattle, and most certainly I will command them so that they shall alter God's creation;” and whoever takes Satan for a protecting guardian rather than God he indeed shall suffer a manifest loss.
120. He (Satan) promises them and stirs up vain desires in them; but Satan's promises are only a delusion.
121. These are they whose refuge is Hell, and they shall not find any escape from it.
122. And those who believe and do good deeds, We will admit them into gardens beneath which rivers flow, to abide therein forever; God's promise is the truth, and whose word can be truer than God?
123. It shall not be in accordance with your desires nor in accordance with the desires of the followers of the Scripture; whoever does evil, he shall be requited for it, and standing before God he will find for himself neither a protecting guardian nor a helper.

124. And whoever does good deeds, whether male or female and he (or she) is a believer, they shall enter the garden, and not the least injustice will be done to them, not even as much as the speck on the date-stone.
125. And who can be better in religion than he who submits himself entirely to God, does good, and follows the faith of Abraham, the upright one, and God took Abraham for a friend.
126. And to God belongs whatever is in the heavens and whatever is in the earth; and God encompasses all things.” (4:114-126)

“There is no good in most of their secret counsels save him who enjoins charitable act, goodness, or reconciliation between people; and whoever does this seeking God's pleasure, We will give him a mighty reward.” The Quran has repeatedly admonished against secret counsel. Secret counsel is when few Muslims meet in secret to plot and make plans. The proper practice for dealing with problems, personal or otherwise, was to consult the Prophet (PBUH). This provided a legitimate avenue for resolving conflicts, establishing precedents, and shaping public policy. It also aimed at eliminating the potential for the formation of interest groups or pockets within the Muslim community. Interest groups usually aspire at shaping public policy to favor their own interests which may be against the interest of the whole community. The verse reminded Muslims who were involved in such clandestine practices that they might be successful in conducting such clandestine counsel sessions but they would not be able to escape the scrutiny of God. He is well aware of what they do.

The verse indicated that there are exceptions. Secret consultation to help those who are in need or to establish peace between two Muslims fighting together is not considered “secret counsel,” and is allowable provided that it is done with the objective of seeking the pleasure of God.

“And whoever opposes the Messenger after guidance has been plainly conveyed to him, and follows other than the way of the believers, We shall leave him in the way he has chosen, and admit him to hell; what an evil refuge? Certainly, God does not forgive that anything should be associated with Him, and He forgives other sins to whom He pleases; and whoever associates anything with God, he has indeed strayed far away.” It was mentioned that these verses were revealed to deal with the situation of Basheer ibn Obairiq, who became an apostate and reverted back to idolatry. However, the verses provided a general rule that can be applied in all similar situations. The word “opposes” implies following a way different from the way which has been chosen by the Messenger (PBUH). It is by the grace of God that people are held accountable only after they had received a message which clearly outlines the route to guidance. A person is held accountable only after he receives guidance, recognizes that it is the truth and then deliberately chooses not to follow it. Those who choose not to follow the guidance after it has been recognized, they will be left to go astray and they will be part of the group of disbelievers whom he chose to join. They will then be punished accordingly. This bad ending was earned by deliberately rejecting the truth and opting for associating partners with God. God forgives all sins except the sin of associating partners with Him. Those who die while they are still in the state of associating partners with God have no hope in God’s forgiveness. Any other sin may be forgiven by the will of God.

Associating partners with God has many forms. One form is to actually worship others besides God. Another form is to bestow some of God's characteristics on leaders, religious or otherwise, and follow them blindly. Associating partners with God is an unforgivable sin for those who insist on it because it is against the initial natural human disposition.

Those who associate partners with God have gone far astray. However, the door for forgiveness is always open. God will forgive them if they repent, even if they were on the death bed. But those who do not repent are doomed.

“In His place, the idolaters invoke only female idols and a rebellious Satan - God has cursed him- but he (Satan) said, ‘Most certainly I will take a stated portion of your servants. And most certainly I will lead them astray and I will arouse in them vain desires, and command them so that they shall slit the ears of the cattle, and most certainly I will command them so that they shall alter God's creation;’ and whoever takes Satan for a protecting guardian rather than God he indeed shall suffer a manifest loss. He (Satan) promises them and stirs up vain desires in them; but Satan's promises are only a delusion. These are they whose abode is Hell, and they shall not find any refuge from it. And those who believe and do good deeds, We will admit them into gardens beneath which rivers flow, to abide therein forever; God's promise is the truth, and whose word can be truer than God?” The verse refers to some of the mythical traditions that the idolaters used to practice. The idolater Arabs were polytheists. They claimed that the angels are God's daughters. They worshiped statues of the angels. They called the statues names like Al-Lat, Al-'Uzza, and Manat. In the beginning they believed that the idols could intercede with God on their behalf. Over time, they gradually started worshipping the idols themselves as gods. Some idolaters practiced devil worship. Although the reference to devil worship can be taken literal but the verse can also be understood to mean a wider scope of devil worship. Practicing polytheism is a kind of support for Satan, the enemy of humankind who was cursed for disobeying God. Satan vowed to tempt humans to join him in the act of disobedience. Satan promises those who follow him happiness, fulfillment of desires, and salvation to tempt them away from the straight path. He rationalized for them some of the silly rituals like slitting the ears of the cattle to declare its sanctity. Satan convinced the idolater Arabs that God has forbidden the use of cattle with slit ears for riding or for food. Satan seduced them into changing the creation of God by mutilating human and animal bodies.

Salvation can only be achieved by taking God as the Patron and the Protecting Guardian. Doomed are those who take Satan as their patron and protecting guardian. Satan makes hollow promises that satisfy their vain desires and sways them away from the initial natural human disposition. Humankind was created with an initial natural disposition which can help human beings find the right way in life. Thus enables them to find their way to monotheism and to protect them from falling into the sin of polytheism. The initial natural human disposition acts like a compass to guide people to the right path. Satan tempts people by portraying evil deeds as acts of goodness. He tempts people by mapping a route for happiness that goes through a field of sin. Those who fall for the temptation of Satan will land in Hellfire. The eternal abode for those who resist the temptation of Satan is paradise. This is God's promise, and whose promise is more truthful than God? The verse juxtaposed the absolute truth of God against the treacherous lies of Satan.

“It shall not be in accordance with your desires nor in accordance with the desires of the followers of the Scripture; whoever does evil, he shall be requited for it, and besides God he will find for himself neither a protecting guardian nor a helper. And whoever does good deeds whether, male or female and he (or she) is a believer, they shall enter the garden, and not the least injustice will be done to them, not even as much as the speck on the date-stone. And who can be better in religion than he who submits himself entirely to God, does good, and follows the faith of Abraham, the upright one? God took Abraham for a friend.” This verse came down to refute unsubstantiated claims by people from different faiths who misunderstood certain verses in the Torah, Bible, and Quran. Some Jews and Christians used to say, “We are the children of God and He likes us, and even if we were to be punished, it will only last for a few days.” Jews say that they are the chosen people of God. Some Muslims say that they are “The best nation created by God,” and God will forgive them simply because they are Muslims.

The verse came down to establish the criterion for goodness. People will be judged according to their deeds. The standard is to submit one’s self to God’s will and to combine that with excellence in deeds. The best faith is attained by fully submitting to God, this is the faith of Prophet Abraham (PBUH). The best deeds are the deeds that are completely dedicated purely to God. Thus, submission and excellence are the criteria for success. Submission means submitting oneself totally to the will of God and excellence means that one worships God as if one can see God, because while we cannot see God, God certainly, sees us. God requested excellence in performing all deeds. Even when one slaughters an animal for food, one should let the animal lie in such a way that it does not see the cutting knife. One should use a sharp knife so that one stroke of the knife is enough to kill the animal. The idea is to make the slaughtering process as humane as possible.

The verse also emphasized the equality between males and females in responsibilities and recompense. It also emphasized that belief is a prerequisite for acceptance of good deeds. The statement, “and whoever does good deeds whether, male or female and he (or she) is a believer, they shall enter the garden, and not the least injustice will be done to them,” clearly indicates the use of the same standard for judging males and females. It is also an unequivocal statement indicating that belief in the Oneness of God is a prerequisite for the acceptance of deeds. Belief in the Oneness of God guarantees consistency in doing good deeds and ensures that it is dedicated to God alone.

When the Muslims heard the verse, “Whoever does evil, he shall be requited for it, and standing before God he will find for himself neither a protecting guardian nor a helper,” they felt very bad because they knew that as human beings they were bound to commit some bad deeds. Imam Ahmed narrated on the authority of ‘Abdullah ibn Numair that Abu Bakr (RA) went to the Prophet (PBUH) and asked him about this verse. The Prophet (PBUH) said, “May God forgive you Abu Bakr, don’t you get sick? Don’t you get tired? Don’t you get sad? Don’t you get afflictions?” Abu Bakr (RA) answered affirmatively, the Prophet (PBUH) said, “This is the recompense for the bad deeds.”

“And to God belongs whatever is in the heavens and whatever is in the earth; and God encompasses all things.” The discourse dealing with deeds, rewards, belief, and disbelief was concluded by a reminder that all what is in the heavens and earth belong to God. God is well aware of everything. The Quran usually mentions the attributes of power, dominion in connection with the use of the word God. It reflects the concept of the belief in the Oneness and uniqueness of God not only as a God to be worshiped but also as the God who controls, shapes, and maintains the universe. This belief provides an incentive for the believers to seek the pleasure of God through following His guidance and obeying His commands.

Some philosophical schools concede the Oneness and uniqueness of God but refuse to attach the attributes of will, knowledge, or dominion to Him. God becomes a mere symbol that has no role to play in people's lives. This is not the concept of God that Muslims believe in. God owns whatever in the heavens and earth. He encompasses everything and He has the dominion over everything.

Verses: 127 to 134

127. And they ask you for a ruling about women. Say to them, "God gives you ruling concerning them, and the Book that is recited to you regarding female orphans whom you do not give what is ordained for them while you desire to marry them, and concerning the weak among children, and that you should deal towards orphans with equity; and whatever good you do, God certainly knows it."
128. And if a woman fears cruelty or desertion on the part of her husband, there is no blame on them, if they arrange a reconciliation between them, and reconciliation is better, and avarice has been made to be present in people's minds; and if you do good and remain conscious of God, then certainly God is Totally-Aware of what you do.
129. And you will never be able to do justice between wives, even though it may be your ardent desire, but do not turn away from one altogether, leaving her in suspense; and if you arrange reconciliation and remain conscious of God, then certainly God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.
130. And if they separate, God will render them both free from want out of His abundant bounty, and God is All-Embracing, Wise.
131. And whatever is in the heavens and whatever is in the earth belongs to God and certainly, We enjoined those who were given the Scripture before you and (We enjoin) you too that you should be conscious of God; and if you reject faith, then certainly whatever is in the heavens and whatever is in the earth is God's and God is Rich, Praised.
132. And whatever is in the heavens and whatever is in the earth belongs to God, and God is sufficient as a Guardian.
133. If He pleases, He could destroy you, people, and bring others in your place; and God has the power to do this.
134. Whoever desires the reward of this world, then with God is the reward of this world and the hereafter; and God is All-Hearing, All-Seeing. (4:126-134)

"And they ask you for a ruling about women. Say to them, 'God gives you ruling concerning them, and the Scripture that is recited to you regarding female orphans whom you do not give what is ordained for them while you desire to marry them, and concerning the weak among children, and that you should deal towards orphans with equity; and whatever good you do, God certainly knows it.’” New Muslims were eager to learn the code that will shape their new way of life. This was a way of life that differed in many ways from what they used to practice before Islam. Old traditions and practices were abolished and new ones were instated. They were reborn anew with the adoption of Islam. Their eagerness was rewarded with a grace from God. He answered all their questions. This verse came to answer a question about orphan girls and to rectify a bad practice that was prevalent before Islam.

‘Ali ibn Abi Talha (RA) narrated that he heard Ibn ‘Abbas (RA) explaining this verse, he said, “Before Islam the guardian of an orphan girl had the right to throw his garment over the girl, once he had done that, she was not allowed to marry anyone else. Her guardian can marry her if he so wished. However, if he did not marry her she became a spinster. He would have control over her wealth while she was alive and he would inherit her when she dies.” This verse came to abolish this practice.

This tradition gives an idea of how orphan girls were treated by their guardians before Islam. Guardians were greedy. They were more interested in the wealth of the child under their care than in the child’s welfare. Similarly, they deprived young children and women of their inheritance rights. The logic was that young children and women do not contribute to the fighting power of the tribe, so they do not deserve to have a share in the estate left by a deceased relative. The vulnerable had no power and they could not defend themselves against such injustices of the idolatry society. Islam came to change all these bad and unjust practices. These practices were abolished and replaced by humane and just ones. This was not merely a sudden change in human behavior but it was a complete rebirth of a nation.

It is important to note that the rebirth that occurred was not preceded by introductory steps that made the change logical, nor was it the result of a revolutionary change in the life of the nation. The social change in the status of women and children and the new rights that they gained did not result because there was a change in society’s need for warriors nor was there a change in the status of warriors. The need for warriors did not change and their status did not change. Warriors were needed to protect the nascent Muslim society. The move from a system that awards rights on the basis of the status of a person to a system that awards rights on the basis of the human value of the members of the society was brought about by the advent of Islam. Islam established the principle of the equal worth of all members of the human race. The change occurred without a revolution but was brought about by a verse in a book. The Book gave birth to a new society. The new values were espoused by the same people who lived on the same land and under the same economic conditions. The verse reminds Muslims again with the relationship between the new values and the Originator of these values. Every good deed is recorded and no reward will be lost.

“And if a woman fears cruelty or desertion on the part of her husband, there is no blame on them, if they arrange a reconciliation between them, and reconciliation is better, and avarice has been made to be present in people’s minds; and if you do good and remain conscious of God, then certainly God is Totally-Aware of what you do.” The Quran dealt in a previous verse with the situation when the wife is the cause of a family conflict. In this verse the Quran deals with the problem when the husband is the one to be blamed for the conflict. Family conflicts affect the security of the wife and children. Islam provides a realistic methodology to deal with the different aspects of life recognizing the changes that occur to people and their feelings towards each other as time passes.

The verse established a methodology for dealing with conflicts arising as a result of a husband deserting his wife. A wife fearing the consequences of such a desertion, which may or may not lead to a divorce, can negotiate with her husband the terms of an agreement to resolve the conflict. This agreement is an alternative to divorce. If a woman does not want a divorce and wants to resume family life with her husband, then she can make some concessions to reach such an agreement. These concessions may include giving up some of her financial or physical rights. These concessions should be made out of her own free will and with no coercion from anyone.

Acrimonious family conflicts can be avoided through a negotiated agreement between the husband and wife. This is a methodology that recognizes human limitations and the realities of life. One of these realities is the ever presence of avarice in the human heart. This can only be combated by the reminder that excellence and God consciousness are better. The reward for these is guaranteed and will not be lost because God is Totally-Aware of what you do.

“And you will never be able to do justice between wives, even though it may be your ardent desire, but do not turn away from one altogether, leaving her in suspense; and if you arrange a reconciliation and remain conscious of God, then certainly God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy. And if they separate, God will render them both free from want out of His abundant bounty, and God is All-embracing, Wise.” God who created the human soul knows the nature of this soul. It is in the initial natural human disposition to aspire to that which one does not have. Therefore, God provided the human beings with a harness to control these desires. The harness is meant to refine not to kill these desires.

A man, who is married to more than one wife, may prefer one over the other. This is a human emotion that he may not be able to erase or kill. Islam certainly does not hold people accountable for things that they have no control over. So, this is a human failing which is made clear. A man married to more than one wife will not be able to treat them fairly, even if he tried hard, because he may not be able to feel for all of them equally. Feelings are beyond human control. Men are commanded to be fair in treating their wives, in spending equal times with them, and in providing equally for them. A man has to treat all his wives fairly in all aspects of life that are under his control. Men are admonished not to deprive any wife of her stated rights. Men are again reminded of doing the right thing and to be conscious of God in their treatment of women. This is how Islam deals realistically with the complexities of the human psyche. Islam tries to maintain a balance between the needs of a body that is created from dust and a soul that have wings wishing to fly in the sky.

The Prophet (PBUH) who is the perfect example of the human creation tried hard to be fair in treating all his wives. However, he did not deny that he felt more towards one than the others. He used to pray saying, “God, I tried to be fair in what I have control over so don’t blame me for that which You, not me, have control over.” He meant that man has no control over the feelings of the heart.

If all measures to save the marriage fail and the marriage is dissolved, then God will provide for each one of them.

“And whatever is in the heavens and whatever is in the earth belongs to God; and certainly We enjoined those who were given the Scripture before you and (We enjoin) you too that you should be conscious of God; and if you disbelieve, then certainly whatever is in the heavens and whatever is in the earth is God's and God is Rich, Praised. And whatever is in the heavens and whatever is in the earth belongs to God, and God is sufficient as a Guardian. If He pleases, He could destroy you, people, and bring others in your place. God has the power to do this. Whoever desires the reward of this world, then with God is the reward of this world and the Hereafter; and God is All-Hearing, All-Seeing.” It is common in the Quran that a verse which deals with a command or a prohibition ends by a reminder that God has the dominion over everything and that He is the owner of whatever in the heavens and on the earth. It is a reminder that the owner of the universe has the right and the power to legislate for His creation. God has the absolute power over His creation. God consciousness is the way to salvation. The power of God is emphasized by reminding people that God does not need them and if they become ungrateful, then it is easy for God to replace them with a new generation. People are advised to remain conscious of God for their own sake. God's dominion will not be affected whether people believe or disbelieve. Islam provides a way of life that guarantees the achievement of happiness both in this life and in the Hereafter. It is rather stupid that humankind would be given this opportunity but prefers the quick but a fleeting gain of this world.

Verses: 135 to 147

135. You who believe, stand out firmly for justice, as witnesses to God, even though it may be against your own selves or (your) parents or near relatives; whether he is rich or poor, God can best protect both; therefore, do not follow your whims, lest you deviate; and if you swerve or turn aside, then certainly God is Totally-Aware of what you do.
136. You who believe, believe in God and His Messenger and the Book which He has revealed to His Messenger and the Scripture which He revealed before; and whoever denies God and His angels and His Scripture and His Messengers and the Last Day, he indeed has gone far astray.
137. Certainly, those who believe, then reject faith, then believe (again) and (again) reject faith, and go on increasing in disbelief, God will not forgive them nor guide them on the way.
138. Bring glad tidings to the hypocrites that they shall have a painful torment,
139. Those who take the disbelievers as protecting guardians instead of the believers; do they seek power at their hands? Certainly, all power is with God.
140. And indeed He has revealed to you in the Book that when you hear people reject and ridicule God's revelations, do not sit with them until they turn to a different discourse; or else you would be like them; certainly, God will gather together the hypocrites and the disbelievers all in Hell.

141. Those who wait for a misfortune to befall you, but if you gain a victory from God they say, "Were we not with you?" But if the disbelievers gain a success, they say, "Did we not gain an advantage over you and defend you from the believers?" So God shall judge between you on the Day of Resurrection, and God will by no means give the disbelievers a way against the believers.
142. Certainly, the hypocrites strive to deceive God, and He shall requite their deceit to them, and when they stand up to perform prayer they perform it languidly; they do it only to be seen by people and do not remember God save a little.
143. Wavering between this and that; they do not belong neither to these nor to those; and whomsoever God leaves to go astray, you shall not find a way for him.
144. You who believe, do not take the disbelievers as protecting guardians in place of the believers; do you wish to offer God a clear proof against you?
145. Certainly, the hypocrites are in the lowest level of the Fire and you shall not find a helper for them.
146. Except those who repent, amend, hold fast to God, and devote their religion entirely to God, these are with the believers; and God will grant the believers an immense reward.
147. Why should God torment you if you are grateful and you believe? And God is ever Thankful, Omniscient. (4:135-147)

"You who believe, stand out firmly for justice, as witnesses to God, even though it may be against your own selves or (your) parents or near relatives; whether he is rich or poor, God can best protect both; therefore, do not follow your whims, lest you deviate; and if you swerve or turn aside, then certainly God is Totally-Aware of what you do." This is an address to the believers. They are being addressed with a newly acquired attribute. This is the unique attribute that they gained when they were born again as Muslims. When they were reborn again, they were given new spirits, new values, new principles, new responsibilities, and new trust. These were the values and principles which should enable them to undertake their new responsibility as leaders whose objective is to establish justice on earth. They were commanded to stand firm for justice: absolute and comprehensive justice. They were commanded to eradicate injustice and guarantee fair treatment for all people, Muslims and non-Muslims alike. The right to be treated fairly is a human right. Every human being whether a believer or a non-believer, a friend or foe, poor or rich should enjoy the right to be treated fairly in a court of law. Muslims are accountable to God, and to God alone, in fulfilling this trust. The believers are commanded to be completely objective when they act as witnesses. No desire, whim or nepotism should affect their testimony because the testimony is given in front of God. Even when the testimony is given on behalf of themselves, their families, or their parents, they should be objective in their testimony. This is a difficult task which requires a rigorous training program for people to overcome the natural human weakness and bias towards their own families. It is also a difficult task to be objective when the culprit is poor. A poor person is usually vulnerable, and people may tend to change their testimony in favor of a poor person as an act of kindness. But the warning is given, "Do not follow your whims." The verse mentioned some specific examples for motives which may compel a person to follow one's own whims and to abandon objectivity. Of these: favoring oneself, one's family, or one's friends. Absolute objectivity is commanded even when one's enemy is involved. Similarly, difference in religion, nationality or ethnicity should not be justification for bias. The verse ends by reminding the believers that God is aware of what they do. This is an incentive to fulfill the command.

“You who believe, believe in God and His Messenger and the Book which He has revealed to His Messenger and the Scripture which He revealed before; and whoever denies God and His angels and His Scriptures and His Messengers and the Last Day, he indeed has gone far astray.”

This is a list of the articles of faith which a believer should believe in. It includes the belief in God and His Messenger, a belief that connects the believers with their Lord who created them and who sent His Messenger to guide them to the way to connect with Him. It includes the belief in the Messenger and his message and all that he brought to them from their Lord. It includes the belief in the Book which was revealed to the Messenger, the Book that guides them to the way of life that God has chosen for them. It is a belief in the Book as a whole, not to pick and choose from it. It includes the belief in the previous Scriptures, all the Books that were revealed by God. All these Books brought a single message for humankind: to submit one’s face to God alone and not to associate anything with Him.

The command to believe is followed by a warning for the disbelievers. The elements of faith are listed again in detail as a reminder that rejecting any of them constitutes an act of rejecting faith as a whole. One notes that the belief in the angels was added to this second list. In the first list the belief in the angels was not mentioned explicitly. Since, the angels are mentioned in the Book, a belief in the Book implies that we believe in the angels. However, when a warning is issued against rejecting faith, the list had to be exhaustive and the angels had to be mentioned explicitly.

“Certainly, those who believe, then reject faith, then believe (again) and (again) reject faith, and go on increasing in unbelief, God will not forgive them nor guide them on the way.”

In Islam, the rule is that all sins that a person committed before becoming a believer are forgiven. Faith is a light that erases the darkness of disbelief. Once the darkness is removed a person connects with the Creator and the soul tastes the sweetness of faith. Those who oscillate between faith and disbelief stray away from the initial natural disposition of humankind. They deliberately chose to be led astray.

“Bring glad tidings to the hypocrites that they shall have a painful torment, those who take the disbelievers as protecting guardians instead of the believers, do they seek power at their hands? Certainly all power is with God.” The use of the word “bring glad tidings” instead of “warn” reflects obvious sarcasm. The reason for such sarcasm is then explained, “Do they think that the disbelievers have more power than God.” All power belongs to God alone. Those who seek power with someone else other than God are deluding themselves. God is the only one who can provide support to people. Seeking help and support from God frees the human being from all kinds of servitude.

“And indeed He has revealed to you in the Book that when you hear people reject and ridicule God’s revelations, do not sit with them until they turn to a different discourse; or else you would be like them; certainly, God will gather together the hypocrites and the disbelievers all in Hell.”

Some Muslims used to frequent the gatherings of powerful hypocrites looking for support or worldly gains. Sometimes disparaging remarks were uttered against the word of God in these gatherings. The verse reminded Muslims that this is wrong. It was premature to command Muslims to boycott these gatherings altogether, so the command was given to abandon the gathering whenever they hear any disparaging remarks being uttered against the word of God. This verse reminded Muslims of a similar verse that was revealed before in Surat Al-An'aam (Chapter 6), "Whenever you witness people abusing Our verses, then turn away from them until they embark on a different discourse." (6:68) Muslims were warned that complacency puts them in the same category as the hypocrites. This will warrant a great punishment on the Day of Judgment. God will gather the hypocrites and the disbelievers together in Hell.

"Those who wait for a misfortune to befall you, then if you gain a victory from God they say, 'Were we not with you?' But if the disbelievers gain a success, they say, 'Did we not gain an advantage over you and defend you from the believers?' God shall judge between you on the Day of Resurrection and God will by no means give the disbelievers a way against the believers." The verse painted a repulsive image of the hypocrites. It described the evil feelings that the hypocrites had for the believers and how they quickly changed their colors depending on the situation. When they found the Muslims winning, they would disguise their ill feelings towards the Muslims by feigning love and affection. On the other hand, when the disbelievers gain the upper hand over the believers, the hypocrites would declare their support for the disbelievers. However, the Islamic strategy at that time was to avoid opening a battle front against the hypocrites. The command was to turn away from them and treat them cautiously. They will be judged by God on the Day of Judgment.

There are different interpretations for the last part of the verse, "And God will by no means give the disbelievers a way against the believers." Some scholars are of the opinion that this promise will be fulfilled on the Day of Judgment. Others are of the opinion that the promise will be fulfilled in this life, in the sense that Muslims may lose some battles but God will not allow the Muslims to be decimated by the disbelievers in this world. However, it makes sense that the promise would be fulfilled both in this life and in the Hereafter. It is easy to imagine that it will be fulfilled in the Hereafter, but there may be doubts about the promise being fulfilled in this life. I strongly believe that this promise is meant to be fulfilled in this life. Historical accounts show that Muslims were only defeated when their faith was weak or when their actions did not reflect the strength of their faith. Elements of faith include the meticulous preparation of all material resources required for the battle as well as being dedicated to the cause of God.

In the battle of Uhud, Muslims lost because some of them, motivated by their greedy interest in the booty, disobeyed the commands of the Prophet (PBUH). In the battle of Hunain, Muslims lost because of their arrogance in thinking that material power alone is enough to secure victory. Losing a battle is a trial, and trials happen for a reason. Trials help people discover their shortcomings so that they can deal with them. Defeat has a far wider dimension than losing a battle. Defeat means the conquest of the spirit and the loss of fervor and enthusiasm. Losing a battle is not considered a defeat if it does not devastate the spirit and if it acts as a catalyst for building the morale for a continued struggle. This is what the verse refers to. The verse urges Muslims to work on filling their hearts with true faith and to translate their faith into action.

When Muslims perfect their faith and lead a true Islamic way of life then they should be sure of God's support. This is the promise that is given in this verse. True faith is accomplished when it rests deeply in the hearts of Muslims and is reflected on their deeds.

“Certainly the hypocrites strive to deceive God, and He shall requite their deceit to them, and when they stand up to perform prayer they perform it languidly; they do it only to be seen by people and do not remember God save a little. Wavering between this and that, they do belong neither to these nor to those; and whomsoever God leaves to go astray, you shall not find a way for him.” This verse painted a despicable image for the hypocrites. Believers knew that God would not be deceived. He knows all what is hidden and He is aware of all what is done in secret. Those who think they can deceive God are either fools or have no appreciation of the power of God. God will not make them face trials to alert them to the gravity of their actions. Trials that people face in life may have a silver lining because they serve as wake up calls alerting people to the consequences of their actions and allowing them to reflect and go back to the straight path. The hypocrites have gone too far astray that these trials will not be of any benefit to them.

Prayers for them are no longer a way to communicate with God. They are lazy when the prayer is called, as if they were asked to perform a difficult task. They pray only to be seen by people. Appeasing people is more important to them than the remembrance of God. They are insecure, they cannot take a firm stand, and they are unable to decide whether to side with the believers or the disbelievers. They deserved the wrath of God so they will not find anyone to help them.

“You who believe, do not take the disbelievers as protecting guardians in place of the believers; do you wish to offer God a clear proof against you? Certainly, the hypocrites are in the lowest level of the Fire and you shall not find a helper for them, except those who repent and amend and hold fast to God and devote their religion entirely to God: these are with the believers and God will grant the believers an immense reward.” The verse warns the believers not to follow in the footsteps of the hypocrites by seeking support from the disbelievers. There was a real need for this reminder at the time it was issued, because there were strong interactions between the Muslim community and the Jews in Medina on one hand and between the Muslim community and the idolaters of Mecca on the other hand. Strong personal relationships, business dealings, and family ties still existed between some Muslims and non-Muslims. These Muslims needed to be alerted to the fact that their dependence on their friends and relatives from among the disbelievers may cause them to slip to the path of the hypocrites. The verse ended by a strong warning in the form of a rhetoric question. Such question is enough to remind the believers of the dire consequences of this practice, “do you wish to offer God a clear proof against you?”

The hypocrites will end up in the lowest level of hell fire. Their interest in the material things will pull them down to the ground. They chose the disbelievers as allies and pretended to be with the believers, but on the Day of Judgment they will not find anyone to help or support them. However, the verse indicated that the door was not completely closed. There was a chance to repent and to seek forgiveness. Those who repent and amend and hold fast to God and devote their religion entirely to God will be forgiven. In many verses reference is made to those who “repent and amend” but here the verse goes on to stress, “Repent, amend, hold fast to God, and devote their religion entirely to God.” This is relevant because the verse addressed a situation that involved reluctance and hesitation on the part of the hypocrites, it was imperative then to emphasize the requirements of perseverance, steadfastness, sincerity, and devotion.

“Why should God chastise you if you are grateful and you believe? And God is ever Thankful, Omniscient.” Salvation lies in expressing gratitude to God and believing in Him because God is not interested in punishing and tormenting people. However, the expression that God is also thankful points to the reward that awaits the believers from God. If God the Creator, the Independent responds to His believing creatures, should not the creatures express their gratitude to God for all the blessings that He showered them with.

Verses: 148 to 170

148. God does not love the public utterance of evil speech unless it is by one who has been wronged; and God is All-Hearing, Omniscient.
149. If you do a good deed openly or do it in secret or pardon an evil act then certainly, God is Effacer of sins, Powerful.
150. In the case of those who disbelieve in God and His messengers and seek to separate God from His messengers, saying “We believe in some and disbelieve in others,” seeking to choose a way in between,
151. These are truly disbeliever. For the disbelievers We have prepared a humiliating torment.
152. And those who believe in God and His messengers and do not make a distinction between any of the messengers, God will grant them their rewards, God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.
153. The people of the Scripture ask you to bring down to them a book from heaven; so indeed they demanded of Moses a greater thing than that, for they said, “Show us God plainly;” so a thunderbolt overtook them on account of their injustice. Then they took the calf (for a god), after clear signs had come to them, but We pardoned this; and We gave Moses a manifest authority.
154. And We raised the Mount to tower above them at the taking of their covenant; and We said, “Enter the gate in prostration,” and We commanded them: transgress not in the matter of the Sabbath. And We took from them a firm covenant.
155. Then, because they broke their covenant and they rejected God’s revelations and they killed the prophets wrongfully and they said, “Our hearts are covered.” No, God set a seal upon them owing to their disbelief, so they shall not believe except a few.
156. And because they rejected faith and because what they uttered against Mary which was a grievous calumny;
157. And that they said, “We killed the Messiah, Jesus the son of Mary, the Messenger of God;” but they killed him not, nor did they crucify him but so it was made to appear to them, and those who differ therein are in doubt, with no certain knowledge, but they only follow a conjecture, for certainly they did not kill him.
158. No, God raised him up to Himself; and God is Eminent, Wise.
159. And there is none of the people of the Scripture but must believe in him before his death, and on the Day of Resurrection he shall be a witness against them.

160. Because of the iniquity of those who are Jews did We disallow them the good things which had been made lawful for them and because they hindered many from God's way.
161. And their taking usury when they were forbidden it, and their devouring the property of people falsely, and We have prepared for the disbelievers from among them a painful torment.
162. But those of them who are firm in knowledge and the believers, believe in what has been revealed to you and what was revealed before you; and those who establish prayers and give the poor-dues and who believe in God and the Last Day, We will give them an immense reward.
163. Certainly, We have sent you revelations as We have sent to Noah, and the prophets after him, and We sent revelations to Abraham and Ishmael and Isaac and Jacob and the tribes, and Jesus and Job and Jonah and Aaron and Solomon and We gave David the Psalms.
164. And We sent messengers whom We have already mentioned to you and messengers whom we have not mentioned; and God spoke directly to Moses.
165. We sent messengers who gave good news as well as to warn, so that people should have no argument against God after the coming of messengers, God is Eminent, Wise.
166. But God bears witness by what He has revealed to you - He has revealed it to you with His full knowledge - and the angels too bear witness; and God is sufficient as a witness.
167. Those who rejected faith and hindered others from God's way, they indeed have strayed far away from the path.
168. Certainly, those who rejected faith and acted unjustly, God will not forgive them nor guide them to a path.
169. Except the path of Hell, to abide in it for ever and this is easy for God.
170. People, the Messenger has come to you with the truth from your Lord, therefore believe - this is best for you - but if you reject faith, then certainly whatever is in the heavens and the earth is God's, God is Omniscient, Wise.”(4:148-170)

“God does not love the public utterance of evil speech unless it is by one who has been wronged; and God is All-Hearing, Omniscient. If you do a good deed openly or do it in secret or pardon an evil act then certainly God is Pardoning, Powerful.” The Quran tried to inculcate new values in the hearts of the believers to build a new Muslim society. One of these values is to avoid slandering people or spreading rumors about the misconduct of people. These bad practices were depicted as evil speech. Utterance of evil speech in public may have dire consequences on the society. It may sensitize people to evil practices and provide people who have certain bad tendencies with the motivation to commit evil acts. It may also involve slandering innocent people. Thus, utterance of evil speech is a sin except when it is used in self-defense by a person who was wronged. A person who suffers injustice is allowed to defend himself/herself and stand up against those who are persecuting him/her. In this case, there is no ambiguity. In this case, the person is only making a statement of the facts and the statement addresses those who are responsible for inflecting the injustice. Islam protects people against slander as long as they have not committed an act of transgression. Anyone who commits an act of transgression does not deserve protection. This rule provides a balance between the need for protecting morals in a society and the obligation of protecting individuals against injustice. The statement ended by reminding people that God knows their intentions and what is hidden in their hearts.

“Certainly those who disbelieve in God and His messengers and seek to separate God from His messengers and say, ‘We believe in some and disbelieve in others,’ seeking to choose a way in between, these are truly disbelievers; and We have prepared a humiliating torment for the disbelievers. And those who believe in God and His messengers and do not make a distinction between any of the messengers, God will grant them their rewards, God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.” The Jews believed in the prophets that were sent to them but they did not believe in Jesus (PBUH) as a prophet of God, and the Christians believed in the previous prophets and in Jesus (PBUH) but they did not believe in Muhammad (PBUH) as a prophet of God. The Quran introduced the concept of the comprehensive religion. This is the religion which is based on the belief in God and all His messengers. This is a belief in the Oneness of God and the oneness of His Message. This is the true religion. Those who believe in this true religion will be granted God’s reward. Islam emphasized the concept of the belief in the Oneness and uniqueness of God because it is the fundamental basis for the true religion.

“The people of the Scripture ask you to bring down to them a book from heaven; so indeed they demanded of Moses a greater thing than that, for they said, ‘Show us God plainly;’ so a thunderbolt overtook them on account of their injustice. Then they took the calf (for a god), after clear signs had come to them, but We pardoned this; and We gave to Moses a manifest authority. And We raised the Mount to tower above them at the taking of their covenant; and We said, ‘Enter the gate in prostration,’ and We commanded them: Transgress not in the matter of the Sabbath, and We took from them a firm covenant. Then, because they broke their covenant and they rejected God’s revelations and they killed the prophets wrongfully and they said, ‘Our hearts are covered.’ No, God set a seal upon them owing to their disbelief, so they shall not believe except a few. And because they rejected faith and because what they uttered against Mary which was a grievous calumny; and that they said, ‘We killed the Messiah, Jesus the son of Mary, the messenger of God;’ but they killed him not, nor did they crucify him but so it was made to appear to them, and those who differ therein are in doubt, with no certain knowledge, but they only follow a conjecture, for certainly, they did not kill him. No, God raised him up to Himself: God is Eminent, Wise. And there is none of the people of the Scripture but must believe in him before his death, and on the Day of Resurrection he shall be a witness against them. Because of the iniquity of those who are Jews did We disallow them the good things which had been made lawful for them and because they hindered many from God’s way. And their taking usury when they were forbidden it, and their devouring the property of people falsely, and We have prepared for the disbelievers from among them a painful torment.” The bigots asked the Prophet (PBUH) to bring down a book from heaven, a book that they can touch with their own hands. However, the answer to this request came from God in the form of a narrative describing how some of the Jews dealt with their Prophet Moses (PBUH). They asked a greater feat of Moses (PBUH). They asked him to make them see God with their own eyes. God gave Moses (PBUH) several clear signs proving his prophet-hood. However, these signs were not sufficient to arouse the spirit of faith in them and to bring peace and security to their hearts. As a result, they were destroyed, but God forgave them and accepted the prayers offered by Moses (PBUH)

and saved them. Then, they took the calf for a god. The Samaritan used the jewels, which they took from the Egyptians, to make a golden calf. They worshipped the calf while Moses (PBUH) was away receiving the Tablets from his Lord. However, God still forgave them and He gave Moses (PBUH) the Tablets which embodied the law. God gave Moses (PBUH) the authority to implement the law.

The bigots used to say to the Prophet (PBUH), “Our hearts are covered,” as an excuse for not believing in the message that the Prophet (PBUH) brought. The Quran reminded them that hearts are not created with covers which prevent the truth from reaching them. Their hearts were covered as a result of the evil deeds which they committed. On the other hand, there were Jews like ‘Abd- Allah Ibn Sallam (RA), Tha’alaba ibn Sa’aiya (RA), Asad ibn Sa’ayia (RA), and Asad ibn ‘Obayed-Allah (RA) and others who opened their hearts to the truth and accepted it. These were guided by God.

The verses list a number of reasons behind God’s decision to deprive the bigots of His blessings in this life and to send them to Hell fire in the Hereafter. These include fabricating a lie about Mary and claiming that they killed Jesus (PBUH). Certainly, they did not kill Jesus (PBUH), nor did they crucify him but God raised him to heaven. The Quran does not give any details about how Jesus (PBUH) was raised to heaven. There is no need to speculate then on how this happened.

There are different interpretations for the statement that, “And there is none of the people of the Scripture but must believe in him before his death, and on the Day of Resurrection he shall be a witness against them.” Some scholars are of the opinion that everyone from the people of the Scripture will believe in Jesus (PBUH) when he is brought back to this world before the Day of Judgment. Another group is of the opinion that the statement means that everyone from the people of the Scripture will recognize the truth of what Jesus (PBUH) brought before they die.

“But those of them who are firm in knowledge and the believers, believe in what has been revealed to you and what was revealed before you, and those who establish prayers and give the poor-dues and who believe in God and the Last Day, We will give them an immense reward.” The verse emphasized that firm knowledge and pure faith lead to the belief in the Oneness of God and the oneness of the Message. It was mentioned in the traditional interpretations of the Quran that this verse alludes to those Jews, who are among others, believed in the message that Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) brought. But this is a general statement that applies to all those who have firm knowledge and strong faith among the people of the Scripture. They are included in the list of those who believe, establish prayers, pay the poor dues, and believe in God and the Last Day. One notes that the short vowels used in the statement, “those who establish prayers” in this verse are different from those used in the same statement in other verses of the Quran. This may have been done to underscore the importance of establishing prayers.

“Certainly, We have sent you revelations as We have sent to Noah, and the prophets after him, and We sent revelations to Abraham and Ishmael and Isaac and Jacob and the tribes, and Jesus and Job and Jonah and Aaron and Solomon and We gave David the Psalms. And We sent messengers whom We have already mentioned to you and messengers whom we have not mentioned; and God spoke directly to Moses. We sent messengers who gave good news as well as to warn, so that people should have no argument against God after the coming of messengers, God is Eminent, Wise.” It is then a single message brought by a number of messengers sent to humankind, one after the other, over the span of human history. A single message revealed to guide humankind to the right path using an approach which combines the bringing of glad tidings and the issuing of warning. This group of chosen messengers included Noah, Abraham, Ishmael, David, Moses, and others whose names were mentioned and others whose names were not mentioned. They lived in different places, came from different ethnic origins, sent to different people at different times over the path of the history of humankind but they all belonged to the same group of God’s chosen people. They were all sent by God, they all carried the light to guide humankind to the straight path. Finally, Muhammad (PBUH) was sent to all people. He is the last of the messengers and the seal of the prophets.

All the messengers received revelations from God. God spoke to Moses (PBUH). This was a revelation. However, we don’t know how this happened. The Quran, our only source whose authenticity cannot be disputed, did not elaborate on this. All that we know is that God spoke to Moses (PBUH). There are many questions which we cannot answer. What was the nature of the speech? How did it occur? How did Moses (PBUH) receive this speech? All these questions are part of the hidden knowledge that the Quran did not explain and we have no way of knowing the answers to them.

God in His wisdom and fairness sent these messengers to guide people. The messengers brought glad tidings of what God has prepared for those who believe, and a warning of the bad consequences for rejecting faith. This way people should have no excuse.

God gave people the intellect and the ability to think about the creation and the signs of God. The mercy of God brought about messengers to remind people knowing that humankind’s desires may overcome the wisdom that God gave them to think and to reflect. God is certainly Eminent and Wise.

“But God bears witness by what He has revealed to you - He has revealed it to you with His full knowledge - and the angels too bear witness; and God is sufficient as a witness.” The verse provided moral support to Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) in his struggle against those who rejected him and did not believe in the truth which he brought. Although God’s testimony is sufficient, but the angels also testified that the message that the Prophet (PBUH) brought is a revelation from God.

“Those who rejected faith and hindered others from God's way, they indeed have strayed far away from the path. Certainly, those who rejected faith and acted unjustly, God will not forgive them nor guide them to a path. Except the path of Hell, to abide in it for ever and this is easy to God.” These verses carried a dire warning to the bigots who rejected the message and hindered the efforts of the Prophet (PBUH). The bigots did not only reject faith but they also committed injustice. Rejecting faith in itself is an injustice. Denial of the truth is an injustice. Denial of the right to the freedom of faith is an injustice. The Quran described rejecting faith as an injustice in the verses, “Most certainly associating partners with God is a grievous iniquity.” (31:13). These bigots did not only deny the truth but they also prevented other people from accessing the truth. They went too far astray, they have no hope in forgiveness and they are destined to Hellfire. This is easy for God to do.

“People, the Messenger has, certainly come to you with the truth from your Lord, therefore believe - this is best for you - but if you reject faith, then certainly whatever is in the heavens and the earth is God's. God is Omniscient, Wise.” This is a proclamation to all people that the Messenger of God (PBUH) has brought them the truth from their Lord. Those who believe will get their good reward. Although, God has full control over people but He does not need people to believe in Him. He has the dominion of the heavens and earth.

Verses: 171 to 176

171. People of the Scripture, do not exceed the limits in your religion, and do not speak lies against God, but speak the truth; the Messiah, Jesus son of Mary is only a messenger of God and His Word which He bestowed on Mary and a spirit from Him; believe therefore in God and His messengers, and do not say, “Trinity”. Desist, it is better for you; God is only one God; far be it from His glory that He should have a son, whatever is in the heavens and whatever is in the earth is His, and God is sufficient for a Guardian.
172. The Messiah does by no means disdain that he should be a servant of God, nor do the angels who are near to Him, and those who disdain His service and are arrogant, He will assemble them all before Himself.
173. Then, as for those who believe and do good deeds, He will reward them fully and will give them more out of His grace; and as for those who disdain and are arrogant, He will punish them with a painful torment. And they shall not find any besides God to protect or help them.
174. People, certainly, there has come to you clear proof from your Lord and We have sent you a clear light.
175. God will admit those who believe in Him and hold fast to Him into His mercy and grace and will guide them to Himself on a straight path.
176. They ask you for a legal decision. Say to them, “God gives you a decision concerning the person who has neither parents nor offspring; if a man dies (and) he has no son and he has a sister, she shall have half the inheritance, If (such a deceased was) a woman, who left no child, Her brother inherits her; but if there are two (sisters), they shall have two-thirds of what he leaves; and if there are siblings, men and women, then the male shall have twice the share of a female;” Thus, God makes this clear to you, lest you err; and God knows all things. (4:171-176)

“People of the Scripture, do not exceed the limits in your religion, and do not speak lies against God, but speak the truth; the Messiah, Jesus son of Mary is only a messenger of God and His Word which He bestowed on Mary and a spirit from Him; believe therefore in God and His messengers, and do not say, ‘Trinity’. Desist, it is better for you; God is only one God; far be it from His glory that He should have a son, whatever is in the heavens and whatever is in the earth is His, and God is sufficient for a Guardian.” It is a transgression and exceeding the limit to claim that God has a son and that He, the One, is three. God is glorified beyond being a member of a partnership. He is unique and He is the Creator. The miraculous birth of Jesus (PBUH), having been born without a father, was something out of the ordinary for people. However, there are many things beyond what people consider ordinary that happen in the universe. The Messiah was one of the messengers of God. These messengers included Noah, Abraham, Moses, Muhammad, and the rest of the messengers chosen by God to deliver His Message to humankind. The interpretation of “His Word” may mean that the birth of Jesus (PBUH) occurred as a result of the direct command of God, “Be and he was.” God bestowed His Word on Mary, and Jesus (PBUH) was created in her womb without the need for a father’s sperm as is required in normal conception. The word of God which created everything from nothing can easily create Jesus (PBUH) in his mother’s womb. The spirit that was used in the creation of Jesus (PBUH) was used to create Adam (PBUH) from mud before. God who created Adam (PBUH) without a father or a mother is certainly able to create Jesus (PBUH) without a father. People then should believe in God and His messengers, including Jesus (PBUH) as a messenger of God, and Muhammad (PBUH) as the seal of the prophets, and they should stop making these mythical claims. God is One and He is unique. God does not need to have a son because God is Eternal and He is Infinite. He has the dominion of heavens and earth. The relationship between the human being and God is a relationship between the created and the Creator. God is sufficient for His creatures; He cares for them and looks after their needs and their interests.

“The Messiah does by no means disdain that he should be a servant of God, nor do the angels who are near to Him, and those who disdain His service and are arrogant, He will assemble them all before Himself. Then, as for those who believe and do good deeds, He will reward them fully and will give them more out of His grace; and as for those who disdain and are arrogant, He will punish them with a painful torment. And they shall not find any besides God to protect or help them.” One of the fundamental concepts that Islam has emphasized is the concept of the Oneness of God. The fact that God is One and is unique is the corner stone of the Islamic faith. The relationship between God and humankind is a relationship between the Creator and His creatures. This fact has been stated throughout the Quran in a way that leaves no doubt about its importance and its centrality to the message of Islam. Islam also stressed the fact that this is the message that all messengers brought to humankind. The fact of the Oneness and uniqueness of God has been emphasized in the message that each messenger of God brought before, from Noah (PBUH) to Muhammad (PBUH). Each messenger told his people, “My people, worship God, you have no deity save Him.” (7:59) The Messiah, Jesus son of Mary (PBUH) knew that he is a messenger and a servant of God and he would never have entertained the notion of being himself a god or a son of god. He would have been proud of being a servant of God. This is a status that all the messengers of God were proud to attain. This is a status that God bestowed on the messengers and the angels who are close to Him. The arrogance of those who disdain to be servants of God will not protect them from the wrath of God. Everyone will be gathered on the Day of Judgment to be recompensed according to their deeds.

God does not need people to worship Him. Serving God alone is for the benefit of humankind. Knowing one’s Creator and serving Him provide the basis for a healthy and happy life. Serving God alone frees humankind of all kinds of servitude whether it is servitude to another human being or to a weakness in one's life. When all people recognize God as the Creator and that they are all equal in front of Him, no tyranny will prevail and the dignity of humankind will be preserved. Those, whose arrogance prevents them from assuming the status of being servants to God, become the captives of other forms of servitude.

“People, certainly, there has come to you clear proof from your Lord and We have sent you a clear light. God will admit those who believe in Him and hold fast to Him into His mercy and grace and will guide them to Himself on a straight path.” The verse provided a proof from God. The language and construction of the Quran show that it could not have been composed by a human being. Those who understand the language are able to feel the beauty of the language of the Quran. The stories about the Arabs in the early days of Islam who adopted Islam after listening to the Quran are many. The Quran is a light that enables humankind to differentiate between truth and falsehood. Reading the Quran and living its spiritual environment promotes a feeling of ease, security and clarity. It removes all the impurities that are heaped on the spirit to bring it back to its initial natural disposition. Holding fast to God is the fruit of a strong faith. Through a strong faith one recognizes God and recognizes that all people are servants of God. This leads to holding fast to God as the only power in life. A strong faith provides safety and security for human beings and also serves as a healthy foundation on which to build a society. A strong faith and holding fast to God is rewarded with guidance to the straight path.

“They ask you for a legal decision. Say to them, ‘God gives you a decision concerning the person who has neither parents nor offspring; if a man dies (and) he has no son and he has a sister, she shall have half the inheritance; if (such a deceased was) a woman, who left no child, her brother inherits her; but if there are two (sisters), they shall have two-thirds of what he leaves; and if there are siblings, men and women, then the male shall have twice the share of a female.’ Thus, God makes this clear to you, lest you go astray; and God knows all things.” The last verse in this Sura deals with a question on one of the articles of the law of inheritance. This Sura started on a theme related to family affairs, then dealt with a number of family laws, and it ends citing the answer to a closely related question: how to distribute the estate of a deceased person in a certain situation. The verse explains the regulations regarding the term “Kalalah.” This ruling was dealt with in an earlier verse, “And if a man or a woman dies leaving no parents or offspring, but he (or she) has a brother or a sister, then each of them shall have one-sixth of the inheritance, but if there are more siblings, they shall share one-third of inheritance between them, after (payment of) any bequest that may have been bequeathed or a debt that may have been incurred with no harm done to others.” (4:12) The present verse provides an answer to a question that was raised regarding this article. When a deceased person has neither children nor a father but has a sister, whether they have common parents or they only share a common father, then she inherits half his estate. If she dies first, then he inherits all her estate – after other legal heirs had their shares - if she did not have a child or a parent. If the deceased had two sisters, then each one of them inherits one third of the estate. And if the deceased had a number of siblings, then the male gets twice the share of the female. Siblings having only a common father would not inherit if the deceased had siblings who were born to the same parents as the deceased.

The Sura ended on a comprehensive note, “Thus, God makes this clear to you, lest you go astray; and God knows all things.” It clearly indicated that matters of rights and duties emanate from God's law. All rules organizing inheritance, family affairs, and community affairs have been delineated in God's law. Guidance and security are achieved by following God's law, while falsehood and error are the lot of those who choose not to follow God's law.

Sura 5: Al-Maidah (The Table Spread)

In the name of God, the Lord of Mercy, the Giver of Mercy

The Quran was revealed to the Prophet (PBUH) to build a nation, to establish a state, and to organize a society. It laid down the rules that organize the relationships between the different members of the community, between the individual and the state, and between the Muslim state and the rest of the world. This Sura addresses, as do the previous three long Suras, a number of different topics. The underlying theme that binds all these Suras is the original goal that the Quran is trying to accomplish: building a nation, establishing a state and organizing a community on the basis of a special faith, a faith in which only God, the Lord, has the dominion and is the source of all the laws and rules which regulate life.

Verses: 1 to 11

- 1. You who believe, fulfill the obligations. Four-footed animals are made lawful to you (for food), except that which is recited to you (herein), game are unlawful while you are performing Pilgrimage; surely God decrees what He desires.*
- 2. So, you who believe do not violate the sanctity of God's rites, the Sacred Month, the animals brought for sacrifice, the garlands which are used to mark out such animals, nor the people going to the Sacred House to seek the bounty and pleasure of their Lord—but when you have completed the rites of Pilgrimage you may hunt. Do not let your hatred for the people who barred you from the Sacred Mosque lead you to transgression; help one another to do what is right and good and do not help one another towards sin and hostility. Be conscious of God, for His punishment is severe.*
- 3. You are forbidden to eat carrion; blood; pig's meat; any animal over which any name other than God's has been invoked; any animal which has been killed by strangling, or by a violent blow or a fall, or gored or savaged by a beast of prey, unless you are still able to slaughter it (in the correct manner); or that which has been sacrificed on idolatrous altars. You are also forbidden to allot shares (of meat) by drawing marked arrows, this is an abomination. Today the disbelievers have lost all hope that you will give up your religion. Do not fear them but fear Me. Today I have perfected your religion for you, completed My blessing upon you, and have chosen Islam as your religion; but if any of you is forced by hunger to eat forbidden food, with no inclination to transgression, then God is All-Forgiving and Giver of Mercy.*
- 4. They ask you, Prophet, what is lawful for them. Say, "All good things are lawful for you." (This includes) what you have taught your trained hunting animals (to catch) in the manner directed to you by God, so eat what they catch for you, but first pronounce God's name over it. Be conscious of God, He is swift in reckoning.*
- 5. Today all good things have been made lawful for you. The food of the People of the Scripture is lawful for you as your food is lawful for them. So are chaste believing women as well as chaste women of the people who were given the Scripture before you, as long as you have given them their bridal-gifts and married them, not taking them as lovers or secret mistresses. The deeds of anyone who rejects faith will come to nothing, and in the Hereafter he will be one of the losers.*
- 6. You who believe, when you get ready for prayer, wash your faces and your hands up to the elbows, wipe your heads, wash your feet up to the ankles and, if you are in a state of* major ritual impurity wash your whole body. If any of you is sick or on a journey, or has just relieved himself, or had intimate contact with a woman, and finds no water, then take some clean sand and wipe your face and hands with it. God does not wish to place any burden on you, He only wishes to cleanse you and perfect His blessing on you, so that you may be thankful.

7. Remember God's blessing on you and the covenant which He ratified with you, when you said, "We hear and we obey." Be conscious of God, God has full knowledge of the secrets of the heart.
8. You who believe, be steadfast in your devotion to God and bear witness impartially. Do not let the hatred of others make you swerve away from justice, act justly, for that is closer to piety. Be conscious of God. God is Totally-Aware of all that you do.
9. God has promised forgiveness and a great reward to those who believe and do good deeds.
10. Those who disbelieve and deny Our revelations will be companions of Hell.
11. You who believe, remember God's blessing on you when a certain people were about to raise their hands against you and He restrained them. Be conscious of God, and let the believers put their trust in Him. (5:1-11)

"You who believe, fulfill the obligations. Four-footed animals are made lawful to you (for food), except that which is recited to you (herein), game are unlawful while you are performing Pilgrimage; certainly God decrees what He desires." For life to continue and prosper on earth, man has to endure certain controls. These controls are necessary to organize the relationship between individuals, between the individual and people whether of kin or foreign, between the individual and living things, and between the individual and God. Islam delineates these controls clearly and traces them back to God's ordinance so that they would be respected and obeyed. These controls are not left to the whims and desires of human beings or fashioned to serve certain interests. These controls are meant to serve the interest of people everywhere and at all times. The Quran calls these controls "obligations," and it commands those who believe to fulfill these obligations.

This opening implies that the word "obligations" has a wider scope than what may appear at first glance. It indicates that the word "obligations" describes all constraints that need to be observed in the course of human life. The first obligation is to believe in the Oneness and uniqueness of God. It involves understanding and accepting the implications of having one and only One God. All other obligations spring out from this fundamental obligation.

The obligation to believe in God was originally administered to Adam (PBUH) by God. The obligation is stated in the following verse, "We said, 'Get you down all from here; and if, as is sure, there comes to you guidance from Me, whosoever follows My guidance, on them shall be no fear, nor shall they grieve.'" (2:38) This was the condition stated for Adam (PBUH) and his descendants to become the vicegerents of God on earth. The condition for being vicegerents is to follow God's guidance and to fulfill the first obligation that Adam (PBUH) was commanded to fulfill. The command to fulfill this obligation was renewed to all of Adam's (PBUH) descendants in the verse, "When your Lord drew forth from the Children of Adam - from their loins - their descendants, and made them testify concerning themselves, (saying), 'Am I not your Lord (who cherishes and sustains you)?' - They said, 'Yes, we do testify.' (This), lest you should say on the Day of Judgment, 'Of this we were never mindful' (7:172). This is a covenant which God has taken from each and every one of the children of Adam (PBUH). This covenant was declared when the children of Adam (PBUH) were in their father's loins. We may not understand how this happened, but we have no right to ask how, God knows best His creation.

The verses continue to list the rest of the obligations which believers are commanded to fulfill. "So, you who believe do not violate the sanctity of God's rites, the Sacred Month, the animals brought for sacrifice, the garlands which are used to mark out such animals, nor the people going to the Sacred House to seek the bounty and pleasure of their Lord - but when you have completed the rites of Pilgrimage you may hunt. Do not let your hatred for the people who barred you from the Sacred Mosque lead you to transgression: help one another to do what is right and good; do not help one another towards sin and hostility. Be conscious of God, for His punishment is severe. You are forbidden to eat carrion; blood; pig's meat; any animal over which any name other than God's has been invoked; any animal which has been killed by strangling, or by a violent blow or a fall, or gored or savaged by a beast of prey, unless you are still able to slaughter it (in the correct manner); or that which has been sacrificed on idolatrous altars. You are also forbidden to allot shares (of meat) by drawing marked arrows, this is an abomination. Today the disbelievers have lost all hope that you will give up your religion. Do not fear them: fear Me. Today I have perfected your religion for you, completed My blessing upon you, and have chosen Islam as your religion; but if any of you is forced by hunger to eat forbidden food, with no inclination to transgression, then God is All-Forgiving and Giver of Mercy." The obligations also include following the commands which outline what has been prohibited, what has been made lawful, and when and where to do certain tasks. These obligations have been decreed by God alone, and as such they have to be obeyed. All four-footed animals are lawful except that which is listed in these verses. Prohibitions include three categories: some things are prohibited at all times, others are only prohibited at specific times, and a third category includes certain things which are prohibited in specific places.

During Pilgrimage hunting is prohibited. Pilgrimage is a journey to God, during which one abandons the routine that one follows in regular daily life. The Sacred Mosque is a place of security and safety not only for people but also for all living beings. The time of Pilgrimage is a period of spiritual training in which the human being comes to understand and appreciate his/her relationship with other living things. Believers should take this opportunity to shed the material links to the world which they have been used to in their normal lives. Believers are asked to observe the rituals of Pilgrimage and to respect the sanctity of the Sacred Months. The Sacred Months include the months of Rajab, Zi Al-Qi'da, Zi Al-Hijja, and Muharram. God commanded that fighting is prohibited during these months. Animals brought by people performing Pilgrimage to be offered as sacrifice should only be used for that purpose. When one has completed the rituals, then one can hunt. Observing these obligations ensures a safe and secure environment for all living beings. The verses urge the believers to purify their hearts of hatred even towards those who barred them from visiting the Sacred House before. Safety and security should be extended to the hearts of the believers to replace hatred and transgression. Fulfilling this obligation requires an enormous amount of self-discipline.

The list of the prohibitions continues, "You are forbidden to eat carrion; blood; pig's meat; any animal over which any name other than God's has been invoked; any animal which has been killed by strangling, or by a violent blow or a fall, or gored or savaged by a beast of prey, unless you are still able to slaughter it (in the correct manner); or that which has been sacrificed on idolatrous altars. You are also forbidden to allot shares (of meat) by drawing marked arrows, this is an abomination. Today the disbelievers have lost all hope that you will give up your religion. Do not fear them but fear Me. Today I have perfected your religion for you, completed My blessings upon you, and have chosen Islam as your religion; but if any of you is forced by hunger to eat forbidden food, with no inclination to transgression, then God is All-Forgiving and Giver of Mercy.” Carrion, blood and pig’s meat have been prohibited. This was discussed before and whether we understand the rationale behind the prohibition of these items or not, we have to respect the command. The prohibition has been made by God and God prohibits only bad things. The list includes “any animal over which any name other than God’s has been invoked.” The reason behind this is that this practice contravenes the belief in the Oneness of God.

The list of prohibitions continues, “Any animal which has been killed by strangling, or by a violent blow or a fall, or gored or savaged by a beast of prey, unless you are still able to slaughter it (in the correct manner); or that which has been sacrificed on idolatrous altars. You are also forbidden to allot shares (of meat) by drawing marked arrows.” The practice of using marked arrows to make certain decisions is a kind of gambling, thus it is prohibited.

Exception is made when one is forced to eat any of these unlawful things for fear of losing one’s life. Scholars differed on how much to eat in such situations. The discussion of this issue can be found in books on Islamic jurisprudence. It is quite sufficient to state the fact that this religion provides easy tools to implement practical solutions which address everyday life problems.

Let us contemplate the verse, “Today the disbelievers have lost all hope that you will give up your religion. Do not fear them but fear Me. Today I have perfected your religion for you, completed My blessings upon you, and have chosen Islam as your religion;” This verse was the last verse to be revealed to the Prophet (PBUH). It came to announce that God’s message has been revealed in its complete and final form. When ‘Umar (RA) heard this verse he was saddened because he understood the implications of the proclamation that the message has been completed. He knew that this meant that the Prophet (PBUH) has fulfilled the trust and delivered the message, so he would be departing soon. The insertion of this verse in the middle of a list that outlines the things that have been rendered unlawful shows that these prohibitions are actually a blessing from God. It also indicates that all aspects of human life including rituals, all types of dealings, prohibitions, or commands are all components of the message. The message is indivisible and it is a depiction of the divine project. This divine project details the way of life that God has chosen for His servants. Believers should voluntarily accept the divine project in its totality and refuse all other manmade programs. Those who advocate abandoning God’s divine project in favor of manmade systems are actually transgressing their limits.

With the completion of the Message, the disbelievers have lost any hope in being able to distort the message or stop people from joining the ranks of the believers. God has guaranteed the integrity of the Message. Muslims may be defeated in a battle or they may suffer a period of decline but Islam will always be the final Message for humanity. The believers should not fear anyone except God Himself. This is an address to all believers at all times and places, those who adopt that which God has chosen for them. This address shows the believers that the way to security and safety is to adopt a way of life that is congruent with the divine project.

“They ask you, Prophet, what is lawful for them. Say, “All good things are lawful for you.” (This includes) what you have taught your trained hunting animals (to catch) in the manner directed to you by God, so eat what they catch for you, but first pronounce God’s name over it. Be conscious of God, He is swift in reckoning. Today all good things have been made lawful for you. The food of the people of the Scripture is lawful for you as your food is lawful for them. So are chaste believing women as well as chaste women of the people who were given the Scripture before you, as long as you have given them their bridal-gifts and married them, not taking them as lovers or secret mistresses. The deeds of anyone who rejects faith will come to nothing, and in the Hereafter he will be one of the losers.” These verses came to provide an answer to a question that was posed by some believers who wanted to know what edible things were lawful and what things were forbidden. The question indicates the mindset of a people who are happy of the fact that they are being addressed by God for the first time. They appreciated the great blessing that has been bestowed on them. So, they wanted to be extremely careful not to displease God by committing any unlawful act. They wanted to make sure that they did only what is rendered lawful by God. This shows the impact that Islam had on the psyche of new Muslims. They felt that they were given a new life, a life free from the bad practices which were prevalent before Islam. So, they asked the question: what edible things are lawful? The answer came to state that all good things are lawful. Thus, Islam came only to forbid eating things that are bad to humans. These are things which a decent human being would normally refrain from eating. Then an allowance was given: the animals hunted by trained animals or birds like hawks and hunting dogs are allowable. The main condition is that these trained hunting animals do not eat the prey they hunt. They only catch them and deliver them intact to their masters. If they eat, even a small piece of the prey, then it becomes forbidden. The verses reminded them that training animals to hunt is a God given skill, as all other types of knowledge. The believers were told to invoke the name of God when they release the hunting animal. This is a substitute for invoking the name of God when the prey is slaughtered. Then they are also reminded to be always conscious of God. The link between observing the laws of the lawful and forbidden and God consciousness was thus stated.

The verses continued to list the lawful things, stressing the fact that what is lawful is good for humans. The following item on the list of lawful things deals with taking Christian and Jewish (people of the Scripture) women, who were living in the Muslim community and had a protection contract between them and the Muslim state, as wives. Islam did not only allow them to practice their religion freely but also permitted cross marriages between Muslim men and Christian and Jewish women. This shows Islam’s attitude towards these religious minorities. It encouraged them to be part of the community and treated them with love and kindness. Islam also made the food of the people of the Scripture lawful for Muslims, so all can participate in community social functions. The marriage contract between a Muslim man and a woman from the people of the Scripture is governed by the same rules that govern the marriage of a Muslim man to a Muslim woman. The man gives the woman her bridal gift with the intention of entering into a marriage contract not as a gift to a lover or a mistress. All these rules and obligations are accepted as part of faith and fulfillment of these obligations is a sign of true faith. The deeds of those who chose to reject these obligations will be in vain.

“You who believe, when you get ready for prayer, wash your faces and your hands up to the elbows, wipe your heads, wash your feet up to the ankles and, if you are in a state of ritual impurity wash your whole body. If any of you is sick or on a journey, or has just relieved himself, or had intimate contact with a woman, and finds no water, then take some clean sand and wipe your face and hands with it. God does not wish to place any burden on you, He only wishes to cleanse you and perfect His blessing on you, so that you may be thankful.” It is not a coincidence that verses talking about rituals of prayers and purification were mentioned in connection with rules dealing with the lawful and the unlawful. This integration of topics points to the fact that rituals of prayers and purification are among the “good things” that God made lawful for Muslims. Prayers should be as enjoyable as other good things in life because when Muslims pray, they should enjoy the pleasure of communicating with God in a state of purity, cleanliness, and devotion. The second message that one gets from this discourse is that Islam deals with human life as a whole. All human activities are done to serve God. One should not treat the acts of worship any different than other activities of life. Life should be treated as a whole with no artificial segregation between acts of worship and other human activities. The scholars of Jurisprudence artificially categorized obligations into “rituals of worship” and “dealings.” This division does not reflect the essence of the divinely inspired Islamic law. All obligations whether those which deal with rituals or those which deal with daily life activities should be treated on equal footings. Obligations describing what is lawful in everyday dealings between people are as sacred as obligations regarding rituals of worship.

Prayers are a means of communication with God. A Muslim has to be prepared both physically and spiritually for this meeting. The physical preparation is described in this verse and involves a ritual wash. There are two types of ritual cleansing acts: Wudu and Ghusl. Wudu involves washing the face, the hands to the elbows, and wiping the heads and washing the feet to the ankles. Ghusl involves washing the whole body. Performing Wudu or Ghusl depends on the condition of the person. Instructions when a Muslim has to perform Wudu or Ghusl are explained. A Muslim, whether a male or a female, has to perform only Wudu after experiencing what is referred to as the “smaller event.” This is alluded to in the verse using the term “relieved himself.” In this case only Wudu is required as an act of cleansing. A Muslim has to perform the ritual wash of Ghusl when he or she experienced the condition which is referred to as the “bigger event.” This is alluded to in the verse using the term “touched women” which is a delicate way of describing intimate sexual contact between a man and a woman. In this case, Ghusl is required.

The verse continued to describe an alternative purification ritual called “Tayamum.” Muslims can take recourse to this alternative in the following special cases:

- When water is unavailable.
- When a person is sick in such a way that using water will cause bodily harm.
- When a person is travelling on the road.

Tayamum is performed by letting the palms touch a clean part of the earth usually sand or dust, removing the dust or sand from the palms and wiping the face and hands using the palms, one or two times depending on which school of Jurisprudence one wants to follow.

Questions arose regarding the meaning of the term “touched women” and whether it means simply touching women or does it mean having sexual intercourse. Whether the man or the woman experienced sexual pleasure from the touch or not? Different scholars have different views regarding the interpretation of this term. Different views also exist regarding the cases where sickness is the reason for replacing Wudu or Ghusl by Tayamum. Is Tayamum allowed only in cases when using water is deemed harmful to the body, or is it permissible in case of any sickness? Is it permissible to take recourse to Tayamum even in cases where there is doubt that water may cause harm? Probably yes.

The verse ends with a statement that these rules were mandated not to cause the believers any inconvenience but to purify them and to prepare them for the communication with God. It is clear that Wudu and Ghusl prepare the Muslim both physically and spiritually for the prayers. However, Tayamum only prepares the Muslim spiritually. The special circumstances in which Wudu or Ghusl can be replaced by Tayamum are described above. Although Islam emphasizes the importance of physical as well as spiritual hygiene; accepting Tayamum as an alternative, shows that Islam emphasizes the importance of spiritual hygiene when physical hygiene is difficult to attain. While there are situations when physical hygiene is not possible to achieve, means for spiritual hygiene are always available. It is also important to note that while there are exemptions for performing the ritual wash needed for the prayer, Islam is keen on providing every tool which enables Muslims to perform prayers.

“Remember God’s blessing on you and the covenant which He ratified with you, when you said, ‘We hear and we obey.’ Be conscious of God, God has full knowledge of the secrets of the heart.” Muslims who heard the Quran addressing them, valued the blessings of God. They witnessed the changes that were happening to their lives and their communities because of these blessings. One of these blessings was the fact that they were made a party in a covenant with God. What an honor? However, one should always remember that God knows all what goes on inside our breasts. This is an allusion to the secrets of the heart that one may harbor.

“You who believe, be steadfast in your devotion to God and bear witness impartially. Do not let the hatred of others make you swerve away from justice, act justly, for that is closer to piety. Be conscious of God. God is Totally-Aware of all that you do.” In a previous verse, the believers were admonished not to let the hatred of some people make them transgress against their enemy. In this verse, the tolerant attitude of Islam is extended. It admonished the believers not to let the hatred of others make them swerve away from justice. It may be easy not to transgress physically against one’s enemy but it is much harder to treat one’s enemy fairly. Yet the believers were commanded to establish justice even when they were in dispute with the people they hate. A support was promised to strengthen the believers in this endeavor. They should strive to become conscious of God. It is the duty of this nation to be steadfast in its devotion to God for the benefit of humankind. Muslims were able to play that role when Islam was their way of life. Muslims faltered in their responsibility when Islamic values became mere slogans.

“God has promised forgiveness and a great reward to those who believe and do good deeds. Those who disbelieve and deny Our revelations will be companions of Hell. You who believe, remember God’s blessing on you when a certain people were about to raise their hands against you and He restrained them. Be conscious of God, and let the believers put their trust in Him.”

This is the reward that awaits those who chose to carry out their responsibility. This reward is a manifestation of divine justice. Those who believed and did good deeds will be rewarded differently from those who chose to disbelieve and do wicked deeds. The verse brings assurance to the believers of God's support.

Verses: 12 to 26

12. God took a covenant from the Children of Israel. We made twelve leaders arise among them, and God said, "I am with you: if you establish prayer, pay the prescribed alms, believe in My messengers and support them, and lend God a good loan, I will absolve you of your sins and admit you into Gardens graced with flowing streams. Any of you who now ignore this (covenant) will go astray from the right path."
13. But they broke their pledge, so We cursed them and hardened their hearts. They distort the meaning of (revealed) words and have forgotten some of what they were told to remember. You (Prophet) will continue to find them- barring a few - ever bent on deceit. Pardon them and forbear, God loves those who do good.
14. We also took a covenant from those who say, "We are Christians," but they too forgot a part of what they were told to remember, so We stirred up enmity and hatred among them until the Day of Resurrection, when God will tell them what they have done.
15. People of the Scripture, Our Messenger has come to reveal to you much of what you concealed of the Scripture, and to pardon much (of what you have done). A light has now come to you from God, and a Book making things clear.
16. With which God guides to the ways of peace those who follow what pleases Him, bringing them from darkness out into light, by His will, and guiding them to a straight path.
17. Those who say, "God is the Messiah, the son of Mary," are defying the truth. Say, "If it had been God's will, could anyone have prevented Him from destroying the Messiah, the son of Mary, together with his mother and everyone else on earth?" Control of the heavens and earth and all that is in between them belongs to God; He creates whatever He wills. God has power over everything.
18. The Jews and the Christians say, "We are the children of God and His beloved ones." Say, "Then why does He torment you for your sins? You are merely human beings, part of His creation. He forgives whoever He pleases and torments whoever He pleases. Control of the heavens and earth and all that is between them belongs to Him: to Him is the final destination."
19. People of the Scripture, Our Messenger has now come to you, after an interval of cessation of the messengers, to make things clear for you in case you should say, "No one has come to give us good news or to warn us." So someone has come to you, to give you good news and warn you; God has the power to do all things.
20. And when Moses said to his people, "My people, remember God's blessings on you, how He raised prophets among you, made you kings, and gave you what He had not given any other people.
21. My people, enter the holy land which God assigned for you, and do not turn your back for then you will be losers."

22. They said, "Moses, in this land are a people of exceeding strength; never shall we enter it until they leave it; when they leave, then shall we enter."
23. Two men whom God has blessed among those who were afraid (to disobey) said, "Enter upon them through the gate, for when you have entered you shall surely be victorious, and put your trust in God if you are true believers."
24. They said, "Moses, we shall never enter it so long as they are in it; go therefore you and your Lord, and fight, we will stay here."
25. He said, "My Lord, I have no authority (upon any) but my own self and my brother; therefore, judge between us and the transgressors."
26. God said, "Therefore will the land be forbidden to them for forty years (during which) they will wander the earth aimlessly. Do not grieve over the transgressors." (5:12-26)

"God took a covenant from the Children of Israel. We made twelve leaders arise among them, and God said, 'I am with you, if you establish prayer, pay the prescribed alms, believe in My messengers and support them, and lend God a good loan, I will absolve you of your sins and admit you into Gardens graced with flowing streams. Any of you who now ignore this (covenant) will go astray from the right path.' But they broke their pledge, so We cursed them and hardened their hearts. They distort the meaning of (revealed) words and have forgotten some of what they were told to remember. You (Prophet) will continue to find them - barring a few - ever bent on deceit. Pardon them and forbear, God loves those who do good. We also took a covenant from those who say, 'We are Christians,' but they too forgot a part of what they were told to remember, so We stirred up enmity and hatred among them until the Day of Resurrection, when God will tell them what they have done." God took a covenant from the Jews. This covenant had two components: a condition to be fulfilled and a reward to be awarded. The verse gives the details of the covenant and the way it was made. God appointed twelve leaders from among the Israelites to represent the twelve tribes who constituted the offspring of Jacob (PBUH). The leaders of the tribes took the covenant on behalf of the twelve tribes. In the covenant, God promised the Israelites that He is with them. This was a great promise. Those who have God on their side will never be conquered; they will never lose their way; and they will never be unhappy. In short, those who have God on their side have got everything. However, this is conditional on the performance of specific duties. The first duty is to establish prayers. The word "establish" go beyond "perform." Establishing prayers means that prayers should be performed in the best way possible, it should become a tool to prevent the person from committing sins and wicked deeds. The second duty is to pay the prescribed Alms. This is an expression of gratitude to God for His blessings in increasing the provision and wealth. It is also a tool to establish social justice and ensure that the needs of the poor are satisfied. The third duty is to believe in all God's messengers. All messengers came with the same message from God. If we deny one messenger, then it is as if we deny all of them and we deny God. This belief should be reflected on the deeds of the individual. Actively supporting the messengers is definitely among these deeds. Belief is not a lip service to be paid to a set of articles of faith or empty rituals to be performed but it is a complete way of life. Those who believe in God's message should actively support this way of life.

The verse also describes a type of spending in the way of God that goes beyond the prescribed Alms. This extra spending is considered by God as a loan given to Him by His servants even though the wealth came originally from God. These were the terms of the covenant. Once the terms are fulfilled, then the reward will be given. First, all sins will be wiped out. Wiping out all sins is a great reward because humankind sins often. Wiping the sins is a great blessing and mercy from God. When all sins are wiped out, admission to gardens under which rivers flow follows. This is another blessing from God. But those who do not fulfill their commitment according to the covenant will go astray.

However, the Children of Israel reneged on their covenant, and they distorted the Scripture given to them and forgot the law. So, they were no longer capable of availing themselves of God's guidance and their hearts became hard. The Jews of Medina refused to accept the Prophet's (PBUH) guidance, they reneged on the treaty that they had with him, and they continued to break their agreements with him. However, the verse commanded the Prophet (PBUH) to pardon them and to deal with them in the best way possible.

Those who said they were Christians, but only paid lip service to the true meaning of the word, forgot the covenant they had with God. This is the covenant which proclaimed the Oneness of God. So, they became divided and enmity and hatred were stirred among them.

“People of the Scripture, Our Messenger has come to reveal to you much of what you concealed of the Scripture, and to pardon much (of what you have done). A light has now come to you from God, and a Book making things clear. With which God guides to the ways of peace those who follow what pleases Him, bringing them from darkness out into light, by His will, and guiding them to a straight path.” These verses addressed the people of the Scripture, stating that God has sent Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) as a messenger to them. His role was to explain and clarify parts of the message that was revealed before but were ignored or have been forgotten; he was instructed to pardon these transgressions. The Prophet (PBUH) came to re-establish God's original message and declare it a universal message to all people in every place and at all times. This Prophet (PBUH) and the Book he brought are a light to guide all people to the straight path. Those who receive this guidance are led to the way of peace. Islam fills life with peace, a comprehensive peace. It is a peace for the individual, peace for the family, peace for the community, peace for the nation, peace for the world, peace for the human race, and peace for the whole universe.

This Book will bring people out of darkness into light. There are different types of darkness: darkness generated by superstition; darkness generated by old myth and legends; darkness generated by bad traditions; darkness generated by whims and desires of humankind; darkness generated by missing guidance and going astray; and darkness generated by adopting wrong values and principles. The Book will guide people to the straight path. This is a path aligned with the initial natural human disposition; it is aligned with the laws that govern the universe; and it guides straight to God. God who created humankind and the universe gave humankind a way to guidance through the straight path.

“Those who say, ‘God is the Messiah, the son of Mary,’ are defying the truth. Say, ‘If it had been God's will, could anyone have prevented Him from destroying the Messiah, the son of Mary, together with his mother and everyone else on earth?’ Control of the heavens and earth and all that is between them belongs to God; He creates whatever He wills. God has power over everything. The Jews and the Christians say, ‘We are the children of God and His beloved ones.’ Say, ‘Then why does He punish you for your sins? You are merely human beings, part of His creation. He forgives whoever He pleases and punishes whoever He pleases. Control of the heavens and earth and all that is between them belongs to Him: to Him is the final destination.” Jesus (PBUH) came with the same message which was brought by all other messengers. This message commands the worship of one unique God. However, Christianity, as we know it today, distorted the original message and adopted the concept of trinity instead. The Quran came to re-establish the original message: worshipping the One and only God. The verse argued with those who say that Jesus is God, and posed the question: who can save Jesus, his mother, and indeed the whole human race if God wanted to destroy them? It stated the difference between the power of the Creator and the power of the created. There is no limit to what the Creator can do, while the created has limited power.

The Quran challenged the claim made by the Jews and Christians who said that they are the children of God which implies that God can be used as a father figure, spiritual if not physical. This claim casts doubts on the concept of the Oneness of God and distorts the relationship between the human being and God. Human beings are servants of God. The Oneness of the Creator means that all rules and laws that organize life on earth emanate from God who decrees the laws and the rules that are compatible and suitable for humankind, thus, bringing security and order to human life.

The verse addressed the claim that God promised not to punish the Jews and the Christians. Discrimination in treating human beings is against divine justice. Nobody should be given the right to break God’s law without suffering His punishment. All human beings are equal in front of God. He is capable of punishing whomsoever He wishes and forgiving whomsoever He wishes. To Him belongs the dominion of heavens and earth.

“People of the Scripture, Our Messenger has now come to you, after an interval of cessation of the messengers, to make things clear for you in case you should say, ‘No one has come to give us good news or to warn us.’ So someone has come to you, to give you good news and warn you; God has the power to do all things.” The verse made a clear statement to the people of the Scripture that a messenger has been sent to them, so they had no excuse. The verse challenged them to claim that they had not received a message to straighten out their distorted beliefs. They were also reminded that God has the power to send whosoever He wills as a messenger.

“And when Moses said to his people, ‘My people, remember God’s blessings on you, how He raised prophets among you, made you kings, and gave you what He had not given any other people. My people, enter the holy land which God assigned for you, and do not turn your back for then you will be losers.’ They said, ‘Moses, in this land are a people of exceeding strength; never shall we enter it until they leave it; when they leave, then shall we enter.’” One senses the trepidation that Moses (PBUH) felt when he was faced with the hesitant attitude of his people. The memory of his experience during the long journey from Egypt was still vivid in his mind. He tried to rally them around the cause that they came to achieve: to enter the Holy Land. He reminded them of the blessings of God and God’s promise to appoint from among them prophets and kings. This was a promise that was not given any other nation in the world. God promised them the Holy Land and God always fulfills His promise. Thus, turning back on their heels at this point would be a total loss. However, they forgot God’s promise in face of the danger they sensed. They did not want to fight for the Holy Land even though they knew that God's promise will be fulfilled.

“Two men of whom God has blessed among those who were afraid (to disobey) said, ‘Enter upon them through the gate, for when you have entered you shall surely be victorious, and put your trust in God if you are true believers.’” The verse gave a true depiction of the qualities of people having genuine faith. The fear of God filled the hearts of these two men. This fear gave them the strength and the courage to face the giants controlling the Holy Land. The fear of God and the fear of fellow human beings do not coexist in the heart of a believer. They told their people: enter the gate, for when you have entered you shall surely be victorious. This is the rule: advance and conquer and put your trust in God. Only believers put their trust in God. But their response was, “Moses, we shall never enter it so long as they are in it; go therefore you and your Lord, and fight, surely we will stay here.” This was a cowardly and rude response. Cowardice and rudeness usually go hand in hand. The response implied rejecting God as their Lord since believing in Him would force them to fight. Moses (PBUH) felt the pain of helplessness. He called upon his Lord, “My Lord, I have no control (upon any) but my own self and my brother; therefore, judge between us and the transgressors.”

God responded favorably to His Messenger's request and they were punished justly, “God said, ‘Therefore will the land be forbidden to them for forty years (during which) they will wander the earth aimlessly. Do not grieve over the transgressors.’” The Promised Land was declared forbidden to them, and they had to wander in the Diaspora for forty years. Most probably, this was a ruling that applied only to that generation in the hope that a new generation will arise to fulfill the terms of the covenant. A new generation raised in the desert will be free from the heritage of slavery and humiliation which the previous generation was subjected to in Egypt. A new generation will be better prepared to carry its responsibility courageously.

Verses: 27 to 40

27. (Prophet), tell them the truth about the story of the two sons of Adam: each of them offered a sacrifice (to God). It was accepted from one, but not from the other. The latter said, “I will, certainly slay you.” The former said, “God accepts only the sacrifice of those who are conscious of Him.
28. If you raise your hand to slay me, I will not raise my hand against you to slay you; for I do fear God, the Lord of the worlds.
29. And I would rather you were burdened with my sins as well as yours and became an inhabitant of the fire, that is the reward of the wrongdoers.”
30. But his soul prompted him to murder his brother; he murdered him, and became one of the losers.
31. Then God sent a raven, who scratched the ground, to show him how to hide his brother's corpse. He said, “Woe is me, was I not even able to be as this raven, and cover my brother's body?” then he became remorseful.
32. On account of (this deed), We ordained for the Children of Israel that if anyone kills a person - unless it be for murder or for spreading mischief in the land - it would be as if he killed all humankind; and if any one saved a life, it would be as if he saved the life of all humankind. Our messengers came to them with clear signs, but many of them continued to commit excesses in the land.

33. The recompense for those who wage war against God and His Messenger, and strive hard to spread mischief in the land is: execution, or crucifixion, or the cutting off of hands and feet from opposite sides, or exile from the land. That is their disgrace in this world, and a great torment is theirs in the Hereafter;
34. Unless they repent before you overpower them; in that case, know that God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.
35. You who believe, be conscious of God, seek the means to come closer to Him, and strive with might in his cause; so that you may succeed.
36. Certainly, those who disbelieved, even if they had what is in the earth, all of it, and the like of it with it, that they might ransom themselves with it from the torment of the Day of Resurrection, it shall not be accepted from them, and they shall have a painful torment.
37. They will wish to get out of the Fire, but they will never get out therefrom; their torment will be one that endures.
38. Cut off the hands of thieves, whether they are male or female as a punishment for what they have done – a deterrent from God, God is Eminent, Wise.
39. But whoso repents after his wrongdoing and amends, God will certainly, relent toward him, God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.
40. Do you not know that the dominion of the heavens and the earth belongs to God; He torments whom He pleases; and forgives whom He pleases and God has power over everything. (5:27-40)

“(Prophet), tell them the truth about the story of the two sons of Adam: each of them offered a sacrifice (to God). It was accepted from one, but not from the other. The latter said, ‘I will, certainly slay you.’ The former said, ‘God accepts only the sacrifice of those who are conscious of Him.’” Tell them about these two models of humankind, and you are only telling them the truth. It is a true story that reveals certain dimensions of human nature. These two sons of Adam (PBUH) were trying to seek the pleasure of God by making offerings to Him. A person seeking the pleasure of God would not contemplate assaulting an innocent person. Committing such a crime defeats the purpose of making the offering. They made their offerings. The offering of one was accepted but the offering of the other was not. The verse is written in the passive voice which indicates that decisions whether to accept the offering or not and how it would be accepted were made by an unseen power. Two points need to be emphasized here. One, we should not dwell on the reasons behind the decision that one offering was accepted and the other was not. The second is the culpability of the person whose offering was accepted regarding the decision to reject the offering of his brother. The decision to reject the offering was made by an unseen power and no human deserves to be punished for it. However, the one whose offering was not accepted blamed the other for the rejection of his offering, he said, “I will kill you.” This statement indicates a premeditated intention to harm an innocent person. Such a horrible act could not be justified. It was incited by blind jealousy that filled the heart of the man whose offering was not accepted. The response of his brother only magnifies the gravity of the crime. In spite of the threat of impending harm, the brother simply responded by saying, “God accepts only the sacrifice of those who are conscious of Him.” In this brief statement, he tried to clarify the situation. He showed his brother the need to accept God’s decision, and directed his brother gently to the way that leads to God’s acceptance. The brother who is faithful, righteous, and peaceful, continued to explain to his vengeful brother, “If you raise your hand to slay me, I will not raise my hand against you to slay you for I do fear God, the Lord of the worlds; and I would rather you were burdened with my sins as well as yours and became an inhabitant of the Fire, that is the reward of the wrongdoers.” In spite of the eminent danger, the response of the innocent brother portrayed a soul which reveled in peace and security. He would not raise a hand against his aggressive brother, even if the other tried to kill him. He could not entertain such desire, not because he was unable to, but because he was conscious of his Lord. He would rather have his brother be burdened with the sins of both of them. The culprit’s sins were the reason that his offering was not accepted in the first place. This was also an attempt to swerve his brother away from his bad intention by expressing how much he abhorred harming his brother. He also pointed out to him that the way to get his sins forgiven is to be conscious of God.

“But his soul prompted him to the murder of his brother; he murdered him, and became one of the losers.” In spite of all the pleading by the peaceful brother, evil prevailed and the soul of the wicked brother made it easy for him to commit the crime. He killed his brother and he became a loser. He lost his soul and got himself in trouble. He lost his brother who was his friend and companion. He lost comfort in this life and he lost the reward in the Hereafter. He realized the gravity of his crime when he saw the body of his brother lying on the ground and he did not know what to do with it. God in His wisdom wanted him to realize how helpless he was.

“Then God sent a raven, who scratched the ground, to show him how to hide his brother’s corpse. He said, ‘Woe is me, was I not even able to be as this raven, and cover my brother’s body?’ Then he became remorseful.” It is obvious that this was the first time for the killer to see a dead body being buried. It may be the case that this was the first time one of Adam’s (PBUH) offspring had died or that the killer may have been too young to have seen a dead person being buried before. It is also obvious that his regret was not for the bad deed that he committed, in such case he would have been forgiven by God, but the regret was for the realization that killing his brother did not solve his problem but added to it. The story emphasized the gravity of the crime and provided a foundation for the legislation dealing with the crime of murder, a legislation which should be a deterrent before the crime is committed and a tool for retribution after the crime has been committed.

“On account of (this deed), We ordained for the Children of Israel that if anyone kills a person - unless it be for murder or for spreading mischief in the land - it would be as if he killed all humankind; and if any one saved a life, it would be as if he saved the life of all humankind. Our Messengers came to them with clear signs, but many of them continued to commit excesses in the land.” On account of this incident, knowing that such aggressive human model exists and that such model may not heed advice or admonition, and for the protection of peaceful and righteous people who do not assault or commit evil against any one; God ordained for the children of Israel that killing one soul is equivalent to killing the whole human race and saving a single soul is equivalent to saving the whole human race.

“The recompense for those who wage war against God and His Messenger, and strive hard to spread mischief in the land is: execution, or crucifixion, or the cutting off of hands and feet from opposite sides, or exile from the land. That is their disgrace in this world, and a great torment is theirs in the Hereafter; unless they repent before you overpower them; in that case, know that God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.” The verse described the punishment for crimes that may be committed by gangs of outlaws against citizens of a Muslim state, a state governed by a Muslim ruler who governs according to God's law. These gangs terrorize and assault people; and steal their money. These gangs are not only fighting the government or the citizens of the state but they are also fighting God and His Messenger because they are fighting God's law. They are spreading corruption and terrorism in the land. This is a horrendous crime. People who are proven guilty of committing such crime will be punished in this life as well as in the Hereafter. However, if they abandoned violence and repented before they were seized, then they should be granted amnesty. The rationale behind granting them amnesty, if they repent while they are still free and able to commit more atrocities, has two components. First, abandoning their wicked ways while they are still in a position of power and are able to inflict more harm on the society is an expression of remorse and their serious intention to go back to the right way. Second, amnesty provides an incentive for such gangs to seek forgiveness and saves the society the burden of fighting them.

“You who believe, be conscious of God, seek the means to come closer to Him, and strive with might in his cause; so that you may succeed.” The divine project takes into account human nature. It recognizes its weaknesses and its strengths. It aims at promoting goodness in the human soul and encouraging people to follow the law. This cannot be achieved by punishment alone. Fear of the worldly consequences of breaking the law is not sufficient to create a healthy society. Punishment may deter people from committing crimes, however it does not change the criminal mindset. Quran encourages people to seek the pleasure of God by adopting means to bring them nearer to God. This is the honourable way for human beings to follow. So, be conscious of your Lord and seek the means to come near to Him. Seeking help from God empowers them and puts them on the road to success.

“Certainly, those who disbelieved, even if they had what is in the earth, all of it, and the like of it with it, that they might ransom themselves with it from the torment of the Day of Resurrection, it shall not be accepted from them, and they shall have a painful torment. They will wish to get out of the Fire, but they will never get out therefrom; their torment will be one that endures.” The verse paints an image for the disbelievers on the Day of Judgment. One can imagine that they have all what is on the earth and the like of it, trying to ransom themselves from the punishment by giving away that wealth and yet they are incapable of ransoming themselves.

“Cut off the hands of thieves, whether they are male or female as a punishment for what they have done – a deterrent from God, God is Eminent, Wise. But whoso repents after his wrongdoing and amends, surely, God will relent toward him, God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy. Do you not know that the dominion of the heavens and the earth belongs to God; He torments whom He pleases; and forgives whom He pleases and God has power over everything.” The government in an Islamic society should guarantee a decent living, appropriate education, and social justice for all its citizens; Muslims and non-Muslims alike. No citizen should be faced with the temptation to steal to support him/herself. Islam requires a decent life for all citizens. It ensures that each citizen has an ample access to education and health services. It decrees social justice for all. The right to have personal property gained through legal means is sacred. Personal property is a way to enrich the society and to benefit its citizens. It should be protected. It is then logical to specify a severe punishment for the crime of theft. However, for the punishment to be enacted, the alleged perpetrator has to be proven guilty without a shadow of a doubt.

Islam provides an integrated system which organizes the life of people in a Muslim state. For the Islamic system to be successful, it has to be applied in its entirety. Partial application of the system is counterproductive. The rationale behind enacting a law to address a specific crime may not be clear unless we examine the system as a whole. Let us examine the laws regarding the punishment for the crime of theft. All citizens of a Muslim state have the right to live a decent life. They have the right to have all their basic needs satisfied. These needs include food, clothing, and a comfortable home. The state has to provide education and appropriate work opportunities for its citizens so that they become gainfully employed and are able to afford a decent life. The state has to provide the necessary support for those who are unable to work, those whose income is not sufficient, and those who lost their jobs either temporarily or permanently. Islam prescribes three different measures that can be used to address the needs of the poor or needy. First, affluent family members are obligated to support their kin who are needy. If the family members are all poor, then the responsibility falls on the rich people of the town or the village. If this kind of help is not available, then Zakat money is used to address the need. An Islamic government should provide a reasonably decent life for its citizens.

Islam is very particular about the ways which are used to acquire wealth. All properties should be acquired through legal means. Since, wealth can only be acquired through hard work and legal means, then there is no reason for anyone to begrudge the wealthy. Islam trains its adherents to adopt highly ethical values and to behave accordingly. It motivates them to work hard and seek legal means for earning their living. If for some reason they are unable to work or it so happened that their income is not sufficient to ensure a decent life, then the government is obligated to cover that shortage.

In such a society stealing can only be motivated by greed and the desire for easy and quick gain. This is not acceptable in an Islamic setting. Such acts terrorize the society, threaten people's security, and infringe the right for legal ownership that people deserve. It is the right of all members of the society, who work hard and earn their living through legal means and pay their dues, to ensure that their property is protected. This system ensures that the basic needs for people are satisfied. Therefore, there is no excuse for those who choose to steal other people's property. This is a punishable crime.

However, punishments can only be executed if the crime has been proven without a shadow of a doubt. Any doubt renders the punishment inapplicable. 'Umar (RA) did not apply the punishment for theft during the year of draught (when there was a famine). Another example which illustrates this point is the story of the two servants of Ibn Hatab ibn abi Balta'h (RA) who stole a she camel from a man from a tribe called Mazeenah. Originally, 'Umar (RA) decided to punish the servants when they were proven guilty. However, when 'Umar (RA) came to know that the servants were often left without food and that their master did not satisfy their basic needs, 'Umar (RA) decided to pardon the servants. He punished their master by commanding him to repay the owner of the she camel twice its price.

Now, let us discuss the punishment for the crime of theft. A crime of theft is defined as stealing money or property that has a monetary value of more than about one dollar. The money or the property must be locked up in a secure place which is not accessible to people. Exceptions are made in certain situations. Examples of these are a person stealing money that was left with him/her as a trust, a servant stealing items that left unlocked in the house, a person refusing to repay his/her debt, or a person stealing fruits from a tree in an open field. The punishment for theft is not applicable in these situations. However, in such situations, the judge can impose different punishments depending on the gravity of the crime.

The punishment for the crime of theft is the cutting of the right hand to the wrist. A second offense is punished by cutting the left foot to the ankle. The scholars differed as to the punishments for repeating offenders who commit the crime of theft for more than two times. This punishment may seem to be a harsh and inhumane, but it is meant to be a deterrent. It also meant to send a message that the tool which is used to make illegal gains can be easily lost. This deterrent worked well, one can cite very few cases during the early years of Islam when it was necessary to enact the punishment.

In any case, the door for repentance is always open for those who seek it. Wrongdoing has grave consequences. Thus, for repentance to be accepted the wrongdoing has to be redressed. It is not only sufficient for a Muslim to abstain from committing injustice but it is also important that we make positive contribution to the society. Urging people to make positive contributions provides them with incentive to abstain from committing injustices.

The topics mentioned in these verses flow nicely from Islam's strategy to train people to practice an Islamic way of life. First, the crime is outlined followed by citing the punishment, then comes the way out and finally a reminder of the power of God. God created humankind and He knows what is good and what is bad for people. God has the ultimate authority over everything.

Verses: 41 to 50

- 41. Messenger, do not be grieved by those who race each other into rejecting faith: (whether it be) among those who say "We believe" with their lips but whose hearts have no faith; or it be among the Jews, who will listen eagerly to lies, and to those who have not even met you. They distort the meaning of the revealed words. They say (to each other), "If you are given this ruling, accept it, but if you are not, then beware." If God intends to put any one to trial you will be powerless against God on their behalf, for those are the ones whose hearts God does not want to purify. For them there is disgrace in this world, and in the Hereafter a grievous torment.*
- 42. They are fond of listening to falsehood, and they devour what is unlawful. If they do come to you for judgment, either judge between them, or decline. If you decline, they cannot hurt you in the least. If you judge between them, judge justly. God loves those who judge justly.*
- 43. But why do they come to you for judgment, when they have the Torah with God's judgment and even then, they still turn away. They are not really believers.*
- 44. We revealed the Torah, wherein there are guidance and light. By which the prophets who submitted to God, judged the Jews; so did the rabbis and the scholars, for to them was entrusted the protection of God's book, and they were witnesses thereto. Therefore, fear*

- not people, but fear Me, and sell not my verses for a small price. Whosoever fails to judge by (the light of) what God has revealed, such are the disbelievers.*
45. We prescribed for them in the Torah: a life for a life, an eye for an eye, a nose for a nose, an ear for an ear, a tooth for a tooth, and a wound for an equal wound. But whoso forgoes the just retribution by way of charity, it will be an act of atonement for himself. And whosoever fails to judge according to what God has revealed, such are the wrongdoers.
46. And We sent Jesus the son of Mary in their footsteps, confirming the Torah that had come before him. We gave him the Gospel; therein was guidance, light, and confirmation of the Torah that had come before him: a guidance and an admonition to those who are God conscious.
47. So, let the people of the Gospel judge according to what God has revealed therein. Whosoever fails to judge according to what God has revealed, such are the transgressors.
48. To you (Muhammad), We sent the Book with the truth, confirming the Scriptures that came before it, and guarding it in safety; so judge between them by what God has revealed; and follow not their vain desires which diverge from the truth that has come to you. To each among you We have prescribed a law and a path. If God had so willed, He would have made you one community, but He wanted to test you in what He has given you; so vie one with another in doing good deeds. You will all return to God and He will make clear to you the matters which you differed about.
49. So (Prophet) judge between them according to what God has revealed, and follow not their whims, and beware of them lest they beguile you from any of what God has sent down to you. And if they turn away, be assured that God intends to punish them for some of the sins they have committed. And truly most people are transgressors.
50. Is it a judgment of the time of (idolatry) ignorance that they are seeking? Who is better than God as a judge for a people who have certitude? (5:41-50)

“Messenger, do not be grieved by those who race each other into rejecting faith: (whether it be) among those who say, ‘We believe’ with their lips but whose hearts have no faith; or it be among the Jews, who will listen eagerly to lies, and to those who have not even met you. They distort the meaning of the revealed words. They say (to each other), ‘If you are given this ruling, accept it, but if you are not, then beware.’ If God intends to put any one to trial, you will be powerless against God on their behalf. For those are the ones whose hearts God does not want to purify. For them there is disgrace in this world, and in the Hereafter a grievous torment. They are fond of listening to falsehood, and they devour what is unlawful. If they do come to you for judgment, either judge between them, or decline. If you decline, they cannot hurt you in the least. If you judge between them, judge justly. God loves those who judge justly. But why do they come to you for judgment, when they have the Torah with God’s judgment and even then, they still turn away. They are not really believers.” It seems that these verses were revealed during the first years after the migration to Medina. During these years some of the Jewish tribes living in Medina were plotting against the Muslims. The hypocrites allied themselves with these tribes. This used to sadden the Prophet (PBUH). The verses came to offer support and consolation to the Prophet (PBUH). The verses also instructed the Prophet (PBUH) in ways to deal with those who plot against him and the believers. These verses describe a situation where members of a Jewish tribe committed certain offenses for which there were specific prescribed punishments in the Torah.

The original prescribed punishments were harsh. However, gradually, the punishments were relaxed and were replaced with lighter punishments. They asked the Prophet (PBUH) what punishment he would suggest for these offenses. They had hoped that he would suggest the lighter punishments. However, they were determined to ignore the Prophet's (PBUH) suggestion if they did not like it. This opportunistic approach reflects the insincerity of these people. God is telling His Messenger that this was a test for these people, a test that they failed. The Prophet (PBUH) is asked not to grieve over this. The hearts of these people were corrupt; and they were fond of listening to falsehood. They were no longer in pursuit of the truth. This is what happens to people who stray away from their Book. Their societies become decadent. These are people who have long lost the true meaning of their faith and they only follow the technicalities. They try to find a trick or a crooked decree to avoid what they consider difficult tasks. We can see this today among the Muslims who said, "We believe with their lips but whose hearts have no faith." The verses came to console the Prophet (PBUH). These were people who were tried by God and because their corrupt hearts they failed the test. The Prophet (PBUH) could not save anyone from God's trial.

They had no scruples about the sources of their wealth. They earned their living through illegal means. The Prophet (PBUH) was given the choice either to respond to their request or to abstain from suggesting any punishment. However, if the Prophet (PBUH) chose to judge among them, he should do that with absolute justice. God loves those who are just. The Muslim leader and the Muslim judge should seek the pleasure of God when they pass their judgments. They should know that it is God's justice they apply not their own; this is the guarantee for establishing justice in an Islamic society.

The fact that the Prophet (PBUH) was given the choice to judge or not to judge implies that these verses must have been revealed in the early days of the life of Muslims in Medina. Once the Muslim state has been established, Islamic law has to be applied and it becomes incumbent on the ruler to rule according to Islamic law. Islamic law allows the people of the Scripture living in an Islamic society to follow their own law regarding the lawful and the forbidden. For example, Christians living in an Islamic state are allowed to eat pork and drink wine.

But why did they ask the prophet while they knew the punishment that Torah had prescribed? But they turned away from it. They were not true believers because believers obey God's law. Believers uphold God's law. Those who reject God's law are no longer considered believers. This verse is similar to verse 65 Sura 4, "But no, by your Lord, they will not truly believe until they make you (Muhammad) judge concerning that over which they dispute among themselves and then find within themselves no discomfort from what you have judged and submit willingly full submission." (4: 65) The two verses deal with those who are being judged, not with judges; and both verses emphasize that it is the essence of faith to accept God's judgement.

The previous verses dealt with the people being judged and the following verses deal with the judges, "We revealed the Torah, wherein there are guidance and light. By which the prophets who submitted to God, judged the Jews; so did the rabbis and the scholars, for to them was entrusted the protection of God's book, and they were witnesses thereto. Therefore, fear not people, but fear Me, and sell not my verses for a small price. Whosoever fails to judge by (the light of) what God has revealed, such are disbelievers. We prescribed for them in the Torah: a life for a life, an eye for an eye, a nose for a nose, an ear for an ear, a tooth for a tooth, and a wound for an equal wound. But whoso forgoes the just retribution by way of charity, it will be an act of atonement for himself. Whosoever fails to judge according to what God has revealed, such are the wrongdoers.” This verse addressed the case of rulers who do not rule according to God’s law. Religion is not only a set of beliefs that are meant to settle in people’s hearts, nor a set of rituals to be practiced in a temple but religion is a way of life. It provides laws which organize life on earth. These laws have to be followed in our daily life. God is the only authority to issue such laws. He controls everything in this life and to Him we will be accountable in the Hereafter.

God revealed the Torah to guide the children of Israel to the path of God. It has the light to guide them in their daily life. It brought them the doctrine of the Oneness of God as well as the law. The Prophets (PBUH) were commanded to rule according to the law and to keep their practices pure for the sake of God. This is the meaning of submission (Islam). The rabbis and scholars were asked to be witnesses for God by living according to God’s law. God knows that, in every place and at all times, there will be some who will resist the rule of God’s law. These are the people who will feel threaten because God’s law will outstrip them of the power which they use to rule people, guided only by their whims and desires. People who grow their wealth using shady financial practices will never accept the rule of God’s law. They know that the rule of God’s law will not permit them to continue their unfair practices. This group also includes those who are immersed into cheap material enjoyment and hedonistic practices. They know that these practices are unlawful under the rule of God’s law. Others who simply hate to see peace, tranquility and goodness spread all over the earth will also oppose the rule of God’s law. God knows this. This is why He commanded those who are entrusted with the establishment of the law not to fear people but to fear Him instead. The establishment of God’s law should not be hindered by the fear that it will displease those who oppose God’s law. God is the only one who deserves to be feared.

God also knows that those who are entrusted with establishing the rule of God’s law may succumb to the temptation of the material pleasures of life. So, they are commanded not to sell God’s law for few pennies. They may be tempted by the corrupt to turn a blind eye, distort the law, or issue corrupt verdicts in return for cheap worldly pleasures. Any price they get for distorting the law is small no matter how big it was. No crime is more grievous for a man in a position of responsibility than betraying the trust. Finally, the verse ends with a strong statement: those who do not uphold the rule of God’s law are disbelievers. The rationale behind this statement is that those who do not uphold the rule of God’s law essentially refuse the right of God to rule. They thus reject one of the main attributes of God.

The verse gave an example of the laws revealed in the Torah, “We prescribed for them in the Torah: a life for a life, an eye for an eye, a nose for a nose, an ear for an ear, a tooth for a tooth, and a wound for an equal wound.” These laws were adopted into the Islamic law. This is the law that should apply till the end of time. These laws apply only within the borders of a Muslim state because a Muslim state has no jurisdiction beyond its borders. This law was complemented in the Islamic law by the addition of a new article. This is the article that allows a person to forgo the retribution as an act of charity, “But whoso forgoes the retaliation by way of charity, it will be an act of atonement for himself.”

It may be appropriate to comment on the concept of retribution in Islam. Equality is a fundamental principle underlying the retribution laws. All people are equal irrespective of their ethnicity, social status, or rank. A life for a life, an eye for an eye, a nose for a nose, an ear for an ear, a tooth for a tooth, and a wound for an equal wound. People are equal in front of God's law. This fundamental principle which was proclaimed by God's law is the true announcement of the new birth of the human race. All human beings are equal.

Retribution is intended to be a deterrent. When a person knows that he /she will suffer harm similar to that which they inflicted on others, criminals may think twice before inflicting harm on others. Imprisonment is not effective as a deterrent. However, Islam adds a new dimension: the dimension of forgiveness. God promised those who forgive the people who harmed them a great reward. The verse ends by a new attribute for those who do not uphold God's law. They are wrongdoers. They are wrongdoers because they do not use God's law to judge among people. Thus, they use the wrong law in their judgments.

“And We sent Jesus the son of Mary in their footsteps, confirming the Torah that had come before him. We gave him the Gospel; therein was guidance, light, and confirmation of the Torah that had come before him: guidance and admonition to those who are God conscious. So, let the people of the Gospel judge according to what God has revealed therein. If any do fail to judge according to what God has revealed such are the transgressors.” God revealed the Gospel to Prophet Jesus the son of Mary (PBUH). The Gospel came to establish a way of life. It came to confirm the law that was revealed in the Torah. The Gospel brought guidance, light, and admonition to those who are conscious of God. Those who are God conscious are the ones who seek guidance and their hearts are touched with the light of the Gospel. Those who are hard hearted do not benefit from this guidance, are unable to see the light, nor are they able to heed the admonition. The Gospel and the Torah came to guide specific communities. Each community is commanded to apply the laws that were revealed to them in their Scripture. These Scriptures were not meant to be the universal message to all people. A third attribute is then used to describe those who do not apply God's law: they are transgressors. Three attributes describe those who do not uphold God's law. They are disbelievers, wrongdoers, and transgressors.

“To you (Muhammad), We sent the Book with the truth, confirming the Scripture that came before it, and guarding it in safety; so judge between them by what God has revealed; and follow not their vain desires which diverge from the truth that has come to you. To each among you We have prescribed a law and a path. If God had so willed, He would have made you one community, but He wanted to test you in what He has given you; so vie one with another in doing good deeds. You will all return to God and He will make clear to you the matters which you differed about. So (Prophet) judge between them according to what God has revealed, and follow not their whims, and beware of them lest they beguile you from any of what God has sent down to you. And if they turn away, be assured that God intends to punish them for some of the sins they have committed. And truly most people are transgressors. Is it a judgment of the time of (idolatry) ignorance that they are seeking? Who is better than God as a judge for a people who have certitude?” Finally, the last message is addressed. It is the message of Islam in its final form. It is the universal message which addresses all people. It confirms and supersedes all the forms that came before it. It establishes the way of life that God wants for His servants. It came not only to be studied as an intellectual exercise, but to be applied as a way of life. It addresses all the details of the daily lives of people. Reading this unequivocal command to apply God's law, one wonders, how can Muslims abandon the rule of God? The Book came with the truth. It is the truth because it is a revelation from God. God is the only authority to dictate the law and to formulate the rules. It is the truth because its contents embody the truth. This is the last Scripture to be revealed from God. It is the final reference which outlines the characteristics of the way of life that God has decreed. It embodies the final form of the message of submission (Islam.) Therefore, it is the standard that should be used to settle all arguments related to matters of faith and lives of the believers. The verse commands the Prophet (PBUH) to apply God's law. However, this specific command is generalized to include all Muslims. All Muslims should apply God's law in its entirety as long as they live.

This religion was revealed in its entirety, it is a blessing that God has bestowed on His servants, and it is a way of life that God wants His servants to adopt. No one has the authority to change its contents. Muslims cannot abandon its rules, nor replace them with manmade ones. God knows that the rules revealed in the Quran accommodate the needs of all people. These rules ensure goodness for those who follow them. These rules are adaptable to the changing needs of people with time until the Day of Judgment. This is a fact that each and every Muslim should know.

The verses carried a warning for the Prophet (PBUH) not to abandon God's law in favour of the whims of others. The warning was emphasized twice. God knew that there will be people who will make excuses to seek an exemption from following the command to apply God's rules. One excuse may be motivated by their desire to bring people of different faiths, different, political views, or different persuasions living in one country under a banner that they would all subscribe to. This may result in attempts to side step some rules which may not seem important in order to satisfy other groups. God's law should not be compromised in any way. God has decreed different rules for different people. Had God wanted all people to follow the same rule, He would have done that. It is therefore, critical not to compromise God's law in any way.

God consoled His Prophet (PBUH) by telling him not to be grieved by those who will turn away and refuse to apply God's law. The Prophet (PBUH) should persevere in applying God's law. He should not be tempted by the thought that he can pacify these people by side stepping God's law. They will be punished by God for turning away and no harm will befall the Prophet (PBUH) or the believers as a result of this. This closes all doors in the way of Satan who will always try to tempt people to abandon God's law. The warning is clear and the question is posed: do the believers want to follow God's law or do they want to follow the idolaters' law (law of ignorance)? There is no middle way, it is one or the other. This verse defines the meaning of the term "ignorance." The law of ignorance is the law that allows the rulers to judge people according to their whims and desires. It is a kind of slavery, because it places people under the mercy of their rulers. It denies God's right to be the only master and gives that privilege to a mere mortal. Ignorance is not a period of time in history but it is a state of human life. This state can exist at any time and in any place. People who choose to follow God's law are the believers. Those who abandon God's law in favor of a manmade law are living in a state of ignorance. The verse concludes by stating the best choice a person firm in faith can make in choosing a judge: God is the best of the law makers. The best law maker is the Creator who created people and knows them best. He knows best what is good for them. He is the most Merciful to His people.

He knows best what will happen in the future, and makes the law adaptable to the future needs of people. This is a central issue that needs to be understood by each and every Muslim. Applying God's law is what makes them Muslims. Abandoning God's law in favor of a manmade law places them in a state of ignorance.

Verses: 51 to 66

51. You who believe, do not take the Jews and the Christians as protecting guardians. They are protecting guardians only to each other. And he among you who takes them as protecting guardians becomes one of them. Verily God does not guide those who are wrongdoers.
52. But you will see those in whose hearts is a disease rushing to them for protection, saying, "We fear that a calamity should befall us;" but God may well bring about victory or a command from Himself, then they will regret the thoughts which they secretly harbored in their hearts.
53. And those who believe will say, "Are these those who swore their strongest oaths by God that they were with you?" All that they do will be in vain and they will become losers.
54. You who believe, if any of you turn back from his faith, soon will God replace you with people whom He loves and who love Him. They are people who are humble towards the believers, mighty against the disbelievers, fighting in the way of God, and never afraid of the reproach of anyone. That is the grace of God, which He will bestow on whom He pleases. And God is Vast, Omniscient.
55. Your true protecting guardians are God, His Messenger, and the believers- those who establish regular prayers and pay the prescribed alms, and they bow down humbly (in worship).
56. Those who turn to God, His Messenger, and the believers for protection (are God's party); God's party will certainly triumph.
57. You who believe, do not take as protecting guardians those who ridicule your religion and make fun of it, whether from among those who received the Scripture before you, or among the disbelievers; but be conscious of God if you are true believers.
58. When you make the call to prayer, they ridicule it and make a mockery out of it; that is because they are a people who do not understand.
59. Say, "People of the Scripture, do you resent us for any reason other than the fact that we believe in God, we believe in which was revealed to us, and that which was revealed before us, while most of you are transgressors.
60. Say, "Shall I tell you who deserves a worse punishment from God than (the punishment you wish upon) us: those whom God has cursed, those on whom God's wrath has fallen, those whom God condemned as apes and pigs, and those who worship idols. Such are in worse plight and further astray from the straight path.
61. When they come to you, they say, "We believe." But in fact they come with a disbelieving mindset, and they leave with the same, but God knows fully all that they hide.
62. And you see many of them vying one another into sin and transgression, and eating what is unlawfully acquired; how evil is that which they do?
63. Why do not their godly people and rabbis forbid them from uttering sinful words and eating forbidden things? How evil is that which they do?

64. And the Jews said, "God's hand is tied up." Their hands shall be shackled and they shall be cursed for what they say. Truly, God's hands are spread out, He expends as He pleases; and what has been revealed to you from your Lord will certainly make many of them more insolent and defiant; and We have placed enmity and hatred among them till the day of resurrection; whenever they kindle a fire for war God puts it out, and they strive to make mischief in the land; and God does not love the mischief-makers.
65. If only the people of the Scripture had believed and been righteous, We would indeed have absolved them of their evil deeds and admitted them to gardens of bliss.
66. If they had observed the Torah and the Gospel and that which was revealed to them from their Lord, they would certainly have been given abundance from above them and from beneath their feet. Among them there are people who are moderate, but many of them are of evil conduct. (5:51-66)

"You who believe, do not take the Jews and the Christians as protecting guardians. They are protecting guardians only to each other. And he among you who takes them as protecting guardians becomes one of them. Verily God does not guide those who are wrongdoers. But you will see those in whose hearts is a disease rushing to them for protection, saying, 'We fear that a calamity should befall us;' but God may well bring about victory or a command from Himself, then they will regret the thoughts which they secretly harbored in their hearts. And those who believe will say, 'Are these those who swore their strongest oaths by God that they were with you?' All that they do will be in vain and they will become losers." We need first to explain what is meant by the term "Protecting guardians" mentioned in the verse. The term "Protecting guardians" here refers to alliances between Muslims and Jews or Christians which involved pledges of protection and support. The verse is referring to a state of affair that was prevalent during the early days of Muslims in Medina. Some Muslims thought that such alliances are allowed. Muslims thought that it is possible to have such alliances especially since they had a great deal of business dealings with the Jews of Medina. The verse commanded the Muslims to abandon these alliances, since it became clear that such alliances are not plausible. Muslims are commanded to treat the Christians and the Jews kindly and fairly. Christians and Jews living in a Muslim state have all the rights and privileges that all citizens enjoy. However, the way the Christian and Jewish groups viewed Muslims and Islam at that time made all attempts to seek political alliances between the different groups unsuccessful.

The verse warned Muslims, who were still seeking to get protection for their interests from the Jews, that they were doing themselves, Islam, and the Muslims great injustice. God will deprive them His guidance and will make them outcasts because God does not guide those who commit wrongdoing. This was a very strong warning for Muslims in Medina. The warning reflects the gravity of the situation in Medina at that time. A person who is seeking to ally himself with the enemy of Islam and the Muslims betrays Islam, himself, and his fellow Muslims.

An example of the situations which explain the rationale behind these verses is narrated by Mohamed Ibn Ishaq. He said, "I was told on the authority of Abi Ishaq ibn Yasar, that both Abd-Allah ibn Obai (RA) and Obada ibn Al-Samet (RA) were allies to the Jewish tribe of Banu Qinuqa' when war erupted between them and the Muslims. Obada (RA) went to the prophet (PBUH) and denounced his alliance with Banu Qinuqa' while Abd-Allah kept his alliance."

This story gives a glimpse of the conditions of the Muslim community in Medina at that time and how it was affected by the relationships that existed between the different tribes before Islam. Rules which organize the relationship between Muslims and non-Muslims were not finalized yet. Although the interactions which prompted the revelation of this verse were mainly between Muslims and Jews, but the verse included the Christians as well. The verse established a principle regarding political alliances between Muslims and other non-Muslim groups. Muslims should only seek alliances with other Muslims. These alliances should only be in the sake of God, and for the benefit of the Muslim community. This does not violate the fundamental principle that Muslims must treat non-Muslims kindly. A Muslim is commanded to treat the people of the Scripture kindly (as long as they do not wage war against Muslims or persecute them). Muslims are allowed to marry Christian and Jewish women but that does not mean that Muslims are required to support Christianity or Judaism over Islam. Muslims are asked to call all non-Muslims to Islam but they cannot compel anyone to accept Islam. Faith is a matter of the heart and no one has control over people's hearts. Compulsion in religion is not only forbidden in Islam but it is counterproductive.

When victory comes, those who have sickness in their hearts will regret their decision to hasten in supporting the Jews and Christians against the Muslims. Their hypocrisy will be revealed. The believers will recognize the hypocrites and they will look upon them with disdain.

“You who believe, if any of you turn back from his faith, soon will God replace you with people whom He loves and who love Him. They are people who are humble towards the believers, mighty against the disbelievers, fighting in the way of God, and never afraid of the reproach of anyone. That is the grace of God, which He will bestow on whom He pleases. And God is Vast, Omniscient.” Certainly, it is a great blessing to be chosen by God to fight in His sake, to bring the truth to people, and to establish God's rule on earth. People are free to accept or reject this blessing. God will choose those who can carry out the mission. They will be blessed by the grace of God. This group will have specific characteristics. They love God and God loves them. Only those who are able to recognize their Lord can appreciate His love. They recognize God through the attributes which He described Himself with. They feel these attributes deep in their hearts and throughout their whole beings. Only those who are able to recognize the Giver are able to appreciate the gift.

It is even a greater blessing for the servant to be able to love His Lord. Only those who experienced that love are able to appreciate its sweetness. This is a unique feeling that no words can express. Rabi'ah El-'Adawiyah tried to describe her love of God when she said, “I don't mind how bitter life is, if I can experience the sweetness of Your nearness. I don't mind how angry everyone is at me, if You are pleased with me. I don't mind if everyone else abandoned me, if I can still maintain my contact with You. I don't need anyone else, if I am able to experience Your love. Everything above the dust is dust.”

Another attribute that this group has is treating the believers with humility. This is an attribute that emanates from their obedience to God. The believers listen to each other, they obey each other, and they love each other. The word humility here does not mean subservience but it implies brotherhood and love. On the other hand, they deal with the disbelievers with dignity. They know that they are on the right path and they are proud of their faith. They are sure that the truth will prevail. They fight in the sake of God fearing no blame from the others. This fight is not for personal, national, or ethnic gain. It is a fight in the sake of God, to establish the divine project and to support goodness over evil. They have no reason to fear people since they have the assurance of the love of the Lord of the people. This is a blessing from God. He bestows His blessings abundantly on whomsoever He chooses.

“Your true protecting guardians are God, His Messenger, and the believers- those who establish regular prayers and pay the prescribed alms, and they bow down humbly (in worship).” The verse defined clearly the true protecting guardians of Muslims. It also reiterated the criteria which distinguish the believers. The believers are those who establish regular prayers and pay the prescribed poor dues. Establishing prayers implies more than just “performing” prayers. It means striving to perfection so that the expected fruits of the prayer are achieved as has been stated in the verse “Certainly, prayer forbids evil and sin.” (29:45) So, those whose prayers do not forbid them to commit evil have not “established” prayers. They also pay the prescribed alms. The objective behind prescribing alms is more than providing financial help to the poor. Paying the prescribed alms is an act of obedience to God. Muslims should pay the alms willingly and with the sole purpose of pleasing God. The word Zakat in Arabic implies purification and growth. It is purification of the souls of those who pay it. Those who pay Zakat will not only be rewarded in the Hereafter, but will also experience growth in their wealth in this life. Paying Zakat enriches the economic system and strengthens the social fabric of the society. Poor people who receive Zakat know that they are only receiving what is their right, a right that has been given to them by God. They will not begrudge the rich for their wealth which they have accumulated legally. The rich know that they will be rewarded by God for fulfilling this obligation. They will only be grateful to God that they are able to fulfill their obligations and they will look for God’s blessings. Thus, the Alms will help create an environment full of empathy, love and brotherhood.

“Those who turn to God, His Messenger, and the believers for protection (are God’s party); God’s party will certainly triumph.” This is God’s promise to the believers; those who trust in God and seek His support alone will be granted victory against their enemy. The promise is given after the criterion for trusting in God has been explained. Allegiance and loyalty are pledged only to God, His Prophet and the believers. A warning against political alliances with the Jews and the Christians against Muslims has been delivered.

“You who believe, do not take as protecting guardians those who ridicule your religion and make fun of it, whether from among those who received the Scripture before you, or among those who reject faith; but be conscious of God if you are true believers. When you make the call to prayer, they ridicule it and make a mockery out of it; that is because they are a people who do not understand.” This is a challenge for those who accept that their faith, their rituals, and their prayers be ridiculed. How can they pledge political allegiance to those who commit such acts against the believers? Those who ridicule the Muslims and their faith have no understanding. The disbelievers and the Jews used to ridicule the believers. There is no account that the Christians were guilty of such acts. However, the criterion which identifies those who are worthy of the allegiance of the believers has been formulated and will remain valid forever. There came times in history when Christians practiced the same behavior against Muslims. The Christian West sent crusaders, occupying armies, and missionaries to conquer Muslim lands and to convert Muslims to Christianity. Prohibiting political alliances with the Christians under this principle seems logical.

It must be emphasized that Islam commands Muslims to be tolerant and to treat the people of the Scripture, especially the Christians, kindly. However, political alliances and kind treatment are two different issues. Tolerance and kind treatment are matters of behaviour but a political alliance is a matter of faith and strategy. A political alliance requires those who subscribe to the alliance to support each other against a common enemy. Muslims should not be party to an alliance which targets other Muslims.

“Say, ‘People of the Scripture, do you resent us for any reason other than the fact that we believe in God, we believe in which was revealed to us, and that which was revealed before us, while most of you are transgressors.’ Say, ‘Shall I tell you who deserves a worse punishment from God than (the punishment you wish upon) us: those whom God has cursed, those on whom God’s wrath has fallen, those whom God condemned as apes and pigs, and those who worship idols. Such are in worse plight and further astray from the straight path.” The verse stated a rhetorical question that God instructed His Messenger to pose to the people of the Scripture. The objective was to underscore the actual behavior of the people of Scripture and to reveal the real motivation behind their animosity towards the Muslims. The question condemned the attitude of the people of the Scripture and alerted Muslims to the grave consequences that may occur as a result of the position which the people of the Scripture assumed.

The verse explains that the people of Scripture resented the fact that the Muslims were given a Book from God and that they follow that Book. The verse explains that those who harboured this resentment are transgressors. Transgressors do not tolerate seeing others following the straight path. If they admit that Muslims are on the straight path, then they are accepting the fact that they are following a crooked path. To avoid this self incrimination, they convinced themselves that Muslims were wrong.

Idol worshippers are cursed. What is the meaning of idol worshipping that the verse alluded to? Idol worship mentioned here alludes to following any power that does not emanate from God, any rule that is not derived from God’s law, and any transgression from the truth. The people of the Scripture did not worship their scholars and priests but they followed their commands and abandoned God’s commands. They are then idolaters because they followed manmade laws instead of God’s law. Idolatry in this verse does not mean worshipping idols, but it means putting manmade laws above God’s law.

“When they come to you, they say, ‘We believe.’ But in fact they come with a disbelieving mindset, and they leave with the same but God knows fully all that they hide. And you see many of them vying one another into sin and transgression, and eating what is unlawfully acquired; how evil is that which they do? Why do not their rabbis and scholars forbid them from uttering sinful words and eating forbidden things? How evil is that which they do? And the Jews said, ‘God’s hand is tied up.’ Their hands shall be shackled and they shall be cursed for what they say. Truly, God’s hands are spread out, He expends as He pleases; and what has been revealed to you from your Lord will certainly make many of them more insolent and defiant; and We have placed enmity and hatred among them till the day of resurrection; whenever they kindle a fire for war God puts it out, and they strive to make mischief in the land; and God does not love the mischief-makers.” The verses transform centuries old events into dynamic images and live scenes, following the unique Quranic style, to make the readers feel as if they were present when these events took place. The verses talk about those who used to approach Muslims pretending to be believers, while their hearts were full of disbelief. However, God knew what they concealed in their hearts. This statement was made to reassure the believers and to warn their enemy that they cannot hide anything from God. They hastened, as if they were in a race, to commit sins and to eat that which they gained unlawfully. The verse then alludes to one of the characteristics of corrupt societies. The fact that the scholars who derive and explain the laws of jurisprudence and matters of faith were silent in the face of the corruption they witness. The verse alerts those who are in authority in any community to their duty to command what is good and forbid what is evil. These duties cannot be fulfilled without authority.

Some Jews said that God’s hands are tied up and in another verse of the Quran they said God is poor and we are rich, implying that God does not give people much. This is just an excuse to justify the fact that they do not want to spend in the sake of God. They deserve to be cursed for these evil words which they uttered against God. The verse addressed these evil claims by stating that God’s hands are wide open. He spends as He wills. His bounty is limitless. His gifts that He bestows on His servants are abundant. God tells His messenger about what will befall these people. They will become more insolent and defiant because they refused the gift of true belief. God will allow enmity and hatred to burgeon between them; and their schemes against the Muslims will be in vain. However, God will quell the fire of war that they will kindle. God will send others to stop the corruption that the transgressors are spreading in the land, because God does not like corruption.

“If only the People of the Scripture had believed and been righteous, We should indeed have absolved them of their evil deeds and admitted them to gardens of bliss. If they had observed the Torah and the Gospel and that which was revealed to them from their Lord, they would certainly have been given abundance from above them and from beneath their feet. Among them there are people who are moderate, but many of them are of evil conduct.” These two verses established a fundamental principle in Islam. It is very important to explain and emphasize this principle. God is telling the people of the Scripture that if they believe and remain conscious of God, He will expiate their sins and will admit them to gardens of bliss. This is their reward in the Hereafter. Furthermore, if they follow God’s path, as explained in the Torah and the Gospel and what God had revealed to them without any deviation, they will have a better life on this earth and they will enjoy an abundance of provision. But many of them deviated and did not follow the path of God. The principle is clear: those who follow God’s path and remain conscious of Him will not only get their reward in the Hereafter, but will also enjoy success in this life. There is a single route that leads to the success in both this life and the Hereafter. This route is guaranteed for those who believe and remain continuously conscious of God. Following God’s path does not only mean trying to attain superior spirituality, but it also means leading a way of life that emanates from the divine project. This way of life is based on two pillars: true belief and God consciousness. This path does not request humankind to sacrifice this life in favour of the Hereafter, nor to sacrifice the Hereafter for the sake of this life. According to the divine project, humankind is the vicegerent of God on earth with His permission and according to the constraints that He places on His servants. To fulfill the obligations of being a vicegerent of God on earth, human beings should work hard utilizing all the resources that were made available by God to develop a rich and prosperous life on earth. This task is an act of obedience to God. Humankind will be rewarded for it in the Hereafter, while reaping the benefit of the progress made in this life. Those who will not fulfill this obligation are considered sinners. Under this principle the duality of humankind's life is removed. There is no contradiction between working for this life and working for the Hereafter. It is one route that leads to success in both worlds.

Verses: 67 to 81

67. Messenger, proclaim the (message) which has been sent to you from your Lord. If you do not, then you will not have conveyed His message. And God will defend you from people, for God does not guide those who disbelieve.
68. Say, "People of the Scripture, you have no ground to stand upon unless you uphold the Torah, the Gospel, and all the revelation that has come to you from your Lord." What has been revealed to you (Muhammad) from your Lord will increase in most of them their obstinate rebellion and blasphemy. But do not worry about those who do not believe.
69. Those who believe (in the Qur'an), those who follow the Jewish (Scripture), the Sabians, and the Christians - any who believe in God and the Last Day - and do righteous deeds, on them shall be no fear, nor shall they grieve.
70. We took the covenant of the children of Israel and sent them messengers. Whenever, a messenger brought them something that they do not like, they called some impostors, and some they slew.
71. They thought there would be no trial (or punishment); so they became blind and deaf; yet God (in mercy) turned to them; yet again many of them became blind and deaf. But God sees well all what they do.
72. They are verily disbelievers who say, "God is the Messiah, son of Mary." The Messiah (himself) said, "Children of Israel, serve God: my Lord and your Lord." Whosoever associates partners with God, God will then forbid him to enter paradise. Hell will be his refuge. No one will help such wrongdoers.
73. They are verily disbelievers who say, "God is the third of three," for there is no deity except One God. If they do not desist from what they say, verily a painful torment will befall the blasphemers among them.
74. Why do not they turn to God and seek His forgiveness? For God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.
75. The Messiah, son of Mary, was no other than a messenger; other messengers had passed away before him. And his mother was a saintly woman. And they both used to eat food (like other mortals). See how We make the revelations clear for them, and see how deluded they are.
76. Say, "How can you worship, besides God, something which has no power either to harm or benefit you?" But God alone is the All-Hearing, the Omniscient.
77. Say, "People of the Scripture, do not exceed the limits of truth in your religion, nor follow the whims of people who went wrong before you - they misled many, and strayed (themselves) from the straight path.
78. Those of the children of Israel who went astray were cursed by the tongue of David, and of Jesus, son of Mary. That was because they rebelled and used to transgress.

79. They did not forbid one another to commit iniquities; evil indeed were the deeds which they did.
80. You (Prophet) see many of them allying themselves with those who disbelieve. Evil indeed are (the deeds) which their souls have sent forward before them. God's wrath is on them, and in torment will they abide.
81. If only they had believed in God, in the Prophet, and in what was revealed to him, they would have never taken them as protecting guardians, but most of them are transgressors. (5:67 - 81)

“Messenger, proclaim the (message) which has been sent to you from your Lord. If you do not, then you will not have conveyed His message. And God will defend you from people, for God does not guide those who reject faith. Say, ‘People of the Scripture, you have no ground to stand upon unless you uphold the Torah, the Gospel, and all the revelation that has come to you from your Lord.’ What has been revealed to you (Muhammad) from your Lord will increase in most of them their obstinate rebellion and blasphemy. But do not worry about those who do not believe. Those who believe (in the Qur'an), those who follow the Jewish (Scripture), the Sabians, and the Christians - any who believe in God and the Last Day - and do righteous deeds, on them shall be no fear, nor shall they grieve.” This is a clear and strict command from God to his Messenger: convey the message in its entirety. The Message should not be compromised in any way or for any reason. God promised to protect him from any harm that he may be subjected to. A clear and unequivocal message reaches the hearts of people. The Messenger should not worry about those whose hearts are comfortable with compromises and hypocrisy. This does not mean that the Messenger should deliver the message in a harsh or a crude way. On the contrary, the Messenger was commanded to use a wise and decent approach in conveying the message to people. One has to differentiate between the content of the message and the way to deliver the message. While there should be no compromises regarding the content of the message, the message should be delivered in the most appropriate way.

It seems that the intent of the verse was to confront the people of the Scripture in Medina, who did not take their religion seriously and were only paying lip service to the injunctions of their books, while the reality of their practices contradicted what they were commanded to do. They only paid a lip service to the revelation that came to them. They did not uphold the injunctions of the Gospel or the Torah. Thus, they could not claim that they were really “People of the Scripture.” One may argue that they have already received the Scripture and they were reciting it, but reciting the Scripture and abiding by its injunctions are two different things. The Messenger was told to confront them with this dichotomy. They could not be considered “People of the Scripture” unless they uphold the way of life that the Scripture instructed them to follow. Establishing the Torah and the Gospel meant also that they should believe in all messengers sent by God. Among these messengers is Muhammad (PBUH). The Messenger was commanded to confront them with this reality. God tells His Messenger that although this confrontation may cause them to become more obstinate, but it was necessary. The true message has to be proclaimed and those who do not accept it should be prepared for the consequences of their rejection.

Those who believe (Muslims), the Jews, the Sabians [most probably this term refers to people who rejected polytheism before the advent of Muhammad (PBUH)], and the Christians are saved as long as they believe in God and the Day of Judgment and they do good deeds.

It is implied that this applies only to those who believed in the last messenger. This opinion is considered part of the essential knowledge that each Muslim should have. It is clear that Muhammad (PBUH) was the last messenger of God. God sent him to all people. Those who reject the messenger and his Message are not included among those “on them shall be no fear, nor shall they grieve.”

“We took the covenant of the children of Israel and sent them messengers. Whenever, a messenger brought them something that they do not like, they called some impostors, and some they slew. They thought there would be no trial (or punishment); so they became blind and deaf; yet God (in mercy) turned to them; yet again many of them became blind and deaf. But God sees well all what they do.” The Children of Israel have a long history of arguing with their prophets and disobeying their commands. This may be the reason that the most often narrated stories in the Quran are about the Children of Israel. The Muslim nation is warned not to follow in their footsteps. When the Children of Israel disobeyed their prophets, they thought that they would not be punished by God and when they were forgiven by God, many of them went back and committed the same sin again. God is Totally-Aware of what they do.

“They are verily disbelievers who say, ‘God is the Messiah, son of Mary.’ The Messiah (himself) said, ‘Children of Israel, serve God: my Lord and your Lord.’ Whosoever associates partners with God, God will then forbid him to enter paradise. Hell will be his refuge. No one will help such wrongdoers. They are verily disbelievers who say, ‘God is the third of three,’ for there is no deity except One God. If they do not desist from what they say, verily a painful torment will befall the blasphemers among them. Why do not they turn to God and seek His forgiveness? For God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy. The Messiah, son of Mary, was no other than a messenger, other messengers had passed away before him. And his mother was a saintly woman. And they both used to eat food (like other mortals). See how We make the revelations clear for them, and see how deluded they are. Say, ‘How can you worship, besides God, something which has no power either to harm or benefit you?’ But God alone is the All-Hearing and All-Knowing. Say, ‘People of the Scripture, do not exceed the limits of truth in your religion, nor follow the vain desires of people who went wrong before you - they misled many, and strayed (themselves) from the straight path.” We have explained briefly before, how these corrupt claims crept into the Christian belief. Jesus (PBUH) as all other God’s messengers were sent with a single message based on the pure concept of the Oneness of God. A message that is free from any traces of associating partners with God. These verses reiterate this concept and emphasize that claiming that Jesus (PBUH) is the son of God violates this principle. Jesus (PBUH) warned his followers not to associate partners with God but they forgot his command, “Children of Israel, serve God: my Lord and your Lord.” The command implied that he and they are servants of God. They worship one God. The Quran continues to emphasize the principle of the belief in the Oneness of God and warns against violating this principle, “If they do not desist from what they say, verily a painful torment will befall the blasphemers among them.” Those who do not desist are truly disbelievers. The Quran leaves the door for repentance open by emphasizing that God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy. The verses continue to present a rational argument about the nature of Jesus (PBUH). He and his mother used to eat food just like any other mortal. Eating food is a human trait: it satisfies a material need. God does not need food to survive. This should provide a proof for the human nature of Jesus (PBUH).

The verses continue this logical argument by posing a rhetorical question, “Will you worship, besides God, that which has no power either to harm or benefit you?” The choice of the word “which” instead of “who” is deliberate; because it includes all things that people associate with God. God hears and knows. He is the One who provides benefit and causes harm. He is the one who hears His servants when they call upon Him. He knows what is in their hearts. No one else is able to listen, know or respond to these calls. The Prophet (PBUH) was commanded to warn the people of the Scripture not to exceed the limits of the truth by claiming that Jesus (PBUH) is divine, “Say, ‘People of the Scripture, do not exceed the limits of truth in your religion, nor follow the whims of people who went wrong before you - they misled many, and strayed (themselves) from the straight path.’” This was the last call for those who claimed the divinity of Jesus (PBUH) to abandon this false claim and to follow the straight path.

These verses point to three facts. The first fact is the great emphasis that Islam has placed on establishing the concept of the Oneness of God. The creed of Islam is rooted in the pure and absolute belief in the Oneness of God. The second fact is that the Quran clearly indicates that claiming the divinity of Jesus (PBUH) or believing in the trinity is equivalent to rejecting faith in God. The third fact is that it is impossible that a political allegiance can be established between Muslims who believe in the Oneness of God and people of the Scripture.

“Those of the Children of Israel who went astray were cursed by the tongue of David, and of Jesus, son of Mary. That was because they rebelled and used to transgress. They did not forbid one another to commit iniquities; evil indeed were the deeds which they did. You (Prophet) see many of them allying themselves with those who disbelieve. Evil indeed are (the deeds) which their souls have sent forward before them. God's wrath is on them, and in torment will they abide. If only they had believed in God, in the Prophet, and in what has been revealed to him, they would have never taken them as protecting guardians, but most of them are transgressors.” Those who disbelieved from among the Children of Israel were cursed by their prophets because they distorted the Scripture which was revealed to them, they did not uphold God’s law that was given to them, and they infringed God’s covenant. They disobeyed and transgressed. Each community has transgressors. But the rest of the community should be able to curb the infractions committed by the transgressors. When nobody raises a finger to stop those who transgress and commit indecent acts, God will punish the whole community. This is the basis of the concept of the collective duty of commanding what is good and forbidding what is evil. The Prophet (PBUH) has been quoted to have said, “Whoever sees a sinful act from among you, he should physically stop it. If he is unable to physically stop it, he should voice his objection to it, and if he is unable, then he should at least reject it in his heart.” In another tradition, the Prophet (PBUH) has been quoted to have said, “God will not punish a whole community on account of the transgression of a small minority, unless the community turns a blind eye to the infractions and no attempts were made to stop these infractions.” A third tradition quotes the Prophet (PBUH) to have said, “The best of Jihad is voicing the truth in the court of a tyrant ruler.” These traditions and the above verses define the collective responsibility of the community to stop evil acts, which may be committed by a small minority, so that they would not become pervasive in the community. The Muslim community has a collective responsibility to protect itself from falling prey to cynicism. This requires a clear understanding of the meaning of the belief in God. To believe in God one must conduct a way of life that is shaped by God's law. All verses and traditions that addressed the concept of "commanding what is good and forbidding what is evil" addressed a Muslim community that recognized the dominion of God and used God's law to organize its life no matter how tyrant its ruler was. Those who disbelieved from among the Children of Israel allied themselves with the polytheists against the believers. They did not believe in the Prophet (PBUH) and the message that was revealed to him.

Verses: 82 to 86

82. You (Prophet) will find the most hostile to the believers are the Jews and the idolaters; and the most affectionate to the believers are those who say, "We are Christians"; because among these are priests and monks, and they are not arrogant.
83. And when they listen to the revelation received by the Messenger, you will see their eyes overflowing with tears, for they recognize the truth. They pray, "Our Lord, we believe; write us down among the witnesses.
84. And why should we not believe in God and the truth which has come to us, when we hope that our Lord includes us in the company of the righteous?"
85. God rewarded them for their saying - Gardens underneath which rivers flow, wherein they will abide forever. That is the reward for the doers of good.
86. Those who disbelieve and deny Our revelations, they are inhabitants of Hell. (5:82-86)

These verses describe how the Jews of Medina treated the Muslims. They state that the Jews were very hostile to the Muslims and that they aligned themselves with the polytheists in attacking the Muslims. But the situation was different for those who said, "We are Christians." The verses describe these people as people who understood and followed true Christianity. Among them were scholars and priests who humbled themselves to God's truth. The verses describe their reaction when they heard the Quranic verses being recited. Their hearts became soft and tears welled up in their eyes. They said, "Our Lord, we believe; write us down among the witnesses. Why should we not believe in God and the truth that has come down to us when we long that our Lord admit us into the company of the righteous?" They proclaimed their belief in the truth and they asked God to include them in the company of the righteous. They were open to the truth, so they wondered why it should be a surprise that they would listen to the truth when it came to them. They recognized that the new faith is the truth and they were willing to sacrifice everything in order to be part of this new religion. So "God rewarded them on account of what they said, with gardens under which rivers flow, wherein they will abide for ever; and this is the reward of the doers of good." God knew that they recognized the truth and they were determined to follow it. As a result, they were rewarded and they were given the rank of "the doers of good" and this is the highest rank of the believers.

There are different narratives which identify the Christian group that these verses refer to. El-Qortby stated in his interpretation of the Quran, "These verses refer to the Negus (the king of Ethiopia) and his followers. According to Ibn Ishaq, Muslims migrated to Ethiopia fleeing the persecution of the polytheist of Mecca. Some of them remained there until after the migration of the Prophet (PBUH) to Medina. After the battle of Badr, the idolaters of Mecca tried to repatriate the Muslims living in Ethiopia to kill them as an act of revenge for the idolaters killed at the hands of Muslims in the battle of Badr. The idolaters sent 'Amr ibn El-'Ass and 'Abd-Allah ibn abi Rabie'a to make their case in the Negus' court. The Prophet (PBUH) sent a letter with a messenger to the Negus, who called the Muslims living in Ethiopia to his court. The Negus requested Ja'far ibn abi Taleb (RA) to recite excerpts from the Quran. Ja'far recited Surat Mary (Mariam). The priests and the monks attending the court were moved and felt their eyes welling with tears. This was the group referred to by the verse, "the most affectionate to the believers are those who say, 'We are Christians.'"

Al-Baihaqi narrated, on the authority of Ibn Ishaq, that the Prophet (PBUH) received a group of about twenty Christians who had business to conduct in Mecca. After they had attended to their business, the Prophet (PBUH) talked to them about Islam and recited verses from the Quran to them. When they listened to the Quran, their eyes welled up with tears and they accepted Islam.

Verses: 87 to 108

87. You who believe, do not make unlawful the good things which God has made lawful for you, and do not exceed the limits, for God does not love those who exceed the limits.
88. Eat of the things which God has provided for you, lawful and good; but be conscious of God, in Whom you believe.
89. God will not take you to task for that which is unintentional in your oaths, but He will take you to task for your deliberate oaths. The expiation for such oaths is to feed ten of the needy with food that you normally feed your own families, or to cloth them, or to free a slave, and for him who does not find the means, he should fast three days. This is the expiation of your oaths when you have sworn; and keep your oaths. Thus, God makes clear His revelations in order that you may be thankful.
90. You who believe, intoxicants and gambling, idolatrous practices, and divination by arrows, are an abomination - of Satan's handwork- eschew such (abomination), that you may succeed.
91. Satan seeks to incite among you, enmity and hatred with intoxicants and gambling, and to keep you from the remembrance of God and from prayer. Will you not then desist?
92. Obey God, and obey the Messenger, and be on your guard: if you do turn away, know you that the sole duty of Our Messenger is to proclaim (the message) in the clearest manner.
93. There is no blame on those who believe and do righteous deeds for what they ate (in the past), if they are conscious of God, believe, and do righteous deeds; then they are conscious of God and believe; then again, they are conscious of God and do good deeds; for God loves those who do good deeds.
94. You who believe, God will certainly try you in a little matter of game well within reach of your hands and your lances, that He may test who fears Him even though they do not see him: any who transgresses thereafter, will have a painful torment.
95. You who believe, do not kill game while you are dressed for Pilgrimage. If any of you does that intentionally, he shall offer a domestic animal the equivalent to that which he has killed, brought to the Ka'ba, as adjudged by two just men among you; alternatively, he may atone by feeding the needy; or its equivalent in fast; that he may taste the penalty

- of his deed. God pardoned whatever happened in the past; but he who reoffends God will exact revenge on him. God is Eminent, an avenger of evil.*
96. It is lawful to you to catch and eat seafood - for the benefit of yourselves and the travellers- but to hunt on land is forbidden you so long as you are dressed for Pilgrimage. Be conscious of God, to Whom you shall be gathered.
97. God made the Ka'ba, the Sacred House, a means of support for people, as also the Sacred Months, the animals for offerings, and the garlands that mark them; so that you know that God has knowledge of what is in the heavens and on earth and that God is well acquainted with all things.
98. Know too that God is severe in punishment and that God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.
99. The Messenger's duty is only to convey (the message). But God knows what you reveal and what you conceal.
100. Say, "The evil and the good are not equal even though the abundance of evil may attract you. So be conscious of God, people of understanding that you may succeed."
101. You who believe, ask not questions about things which, if made plain to you, may cause you trouble. But if you ask about things when the Qur'an is being revealed, they will be made plain to you - for God has kept silent about them - God is All-Forgiving, Forbearing.
102. Some people before you did ask such questions, and on that account lost their faith.
103. It was not God who instituted (superstitions like those of) a slit-ear she-camel, or a she-camel let loose for free pasture, or idol sacrifices for twin-births in animals, or stallion-camels freed from work. It is blasphemers who invent a lie against God; but most of them do not use reason.
104. When it is said to them "Come to what God has revealed; and come to the Messenger." They say, "Enough for us are the ways we found our fathers following." What? Even though their fathers had no knowledge and no guidance?
105. You who believe, you have charge of your own souls; if you follow (right) guidance, no hurt can come to you from those who go astray. To God you shall return; and it is He who will show you the truth of all that you did.
106. You who believe, when death approaches any of you, let two just men from among you act as witnesses to the making of bequests, or two men from other people if you are journeying through the land and the chance of death befalls you. If you doubt (their truth), detain them both after prayer, and let them both swear by God saying, "We wish not in this for any worldly gain, even though the (beneficiary) be our near relation. We shall hide not the evidence before God. If we do, indeed we will be sinful."
107. But if it gets known that these two were guilty of the sin (of perjury), let two others stand forth in their places - nearest in kin from among those who claim a lawful right - and let them swear by God saying, "We affirm that our witness is truer than that of those two, and that we have not trespassed (beyond the truth), if we did, then indeed we are wrongdoers."
108. That is most suitable so that they may give the evidence in its true nature and shape, or else they would fear that other oaths would be taken after their oaths. But be conscious of God, and listen (to His counsel), for God does not guide transgressing

people. (5: 87-108)

“You who believe, do not make unlawful the good things which God has made lawful for you, and do not exceed the limits, for God does not love those who exceed the limits. Eat of the things which God has provided for you, lawful and good; but be conscious of God, in Whom you believe.”

These two verses establish the right of God to decree laws which organize people’s life on earth. God has created humankind, He is the one Who provides for them, thus, He alone has the right to dictate what is lawful and what is forbidden. This is a logical argument that people readily accept. The Owner of the dominion has the right to set the limits for what is permissible and what is not permissible. Anyone who does not accept this simple fact is a transgressor. Believers, by their nature, are not transgressors. Faith and transgression are mutually exclusive. These two verses and the subsequent verse were revealed to deal with attitudes adopted by some Muslims. However, although these verses were revealed to deal with a specific situation, the principle they establish is a general principle that should shape the attitudes of all Muslims, at all times.

It was narrated by Anas (RA) that three Muslim men came to the house of the Prophet (PBUH) to ask about his practice regarding the acts of worship. Some of the wives of the Prophet (PBUH) described his practice which seemed little in the eyes of these three men. They said, “We need to do more worship because we are not like the Prophet (PBUH), whose sins have been forgiven.” One said, “I spend the whole night in prayers;” the second said, “I fast every day;” and the third said, “I will remain celibate as long as I live.” The Prophet (PBUH) overheard them and came to talk to them. He said, “By God, I am more conscious of God than you, but I pray part of the night and I sleep the rest; I fast few days and I break my fast other days; and I did not vow celibacy. This is my practice. Whosoever does not follow my practice does not belong to me.”

“God will not take you to task for that which is unintentional in your oaths, but He will take you to task for your deliberate oaths. The expiation for such oaths is to feed ten of the needy with food that you normally feed your own families, or to cloth them, or to free a slave, and for him who does not find the means, he should fast three days. This is the expiation of your oaths when you have sworn; and keep your oaths. Thus, God makes clear His revelations in order that you may be thankful” It seems that this verse, which deals with taking oaths, was revealed to deal with situations when Muslims took oaths which prevented them from enjoying lawful things. This would be synonymous to taking the law in their hands and decreeing what is lawful and what is forbidden. The Quran told them that it is not their prerogative to make unlawful that which God has decreed lawful. The verse also deals with situations when a person takes an oath to commit a sin or to abstain from doing something good. If a person takes an oath then realizes that it is better to go back on his oath then, he can do this provided that he atones for breaking his oath using the prescribed expiation scheme mentioned in these verses.

Ibn ‘Abbas (RA) said that this verse was revealed to address the question posed by people who forbade themselves to enjoy good things which God deemed lawful. They took an oath not to avail themselves of these lawful things which included certain food or wedding women through legal marriage. When the verse saying, “You who believe, do not make unlawful the good things which God has made lawful for you,” was revealed, people who took such oaths asked how can they relieve themselves of the oaths they took. So, this verse came down to explain the difference between intentional and unintentional oaths. Unintentional oaths are forgiven but breaking an intentional oath requires expiation. The verse also urged Muslims to watch out for taking oaths unnecessarily. Oaths are made to be respected. The verse explained how one can expiate for an intentional oath. The expiation consists of feeding ten needy people, clothing them, or freeing a slave. Those who do not have the means for any of these should fast for three days.

“You who believe, intoxicants and gambling, idolatrous practices, and divination by arrows, are an abomination - of Satan's handwork- eschew such (abomination), that you may succeed. Satan seeks to incite among you, enmity and hatred with intoxicants and gambling, and to keep you from the remembrance of God and from prayer. Will you not then desist? Obey God, and obey the Messenger, and be on your guard; if you do turn away, know you that the sole duty of Our Messenger is to proclaim (the message) in the clearest manner. There is no blame on those who believe and do righteous deeds for what they ate (in the past), if they are conscious of God, believe, and do righteous deeds; then they are conscious of God and believe; then again, they are conscious of God and do good deeds, for God loves those who do good deeds.” Drinking, gambling, idolatry practices and lottery (using arrows to determine winners in a competition) were practices ingrained in the pre-Islamic society. These practices were interwoven together in the fabric of the society. People used to drink excessively, boasting about their drinking habits and writing poetry to praise good wine. Drinking needed food, so they slaughtered animals for the idols and used their meat for their drinking parties. They devised a form of lottery; using arrows to determine how to distribute shares of meat among themselves. Islam recognized that these are only symptoms of the malaise. Islam chose to address the fundamental problem behind these corrupt practices. Islam recognized that the source of the problem lies in the concept of idol worship. Thus, the starting point was to guide people to the belief in the One true God. Islamic methodology focused on establishing the concept of “there is no deity but God” first. It recognized that once the belief in the One True God has been established, it would be easy to eradicate the pre-Islamic corrupt practices. The Prophet (PBUH) spent 13 years to establish the concept of “there is no deity but God.” During this period the main objective of the Prophet (PBUH) was to inculcate this concept in the hearts of the believers. Accepting and obeying the commands of God came naturally after the concept of “no deity but God” became ingrained in the psyche of the believers. In other words, obedience came after submission.

The process of prohibiting intoxicants in Islam did not occur overnight. The strategy to impose the prohibition used a gradual approach to allow the required drastic change in the social life to take place. The stage was set for the prohibition by verse 67 in Chapter 16, “And from the fruit of the date-palm and the vine, you get out sweet drink and wholesome food: behold, in this also is a sign for those who are wise,” which juxtaposed a sweet drink (wine) against wholesome food, implying that the two are not alike. The second stage started when verse 219 in Chapter 2 was revealed, “They ask you concerning wine and gambling. Say, ‘In them is great sin, and some benefit, for people; but the sin is greater than the benefit.’ They ask you how much they are to spend; Say, ‘What is beyond your needs.’ Thus, does God make clear to you His Signs; in order that you may consider.” (2:219) The verse suggested that although there are benefits that may accrue from wine, but the evil that will result outweighs the benefits that may accrue. Thus, it is better to abandon drinking. The third stage came with the revelation of verse 43 in Chapter 4, “You who believe, do not approach prayer while you are intoxicated until you know what you are saying.” (4:43) In the pre-Islamic society, people used to drink early in the morning, early afternoon, and after sunset. These new restrictions resulted in reducing the opportunity for drinking at these times because these times overlapped with prayer times. Muslims have to pray five times a day and the times for prayers are usually closely spaced during the day which further diminishes the opportunity for drinking at other times. These stages paved the road for the final ruling which came to categorically prohibit drinking. These stages prepared the Muslims mentally and psychologically to accept the prohibition.

Before the prohibition was made, ‘Umar ibn El-Khatib (RA) used to pray, “Our Lord clarify for us the ruling regarding intoxicants.” Then the verse, “They ask you concerning wine and gambling...” was revealed. ‘Umar (RA) continued to pray for a clear position regarding intoxicants until the verse, “You who believe, do not approach prayer while you are intoxicated until you know what you are saying.” He continued to pray for a clear decision until the verse, “Satan seeks to incite among you, enmity and hatred with intoxicants and gambling, and to keep you from the remembrance of God and from prayer. Will you not then desist?” was revealed. ‘Umar (RA) said, “We desist, we desist.”

When the command to prohibit the use of intoxicants was finally revealed, three years after the battle of Uhud, all that was needed is for a person to go through the streets of Medina making the announcement. The response was instantaneous; people broke their glasses and spilled whatever intoxicants they had at the time. The verse which stated the prohibition, starts with the call to the believers, “You who believe,” to remind people that they are believers and that obedience goes hand in hand with this title. Then a clear statement was made regarding intoxicants, gambling, idolatry practices, and divination with the arrows. These are abomination and they are Satan’s handiwork. Satan is the eternal enemy of humankind, thus anything that is related to Satan is bad for the believer. The command to avoid such abomination came hand in hand with a promise of success for those who follow the command. The believer was reminded that Satan’s objective is to incite animosity among the believers through these sinful practices. Believers were asked to desist, their response was instantaneous, “We desist.” Believers should obey God, and should obey God’s Messenger. This is a fundamental rule in Islam, it is the essence of submission, and without which there would be no “submission.”

It may be a good idea to explain what is meant by “intoxicants” in these verses. Abu Daoud explained on the authority of Ibn ‘Abbas (RA), “Everything that was left to ferment is an intoxicant and every intoxicant is forbidden.” ‘Umar (RA) stood on the podium of the Prophet (PBUH) and addressed the people; among the people were other companions of the Prophet (PBUH). He said, “Intoxicants have been prohibited. Intoxicants can be obtained from five sources: grapes, dates, honey, wheat, and barley. Intoxicants are any substance that fogs the mind.” This shows that the definition of intoxicants extends to cover any substance that affects the intellect of the human being. Islam requires Muslims to be alert at all times. This is not possible if the person is under the influence of an intoxicant that fogs the mind. Muslims should be alert so that they remain conscious of their Lord all the time. This will enable them to fulfill their duties to God, to themselves, to their families, and to their community.

The scholars are divided on the nature of intoxicants and whether they should be considered physically unclean. Most of the scholars opt for that opinion. Another group is of the opinion that it is only prohibited as a drink.

Some Muslims were concerned about the situation of their fellow Muslims who died before the prohibition command came down. That question was addressed by the revelation of, “There is no blame on those who believe and do righteous deeds for what they ate (in the past), if they are conscious of God, believe, and do righteous deeds; then they are conscious of God and believe; then again, they are conscious of God and do good deeds, for God loves those who do good deeds.” The verse established the rule that prohibitions can only be made on the basis of a decree and that they are not retroactive. Thus, those who used to drink and died before the prohibition came into effect are not going to be punished for drinking. I did not find in the literature on the interpretation of Quran a convincing argument about the repeated use of the sentence “were conscious of God,” in relation to believing, being righteous, and doing good deeds. The best I could come up with was given by the scholar Ibn Jareer Al-Tabari who said, “The first mention of being conscious of God refers to the acceptance of God’s commands and working according to it; the second time it was mentioned, it refers to being steadfast in performing these commands; the third time it was mentioned it refers to improving the deeds by going beyond the obligatory tasks and performing voluntary tasks.”

“You who believe, God will certainly try you in a little matter of game well within reach of your hands and your lances, that He may test who fears Him even though they do not see him: any who transgresses thereafter, will have a grievous penalty.” This was the test: an easy prey which was driven near them by God. It was within their reach and they could have easily struck it with their lances. The temptation was great, but they were on Pilgrimage. For them hunting was not allowed. This was to test the believers and to find out if they truly fear God even though He is unseen to them. Fear of God, even if God is unseen, is the solid foundation for the true belief. God knows who fears Him, but God does not punish people on the basis of His knowledge, God punishes people on the basis of their actual transgressions.

“You who believe, do not kill game while you are on Pilgrimage. If any of you does that intentionally, he shall offer a domestic animal the equivalent of that which he has killed, brought to the Ka’ba, as adjudged by two just men among you; alternatively, he may atone by feeding the needy; or its equivalent in fast: that he may taste the penalty of his deed. God pardoned whatever happened in the past: but he who reoffends God will exact revenge on him. God is Eminent, an avenger of evil.” Pre-meditated killing of animals by those who are performing the rituals of Pilgrimage is prohibited, but it is not sinful to kill an animal by mistake. The expiation for pre-meditated killing of animals is to offer a domestic animal equivalent to the animal that was killed as in sacrifice. Two fair-minded judges should be chosen to decide the equivalency issue. When they have chosen an animal for sacrifice, the animal would be taken to the Ka’ba, sacrificed and used to feed poor people. If an animal is not available, the judges would determine the number of poor people to be fed by the culprit as expiation. The cost of this would be equal to the price of the killed animal (there is different opinions regarding this). Otherwise, the culprit has to fast a number of days. This way a person tastes the consequences of his deeds. Atonement for a sin is a kind of punishment. However, God pardoned those who transgressed before this command has been issued. A dire warning is issued to those who re-offend. They are reminded that if they preach the security that God awarded these animals in this secure place, God is Eminent and He is Able to bring them to task. This is the verdict regarding hunting, but fishing is allowed whether a person is in a state of Pilgrimage or not. The verse reiterated that prohibition of hunting after it allowed fishing. All scholars are agreed that hunting is prohibited while a person is in the state of Pilgrimage, but they differ about the animals that come under this ruling. They also differ regarding the permissibility of eating an animal that has been hunted by another person who is not on Pilgrimage. The verse ends by reminding the believers with the importance of being conscious of God.

“God made the Ka’ba, the Sacred House, a means of support for people, as also the Sacred Months, the animals for offerings, and the garlands that mark them. So that you know that God has knowledge of what is in the heavens and on earth and that God is well acquainted with all things. Know too that God is severe in punishment and that God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy. The Messenger’s duty is only to convey (the message). But God knows what you reveal and what you conceal.” God has sanctified a place and a time for people so that they can find security and peace. The place is the Ka’ba and the time is the Sacred Months. During the Sacred Months people should stop fighting. They can take refuge in the sacred place at any time, to find security and peace. Security and safety are not guaranteed only for people in the sanctified place but the guarantee of safety extends to cover birds, animals, and other living things. Even before Islam, the Arabs observed the sanctity of the Sacred Months. During the four months of Zul Qi’da, Zul Hija, Rajab, and Muharram the Arabs abstained from fighting and revenge. It is being said that during these months, a person seeking to avenge the killing of his father would not harm those who were responsible even if he had the opportunity to do so. The security and safety were also extended to cover the animals which were destined to the Ka’ba for sacrifice. They were safe while on their way to the Ka’ba. Ka’ba had been sanctified since Prophets Abraham and Ishmael (PBUT) rebuilt it.

God has knowledge of all what is in the heavens and what is on earth. God decreed these laws to suit the nature and needs of the creation and to meet with their expectations and ambitions. When the hearts of the believers sense the mercy of God reflected on His laws, they will realize and appreciate God’s knowledge of His creation. At the end of the verses which explain the lawful and the prohibited, comes the warning and the hope that God is severe in punishment but He is also All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy. Obedience is a personal responsibility. The Messenger’s duty is only to deliver the message and God knows what every person reveals and what he/she conceals. This verse points to the individual responsibility of people.

“Say, ‘The evil and the good are not equal even though the abundance of the evil may attract you. So be conscious of God, people of understanding that you may succeed.’” This verse established a moral value. The abundance of evil does not make it good. This comes in the context of speaking of the lawful and forbidden. The lawful may be little but it is good. The lawful is good because it provides enjoyment without bad consequences. No pain, sickness, or sense of loss is left behind after consuming what is lawful. Lawful food provides joy in this life and in the Hereafter. God consciousness is the only guarantee for protection against temptation and for achieving success in this life and in the hereafter.

“You who believe, ask not questions about things which, if made plain to you, may cause you trouble. But if you ask about things when the Qur’an is being revealed, they will be made plain to you – for God has kept silent about them - God is All-Forgiving, Forbearing. Some people before you did ask such questions, and on that account lost their faith.” These verses start a new theme, a theme of teaching Muslims the etiquette of asking questions and what questions are appropriate to ask God and His Messenger. Some Muslims used to ask repeatedly about things that have not been dealt with by the revelation. Some were anxious to know more details about certain issues which have been mentioned in the Quran without details. Reference to issues in general affords Muslims more flexibility in the interpretations. It has been narrated that when the verse prescribing Pilgrimage was revealed, someone asked the Prophet (PBUH) whether it is required to perform Pilgrimage every year. The Prophet (PBUH) was displeased by this question because the verse indicated that only those who can perform Pilgrimage should do it. Had it been mentioned that Pilgrimage should be performed every year, it would have been difficult to comply with the command.

Quran was not revealed to deal only with issues of faith and law, but also to provide a training program for the nation, to establish a society, and to prepare individuals having the right attitudes. These verses deal with the attitude towards seeking knowledge about details of the law that were not readily mentioned. God is the one who decrees the commands. He is the one who passes the law. It is appropriate to trust His wisdom about the level of details that He wants to reveal. God knows His creation. He knows their abilities, and their limitations. The law was revealed at the level of details that He deemed appropriate for them. There is no need to try to make things difficult for ourselves by trying to find out unnecessary details. The attitude of seeking more details would have been more dangerous at the time of the Prophet (PBUH). At that time the process of the revelation of the Quran had not been completed yet. Had the questions been answered and details were decreed, Muslims would have had to comply. That is why the verse commanded believers not to ask about things that may make life difficult for them. God will reveal details as He sees fit.

The verses gave the example of nations that received revealed Books before and had the same attitude. When they requested unnecessarily detailed instructions of what is permissible and what is not, it became very difficult for them to comply with the level of details that they received and consequently they lost their faith. An example of this is the story of the Cow which was mentioned in Surat Al-Baqarah (Chapter 2). The children of Israel were asked to slaughter a cow. There were no conditions attached to the command. It would have been easier for them to comply with the command and slaughter any cow. But they kept asking about its details and how it looks like until it became extremely difficult to find a cow that fits all these details.

A saying of the Prophet (PBUH) that captures the essence of these verses has been narrated by Muslim. The Prophet (PBUH) has been quoted to have said, “God Almighty has decreed certain duties, perform them; He specified certain limits, do not exceed them; He prohibited certain things, do not violate them; and He did not mention certain things, not that He forgot these things but as a token of His mercy, so do not ask about them.”

“It was not God who instituted (superstitions like those of) a slit-ear she-camel, or a she-camel let loose for free pasture, or idol sacrifices for twin-births in animals, or stallion-camels freed from work. It is blasphemers who invent a lie against God; but most of them do not use reason.” This classification of cattle was invented by the Arabs before Islam. It was a heritage of the Pre-Islamic era. There are many definitions for these animals. We will mention some of them.

Al-Zuhary narrated on the authority of Sa'eed Ibn Al-Mussaib (RA) that he said, "A slit-ear she camel (Bahira) is a camel whose milk is dedicated to the idols. The let loose camel (Sa'iba) was a camel that was let loose for the sake of the idols. The twin-birth camel (Wassila) is a camel that gives birth to two females one after the other. This she camel would be sacrificed for the idols. The stallion-camel (Ham) is a male camel that becomes protected against slaughtering after impregnating a certain number of she camels."

Linguistically, a Bahira is a she camel whose ears have been slit. The word "Bahira" is derived from "Bahr" which means sea. In the pre-Islamic tradition, a she camel, which gives birth five times ending with a male baby camel, would have its ears slit and it becomes dedicated to the idols. No one would ride it. It would be left to roam wherever it wishes. A person who needs the idols to help him achieve a wish promises to dedicate a she camel to the idols if his wish is fulfilled. This is called "Sa'iba." It becomes like a Bahira. The "Wassila" is an ewe that is born as a twin to a ram.

The idol worshippers among the Arabs in the pre-Islamic era used to practice these traditions. They also thought that they were the followers of Prophet Abraham (PBUH). They believed in God but they invented these rituals which were not decreed by God. This is a lie that they fabricated. So, they deserved to be labeled as disbelievers because they do not follow the law decreed by God.

"When it is said to them, 'Come to what God has revealed; and come to the Messenger.' They say, 'Enough for us are the ways we found our fathers following.' What? Even though their fathers had no knowledge and no guidance?" God's commands have been articulated in the Quran and the tradition of the Prophet (PBUH). The criterion of belief is to comply with these commands. Those who abandon God's commands in favor of the traditions that they inherited from their forefathers do not qualify to be believers. The irony is that their forefathers followed these traditions without knowledge and they were not guided.

"You who believe, you have charge of your own souls; if you follow (right) guidance, no hurt can come to you from those who go astray. To God you shall return; and it is He who will show you the truth of all that you did." The believers are but one nation. No harm shall befall them if others went astray as long as they remain on the straight path. This does not mean that the Muslim nation would abandon its duty in calling others to guidance. The duty of the Muslim nation is to establish an Islamic way of life according to the commands of God. It should become a beacon of justice for the rest of the world. This verse does not relieve the individuals and the nation from their duty in supporting truth and condemning evil.

"You who believe, when death approaches any of you, let two just men from among you act as witnesses to the making of bequests, or two men from other people if you are journeying through the land and the chance of death befalls you. If you doubt (their truth), detain them both after prayer, and let them both swear by God saying, 'We wish not in this for any worldly gain, even though the (beneficiary) be our near relation. We shall hide not the evidence before God. If we do, indeed we will be sinful.' But if it gets known that these two were guilty of the sin (of perjury), let two others stand forth in their places - nearest in kin from among those who claim a lawful right - and let them swear by God saying, 'We affirm that our witness is truer than that of those two, and that we have not trespassed (beyond the truth), if we did, then indeed we are transgressors.’ That is most suitable so that they may give the evidence in its true nature and shape, or else they would fear that other oaths would be taken after their oaths. But be conscious of God, and listen (to His counsel), for God does not guide a rebellious people.” These verses explain the process of making wills. Two witnesses are needed to validate and execute a will. If the person is travelling and did not find two Muslims to testify, he can ask two non-Muslims to execute his will. If doubts arise as to the truthfulness of the witnesses, then an oath should be administered after performing their prayers. If, however, it was proven later that they perjured themselves, then two men from the deceased family should come forward and take an oath that they will be telling the truth. This would invalidate the original testimony. This procedure provides guarantees that the witnesses should tell the truth so that they would not be labeled as liars. But the ultimate incentive to tell the truth is the fear of displeasing God.

Verses: 109 to 120

109. On the day when God gathers the messengers together, and asks, “What was the response you received (from people to your teaching)?” They will say, “We have no knowledge. It is You Who know in full all that is hidden.”
110. Then God will say, “Jesus, son of Mary, recount My blessing on you and on your mother. How I strengthened you with the Holy Spirit, so that you did speak to the people in childhood and in maturity. How I taught you the Scripture and the Wisdom, the Torah and the Gospel; and how, by My leave you fashioned the shape of a bird, breathed into it, and it became, by My leave, a bird; and how, by My leave, you healed the blind person, and the leper; and how, by My leave, you brought the dead back to life; how I did restrain the Children of Israel from (harming) you when you did show them the clear Signs, and the disbelievers among them said, ‘This is nothing but evident magic.’
111. And how I inspired the disciples to believe in Me and My Messenger- they said, ‘We believe, and we bear witness that we submit ourselves to God.’”
112. When the disciples, said, “Jesus son of Mary, can your Lord send down to us a table spread with food from heaven?” Said Jesus, “Be conscious of God, if you are true believers.”
113. They said, “We only wish to eat from it and to reassure our hearts, and to know that you have indeed told us the truth; and that we ourselves may be witnesses to the miracle.”
114. Said Jesus the son of Mary, “God our Lord, send us a table spread with food from heaven, that it may be a feast for us - for the first and the last of us - and a sign from You; and provide for us, for You are the best of Providers.”
115. God said, “I will send it down to you. But if any of you after that disbelieves, I will punish him with a torment such as I have not inflicted on any one among all the peoples.”
116. And when God says, “Jesus the son of Mary, did you say to people, worship me and my mother as gods alongside God?” He will say, “Glory to You, never could I say what I had no right (to say). Had I said such a thing, You would indeed have known it. You know what is in my heart, but I know not what is in Yours. Indeed, You know in full all that is hidden.

117. I Never said to them except that which You commanded me to say, 'Worship God, my Lord and your Lord;' and I was a witness over them while I dwelt amongst them; when You did take me up You were the Watcher over them, and You are a witness to all things.
118. If You do torment them, they are Your servants; and if You forgive them, You are the Eminent, Wise."
119. God will say, "This is a day when the truthful will profit from their truth; theirs are gardens, with rivers flowing beneath, they will abide in it for ever; God is well pleased with them, and they with God. That is the great triumph."
120. To God belongs the dominion of the heavens and the earth, and all that is therein, and it is He Who has power over all things. (5:109-120)

"On the day when God gathers the messengers together, and asks, 'What was the response you received (from men to your teaching)?' They will say, 'We have no knowledge. It is You Who knows in full all that is hidden.'" God will gather all the messengers whom He sent to the people. He will ask them about the people's response to their call. The messengers were human beings. Each one of them was sent to guide his people to the truth. However, they had no true knowledge of who was a believer and who turned away. Only God can judge. He knows the unseen.

"Then God will say, 'Jesus, son of Mary, recount My blessing to you and to your mother. How I strengthened you with the Holy Spirit, so that you did speak to the people in childhood and in maturity. How I taught you the Scripture and the Wisdom, the Torah and the Gospel; and how, by My leave you fashioned the shape of a bird, breathed into it, and it became, by My leave, a bird; and how, by My leave, you healed the blind person, and the leper; and how, by My leave, you brought the dead back to life; how I did restrain the Children of Israel from (harming) you when you did show them the clear Signs, and the disbelievers among them said, "This is nothing but evident magic." And how I inspired the disciples to believe in Me and My Messenger- they said, "We believe, and we bear witness that we submit ourselves to God."'" Then God will turn to Jesus. God will remind him with the blessings that He bestowed on him and on his mother. God supported him with the Holy Spirit and blessed him with the ability to talk when he was a baby in the cradle to clear his mother's name. God taught him the Torah and the Gospel. God blessed him with the ability to perform miracles no human could perform. He was able to breathe life into a piece of mud shaped in the form of a bird and it became a bird; he was able to heal the blind and the leper; and he was able to bring the dead back to life. All these miracles were blessings from the Creator Who is able to change the natural law, because He is the One Who created it. God will remind Jesus (PBUH) of His blessings when He protected him from the Children of Israel who belied him and accused him of sorcery. The Children of Israel were arrogant; they saw the miracles but instead of believing in Jesus (PBUH) they accused him of practicing sorcery. God saved him from crucifixion and raised him to heaven.

"When the disciples, said, 'Jesus the son of Mary, can your Lord send down to us a table spread with food from heaven?' Said Jesus, 'Be conscious of God, if you are true believers.' They said, 'We only wish to eat from it and to reassure our hearts, and to know that you have indeed told us the truth; and that we ourselves may be witnesses to the miracle.' Said Jesus the son of Mary, 'God our Lord, send us a table spread with food from heaven, that it may be a feast for us - for the first and the last of us - and a sign from You; and provide for us, for You are the best of Providers.’ God said, ‘I will send it down to you. But if any of you after that disbelieves, I will punish him with a torment such as I have not inflicted on any one among all the peoples.’” The story about the table mentioned here is different from the account given in the Bible of the meal which Jesus (PBUH) prepared for his disciples. The verse narrates the request that the disciples asked of Jesus (PBUH). They asked him if God can bring down a table spread with food from heaven. Jesus (PBUH) warned them to be conscious of their Lord. They said we would like to eat food from heaven to reassure our hearts and to witness the miracle. When they persisted, Jesus (PBUH) prayed his Lord to bring down a table spread with food from heaven so they can eat and celebrate. God responded positively to the prayer from Jesus (PBUH) so that there would be no excuse for anyone to disbelieve in the message that Jesus (PBUH) brought from God.

“And when God says, ‘Jesus the son of Mary, did you say to people, worship me and my mother as gods alongside God?’ He will say, ‘Glory to You, never could I say what I had no right (to say). Had I said such a thing, You would indeed have known it. You know what is in my heart, but I know not what is in Yours. Indeed, You know in full all that is hidden. I Never said to them except that which You commanded me to say, “Worship God, my Lord and your Lord”; and I was a witness over them while I dwelt amongst them; when You did take me up You were the Watcher over them, and You are a witness to all things. If You do torment them, they are Your servants; and if You forgive them, You are the Eminent, the Wise.’ God will say, ‘This is a day when the truthful will profit from their truth: theirs are gardens, with rivers flowing beneath, they will abide in it for ever; God is well pleased with them, and they with God. That is the great triumph.’ To God belongs the dominion of the heavens and the earth, and all that is therein, and it is He Who has power over all things.” This is a rhetorical question because God knows what Jesus (PBUH) did say to people. However, it is reiterated so that the weight of the sin of associating partners with God is understood. Jesus’ (PBUH) response started with glorifying his Lord and stating that God is High above all of this. Then, the statement of facts followed: God knows everything that Jesus (PBUH) would have said; God knows the unseen; and Jesus (PBUH) said only that which he was commanded to say. He did witness what they were doing when he was dwelling among them. When God raised him, he had no way of knowing what they did. This Sura ends by the statement: to God belongs the dominion of heaven and earth, to remove any shadow of a doubt about the Oneness of God. He alone is the Lord and He alone is the God.

Sura 6: Al-An'am (The Cattle)

In the name of God, the Lord of Mercy, the Giver of Mercy

This Sura was revealed in Mecca. It thus, belongs to the part of Quran normally called the Meccan Quran. The revelations during the Meccan period, which lasted for thirteen years, revolved around a single theme and addressed a single concept. The content was the same but the presentations were different. The objective of the Meccan Quran was to inculcate the belief in the Oneness of God in the hearts of the believers. Only when this principle was understood and became entrenched in the Muslims' psyche that Quran started talking about systems that organize people's daily lives. The belief in the Oneness of God is the foundation that supports all Islamic systems and rules. Rules that regulate the way of life people lead on earth should spring from this foundation and abide by its principles. There is no room for manmade laws which do not respect this basic principle in an Islamic way of life. This belief frees people from the tyranny of the rulers who think that they have ultimate authority.

This was how the call to Islam started and this is the way it should continue. A call to Islam should start by inculcating the belief in the Oneness of God. Some may argue that it may be easier, when calling people to Islam, to expose people to Islamic systems and way of life first. This is not the way it was meant for this religion to be established. The belief in the Oneness of God is the foundation that needs to be established first then the applications can follow.

Quran used a unique methodology in the presentation of the doctrine of Islam. There was no theoretical formulation, nor philosophical or theological arguments. Quran appealed to the initial natural human disposition. It endeavored to purify the spiritual receptors within the human being and open up the channels to receive the divine inspiration. It prepared the believers for the fierce fight against the ignorant state of the society around them. The preparation was done in a practical way that matched the dynamics of life. The doctrine should not be studied in isolation of the daily lives of people. Islam offers a dynamic way of life. It should be developed in an interactive way responding to the ever changing needs of people and society. Islam's objective was not only to change what people believed in but it also endeavored to change their way of thinking and their approach to life.

This Sura is the sixth Sura in the Quran, it is a true example of the Meccan Quran. It presents clearly the Meccan Quran characteristics and salient features. However, the Sura has its own characteristics which set it apart from other Suras. Each Sura in the Quran has its own salient features which appear in its organization, its presentation of the topic, and the imagery that accompany the presentation.

This Sura is unique in the way it handles its basic topics: the meaning of divinity and the relationship between the Creator and the creation. God is the Creator, the Provider, the Almighty. He sets the rules that govern His creation. The theme runs through the whole Sura and culminates in dealing with specific cases of lawful and prohibited practices. The Sura illustrates how some of the prevalent practices contravened the right of God to set the ultimate rule that govern the life of His creation. This specific example is an illustration of the main objective of the Sura: only God has the right to determine what is lawful and what is prohibited.

It has been narrated on the authority of Ibn ‘Abbas (RA), and others that the whole Sura was revealed in one session in Mecca. The narrations did not specify an exact date for the revelation of the Sura, nor does the text point to an exact date for the revelation. According to the most probable known order for the revelation of the Suras in the Quran, its order is the fifty-fifth following Surat Al-Hijr (Chapter 15). This does not help in fixing an exact time for the revelation of this Sura. However, we are of the opinion that, most probably, it was revealed during the fifth or sixth year after the advent of the message. This opinion is based on the suggested order for the Sura and the extent and depth of the topics that it dealt with. This indicates that it was revealed at a time when extensive discussions with the idolaters of Mecca were conducted. The Sura included verses which aimed at providing support, solace, and comfort to the Prophet (PBUH) in face of the strong rejection by the idolaters.

Another narration on the authority of Ibn ‘Abbas (RA) and Qatadah (RA) indicates that the whole Sura was revealed in Mecca except for the two verses (91, and 141), “They have no grasp of God’s true measure when they say, ‘God did not reveal anything to a mortal.’ Say, ‘Who was it who sent down the Scripture, which Moses brought, as a light and a guide to humankind, which you have put on parchments of which you show some, but you hide much, and (by which) you were taught that which you knew not yourselves nor (did) your fathers?’ Say, ‘God (sent it down).’ Then leave them to cavil.” (91); and “It is He who produces both trellised and untrellised gardens, date palms, crops of diverse flavors, the olive, the pomegranate, alike yet different. So when they bear fruit, eat some of it, paying what is due on the day of harvest, but do not be wasteful. God does not like wasteful people.” (141) The first was revealed regarding the Jews Malek bin Sayef and Ka’b bin Al-ASHraf and the second was revealed regarding Thabet bin Quais. Ibn Jareej and Al-Mawardi said it was revealed regarding Moa’az bin Jabal (RA).

The reason behind the revelation of verse 91 mentioned above is probable because of the reference to the Scripture revealed to Moses (PBUH), however, Mejahed and Ibn ‘Abbas (RA) argued that the verse came to address objections raised by the idolaters of Mecca and consequently the verse must have been revealed in Mecca.

People who understood that the words “paying what is due” in verse 141 refer to paying Zakat concluded that the verse was revealed in Medina. However, “paying what is due” may not necessarily have been a reference to Zakat, and since the flow of the topics in the Sura portrays Meccan characteristics, one can conclude that verse 141 is also a Meccan verse. Thus, the whole Sura must have been revealed in Mecca.

We are therefore, of the opinion that this Sura has been revealed in its totality in one night in Mecca. This opinion is supported by the coherent structure of the Sura which flows like a river with no obstacles to resist its flow.

The Sura deals with a single topic: the belief in the Oneness of God. This topic is dealt with in a sequence of waves that complement one another. The first wave consists of three verses. The verses confront the idolaters of Mecca: how can they associate partners with God, in spite of the fact that they are surrounded with many signs which attest to the Oneness of God. The three verses encompass the truth of the whole universe. The first verse talks about the creation of the universe, the second verse talks about the creation of humankind and the third verse brings humankind and the universe together in the context of the Oneness of God. The three verses contrast the existence of the universe and humankind against the baseless disbelief of the idolaters of Mecca, as a proof for the existence of God.

The second wave deals with those who deny the signs of the existence of the One God. It describes the fate of the previous disbelievers and threatens the new ones with similar ending.

The third wave addresses the essence of God. God the Creator, the Provider, the Lord who owns everything, the Vanquisher, the Protecting Friend, the All-Wise, and the Totally-Aware.

The fourth wave describes evidence provided by previous revelations which supported the Quran. The verses in this wave describe associating partners with God as the worst kind of injustice. They paint a picture of the encounter between those who associate partners with God and their false gods on the Day of Judgment.

A fifth wave provides moral support to the Prophet (PBUH) in his endeavor. Reminding the Prophet (PBUH) that he is a member of a brotherhood of the messengers sent by God to guide people to the right path and provides a consolation to support the Prophet (PBUH) in facing the hardships.

Verses: 1 to 3

1. All praise is due to God, Who created the heavens and the earth and made the darkness and the light; yet those who disbelieve set up equals with their Lord.
2. He it is who created you from clay, then He decreed a term; and there is a term named with Him; still you doubt.
3. And He is the God in the heavens and on earth; He knows your secrets and what you make public, and He knows what you earn.” (6:1-3)

These first three verses establish the foundation for the Sura's topic. They start with praising God and confessing His right to be worshipped alone as the sole Creator of heavens and earth. They emphasize the first attribute of God as the sole Creator of the universe, pointing to two of the major cosmic signs: light and darkness. The ending of the verse expresses amazement at those who are not only ungrateful but they also associate partners with God. The second verse refers to the creation of humankind, the creation that followed the creation of heavens and earth. It is the creation that brought life to the dormant universe. The verse points to the transition from the darkness of mud to the light of life. The verse refers to the appointed terms of death and resurrection. One can sense the correspondence between the stillness accompanying death and the dormant state of mud; and between the energy accompanying resurrection and the dynamic state of the original birth. This is a correspondence separated by a vast distance and enormous time. Such expressions should fill the human heart with infinite trust in God's plan and a certainty in meeting Him. The verse ends with an appropriate statement, "still you doubt."

The third verse puts the creation of the universe and the creation of humankind in the context of the Oneness of the Creator and His boundless ability and complete control, "And He is the God in the heavens and on earth; He knows your secrets and what you make public, and He knows what you earn." It is God who created heavens and earth. He is the only Lord of heavens and earth. He controls everything. It is then, appropriate for the human being to follow God's law in whatever decisions he /she makes. Human beings can achieve well balanced lives by aligning their initial natural dispositions, controlled by God, with the material needs of their physical existence. This will bring harmony to human lives. It will protect human life from being subjected to the discord that may result from the often contradictory God-made laws and manmade laws.

This group of verses appeals to the human heart and human logic through the signs of the creation of the universe and humankind. It appeals to the initial natural disposition of humankind to use these signs as a means which lead to the belief in the Oneness of God. The idolatrous Arabs did not challenge the concept of the existence of God. They believed in God, but they challenged the concept of the Oneness of God. They refused to allow God's law to shape their daily lives and they associated partners with God.

Verses: 4 to 11

4. And there does not come to them any sign of the signs of their Lord but they would turn aside from it.
5. So they have indeed denied the truth when it came to them; therefore, the truth of what they mocked at will shine upon them.
6. Do they not consider how many a generation We have destroyed before them, whom We had established on earth as We have not established you, and We sent the clouds pouring rain on them in abundance, and We made the rivers to flow beneath them, then We destroyed them on account of their sins and raised up after them another generation?
7. And if We had sent you a Scripture written on paper, then they had touched it with their hands, certainly those who disbelieve would have said, "This is nothing but clear magic."

8. And they say, "Why has not an angel been sent down to him?" And had We sent down an angel, the matter would have certainly been decided and then they would not have been granted a respite.
9. And if We had made him an angel, We would certainly have made him a man, and thus We would only have confused them in the same way as they are now confusing themselves.
10. And certainly messengers before you have been mocked, but that which they were mocked for encompassed the scoffers among them.
11. Say, "Travel in the land, then see what was the end of the deniers." (6: 4-11).

"And there does not come to them any sign of the signs of their Lord but they would turn aside from it. So they have indeed denied the truth when it came to them; therefore, the truth of what they mocked at will shine upon them." The verses describe the attitude of the disbelievers and how adamant they were in opposing the message and denying the signs of God that were sent to them. A warning was then issued so that they may take heed. The warning was given in general terms; no specific details were given that shed light on the nature of the impending punishment, nor the time it will take place. It reminded them with the fate the previous disbelieving generations met before, "Do they not consider how many a generation We have destroyed before them, whom We had established on earth as We have not established you, and We sent the clouds pouring rain on them in abundance, and We made the rivers to flow beneath them, then We destroyed them on account of their sins and raised up after them another generation." These previous generations had more power and wealth, but their power and wealth did not avail them safety or security and they were destroyed. People usually forget the blessings of God. The wealth and power that people acquire are gifts from God. It is easy for Him to take it away since He is the one who has given it in the first place. God's blessings are bestowed to test people. The test shows whether those who have been given power and wealth will be grateful to God or will they become tyrants. This is God's law that many forget, except those who are saved by Him. Power and wealth blind the tyrants and entice them to annul the covenant they had with God; and they breach the conditions that God had established for humankind to qualify as God's vicegerent on earth. But the tyrants will be destroyed on account of their own sins. A study of history shows clearly how sins destroyed many civilizations before.

"And if We had sent you a Scripture written on paper, then they had touched it with their hands, certainly those who disbelieve would have said, 'This is nothing but clear magic.'" The verse continues to paint an image for the obstinacy of the disbelievers and their determination to reject faith. They were given many signs but they chose to ignore them. Even if they were given a written book that they can touch with their hands, they would have still denied the truth and dismissed it as clear magic. They were not interested in the truth. So, they adopted an argumentative attitude. They asked, why did not God send an angel? "And they say, 'Why has not an angel been sent down to him?' And had We sent down an angel, the matter would have certainly been decided and then they would not have been granted a respite. And if We had made him an angel, We would certainly have made him a man, and thus, We would only have confused them in the same way as they are now confusing themselves." Two conclusions can be drawn from this request. First, that the idolatrous Arabs were not atheists. They were merely in doubt that the Prophet (PBUH) is a messenger of God. They wanted a proof that he was truly a messenger of God and that the Book he recites is a revelation from God. They requested God to send an angel to support the Prophet's (PBUH) claim. This was only one of the many requests that were made by the disbelievers. The Quran records several of these requests. These were cited in Surat Al-Israa (Chapter 17) "They say, 'We will not believe you (Muhammad) until you make a spring gush out of the ground for us, or until you have a garden of date palms and vines, and make rivers pour through them; or make the sky fall down on us in pieces, as you claimed will happen; or bring God and angels before us face to face; or have a house made of gold; or ascend into the sky- even then, we will not believe in your ascension until you send a real book down for us to read'" (17: 90 - 94). In the present Sura, one of these requests was reiterated, namely, to bring down an angel who would support the Prophet (PBUH) and corroborate his claim that he is a true messenger of God.

The vanity of these requests is apparent from the fact that the Arabs of Mecca knew the Prophet (PBUH) as he grew up among them, and they never doubted his truthfulness until he proclaimed himself a messenger of God. They even used to call him the truthful the honest. When the Prophet (PBUH) wanted to announce his message for the first time, he stood on the top of a hill and asked the Arabs to gather around him and listen to a speech he was going to make. He started his talk asking them, would they believe him if he would tell them that there was an invading army behind the hill on which he was standing. Their response was that they never doubted the truth of whatever he said before and they had no reason to doubt anything he said. But they immediately recanted when he announced that he was sent to them as a messenger of God. However, they continued to trust him with their precious possessions even after he declared himself a messenger of God and until he had to flee Mecca to Medina. When he left Mecca for fear of his life, he entrusted his cousin Ali (RA) to return all possessions that were entrusted to him for safekeeping to their rightful owners.

The idolatrous Arabs were fluent in their language. They appreciated the beauty of the language and the eloquence of the speakers. They were puzzled by the eloquence of the Quran. They must have realized that the Quran could not have been composed by a human being. This was proof enough for them, if they were seeking the truth.

The second conclusion that one may glean from this request is that the Arabs knew of the existence of angels. They wanted God to send an angel to support the Prophet's (PBUH) claim. However, it is clear that they did not understand the nature of the angels, the relationship between God and the angels, and the relationship between the angels and the human beings. The Quran tells about the myth around the Arab's understanding of the angels and their nature and provided corrections for this myth. Their argument shows that they were not only stubborn in their denial of the message but that their denial is rooted in a myth.

The verse sheds light on the Islamic perspective of the concept of the “unseen.” Islam talked about the unseen as part of the creation of God so that a Muslim should be aware of the concept. Islam also educated Muslims how to deal with the topic of the unseen. The angels belong to the realm of the unseen. Belief in the angels is an article of faith in Islam. It has been mentioned in the commentary on Surat Al-Baqarah (Chapter 2) that the belief in the unseen moves the human being from the narrow space of the senses to the wide space of the unknown. The scope of the senses is limited; the unseen is limitless. The belief in the unseen widens the horizon from the scope of the senses to the scope of the awareness.

“And certainly messengers before you have been mocked, but that which they were mocked for encompassed the scoffers among them. Say, ‘Travel in the land, then see what was the end of the rejecters.’” The last two verses of this paragraph provide moral support and consolation to the Prophet (PBUH). All messengers before him faced the same impertinency. However, the end result was not in favor of those who rejected the faith. A lesson that can easily be learnt from history: travel in the land and see what the end of those who rejected faith was? This last verse embodies a brand new philosophy in life. It is not only an invitation to study history and reflect on lessons from the past, but it also encourages people to explore new avenues for improving life. It is an invitation to seek new methods in trade, innovation, and discovery. This is the methodology which transformed the Arabs within a quarter of a century from a backward nomadic society to a dynamic progressive society.

Verses: 12 to 19

12. Say, “To whom belongs what is in the heavens and the earth?” Say, “To God;” He has ordained mercy on Himself; most certainly He will gather you on the Day of Resurrection- there is no doubt about it. (As for) those who have lost their souls, they do not believe.
13. And to Him belongs whatever dwells in the night and the day; and He is the All-Hearing, the Omniscient.
14. Say, “Shall I take a protecting guardian other than God, the Originator of the heavens and the earth, and He feeds (others) and is not (Himself) fed.” Say, “I am commanded to be the first who submits himself. You should not be of the polytheists.”
15. Say, “Surely I fear, if I disobey my Lord, the torment of a grievous day.
16. He, from whom it is averted on that day, God indeed has shown mercy unto him; and this is a manifest achievement.”
17. And if God touches you with affliction, there is none to remove it but He; and if He touches you with good, then He has power over all things.
18. And He is the Dominator over His servants; and He is the Wise, the Totally-Aware.
19. Say, “What thing is the greatest in testimony?” Say, “God is witness between you and me; and this Quran has been revealed to me that with it I may warn you and whomsoever it reaches. Do you really bear witness that there are other gods with God?” Say, “I do not bear witness.” Say, “He is only one God, and surely I disown that which you set up (with Him).” (6: 12-19).

This paragraph starts with a rhetorical question, “To whom belongs what is in the heavens and the earth?” The answer follows, “Say, ‘To God;’ He has ordained mercy on Himself; most certainly He will gather you on the Day of Resurrection - there is no doubt about it. (As for) those who have lost their souls, they do not believe. And to Him belongs whatever dwells in the night and the day; and He is the All-Hearing, the Omniscient.”

The verse prepares the Messenger (PBUH) for the confrontation with the idolaters of Mecca. The idolaters of Mecca knew that God is the Creator but they still set up equals to Him. The Messenger (PBUH) is directed to pose the question to them, “To whom belongs what is in the heavens and the earth?” The Messenger (PBUH) was then directed to answer the question, “To God.” The Arabs did not dispute this fact. They believed that God is the Creator and that everything in the heavens and earth belongs to Him. The verses continue to state that God ordained mercy on Himself without suggestion or compulsion from any authority. Mercy is the foundation underlying How He treats His creation. His is a universal mercy that has been dictated only by His grace; it encompasses all aspects of life. This mercy was manifested in the creation of humankind from nothing; in the empowerment of humankind to be able to live on earth; in educating humankind and giving him the gift of the desire and ability to seek knowledge; in the guidance sent to humankind through the succession of messengers to guide him to the right path; in forgiving the sins of those who repent; and in rewarding those who do good deeds ten-folds while only recompensing those who sin according to their sin. A large number of traditions elaborate on the extent and scope of the mercy of God and urges humankind to be merciful in their dealings with each other and with other creations of God. The knowledge about the mercy of God fills the heart of the believer with security and tranquility. It also induces the believer to acquire the character of mercy and practice being merciful, forgiving, and kind towards people and other creatures of God. The verse continues to remind people of the certainty of the Day of Judgment. This will be an opportunity to benefit from the mercy of God. Those who did well will be rewarded ten-fold and those who sinned are left to the mercy of God, He can either punish them or forgive their sins. Only those who did not believe will be losers.

The paragraph continues with another rhetorical question: to whom belongs whatever dwells in the night and the day? This expresses the spaciousness of the kingdom of God. The first question is a statement of the extent of the kingdom in space while the second question outlines the extent of the kingdom in time. The second question ends with a reference to the ability of God to hear and know everything which emphasizes His absolute control over this vast kingdom.

Further emphasis of the Godliness of God, is the rhetorical question posed in verse 14, “Say, ‘Shall I take a protecting guardian other than God, the Originator of the heavens and the earth, and He feeds (others) and is not (Himself) fed.’ Say, ‘I am commanded to be the first who submits himself. You should not be of the polytheists.’” Who is more worthy of my loyalty than God, who created heavens and earth and who feeds and is not fed. The use of the word protecting guardian exemplifies the fundamental concept underlying Islam: the absolute and voluntary submission to God and the rejection of all forms of associating partners with God. This is a clear and unequivocal statement of submission to God. Submission means that one does not take a protecting guardian other than God. It means listening, obeying, surrendering, and worshiping God alone. It also means seeking help from God alone. He is the absolute ruler in all affairs.

“Say, ‘Surely I fear, if I disobey my Lord, the torment of a grievous day. He, from whom it is averted on that day, God indeed has shown mercy unto him; and this is a manifest achievement.’” One motivation for this submission is the fear of the torment on the Day of Resurrection. It will be a grievous day. Those who escape the punishment of that day will be the successful ones.

The paragraph ends with an unequivocal statement of the absolute submission to the one God, a clear declaration of the belief in the Oneness of God. “And if God touches you with affliction, there is none to remove it but He; and if He touches you with good, then He has power over all things. And He is the Dominator over His servants; and He is the Wise, the Totally-Aware. Say, ‘What thing is the greatest in testimony?’ Say, ‘God is witness between you and me; and this Quran has been revealed to me that with it I may warn you and whomsoever it reaches. Do you really bear witness that there are other gods with God?’ Say, ‘I do not bear witness.’ Say, ‘He is only one God, and surely I disown that which you set up (with Him).’” This is the climax of the discourse. The Prophet (PBUH) has been commanded to submit to God alone. He confronted the idolaters who associate partners with God refuting all their claims and stating in unequivocal terms the demarcation between submitting to God and associating partners with Him. He calls them to submit and accept God’s witness as it has been presented in the Quran which he was commanded to convey to people.

Verses: 20 to 32

20. Those whom We have given the Scripture recognize (this revelation) as they recognize their sons; (as for) those who have lost their souls, they do not believe.
21. And who does greater wrong than he who forges a lie against God or (he who) rejects His revelation; surely the wrongdoers will not be successful.
22. And on the day when We shall gather them all together, then We shall say to those who associated others (with God), “Where are your associates whom you claimed?”
23. Then their excuse would be nothing but that they would say, “By God, our Lord, we were not polytheists.”
24. See how they lie against themselves, and that which they forged has failed them.
25. And of them is he who listens to you, and We have cast veils over their hearts lest they understand it, and deafness in their ears; and even if they see every sign they will not believe in it; so much so that when they come to you they will only dispute with you; those who disbelieve say, “This is nothing but the stories of the ancients.”
26. And they prohibit (others) from it; and they go far away from it, and they only bring destruction upon their own souls though they do not realize it.

27. And if you could see when they are made to stand before the fire, then they shall say, "Would that we were sent back, and we would not reject the revelations of our Lord and we would be of the believers."
28. Nay, what they concealed before shall become manifest to them; and if they were sent back, they would certainly go back to that which they are forbidden, and most surely they are liars.
29. And they say, "There is nothing but our lives of this world, and we shall not be raised."
30. And if you could see when they are made to stand before their Lord. He will say, "Is not this the truth?" They will say, "Yes, by our Lord." He will say, "Taste then the torment because you disbelieved."
31. They are losers indeed who deny the meeting of God; until when the hour comes upon them all of a sudden they shall say, "Alas for us, that we neglected it." And they shall bear their burdens on their backs; now surely evil is that which they bear.
32. And this world's life is nothing but a game and a distraction and certainly the abode of the Hereafter is better for those who remain conscious of God; do you not then understand? (6:20-32)

"Those whom We have given the Scripture recognize (this revelation) as they recognize their sons; (as for) those who have lost their souls, they do not believe." The statement that the people who were given the Scripture before realized that the Quran was God's revelation and that Muhammad (PBUH) was His Messenger has been repeatedly mentioned in the Quran. This statement was addressed both to the people of the Scripture themselves and to the idolaters of Mecca. The statement was made to confront the people of the Scripture when they opposed the new message. This verse, which has been revealed in Mecca, was addressed to the idolaters of Mecca to remind them that the people of the Scripture knew of the authenticity of this message because they were familiar with God's revelation. Rejection of the new message was then only motivated by their obstinacy and their bigoted attitude. The verse continues to warn that this denial will only result in the loss of the souls of those who disbelieve.

"And who does greater wrong than he who forges a lie against God or (he who) rejects His revelation; surely the wrongdoers will not be successful. And on the day when We shall gather them all together, then shall We say to those who associated others (with God), 'Where are your associates whom you claimed?' Then their excuse would be nothing but that they would say, 'By God, our Lord, we were not polytheists.' See how they lie against themselves, and that which they forged has failed them." The term "wrongdoing" has been used in the Quran as a synonym to associating partners with God. Associating partners with God constitutes rejection of the truth. It is an injustice committed against the truth, an injustice against oneself, and injustice against people. Associating partners with God amounts to usurping God's right to be worshipped. Surely those who committed injustice will never be successful.

Associating partners with God has different forms, worshiping idols is only one of them. Associating partners with God, in its essence, is to attach one of God's attributes to someone other than God. Forms of associating partners with God include the belief that someone has the power to control the events of life. Another form is to follow manmade laws which contravene the divine project. Those who practice any kind of associating partners with God will be gathered on the Day of Judgment and will be asked, “Where are those whom you associated with God?” Faced with this great trial, they will renounce everything they believed in besides God, during their worldly lives. However, it will be too late for salvation. They have believed in a lie, and on this day all lies will be useless.

“And of them is he who listens to you, and We have cast veils over their hearts lest they understand it, and deafness in their ears; and even if they see every sign they will not believe in it;” The verse describes the argumentative attitude of the disbelievers and their determination to fight the truth. The verse describes an example of people whose senses do not function, they listen but do not hear, and they see but do not comprehend. Their minds are sealed. This is God’s decree that they would not be able to listen and understand. However, God showed us the way for guidance, “And those who strive in Our (cause), We will certainly guide them to our Paths; for verily God is with those who do right.” (29:69). God also says, “By the soul, and the proportion and order given to it; and how He imbued it with moral failings as well as God consciousness. Truly he succeeds who purifies it; and he fails who corrupts it.” (91: 7-10). It is the divine formula that guidance is bestowed on those who strive to achieve it. But those mentioned in the verse above did not try to reach for guidance. On the contrary they tuned out the receptors that feed into their initial natural disposition which is designed to reach for guidance. Thus, their initial natural dispositions were sealed off and could not receive guidance. Every human being is born with an initial natural disposition that is designed to seek the truth. They chose to suppress this initial natural disposition so God sealed their minds. They not only prevented themselves from listening to the Quran, but they also banned others to listen. This will only result in their destruction. On the Day of Judgment, they will be faced with a situation that they cannot escape. The truth will be manifest and they will be overwhelmed by their own regret. They will only wish if they can get a second chance. However, even if they were given a second chance they would not take advantage of this new chance. Their attitudes do not change.

“And they say, ‘There is nothing but our life of this world, and we shall not be raised.’ And if you could see when they are made to stand before their Lord. He will say, ‘Is not this the truth?’ They will say, ‘Yes, by our Lord.’ He will say, ‘Taste then the torment because you disbelieved.’ They are losers indeed who reject the meeting of God; until when the hour comes upon them all of a sudden they shall say, ‘Alas for us, that we neglected it.’ And they shall bear their burdens on their backs; now surely evil is that which they bear. And this world’s life is nothing but a game and a distraction and certainly the abode of the hereafter is better for those who remain conscious of God; do you not then understand?” These verses address the issue of accountability.

Accountability is an integral part of the belief system in Islam. It is one of the foundations upon which the Islamic way of life is built. It is also the foundation for the holistic approach to life that Islam embraces. From an Islamic perspective, human life extends along the dimensions of time and space. Death is not the end of human life. The life of a human being spans this world and the Hereafter. The life in this world is finite but the life in the Hereafter is eternal. This motivates people to look beyond this life to the Hereafter and work for the eternal life as hard as they work for this life. Human life extends in space because space spans the earth and the heaven with its paradise and Hell fire. The nature of the life in the Hereafter is one of the secrets that only God knows. The verses end with the ultimate verdict: the great loss for those who denied the meeting with God. They refused to believe in the Day of Judgment and the Hereafter; and they thought that they will not be accountable for their actions in this life. They will carry their sins on their backs in their trek to Hell fire.

Verses: 33 to 39

33. We know indeed that what they say certainly grieves you. It is not you they reject; but the wrongdoers deny the revelations of God.
34. And certainly messengers before you were rejected, but they persevered over their rejection and their persecution until Our help came to them; and there is none to change the words of God; and you have already received some account of those messengers.
35. And if their turning away is hard on you, then if you can seek a tunnel in the ground or a ladder to the skies so that you should bring them a sign; and if God had pleased He would certainly have gathered them all on guidance, therefore be not one of the ignorant.
36. Only those who listen will accept; and (as to) the dead, God will raise them, then to Him they shall be returned.
37. And they say, "Why has not a sign been sent down to him from his Lord?" Say, "Surely God is able to send down a sign, but most of them do not know."
38. And there is no animal that walks on the ground nor a bird that flies with its two wings but (they are) communities like yourselves; We have not neglected anything in the Book, then to their Lord shall they be gathered.
39. And they who rejected Our revelations are deaf and dumb, in utter darkness; whom God pleases He leaves to go astray and whom He pleases He puts on the straight path. (6:33-39)

The first three verses bring consolation to the Prophet (PBUH). The idolatrous Arabs, especially those who fiercely resisted the message of Islam, never doubted the honesty and integrity of the Prophet (PBUH). They also realized that the language of the Quran is beyond the linguistic skills of humans. But they were adamant in their rejection. The Quran states that this rejection was not because they thought that the Prophet (PBUH) is a liar, but because they chose to deny the revelations of God. There is a large volume of traditions which supports this thesis and explains the reason behind their rejection. The Arab chiefs were afraid that the new religion would rob them of their authority and power. The new religion came to state that God has the ultimate authority. They did not want to confess that, "there is no deity except God," which is the foundation of Islam, because that meant they would abdicate the limitless authority that they had over their people. The verses reminded the Prophet (PBUH) with what happened to all prophets who came before him and whose stories were told in the Quran, stories that describe the extent of their perseverance and forbearance. God sent prophets, one after the other since the beginning of time to guide people to the right path. They faced denial and persecution and they persevered only to triumph at the end. But the Quran also tells the Prophet (PBUH) to be realistic in dealing with the rejection and to persevere. What other course can he follow? Did he have the means to dig an underground tunnel or to climb a ladder into the skies to bring the idolaters a convincing sign, a sign that they cannot refute.

God, in His wisdom, created humankind for a purpose. Humankind had to have certain skills and abilities to enable him to achieve that purpose. God, in His wisdom, also decreed that diversity of the human race is the rule. People are different in their ability to receive, to understand, and to respond to the signs of God. Humankind was commanded to seek the truth and was given the ability to choose whether to accept or reject the truth. The verse explained the divine project to His Prophet (PBUH), and admonished him not to be one of those who do not understand this plan.

“Only those who listen will accept; and (as to) the dead, God will raise them, then to Him they shall be returned.” God told His Prophet (PBUH) that he will meet two kinds of people. The first group is alert, with an initial natural disposition that is tuned to receive the truth. This group listens and responds favorably to the call. The other group, whose members chose to shut off their receptors and tune out their initial natural disposition are like those who are dead. This was a fundamental principle that defined the role of the Prophet (PBUH); it is people’s prerogative to choose whether they follow or reject the guidance.

“And they say, ‘Why has not a sign been sent down to him from his Lord?’ Say, ‘Surely God is able to send down a sign, but most of them do not know.’ And there is no animal that walks on the ground nor a bird that flies with its two wings but (they are) communities like yourselves; We have not neglected anything in the Book, then to their Lord shall they be gathered. And they who rejected Our revelations are deaf and dumb, in utter darkness; whom God pleases He leaves to go astray and whom He pleases He puts on the straight path.” The disbelievers asked for a sign and the Quran says God is able to bring down a sign but there is a reason for not bringing down a sign and most of them do not understand. And if they reflect on the life around them, they would realize that God’s creations are all around them. Humankind is not alone in this universe. There are other creations leading well organized lives. Everything has been planned, and nothing was left to chance. Those who choose to deny these facts and reject the revelations of God are like the deaf and the dumb in vast darkness. God will leave whom He wills to go astray, and He will guide whom He wills to the straight path. Humankind is equipped with the ability to choose between right and wrong. God helps those who seek the truth and lets those who do not, to go astray. Although everything is controlled by the will of God, but God is fair and does not treat anybody unjustly.

Verses: 40 to 49

40. Say, “Tell me if the torment of God should overtake you or the hour should come upon you, will you call (on others) besides God, if you are truthful?”

41. No, it is He you would call, He would remove that which made you to pray if He pleases and you would forget (the false gods) which you join (with Him).
42. And certainly We sent (messengers) to nations before you then We seized them with distress and affliction in order that they might humble themselves.
43. If only, when Our affliction came on them, they humbled themselves. But their hearts were hardened and Satan made all that they used to do seem fair to them.
44. But when they forgot the warning they had received, We opened for them the doors of all things, until when they rejoiced in what they were given We seized them suddenly, and they were in utter despair.
45. So the roots of the people who were wrongdoers were cut off; and all praise is due to God, the Lord of the worlds.
46. Say, "Have you considered that if God takes away your hearing and your sight and sets a seal on your hearts, who is the deity besides God that can bring them back to you?" See how We explain the revelations, yet they turn away.
47. Say, "Have you considered if the torment of God should overtake you suddenly or openly, will any be destroyed but the wrongdoers?"
48. And We send the messengers only to give good news and to warn, then whoever believes and acts aright, they shall have no fear, nor shall they grieve.
49. And (as for) those who reject Our revelations, torment shall afflict them because they transgressed. (6:40-49)

"Say, 'Tell me if the torment of God should overtake you or the hour should come upon you, will you call (on others) besides God, if you are truthful?' No, it is Him you would call, He would remove that which made you to pray if He pleases and you would forget (the false gods) which you join (with Him)." The Quran uses different approaches to address the initial natural disposition of humankind. In the previous verses, the approach was to remind people of the miracle of the creation and how it portrays the comprehensiveness of the divine project. In the present set of verses, the approach is to remind people of their spontaneous reaction when an affliction befalls them. Would they call upon anyone else except God? The question is rhetorical and the answer follows directly. It is God that they would call upon and they would forget all the false gods that they have associated with Him.

"And certainly We sent (messengers) to nations before you then We seized them with distress and affliction in order that they might humble themselves. If only, when Our affliction came on them, they humbled themselves. But their hearts were hardened and Satan made all that they used to do seem fair to them." Trials can come in the form of afflictions to be suffered, or bounty to be enjoyed. Previous generations were tried first with afflictions but in their obstinacy they refused to humble themselves to God. Their hearts were hardened and they succumbed to the temptation of the devil. When they forgot the warning, they were tested with a bounty from God. The verses paint an image of abundant bounty pouring upon them from every direction. Wealth, provisions, and worldly pleasures filled them with joy. They forgot who bestowed the blessings on them and never expressed gratitude to God. Then God seized them and they were left in utter despair. They were then completely destroyed to the last one of them. Praise be to the Lord of the worlds who cleansed the earth from the transgressors.

“Say, ‘Have you considered that if God takes away your hearing and your sight and sets a seal on your hearts, who is the god besides God that can bring them back to you?’ See how We explain the revelations, yet they turn away.” The afflictions are then personalized and brought close to people by reminding them that God can take away their hearing and their sight. He can seal upon their hearts. No one of their false gods would be able to restore their lost faculties. In spite of having all these signs explained to them they still turned away. The Arabic word used for “turning away” was usually used to describe how a camel walks askew when it is afflicted by a wound in one of its feet. The expression hints to the similarity between the two situations.

“Say, ‘Have you considered if the torment of God should overtake you suddenly or openly, will any be destroyed but the wrongdoers?’” The verses continue to threaten the disbelievers with an image of torment that will destroy the wrongdoers. Do you know that when the torment of God befalls you only the wrongdoers will perish? God’s torment can descend on them whenever He wills. It can come suddenly and unexpectedly while they are asleep, or it can come during the day when they are up and active. Either way, the torment will destroy the wrongdoers. The term “wrongdoers” is used here, as in other places in the Quran, to describe those who associate partners with God.

“And We send the messengers only to give good news and to warn, then whoever believes and acts aright, they shall have no fear, nor shall they grieve. And (as for) those who reject Our revelations, torment shall afflict them because they transgressed.” This paragraph ends by outlining the duties of the messengers of God. They were sent to deliver the message, to bring glad tidings, and to warn the people. Messengers are human beings who are sent to deliver the message to their fellow human beings. Those who receive the message have the choice either to believe or disbelieve. Those who believe and do righteous deeds, they shall not grieve for what to come nor they will be saddened for what was done. They will be forgiven for their previous sins and will be rewarded for their good deeds. As for those who denied the truth and transgressed they will be punished.

Verses: 50 to 55

50. Say, “I do not say to you, I have the treasures of God, nor do I know the unseen, nor do I say to you that I am an angel; I only follow that which is revealed to me.” Say, “Are the blind and the seeing one alike? Do you not then reflect?”
51. Use the Quran to warn those who fear that they shall be gathered to their Lord- there is no protecting guardian for them, nor any intercessor besides Him- that they may remain conscious of God.
52. And do not drive away those who call upon their Lord in the morning and the evening, they desire only His face; you are in no way accountable for them nor they are for you; if you should drive them away you would become one of the wrongdoers.

53. And thus We have made some of them a test for the others so that they say, "Are these whom God favored among us?" Does not God know best those who are grateful?
54. And when those who believe in Our revelations come to you, say, "Peace be on you, your Lord has ordained mercy on Himself, verily, if any of you did evil through ignorance, then repents after that and acts aright, then He is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy."
55. And thus do We explain the revelations and so that the way of the guilty may become clear. (6:50-55)

"Say, 'I do not say to you, I have the treasures of God, nor do I know the unseen, nor do I say to you that I am an angel; I only follow that which is revealed to me.' Say, 'Are the blind and the seeing one alike? Do you not then reflect?'" The arrogant idolaters of Mecca challenged the Prophet (PBUH) to bring about a miracle. They asked him if he could transform the hills of Safa and Marwa into gold or move them so that they can plant the land in their place. They asked him if he could foretell what will happen in the future, could he bring down an angel, or could he bring down a book from heaven. These questions were the product of previous mythologies that the Arabs were privy to. Old mythologies conveyed distorted concepts of the nature of prophets and prophet-hood. This verse was revealed to correct these false conceptions of the nature, duties and capabilities of the messengers of God. It also portrays the merciful characteristics of God and His grace in accepting the repentance of those who err. One of the aspects of His grace is the detailed guidance given so that people can base their choice of belief or disbelief on clear evidence.

So, the Messenger was asked to respond to the idolatrous Arabs, who demanded the Prophet (PBUH) to perform miracles, explaining to them that he is a mere mortal. He was not given the treasures of God, he was not an angel, nor was he able to prophesize about the future. He brought them a faith that appeals to the initial natural disposition of humankind, free of the myth that distorted previous faiths. The new faith brought guidance that opens the eyes of people to new meanings. The verses likened those who received and accepted the guidance to people who can see, but those who refused the guidance were blind. God gave humankind a brain that is able to receive, reflect, and understand the divine revelations. This is humankind's opportunity for salvation. If humankind turns away from the divine revelation and endeavors to make it independently on his own, then he will certainly stray away from the straight path. Those who claim that human beings can arrive at the truth through a human thought process are misled. Their claim is based on the assumption that human thought and revelation are both God inspired. This claim is certainly untrue. Human intellect is unable to perceive and comprehend in a comprehensive way the whole picture of the universe and the creation. The divine revelation provides a holistic approach to life and the universe. It allows humankind to perceive, comprehend, and experience the universal balance without which humankind becomes a prey of his own whims and desires. Humankind is commanded to think and reflect. The divine revelation provides a light to guide the thought process and protect it against going astray. Complying with God's revelation does not limit the domain of the human thought process, but provides the needed protection.

“Use the Quran to warn those who fear that they shall be gathered to their Lord- there is no protecting guardian for them, nor any intercessor besides Him- that they may remain conscious of God. And do not drive away those who call upon their Lord in the morning and the evening, they desire only His face; you are in no way accountable for them nor they for you; if you should drive them away you would become one of the wrongdoers. And thus We have made some of them a test for the others so that they say, ‘Are these whom God favored among us?’ Does not God know best those who are grateful? And when those who believe in Our revelations come to you, say, ‘Peace be on you, your Lord has ordained mercy on Himself, verily, if any of you did evil through ignorance, then repents after that and acts aright, then He is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.’” The Prophet (PBUH) was commanded to deliver the message to all people but be sensitive to those who are seeking the grace of their Lord. He was commanded to treat people equally because all members of the human race have equal worth in front of God. These verses came to address a situation which arose when some of the chiefs of Mecca refused the call of the Prophet (PBUH) because they looked down upon those who accepted Islam before them. The earlier followers of Islam were mostly poor and came from the lower strata of the society. The chiefs wanted to be members of an exclusive club. However, the Quran clearly tells the Prophet (PBUH) that humankind’s worth is not measured by his earnings. This was a test for the chiefs: what did they consider more important, seeking the grace of God or enjoying the worldly benefits of their social status? The verse gives a clear message that humankind’s worth is not measured in terms of ethnicity, gender, wealth, or social status. People have equal worth in the sight of God. He favors those who reflect and embrace His guidance and seek His grace. The arrogant chiefs were taken by surprise, “Are these whom God favored among us?” They thought, God should favor them over the poor, were they not the chiefs? The answer they got is full of meaning, “Does not God know best those who are grateful?” Guidance is not awarded to people according to their status. Guidance is a blessing from God to be bestowed upon those who appreciate God’s blessing. The objections that the chiefs raised were motivated by their ignorance of God’s standard.

“And when those who believe in Our revelations come to you, say, ‘Peace be on you, your Lord has ordained mercy on Himself, verily, if any of you did evil through ignorance, then repents after that and acts aright, then He is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.’” Those who believe do not only receive the blessing of guidance, but they are also rewarded by God’s mercy. God has ordained on himself to be merciful to His servants. The door for God’s forgiveness will always be left wide open for those who fall then repent. The word “evil” is quite general, it includes any type of sin. God has promised to forgive all sins upon repentance.

“And thus do We explain the revelations and so that the way of the guilty may become clear.” The message came to clarify and explain the criteria to be used to differentiate between right and wrong for people so that they are able to choose on the basis of clear definitions. The message does not only define what is right and shows the path that the believers should follow, but it also defines the falsehood so that those who choose to follow the path of falsehood would realize their error.

Verses: 56 to 65

56. Say, "I am forbidden to worship those whom you call upon besides God." Say, "I do not follow your whims, for if I did, I would go astray and I would not be of those who are rightly guided."
57. Say, "I do have a clear proof from my Lord while you deny Him; what you seek to hasten is not in my power; the judgment is God's alone; He tells the truth and He is the best of judges."
58. Say, "If that which you desire to hasten were in my power, the matter would have certainly been decided between you and me; and God knows best who the wrongdoers are."
59. And with Him are the keys of the unseen - none knows them but He; and He knows what is in the land and sea, and no leaf falls without His knowledge, nor a grain in the darkness of the earth, nor anything green nor dry but (it is all) in a clear record.
60. And He it is who takes your souls at night (in sleep), and He knows what you have done by day, then He raises you up again; that an appointed term may be fulfilled; then to Him is your return, then He will inform you of what you were doing.
61. And He is the Dominator, over His servants, and He sends keepers over you; until when death comes to one of you, Our messengers cause him to die, and they are not remiss.
62. Then are they sent back to God, their true Lord; certainly His is the judgment and He is swiftest in taking account.
63. Say, "Who is it that delivers you from the darkness of land and sea (when) you call upon Him in humility, and discretely: if He delivers us from this, we should certainly be of the grateful ones."
64. Say, "God delivers you from them and from every distress, but again you set up partners (with Him)."
65. Say, "He has the power to send on you a torment from above you or from beneath your feet, or to throw you into confusion, (making you) different parties; and to make you taste mutual vengeance - each from the other." See how We explain the revelations that they may understand. (6:56-65)

"Say, 'I am forbidden to worship those whom you call upon besides God.' Say, 'I do not follow your whims, for if I did, I would go astray and I would not be of those who are rightly guided.'" This verse responds to a compromise that the idolaters of Mecca suggested. If the Messenger (PBUH) were to worship their deities, they would join him in worshipping God. God commanded His Messenger (PBUH) to rebuff the idolaters of Mecca, telling them that he could not worship those whom they associate with God. One should reflect on the use of the words "those whom" which would usually refer to living beings. So the reference here is not only to the idols that the idolaters used to worship but also to the chiefs who used to determine the lawful and the forbidden. This is considered a kind of associating partners with God. Since these chiefs usurp God's right as the sole legislating authority. Islam considers following manmade rules which contravene God's law a sin equivalent to associating partners with God.

" Say, 'I do have a clear proof from my Lord while you deny Him; what you seek to hasten is not in my power; the judgment is God's alone; He tells the truth and He is the best of judges.'" This was a command to the Prophet (PBUH) to make an unequivocal proclamation of his belief in God, a belief based on deep understanding of the concept of the Oneness of God and the revelation that he received. It is the same proclamation that Noah, Saleh, Abraham, and Jacob (PBUT) all made before. This is a proclamation that reflected a deep faith in God.

"Say, 'If that which you desire to hasten were in my power, the matter would have certainly been decided between you and me; and God knows best who are the wrongdoers.'" The Messenger (PBUH) reiterated the limits of his power. The idolaters wanted to see a prophet who performs miracles. So, God commanded him to explain to them the limits of his authority. He was only a mortal who received God's revelations and was commanded to convey them to the people. God states the truth and judges between people. He is totally aware of who the wrongdoers are.

"And with Him are the keys of the unseen - none knows them but He; and He knows what is in the land and sea, and no leaf falls without His knowledge, nor a grain in the darkness of the earth, nor anything green nor dry but (it is all) in a clear record." The verses continue to talk about the attributes of God, only God has the comprehensive knowledge of everything. The verses outline the vastness of the unseen. God is aware of every minute detail of everything that happens on land or at sea. Whether it is a falling leaf or a hidden grain; green or dry everything is recorded in a book. God's knowledge is comprehensive. It encompasses the known and the unknown; and that which grows, and that which perishes.

The verses mention the unseen and its keys and state that the knowledge of these keys belongs only to God. The belief in the unseen is one of the articles of faith. The belief in God encompasses the belief in the unseen. No human is able to understand the essence of God, so we can only recognize God through His actions. The belief in the Hereafter is a part of the belief in the unseen because the Hereafter, the resurrection, the accountability of humankind, and Hellfire are all matters of the unseen. The belief in the unseen includes the belief in the angels and in destiny whether good or bad.

The Quran identifies two realms in this world: the seen and the unseen. Not everything unknown to humankind is unseen. Humankind is given the capability of acquiring the knowledge so he can further the boundaries of the unknown and discover the rules that govern this universe within the boundaries decreed by God. Understanding the rules that govern the universe allows humankind to control the universal powers in order to be able to fulfill the purpose of his creation. Humankind was created to be the vicegerent of God on earth. This entails advancing the knowledge to better utilize the available resources for the benefit of the inhabitants of the earth. The fact that humankind is unable to know the unseen let alone control it does not mean that it does not exist. This is the Islamic concept of the unseen. Muslims believe in the unseen but they also believe that there are rules that govern the universe. We are commanded to explore these rules, understand them, and use them to the advancement of life on earth. This is the way to fulfill the mission of God's vicegerent on earth.

“And He it is who takes your souls at night (in sleep), and He knows what you have done by day, then He raises you up again; that an appointed term may be fulfilled; then to Him is your return, then He will inform you of what you were doing.” Humankind cannot deny the existence of the unseen while we experience its forms in our daily life. The Quran reminds us of the different aspects of the unseen that we experience every day. Sleep, which is a form of death, is one aspect of the unseen. God moves us from the realm of the unseen to the realm of the seen to continue our lives for a certain period of time. He is well aware of what gain or loss, good or bad we attain using our senses. Then to Him we return to be held accountable for our deeds.

“And He is the Dominator, over His servants, and He sends keepers over you; until when death comes to one of you, Our messengers cause him to die, and they are not remiss. Then are they sent back to God, their true Lord; certainly His is the judgment and He is swiftest in taking account.” God reigns supreme over His servants, and He has the absolute authority over His creation. No amount of freedom, knowledge, or power can allow humankind to escape God's reach. He sends keepers over His servants. In other places of the Quran, it is explained that the keepers are angels, but the present verses do not dwell on the nature of these keepers. The focus here is on the task of the keepers: keeping records of humankind's actions. Everything humankind does is recorded. Humankind is not alone even for a split second. Each single deed and each single movement are recorded by the keepers. Then the predetermined moment of death comes, a moment predetermined in God's knowledge but is unknown to humankind. It is part of the unseen. At this precise moment which comes unexpectedly, a dedicated messenger performs his task and puts the human being to death. Everyone will return to the true Lord. He is the one who created people, allowed them to lead their lives under His control, and brought them back to Him at the appointed time to judge them. Only He can judge, and only to Him people are accountable. He is swift in His reckoning.

“Say, ‘Who is it that delivers you from the darkness of land and sea (when) you call upon Him in humility, and discretely: If He delivers us from this, we should certainly be of the grateful ones.’ Say, ‘God delivers you from them and from every distress, but again you set up partners (with Him).’” At times of adversity, the initial natural human disposition forces human beings to seek help from God. However, once the affliction is removed and life becomes comfortable, these same human beings quickly forget their Lord. The verses paint vivid images for the times of adversity and images of darkness on land and at sea.

“Say, ‘He has the power to send on you a torment from above you or from beneath your feet, or to throw you into confusion, (making you) different parties; and to make you taste mutual vengeance - each from the other.’ See how We explain the revelations that they may understand.” Then people are reminded that God can overwhelm them with His torment, which can come in the form of a natural disaster or in the form of struggle between different groups of people. Depicting a disaster coming from above or below is more frightening than if it were coming from left or right. One may be able to avoid danger coming from the side, but danger coming from above or below is usually unavoidable.

Verses: 66 to 70

66. And your people rejected it, although it is the very truth. Say, "I have not been put in charge of you."
67. Each prophecy has an appointed term, and you will come to know (it).
68. And when you see those who engage into false discourses about Our revelations, turn away from them until they turn to another topic, and if Satan causes you to forget, then, when you have remembered, do not sit with the wrongdoers.
69. The righteous are not held in any way accountable for them (the wrongdoers), but their duty is to remind them, that they may become conscious of God.
70. And leave those who have taken their religion for a play and amusement and are deceived by this worldly life. And continue to remind (them) with the Quran, lest a soul should be damned for what it has earned; it shall not have besides God neither a protecting guardian nor an intercessor, and if it should seek to offer every ransom, it shall not be accepted from it; these are the ones who will be ruined for what they earned; they shall have a drink of boiling water and a painful torment because they disbelieved. (6:66-70)

"And your people rejected it, although it is the very truth. Say, 'I have not been put in charge of you.' Each prophecy has an appointed term, and you will come to know (it)." The verse addressed the Prophet (PBUH) and comforted him and the believers, telling him that what was revealed to him is the truth, even if his people rejected it. Their rejection does not change the reality. It is God that decrees what is true and what is false. The Prophet (PBUH) was told that he is not responsible for changing the hearts of people. His task is to deliver the message and it is up to the people to decide and face the consequences of their decision on the appointed date.

"And when you see those who engage into false discourses about Our revelations, turn away from them until they turn to another topic, and if Satan causes you to forget, then, when you have remembered, do not sit with the wrongdoers. The righteous are not held in any way accountable for them (the wrongdoers), but their duty is to remind them, that they may become conscious of God." The command was then issued to the Prophet (PBUH) and the believers, not to socialize with those who denigrate the words of God. It is a command to abandon an assembly once its participants start reviling the message. However, the disbelievers are only accountable to God and the only responsibility that the believers have is to remind the disbelievers with the message, perhaps they would heed the advice.

"And leave those who have taken their religion for a play and amusement and are deceived by this worldly life. And continue to remind (them) with the Quran, lest a soul should be damned for what it has earned; it shall not have besides God neither a protecting guardian nor an intercessor, and if it should seek to offer every ransom, it shall not be accepted from it; these are the ones who will be ruined for what they earned; they shall have a drink of boiling water and a painful torment because they disbelieved.” The command was then reiterated to the Prophet (PBUH) and the believers to leave those who consider their religion a game alone. Those were the ones who were deluded by the gains of this worldly life. However, it is the duty of the believers to continue to remind them with the message and the consequences of their behavior. Each soul will be held accountable for its deeds, there will be no intercessor to intercede on its behalf, nor will there be a protecting guardian to protect it from the wrath of God. No ransom will be big enough to save any soul. Those who rejected will be given boiling drinks that will burn their throats and their stomachs. They will be subjected to a painful chastisement for their rejection.

Verses: 71 to 73

71. Say, “Shall we call on things besides God, which do not benefit nor harm us, and turn back on our heels after receiving guidance from God, like him whom the devils have lured and confused him so he wanders around through the earth? He has companions who call him to the right way, (saying), ‘Come to us.’” Say, “Definitely, the guidance of God is the only true guidance, and we are commanded that we should submit to the Lord of the worlds.”
72. And that you should establish prayers and be conscious of Him; to Him you will be gathered.
73. And it is He who created the heavens and the earth in truth, and on the day He says, “Be” and it will be.” His word is the truth, and His is the Sovereignty the Day when the trumpet shall be blown. He is the Knower of the unseen and the seen; and He is the Wise, the Totally-Aware. (6:71-73)

“Say, ‘Shall we call on things besides God, which do not benefit nor harm us, and turn back on our heels after receiving guidance from God, like him whom the devils have lured and confused him so he wanders around through the earth? He has companions who call him to the right way, (saying), “Come to us.”” The verses continue to elaborate on the theme of the belief in the Oneness of God and to repudiate associating partners with Him in a strong cadence. It draws the parallel between those who abandon Islam after they have been guided and a person who is confused; he wanders around and does not know the right direction to follow. Only God’s guidance is the true guidance. This strong cadence ends with a note of a high pitch expressing the absolute authority of God. This authority will become apparent to all His creation on the day the trumpet will be blown. On that day all those in the graves will be resurrected, and the truth will become clear to everyone: God has absolute authority, and to Him everyone will return.

“Say, ‘Definitely, the guidance of God is the only true guidance, and we are commanded that we should submit to the Lord of the worlds.’ And that you should establish prayers and be conscious of Him; to Him you will be gathered. And it is He who created the heavens and the earth in truth, and on the day He says, 'Be' it will be. His word is the truth, and His is the kingdom on the day when the trumpet shall be blown. He is the Knower of the unseen and the seen; and He is the Wise, the Totally-Aware. Muhammad, say to the idolaters that they are worshiping those who can neither benefit nor harm them. Whether it is a person, an idol, a tree, an angel, or a spirit no one can benefit or harm them except God. Things happen only according to God's will. Those who are lured by the devils to turn their backs to the guidance, will be thrown in a state of disarray and confusion. Their hearts will be torn between the various deities they worshiped. Certainly, God's guidance is the only true guidance.

The use of the term, "Lord of the worlds" here is significant. It states unequivocally that God is the Lord of the universe. We are commanded to submit to Him. The whole universe has submitted to God, why would humankind be an exception? God created the heavens and the earth in truth. God has the absolute power to create, change, and transform. He simply says, "Be," and it is. He knows the seen and the unseen and He is the Wise, Totally-Aware.

Verses: 74 to 94

74. And when Abraham said to his father, Azar, "Do you take idols for deities? Surely I see you and your people in manifest error."
75. And thus did We show Abraham the kingdom of the heavens and the earth so that he may have certitude.
76. So when the night covered him over, he saw a star; he said, "Is this my lord?" So when it set, he said, "I do not love things that set."
77. Then when he saw the moon rising, he said, "Is this my lord?" So when it set, he said, "Unless my Lord guides me I shall certainly be among those who go astray."
78. Then when he saw the sun rising, he said, "Is this my lord? This is the greatest?" So when it set, he said, "My people, surely I disown all that what you set up as partners with God."
79. Surely I have set my face firmly and truly, towards Him who originated the heavens and the earth, and I shall never set up partners with God."
80. His people disputed with him. He said, "Do you dispute with me about God? And He has indeed guided me; and I do not fear in any way what you associate with Him, unless my Lord pleases; my Lord encompasses all things in His knowledge; will you not then be admonished?"

94. And certainly you have come to Us alone as We created you the first time, and you have left behind your backs the things which We gave you, and We do not see with you your intercessors whom you alleged to be God's associates; certainly the ties between you are now cut off and what you alleged has deserted you. (6:74-94)

This long paragraph uses a different approach to discuss the main theme of this Sura. It establishes the fundamentals of faith by introducing a comprehensive understanding of God and the relationship between humankind and his Creator. The paragraph uses a new style. The concept of the Oneness of God is introduced through an example of a dialogue which would have taken place between the messengers of God who were sent before Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) and their people. The verses narrate the story of Prophet Abraham (PBUH) and the dialogue between him and his father. It shows how the sound initial natural disposition rejects the belief in the idols and longs to find the One true God.

This initial natural human disposition motivated Prophet Abraham (PBUH) to reflect on the creation of God in his search for God. He reached the conclusion that his father and his people were committing a great error in worshiping idols and he confronted his father with this conclusion.

“And when Abraham said to his father, Azar, ‘Do you take idols for gods? Surely I see you and your people in manifest error.’ And thus did We show Abraham the kingdom of the heavens and the earth so that he may have certitude. So when the night covered him over, he saw a star; he said, ‘Is this my lord?’ So when it set, he said, ‘I do not love things that set.’ Then when he saw the moon rising, he said, ‘Is this my lord?’ So when it set, he said, ‘Unless my Lord guides me I shall certainly be among those who go astray.’ Then when he saw the sun rising, he said, ‘Is this my lord? This is the greatest?’ So when it set, he said, ‘My people, surely I disown all that what you set up as partners with God. Surely I have set my face firmly and truly, towards Him who originated the heavens and the earth, and I shall never set up partners with God.’” Prophet Abraham’s (PBUH) argument reflected the disposition of the sound initial human nature which refuses to accept idol worship which his people were practicing. Prophet Abraham’s (PBUH) portrays the example of the sound initial natural disposition which God imbued humans with.

Prophet Abraham (PBUH), who was known for his kindness, must have endured a great hardship to confront his father with this conclusion. So, Prophet Abraham (PBUH) was rewarded by God. He was shown the nature of the divine kingdom and the secrets of the universe. His initial disposition to reject the worship of idols is strengthened by this knowledge to move him from the stage of rejecting the worship of idols to the stage of the belief in the One true God. The process is described in a series of observations and conclusions that he drew. This was a difficult journey for Prophet Abraham (PBUH). It was the journey from a belief motivated by the initial natural human disposition to a belief based on awareness, a belief which led to the acceptance of duties and laws dictated by the divine project. These were the duties and laws included in the message delivered by the different messengers of God. The Message became then the covenant between God and humankind.

“His people disputed with him. He said, ‘Do you dispute with me about God? And He has guided me indeed; and I do not fear in any way those that you associate with Him, unless my Lord pleases; my Lord encompassed all things in His knowledge; will you not then be admonished? And how should I fear what you have associated (with Him), while you do not fear that you have associated with God that about which He has not sent down to you any authority; which then of the two parties has more right for security, if you know?’” His people were misguided in their idol worship, unable to think or reflect. They argued with him, at no avail. He completed his journey seeking the truth, and he was guided by his Lord. He had no fear of the false gods which they worshiped. He responded to his people threats; it is they who should be afraid of God. He asked them a rhetorical question: who is worthy of the security? The answer came from the higher heaven, and God’s decree was pronounced, “Those who believe and do not obscure their faith with wrongdoing, those who shall have the security and they are rightly guided. And this was Our argument which we gave Abraham against his people; We exalt in dignity whom We please; surely your Lord is Wise, Omniscient.” This was the argument that Prophet Abraham (PBUH) had against his people; a God inspired argument that refuted his people’s claims and raised his status high above them. God is surely Wise and Omniscient.

“And We gave him Isaac and Jacob; each did We guide, and We guided Noah before, and of his descendants, David, Solomon, Job, Joseph, and Aaron; and thus We reward the doers of good. And Zachary and John and Jesus and Elijah; all in the ranks of the righteous; and Ishmael and Elisha and Jonah and Lot; and all of them We preferred above all other people. And from among their fathers and their descendants and their brethren, and We chose them and guided them to the straightway. This is God’s guidance; He guides whom He pleases of His servants. If they were to associate partners with Him, certainly what they did would be in vain. These whom We gave the Scripture and the Wisdom and the Prophet-hood; therefore, if these disbelieve in it We have already entrusted it to a people who believe in it. These are they whom God guided, therefore follow their guidance. Say, ‘I do not ask you for any reward for it; it is nothing but a reminder for the worlds.’” The verses continue to mention a number of the messengers of God, seventeen in total, in addition to Prophets Noah (PBUH) and Abraham (PBUH). All were chosen by God, all excelled in performing their tasks and all were rewarded by God. Their status was raised high above their people just like Abraham’s (PBUH) status was raised high above his people before. These are the messengers who brought God’s guidance to their people, who declared that the deeds of all who associate partners with God will be frustrated. This is a statement which identifies the source of guidance that people on earth can avail. The messengers brought God’s guidance to people. This is the only source of guidance and the deeds of those who seek different sources for guidance will be frustrated.

The messengers were given the Scripture, the Prophet-hood and the Wisdom to guide people to the straight path. They are the examples to be followed by those who are guided. Those who are guided will follow the example set by the messengers and will carry the responsibility of spreading the message, in spite of those who associate partners with God. The Prophet (PBUH) should follow the example of the previous messengers. He should make it clear to the idolaters that he is not expecting a reward from them. He is bringing them a reminder so that they can heed God’s guidance.

“They have no grasp of God’s true measure when they say, ‘God did not reveal anything to a mortal.’ Say, ‘Who revealed the Scripture which Moses brought, a light and guidance to people, which you put on parchments which you show some while you conceal much? And you were taught what you did not know, (neither) you nor your fathers. Say, ‘God;’ then leave them to play in their vain discourses. And this is a Book We have revealed, blessed, confirming that which is before it, and that you may warn the mother of the cities and those around it; and those who believe in the Hereafter believe in it, and they attend to their prayers constantly.” The idolatrous Arabs refused to admit that Muhammad (PBUH) was a messenger of God. This rejection amounted to a denial that God can send a messenger. They underestimated the power of God. This rejection also portrayed their ignorance of the attributes of God. He is the Generous, the Great, the Just, the Merciful, the Omniscient, and the Wise. He will not leave His creation without guidance. God knows best His creation and knows best their needs. He knows the struggle that humankind has to go through against his whims and desires on one side and against Satan on the other side. So, humankind needs guidance to support him in this struggle. God provided guidance through His messengers.

An example of these messengers is Prophet Moses (PBUH) who was given a Scripture a light and guidance for people. The Quran is another example for the Scripture that was revealed by God to His messengers. It is a blessed Book that confirms the Scripture that was revealed before it. It brings warning to the people of Mecca and its surroundings. Mecca is the site of the first house that was established on earth for people to worship the One true God. God made this house a safe and secure place for people. From that house came out the universal call to all people to believe in God and to it the believers come back to perform pilgrimage, thus they complete the circle. Those who believe in the accountability of humankind do not find it difficult to believe that God sent messengers to guide people to the straight path. They keep their prayers to maintain a strong relationship with their Lord.

“And who does greater wrong than he who forges a lie against God, or says, ‘It has been revealed to me;’ While nothing has been revealed to him, and he who says, ‘I can reveal the like of what God has revealed?’ And if you could see the wrongdoers in the agonies of death and the angels shall spread forth their hands, ‘Give up your souls; today you will be recompensed with an ignominious torment because you spoke against God other than the truth and (because) you showed arrogance against His revelations.’ And certainly you have come to Us alone as We created you the first time, and you have left behind your backs the things which We gave you, and We do not see with you your intercessors whom you alleged they were God's associates; certainly the ties between you are now cut off and what you alleged has deserted you.” It has been narrated on the authority of Ibn ‘Abbas (RA) and Qatadah (RA) that these verses were revealed to respond to Musailimah the liar, his wife Sagah bint El-Hareth, and Al-Aswad Al-A’nsi who claimed that they were prophets. Each one of them claimed that they received God’s revelation. It was also narrated on the authority of Ibn ‘Abbas (RA) that ‘Abd-Allah bin Sa’ad bin Abi Sarh was the one who said, “I can reveal the like of what God has revealed.” He was a Muslim and one of the scribes of the Prophet (PBUH), however he became an apostate. The verses paint a horrible scene for the torment that the wrongdoers will meet. What is worse than those who make false claims about receiving a revelation from God? Those will suffer most when they are on the death bed as a result of making these false claims. They will meet their Lord as individuals, just as they were created individually in the first place. No supporters will be available to support them, nor will they have intercessors who can intercede on their behalf.

Verses: 95 to 111

95. It is God who splits the grain and the fruit stone. He brings forth the living from the dead and the dead from the living; that is God. How you then turn away from the truth?
96. He causes the dawn to break; and He has made the night for rest, and the sun and the moon for reckoning; this is laid down by the will of the Eminent, the Omniscient.
97. And He it is who has made the stars for you that you may be guided by them in the darkness of the land and the sea; truly We explain Our revelations for a people who know.
98. And He it is who has brought you into being from a single soul, then there is (for you) a resting-place and a depository; indeed, We have explained the revelations for a people who understand.
99. And He it is who sends down water from the sky, then We bring forth with it buds of all (plants), then We bring forth from it green (foliage) from which We produce thick-clustered grain; and from the palm-tree, and its sheaths, come forth clusters (of dates) within reach, and gardens of grapes and olives and pomegranates, alike and unlike; watch their fruits as they grow and ripen; most surely there are signs in this for a people who believe.
100. And they assign partners to God from among the jinn, while He created them, and they falsely attribute to Him sons and daughters without knowledge; glory be to Him, and highly exalted is He above what they ascribe (to Him).
101. He is the Originator of the heavens and the earth. How could He have a son when He has no consort, and He (Himself) created everything, and He is the Knower of all things.
102. That is God, your Lord, there is no deity but He; the Creator of all things, therefore worship Him, and He is the Guardian in charge of all things.
103. No vision can grasp Him, but His grasp is over all visions; and He is the Subtle, the Totally-Aware.
104. Indeed, there have come to you clear proofs from your Lord; whoever will therefore see, it is for his own soul and whoever will be blind, it shall be to his detriment and I am not a keeper over you.
105. And thus do We explain the revelations and that they may say, "You have studied;" and that We may make it clear to a people who know.
106. Follow what is revealed to you from your Lord; there is no deity but He; and turn away from those who associate partners with God.
107. And if God had pleased, they would not have associated partners (with Him); and We have not appointed you a keeper over them and you are not a guardian in charge of them.
108. And do not revile those whom they call upon others besides God, lest they wrongfully revile God. Thus, to every nation have We made their deeds seem fair; then to their Lord shall be their return, so He will inform them of what they did.
109. And they swear a solemn oath by God, that if a sign came to them they would most certainly believe in it. Say, "Certainly, signs are in the power of God; and what makes you sure that when it comes they will not believe?"

110. We confounded their hearts and their eyes, as they did not believe in it the first time, and We let them wander on blindly in their contumacy.

111. And even if We had sent down to them the angels and the dead had spoken to them and We had brought together all things before them, they would not believe unless God so willed, but most of them are ignorant. (6:95-111)

“It is God Who splits the grain and the fruit stone. He brings forth the living from the dead and the dead from the living; that is God. How you then turn away from the truth?”

It is the miracle which no one knows how it happens let alone how to duplicate it, the miracle of initiating life. This paragraph presents yet another approach to establish the belief in the Oneness of God. It invites humankind to reflect on various phenomena that surround us: the germination of seeds, the alternation of day and night, the motion of the sun and the moon, the use of the stars for navigation on land and at sea, and the creation of humankind.

One of the miracles that happen every moment and no one can fathom, let alone control, is the miracle of how life originates from a seemingly dead grain or a fruit stone. Each moment a grain is split and germinates; and a solid fruit stone splits and grows to produce a new tree. How does life originate from a grain or a fruit stone is still a mystery, known only to God. In the beginning, God created life from nothing. This statement is mentioned often in the Quran to point the attention to the process of creation as a confirmation of the fact of the Oneness of God, the Creator. How can people turn away from these facts?

“He causes the dawn to break; and He has made the night for rest, and the sun and the moon for reckoning; this is laid down by the will of the Eminent, the Omniscient. And He it is who has made the stars for you that you may be guided by them in the darkness of the land and the sea; truly We explain Our revelations for a people who know.”

Astronomical phenomena are also signs that point to the Oneness of the creator. God is the one who alternates the day and night and He is the One who created the sun and the moon. These phenomena point to the delicate control needed to maintain the creation and can only be provided by the One God. Among these signs are the stars which guide people in the darkness on land and at sea. The verses do not present these facts in the form of dry theories but it appeals to the initial natural human disposition. It appeals to the ability of humankind to observe and reflect on these signs. The verse ends by appealing to those who know, because to be guided by the stars one has to know which stars to look for and to understand their movements.

“And He it is who has brought you into being from a single soul, then there is (for you) a resting-place and a depository; indeed, We have explained the revelations for a people who understand.” The next phenomenon to be addressed in this group of verses is how life began and how it continues through the mating of a male and a female. This verse ends by appealing to the understanding of humankind, because to understand this phenomenon one needs a higher level of knowledge to understand how the sperm (the depository) and egg (the resting-place) come together to form the embryo from which a new human being is formed.

“And He it is who sends down water from the sky, then We bring forth with it buds of all (plants), then We bring forth from it green (foliage) from which We produce thick-clustered grain; and from the palm-tree, and its sheaths, come forth clusters (of dates) within reach, and gardens of grapes and olives and pomegranates, alike and unlike; watch their fruits as they grow and ripen; most surely there are signs in this for a people who believe.” Another sign of the Creator is the water cycle and the role of water in growing plants: a fact that is known to every one. The verse paints a beautiful scene of green plants that grow into gardens full of fruit bearing trees: palm-trees, grapevines, olive groves, and pomegranate trees. The branches bring the fruits to be handpicked and provide shade. The verse appeals to the sense of appreciation of the beauty of nature. Look at the beauty of the fruits that come out and reflect on the Creator who created this beauty. These are signs for people who believe, because belief opens up the heart of the believer to receive the signs and it provides the insight so that one can sense what is behind the visible.

“And they assign partners to God from among the jinn, while He created them, and they falsely attribute to Him sons and daughters without knowledge; glory be to Him, and highly exalted is He above what they ascribe (to Him). He is the Originator of the heavens and the earth. How could He have a son when He has no consort, and He (Himself) created everything, and He is the Knower of all things.” Having laid the foundation for the signs that point to the Oneness of the Creator, the verses begin to refute the false claims of the idolaters who worshipped the jinn. The idolatrous Arabs were once, the followers of Prophet Abraham (PBUH), but they deviated from the faith he preached which is based on the belief in the Oneness of God. The deviation must have started slowly, and then developed into a full blown polytheism which claimed that God has partners from among the jinn. But how can this be, while it is God Who created the jinn. This mythology claimed that God has sons and daughters. Glory be to God Who is high above all these false claims. He is the Creator of every thing, how can He have a son while He has no mate. His knowledge encompasses every thing. This is certainly your Lord, the creator of every thing, so serve Him. Since God is the Creator, He controls every thing and He is the provider, then only He deserves to be worshipped.

“That is God, your Lord, there is no deity but He; the Creator of all things, therefore worship Him, and He takes charge of all things. No vision can grasp Him, but His grasp is over all visions; and He is the Subtle, the Totally-Aware.” Humans do not have the ability to see God. Those who request to see God and those who request a material proof for the existence of God do not appreciate the meaning of their requests. It is beyond the ability of human beings to see God, but He sees everything. It is sufficient for them to see God through the signs of His creation. These are the signs that guide humankind to the belief in the Oneness of God. These signs provide the insight for the spiritual sight. Those who got the insight can see clearly, while those who do not get the insight are blind and the Prophet (PBUH) was not appointed a keeper over people.

“Indeed there have come to you clear proofs from your Lord; whoever will therefore see, it is for his own soul and whoever will be blind, it shall be to his detriment and I am not a keeper over you. And thus do We explain the revelations and that they may say, ‘You have studied;’ and that We may make it clear to a people who know. Follow what is revealed to you from your Lord; there is no deity but He; and turn away from those who associate partners with God. And if God had pleased, they would not have associated partners (with Him); and We have not appointed you a keeper over them, and you are not a guardian in charge of them.” The verses talk about the reaction of the idolatrous Arabs when they heard the revelations explaining the astronomical phenomena and the other signs of God which they thought were beyond the understanding of an illiterate human being like Muhammad (PBUH). So, they said to the Prophet (PBUH) you must have studied the Scripture that was revealed before. They did not realize that even the old Scripture did not address such issues. The explanation of the signs of God given in these verses was met with two kinds of reactions. Those who were not interested in the guidance nor wanted the truth, tried to find an explanation to justify Muhammad’s (PBUH) knowledge of these phenomena. They fabricated the story that he studied earlier Scripture. But those who were interested in the guidance and endeavored to seek the truth knew that this knowledge is divine and believed in it. Those are the “people who know”.

So, God commanded the Prophet (PBUH) to follow what has been revealed to him and to turn away from the idolaters. Had God willed that they follow the guidance, they would have been forced to follow. Had God willed that they would be created with an inclination towards guidance only, like the angels, He could have done that. But God created humankind with equal disposition to guidance and misguidance. God gave humankind the ability to choose, within the limits that God set, the way to follow and to reap the appropriate compensation for his choice. God’s will does not force humankind to follow one way or the other so that he can fulfill the role for which he was created. This freedom of choice is further emphasized by reiterating the role of the Prophet (PBUH), he was neither a keeper over them nor was he appointed as a guardian in charge of them. This also outlined the limits of responsibility of the Prophet (PBUH).

“And do not revile those whom they call upon others besides God, lest they wrongfully revile God. Thus, to every nation have We made their deeds seem fair; then to their Lord shall be their return, so He will inform them of what they did. And they swear a solemn oath by God, that if a sign came to them they would most certainly believe in it. Say, ‘Certainly, signs are in the power of God; and what makes you sure that when it comes they will not believe?’ We confounded their hearts and their eyes, as they did not believe in it the first time, and We let them wander on blindly in their contumacy. And even if We had sent down to them the angels and the dead had spoken to them and We had brought together all things before them, they would not believe unless God so willed, but most of them are ignorant.” This was a command to the Prophet (PBUH), and consequently to the believers, to turn away from the idolaters politely. They were commanded not to revile the false deities of the idolaters, so that the idolaters would not have the excuse to revile God. Leave them to God, they will return to Him and they will be told about what they have done. The command indicated also that it does not behoove the believers to use indecent language even in connection with false deities. It is also doubtful that using an abusive language would be productive; it may actually increase the obstinacy of the idolaters.

The paragraph ends with refuting the claim of the idolaters that if they receive a sign from God, they will believe. The Quran pointed out that the signs of God were all around them but they were obstinate in their rejection so they ignored these signs. God knew their hearts. He knew how they will react. Even if angels came down to them, or the dead were able to speak to them they would not have believed.

Verses: 111 to 113

111. And even if We were to send down angels to them, and if the dead were to speak to them, and (even if) We were to assemble before them, face to face, all the things (that can prove the truth), they would still not believe unless God so willed. But (of this) most of them are ignorant.
112. Thus, have We appointed to every prophet an enemy - devils of humankind and jinn who inspire in one another plausible discourse through guile. If your Lord willed, they would not do so; so leave them alone with their devising.
113. That the hearts of those who believe not in the Hereafter may incline thereto, and that they may take pleasure therein, and that they may earn what they are earning. (6:111-113)

The first verse is a continuation of the paragraph which was discussed in the previous part. It deals with the challenge that the idolatrous Arabs were posing to the Prophet (PBUH): they wanted the Prophet (PBUH) to bring a miracle to support his claim. They repeatedly assured the Prophet (PBUH) that if he were to bring about a miracle they would believe him. The verses dealing with this episode say, “And they swear a solemn oath by God, that if a sign came to them they would most certainly believe in it. Say, ‘Certainly, signs are in the power of God; and what makes you sure that when it comes they will not believe?’ We confounded their hearts and their eyes, as they did not believe in it the first time, and We let them wander blindly on in their contumacy.” Even the believers entertained hopes that the idolaters were honest in their statements. They wished that God would respond favorably to their request. These verses were discussed in the previous section. In this section we will simply outline lessons that we learn from these verses.

The first lesson is that faith, disbelief, guidance, and misguidance are not dependent on factual proofs. The truth is itself the proof of its validity. The truth overwhelms the heart and opens it to accept and submit to guidance. There are other obstacles that prevent people from accepting the truth other than the lack of proof. The verse says, “Certainly, signs are in the power of God; and what makes you sure that when it comes they will not believe?” We confounded their hearts and their eyes, as they did not believe in it the first time, and We let them wander blindly on in their contumacy.” Even if they receive a miracle, there is no assurance that what happened in the first instance will not repeat again and they would continue to deny the truth as they did before. Faith is a matter of the heart. Sound hearts are ready to receive the truth.

The second lesson is that the will of God is the deciding factor regarding matters of guidance and misguidance. In His wisdom, God allowed humans a certain level of freedom of choice. Humans will be tested how they use this freedom. Those who use their freedom of choice in pursuing the truth and searching for guidance will be helped by God in their pursuit; but those who choose to turn away from pursuing the truth will not get the help and will be left to dwell in darkness. The will of God prevails in any case. To God is the ultimate decision. This is what the verse, “We confounded their hearts and their eyes, as they did not believe in it the first time, and We let them wander blindly on in their contumacy,” means. And, “had we sent Angels to them, or allowed the dead to talk to them, and grouped everything forward in front of them, they would have not believed- except by the will of God- but most of them do not know.” This has also been referred to in the verse, “follow that which have been revealed to you from Your Lord, no God but Him, and turn away from the disbelievers. Had God willed, they would not have associated partners with Him. We have not made you a keeper over them and you are not a controller of their affairs.” In another verse it is stated, “Thus have We appointed to every prophet an enemy - devils of humankind and jinn who inspire in one another plausible discourse through guile. If Your Lord willed, they would not do so; so leave them alone with their devising.”

Thus, it is God who makes the final decision. He has the power to offer or withhold guidance. However, He is going to test people according to the limited freedom of choice that He granted them. He has decreed that those who strive for the truth will be guided with His help, and those who chose the road to misguidance will be left to their devices. There is no contradiction between the infinite power of God and the limited freedom of choice that was granted to humans.

The third lesson is that although humans can exercise their limited freedom of choice to obey or disobey God, but both categories are under His control. No one has the ability to escape God’s Omnipotence. However, there are two distinct domains of activities in the life of each human being. The first domain includes activities which human beings have no control over e.g. activities dictated by the biological and psychological composition of the human being. The second domain includes activities which the human being is free (within the boundaries set by God) to make decisions based on knowledge and guidance. The believers are able to maintain a balance between the two domains. This balance allows them to live in peace with themselves, because the two domains are interacting together under one set of rules. The disbelievers, on the other hand, suffer from the conflicting demands of the two domains.

The third lesson is specifically relevant to the topics dealt with in the remaining part of this Sura. The same issue comes up over and over again in different places in the Sura and under various forms. This is simply because the remaining part of the Sura deals with the concept of divinity and the authority and omnipotence of the Divine. Even those who choose to disobey the divine law cannot escape the control of God.

An interpretation of the verse, “And even if We were to send down angels to them, and if the dead were to speak to them, and (even if) We were to assemble before them, face to face, all the things (that can prove the truth), they would still not believe unless God so willed. But (of this) most of them are ignorant,” was given by Abo Ga’far Muhammad bin Jareer Al-Tabari as follows, “God told His Prophet (PBUH), ‘Muhammad, do not have any hope that these who associate partners with God would believe. Those, who said, ‘We will believe if you bring about a miracle to convince us,’ will not believe even if we were to bring the angels down to meet them face to face, or raised the dead to speak to them as a sign that you are the messenger of God; they will not believe except by God’s grace.’” Al-Tabari continued to say, “Most of these idolaters do not realize this. They think that faith and disbelief are within their power and according to their will. But God says, ‘Faith and disbelief are in my hand. No one will be guided or misguided except by the will of God.’”

I agree with Al-Tabari’s statement, however, we need to elaborate on it in light of the collection of verses which deal with the topics of guidance, misguidance, the will of God, and the freedom of choice.

Faith and misguidance are occurrences, and every occurrence takes place according to a specified measure. “We created everything according to specific measure.” (54:49) The verses that we will cite explain the law according to which a person would believe or disbelieve. Humankind has a measure of freedom in choosing the direction he wants to follow. If a person chooses to head towards guidance and strives to find the truth, he/she will be helped by God in finding the truth and becomes guided by it. If a person chooses the direction of falsehood and hated the truth, then he/she will be misguided.

In other words, humankind has the freedom to choose an attitude, but the final destination is in the hand of God. If the attitude is to seek the truth and look for true guidance, the person will be helped by God to reach that destination. However, if the attitude is to choose falsehood and avoid seeking the truth then no help will be offered by God to change that attitude.

“Thus have We appointed to every prophet an enemy - devils of humankind and jinn who inspire in one another plausible discourse through guile. If your Lord willed, they would not do so; so leave them alone with their devising. That the hearts of those who believe not in the Hereafter may incline thereto, and that they may take pleasure therein, and that they may earn what they are earning.” These devils, from among humans and jinn, and who have been destined by God to be enemies to the messengers, inspire each other with delusional and polished speech. The use of the word inspire refers to the effect that these speeches may have on the psyche of disbelievers and how they delude themselves into disbelief.

We know about the devils form among humans. We have seen them in action fighting the prophets, the truth which they brought, and those who believed with them. What about the devils from among the jinn? Jinn belong to the domain of the unseen. Only God knows the unseen. We only know about jinn that which God has told us. On this account, we know that jinn are created from fire, they have supernatural powers, and that some of them are righteous while others are evil. We also know that they are invisible but they have the ability to see us. The devils from among the jinn are able somehow to whisper to humans and try to lure them away from the straight path. However, these devils have no power over the believers who often remember God. The remembrance of God disarms the devil in his battle to tempt the believer. We know that jinn, like humans, will be held accountable on the Day of Judgment. They will be either rewarded and allowed to enter paradise or punished and destined to Hell fire. Compared to angels, jinn are the weak creation.

This verse tells us about how God made to each prophet enemies from among the devils of the humans and the jinn. Had He willed, He could have subdued these devils and prevented them from fighting the prophets, hurting the believers, and luring people away from the path of God. God could have forced them to be righteous or He could have guided them to the right path if they showed any inclination towards it. But God in His wisdom gave them the freedom of choice. He permitted them, if they wanted to, to inflict a measured amount of harm on the believers. Thus, it is a dual test: a test for the devil's desire to hurt people, and a test for the believer's ability to persevere. Ultimately, the devil can only inflict that measure of harm that God permits, "Had Your Lord willed, they would not have done it."

What do we conclude from this analysis? First, only the devils – humans and jinn- oppose the prophets and try to harm their followers. They have one role to play: the role of a mutineer. Their objective is to lure the believers away from the path of God, and in doing this, they delude themselves.

Second, these devils are not able to do all of this except by the leave of God. God, in His wisdom, uses them as a tool to test the perseverance of the believers, and to purify their hearts. If the believers pass the test they receive the help of God which fortifies them against their enemies: the devils from among the humans and jinn.

Third, God in His wisdom chose to test both the devils and the believers in this way. The devils are given measured power to inflict harm and to lure the believers away from the truth. This way the sincerity and perseverance of believers are tested. Are they sincere in their belief and can they persevere in face of the affliction? Will they support the truth against falsehood?

Fourth, the devils are weak. They have no innate power to inflict harm on the believers. The believer who believes that all the power is in God's hand is able to recognize the weakness of his/her enemy, and will not be scared by the enemy no matter how powerful they may seem. This meaning is captured in the sentence, "so leave them alone with their devising." It sent a message to the Prophet (PBUH) not to worry about what they fabricate. God is watching over them and He is able to seize them and they will be recompensed for what they did.

In addition to being a test for the devil and the believers, God may have wanted this enmity between the devil and the believers for another reason as well, "And this is in order that the hearts of those who disbelieve in the Hereafter may incline to such (deceit), and that they may remain pleased with it, and that they may commit what they are committing" So, let those who do not believe in the Hereafter, those who lead hedonistic life listen to the whisper of the devils. They are fascinated with the way that the devil attacks the prophets and the believers, so they become deluded by their inspiration and they commit whatever sin they can commit.

This is what God wanted, and that what life is about: tests and choices; then fair recompense. The worldly life would not have continued without the struggle between right and wrong; and truth and the falsehood. The crucible of life will separate between the righteous and the devil.

Verses: 114-127

114. Shall I then seek a judge other than God? And He it is who has revealed to you the Book (which is) explained in detail; and those whom We have given the Scripture know that it is revealed by your Lord with truth, therefore you should not be of those who doubt.
115. And the word of your Lord has been accomplished truly and justly; there is none who can change His words, and He is the All-Hearing, the Omniscient.
116. And if you follow most of those on earth, they will lead you astray, away from the way of God; they follow nothing but conjecture and they do nothing but lie.
117. Surely your Lord knows best who goes astray from His way, and He knows best those who are rightly guided.
118. Therefore, eat of that on which God's name has been mentioned if you are believers in His revelations.
119. And why should you not eat of that on which God's name has been mentioned, and He has already explained to you what He has forbidden to you—unless you are compelled out of necessity; and most surely many do mislead (people) by their own whims out of ignorance; surely your Lord knows best those who exceed the limits.
120. And abandon all sin, whether committed openly or secretly; surely they who earn sin shall be recompensed with what they have earned.
121. And do not eat of that on which God's name has not been mentioned, and that is most surely a transgression; and most surely the devils suggest to their friends that they should contend with you; and if you obey them, you shall most surely be idolaters.
122. Is he who was dead then We raised him to life and made for him a light by which he walks among the people, like him whose likeness is that of one in utter darkness from which he can never come out? Thus the deeds of the disbelievers were made to seem pleasing to them.
123. Thus have We placed leaders in every town, its wicked men, to plot (and burrow) therein: but they only plot against their own souls, and they realize it not.
124. And when a sign comes to them they say, “We will not believe till we are given the like of what God's messengers are given.” God knows best where to place His message. There shall befall those who are guilty humiliation from God and severe torment because of what they used to scheme.

125. And whomsoever it is God's will to guide, He expands his breast for Islam, and whomsoever He wills to leave to go astray, He makes his breast constricted and narrow as though he were ascending upwards in the sky; thus does God lay penalty on those who do not believe.
126. And this is the path of your Lord, (a) right (path); indeed, We have explained the revelations for a people who take heed.
127. They shall have the abode of peace with their Lord, and He is their Guardian because of what they did. (6:114-127)

“Shall I then seek a judge other than God? And He it is who has revealed to you the Book (which is) explained in detail; and those whom We have given the Scripture know that it is revealed by your Lord with truth, therefore you should not be of those who doubt.”

This is a rhetorical question that the Prophet (PBUH) was asked to pose to the idolaters. It expresses an unequivocal refusal that anyone other than God should have the right to be the judge in the affairs of this world. It is an attestation to the right of God to be the sole judge. The verse also states the logic behind this attestation. God revealed the detailed Book which can be used to establish justice and resolve the disputes that arise in the society with fairness. The Book includes all the fundamentals upon which a system to establish life on earth can be built. It also includes, to a certain extent, details of certain aspects of life that are needed for the welfare of the society. Those who were given the Scripture before were aware that the Book revealed to Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) is the truth. The verse ends by admonishing the Prophet (PBUH) not to be doubtful. But, the Prophet (PBUH) was not doubtful. It was narrated that, when this verse was revealed to him, he said, “I have never doubted.” So, why was he admonished? This is an indication of the tremendous pressure that the Prophet (PBUH) and the believers were subjected to in the course of their mission. This is not an admonition but it is a statement meant to lend support to the Prophet (PBUH) and the believers in their struggle and strengthen their resolve in the face of the severe resistance of the disbelievers.

“And the word of your Lord has been accomplished truly and justly; there is none who can change His words, and He is the All-Hearing, the Omniscient.” The word of your Lord has been perfected, what He said is the truth, and what He legislated is just. There is nothing left to be added to the message in the matter of faith, values, morals, or traditions. He hears and knows what His servants say and what they mean. He also knows best what is good for them.

“And if you follow most of those on earth, they will lead you astray, away from the way of God; they follow nothing but conjecture and they do nothing but lie.” Most of the people do not consider God to be their judge in the affairs of life. Even the law that organizes life is not inspired, in most cases, by the Book of God. The way of life adopted by most people does not follow the revealed guidance. This is the falsehood of ignorance: conjectures are preferred over ascertained knowledge. This is why the Prophet (PBUH) and the believers were admonished not to follow those people. Although, this verse was revealed to deal with the specific issue of the permissibility of eating slaughtered animals, a topic that will be dealt with later, but the veracity of the verse applies to other situations as well.

“Surely your Lord knows best who goes astray, away from His way, and He knows best those who are rightly guided.” The verse states that it is only God who has the right to judge people and it is only He who decides who is guided and who is lost. Because it is only He who knows the inner thoughts, feelings, and intentions of people and He judges them accordingly. The criterion for judging people according to their faith, their values, their activities, and their deeds can only be established by God alone and should not be left to people’s whims and desires. The verse declares that only God has the right to establish this criterion. It should not be left to “the society” to decide upon a criterion to differentiate between right and wrong. The composition, the values, and norms of the society are always changing. Different societies have different values, traditions and norms. If the criterion to differentiate between right and wrong is left to be decided by the society, we will end up with different criteria: one for an industrial society, another for a capitalist society, and a third for a socialist society.

The previous verses serve as an introduction to the discussion of the rules regarding the slaughtering and eating of animals, “Therefore eat of that on which God's name has been mentioned if you are believers in His revelations. And why should you not eat of that on which God's name has been mentioned, and He has already explained to you what He has forbidden to you- unless you are compelled out of necessity; and most surely many do mislead (people) by their own whims out of ignorance; surely your Lord knows best those who exceed the limits. And abandon all sin, whether committed openly or secretly; surely they who earn sin shall be recompensed with what they have earned. And do not eat of that on which God's name has not been mentioned, and that is most surely a transgression; and most surely the devils suggest to their friends that they should contend with you; and if you obey them, you shall most surely be idolaters.” Before we delve into the legal interpretations of these verses, let us first highlight the basic principles of the doctrine underlying these rules. The verses command that one should eat only that which the name of God has been pronounced upon. It further links obedience to faith, “Therefore eat of that on which God's name has been mentioned if you are believers in His revelations.” The question is then posed: why don’t you eat from that which the name of God has been pronounced upon? That which God has made lawful to you! The question addressed the myth underlying the rules of the lawful and unlawful which were followed by the idolaters of Mecca. They declared some animals, which God has made lawful, to be unlawful and vice versa. The verses state clearly that the idolater’s laws were only based on their whims and desires. They were usurping God’s role in deciding what is lawful and what is unlawful, “and most surely many do mislead (people) by their own whims out of ignorance; surely your Lord knows best those who exceed the limits.”

They were then commanded to abstain from sinning, whether it is committed in the open or secretly. Leading people astray by fabricating rules and regulations and claiming that these rules have been divinely ordained is a major sin. Those who commit this sin will be punished, “And abandon all sin, whether committed openly or secretly; surely they who earn sin shall be recompensed with what they have earned.”

The verses go on to detail which animals are decreed to be unlawful. These include sacrificial animals slaughtered for the gods, animals slaughtered for gambling, and dead animals. They also warn the believers of the temptation posed by the devils, both humans and jinn, who argue the legality of their claims, “And do not eat of that on which God's name has not been mentioned, and that is most surely a transgression; and most surely the devils suggest to their friends that they should contend with you; and if you obey them, you shall most surely be idolaters.” This verse established a fundamental rule: following manmade rules that contravene the rules of Islamic jurisprudence amounts to associating partners with God. Ibn Katheer says, “A person commits the crime of ascribing partners to God, when he prefers to follow manmade rulings that contravene a rule dictated by God. This is confirmed by the verse, ‘They have taken their rabbis and their monks as lords besides God.’” (9:31) When ‘Aadi bin Hatem (RA) exclaimed to the prophet (PBUH), “They did not worship their rabbis and their monks.” The Prophet’s (PBUH) answer was that they followed the rules devised by their rabbis and their monks regarding what is allowable and what is forbidden and such rules contravened the rules revealed by God. This amounted to setting up their rabbis and their monks as equals to God.

Ibn Katheer summarized the opinions regarding the allowable meat. The opinions addressed the question whether it is allowable to eat an animal over which the name of God was not invoked at the time of the slaughter. The scholars are divided into three groups regarding this issue.

The first group is of the opinion that it is unlawful to eat the meat of a slaughtered animal over which the name of God was not invoked at the time of the slaughter. This ruling is valid whether the person who is performing the slaughter forgot to mention the name of God at the time of slaughter or did not mention God’s name intentionally. It was narrated that this is the opinion of Ibn ‘Umar (RA), his servant Nafe’ (RA), ‘Amer Al-Sha’abi, and Mohamed ibn Sereen. This has also been narrated about Imam Malek and Imam Ahmed ibn Hanbal. It is also the choice of Abu Thor, Dawood Al-Zaheri, and Abu El-Fotooh Mohamed ibn Mohamed ibn ‘Ali (one of the late followers of Imam Al-Shafey’s school who wrote a book titled “The Forty”). This group made their ruling on the basis of this verse and also based on the verse, “Then eat of that which was held for you and invoke the name of God” (5:4) which was also emphasized by the statement that “it is a transgression.” Two alternative explanations were mentioned for the verse. One relates the transgression to eating unlawful meat and the second relates the transgression to the neglect of invoking the name of God during the slaughter. This group also relied on the prophetic traditions which commanded invoking the name of God at the time of the slaughter or during hunting.

The second group is of the opinion that invoking the name of God during slaughtering animals is recommended but not an obligation. No harm has been done if God’s name was not invoked whether intentionally or as an act of forgetfulness. This is the opinion of Imam Al-Shafe’i and all his companions. It has also been narrated that this is the opinion of Imam Ahmed and Imam Malek. This is also the opinion of Ashhab ibn ‘Abdel ‘Aziz who is a follower of Imam Malek’s school. It was also narrated that this is also the opinion of Ibn ‘Abbas (RA), Abu Huraira (RA), and ‘Attaa ibn Rabah, God knows best. Al-Shafe’i explained the verse, “Do not eat of that over which the name of God was not invoked,” to mean that do not eat that which was sacrificed for deities other than God. Ibn Jareej narrated that ‘Attaa said, “That the verse prohibits eating the animals that Quraish used to sacrifice for their idols.” This is the opinion that has been chosen by Imam Al-Shafe’i. This opinion is supported also by prophetic traditions that have been quoted by Abu Dawood. Although these traditions are considered Mursal traditions but they support one another. One of the traditions states, “It is lawful to eat an animal slaughtered by a Muslim, whether he invoked the name of God or not.” Another states, “It is lawful to eat the meat of an animal slaughtered by a Muslim, even if he did not invoke the name of God at the time of the slaughter because a Muslim has a name of the names of God.”

The third group is of the opinion that it is lawful to eat the meat of a slaughtered animal if the person who did the slaughter forgot to invoke the name of God at the time of the slaughter, but if that was intentional, then it is unlawful. This opinion is adopted by most of the schools of Imam Malek and Imam Ahmed ibn Hanbal. Also, it has been adopted by Abu Hanifa and his companions, Ishaq ibn Rahawaih, Ibn ‘Abbas (RA), Sa’eed ibn Al-Mussaib, ‘Ataa, Tawoos, Al-Hassan Al-Basri, Abu Malek, ‘Abdel Rahman ibn Abu Laila, Jaa’fer ibn Muhammad, and Rabee’aa ibn Abu ‘Abdel Rahman.

Ibn Jareer stated that the scholars differed in the status of the ruling expressed in this verse. Some are of the opinion that it has been abrogated, while others believe that it continues to be valid. The latter is the opinion of Mejahed and many of the scholars. However, it has been narrated on the authority of Eakremah and Al-Hassan Al-Basri that they said, “That the two verses ‘eat, then, of that over which God's name has been pronounced,’ and ‘Hence, eat not of that over which God's name has not been pronounced: for this would be sinful conduct indeed’ were abrogated and replaced by the verse ‘The food of the people of the book is lawful to you.’ Ibn Abi Hatem said on the authority of Ibn Makhool that the two verses were abrogated and replaced by “Today all good things have been made lawful to you, and the food of the people of the book has been made lawful to you.” Ibn Jareer then said, “That there is no contradiction between the legality of eating the food of the people of the book and the prohibition of that which the name of God has not been invoked upon.” This is also my opinion and God knows best. “

“Is he who was dead then We raised him to life and made for him a light by which he walks among the people, like him whose likeness is that of one in utter darkness from which he can never come out? Thus the deeds of the disbelievers were made to seem pleasing to them. Thus have We placed leaders in every town, its wicked men, to plot (and burrow) therein: but they only plot against their own souls, and they realize it not. And when a sign comes to them they say, ‘We will not believe till we are given the like of what God's messengers are given.’ God knows best where to place His message. There shall befall those who are guilty, humiliation from God and severe torment because of what they used to scheme. And whomsoever it is God’s will to guide, He expands his breast for Islam, and whomsoever He wills to leave straying, He makes his breast constricted and narrow as though he were ascending upwards in the sky; thus does God lay penalty on those who do not believe.” When a heart espouses the faith it is revived as if it was resurrected after death. Faith fills the heart with light that shows the way to a new life. No words can describe such an experience. Disbelief cuts humankind off the eternal reality of life and therefore it is akin to death, and belief connects humankind to the reality of life to communicate and respond. Disbelief covers the spirit in darkness and prevents the light from coming through; and it makes all senses and feelings become dull. Belief brings security, happiness, and easiness in life. Disbelief promotes insecurity, unhappiness and difficulty.

When the light of belief shines on the human heart, it reveals the essence of this religion and how it fits and matches the initial natural human disposition. It also reveals the true nature of life around us. It allows humankind to discover the reality of life, people, and the daily events. These meanings are all captured in the verse, “Is he who was dead then We raised him to life and made for him a light by which he walks among the people”

But what keeps those who choose to disbelieve from seeing the light, “Thus, to the disbelievers their own deeds were made to seem pleasing.” God gave humankind the dual disposition to enjoy light and darkness. Humankind was also given the ability to choose between the two. If he chooses darkness, then darkness becomes more appealing to him. There are also the devils from among humans and jinn who make darkness seem more pleasing and appealing. Those are the guilty ones, who are allowed to plot to tempt others away from the light into darkness, “Thus have We placed leaders in every town, its wicked men, to plot (and burrow) therein: but they only plot against their own souls, and they realize it not.” It is the standing natural law to see in each town a group of people who appoint themselves to fight God’s religion. This is a fight that the prophets and the believers cannot avoid. The guilty ones want to exercise their control over people and defy the rule of God, and the prophets and their believing followers strive to bring back the control to God and His rule. This is a never ending battle that will continue to the Day of Judgment. However, there is hope for the believers because the guilty ones are in fact plotting against themselves without perceiving it. The verse ending assures the believers that they will win.

“We will not believe till we are given the like of what God's messengers are given. God knows best where to place His message. There shall befall those who are guilty humiliation from God and severe torment because of what they used to scheme.” This verse captures the arrogance of the chiefs of the idolaters of Mecca and God’s response. Al-Waleed ibn Al-Mugheerah said addressing the Prophet (PBUH), “If what you got is true prophet-hood, I would have been more deserving than you. I am older and richer than you.” Abu Jahl said, “We will never accept him as a Prophet, and we will never follow what he says, unless we receive a revelation like the revelation that he receives.” But God states that it is only He who decides whom He chooses to convey His Message. Conveying the Message is a grave task. Conveying the Message is a process where the divine decision and the human effort come together. It is a process where a human being becomes completely devoted to God. The devotion is not only spiritual but also physical. Conveying the Message is an interface between the human being and God. This requires a human being with certain qualifications and characteristics. Only God knows who is best qualified to deliver the Message. Needless to say, that the self-centered idolaters of Mecca who envied Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) for being a messenger of God and wanted to be messengers themselves were not suited for that mission. One of the most important characteristics of the messenger is selflessness. This makes the messenger's soul a suitable receptacle for this grave task. Prophet-hood is not to be requested, it is to be granted. The consequence of their arrogance will be exactly the opposite. Their arrogance will be replaced by humiliation. Instead of being arrogant they will be made abject.

A description of the states of the believers and the disbelievers follows. Those whom God bestowed the blessing of guidance on – according to God's law which makes the way easy for those who pass the test and choose guidance – have their bosoms open to receive guidance. But those who were deprived from guidance – according to God's rule regarding the ability of humankind to choose – will find their bosoms tight as if they were ascending higher in the sky where the air is rarefied and it is difficult to breath. This is how they meet their punishment.

“And this is the path of your Lord, (a) right (path); indeed, We have explained the revelations for a people who take heed. They shall have the abode of peace with their Lord, and He is their Guardian because of what they did.” The paragraph ends by a clear statement defining the right path. God's path is the straight path. Salvation is attained by following the straight path. The straight path is the path of Islam which encompasses the doctrine and the law. No separation should be made between these two components. The signs of your Lord are made clear for those who seek the truth. Those will be rewarded with peace, security, and success.

Verses: 128 to 135

128. And on the day when He shall gather them all together, “Assembly of jinn, you seduced a great part of humankind.” And their friends from among the people shall say, “Our Lord, some of us profited by others and we have reached our appointed term which You did appoint for us.” He shall say, “The fire is your abode, to abide in it for ever, except as God is pleased; surely your Lord is Wise, Omniscient.”

129. And thus do We make some of the wrongdoers to befriend each other on account of what they earned.

130. “Assembly of jinn and humankind, did there not come to you messengers from among you, relating to you My revelations and warning you of the meeting of this day of yours?” They shall say, “We bear witness against ourselves.” And this world's life deceived them, and they shall bear witness against their own souls that they were disbelievers.

131. This is because your Lord would not destroy the towns for their wrongdoing while their people were heedless.

132. And for all, there will ranks according to their deeds; and your Lord is not unaware of what they do.

133. And your Lord is Self-sufficient, the Possessor of Mercy; if He pleases, He could destroy you, and in your place appoints whom He pleases as your successors, as He raised you up from the seed of another people.
134. Surely what you are threatened with must come to pass and you cannot escape (it).
135. Say, "My people, do whatever you can, I will do (my part); soon will you know who it is whose end will be (best) in the Hereafter; certain it is that the wrongdoers will not succeed. (6:128-135)

"And on the day when He shall gather them all together, "Assembly of jinn, you seduced a great part of humankind." And their friends from among the people shall say, 'Our Lord, some of us profited by others and we have reached our appointed term which You did appoint for us.' He shall say, 'The fire is your abode, to abide in it for ever, except as God is pleased; surely your Lord is Wise, Omniscient.'" And thus do We make some of the wrongdoers to befriend each other on account of what they earned." These verses present a scene from the Day of Judgment when the sins of jinn will be stated: you have seduced so many humans away from the straight path. The statement is for the record; it also brings forward the gravity of their deeds. A crime so grave, that they will be speechless. Instead, the response will come from the humans, those who succumbed to the seduction. It reveals the weak nature of these humans. They were looking for a way to indulge in the material pleasures of life which opened a door for the devil to enter into their lives. The devils used their weakness to control them and to steer them to achieve the devils' goals. This enjoyment lasted for a lifetime but now the time for reckoning has come. Today, they assemble to get their punishment. Hellfire is their abode. However, God controls their lives in the Hereafter as He did in their worldly life. Whatever He wills will be. His will is based on His knowledge and His wisdom.

Friendship will bind the transgressors as it bounds the jinn and humans who were misguided. This is a general statement which goes beyond the present scene. It is a general rule, valid for all times. Their enmity to God's religion and Godly people unites them. The loyalty that bound them together is based on the similarity in their nature and the oneness of their objective. Their joint abode in the Hereafter will be commensurate with their evil deeds in this life.

The scene continues with a rhetorical question to both the jinn and the humans, "Assembly of jinn and men, did there not come to you messengers from among you, relating to you My revelations and warning you of the meeting of this day of yours? They shall say, 'We bear witness against ourselves.' And this world's life deceived them, and they shall bear witness against their own souls that they were disbelievers." This indicates that messengers were sent to the jinn as they were sent to humans. Other verses in the Quran indicate that some jinn were able to listen to the Quran as it was recited and they told their fellow jinn. However, this is part of the unseen which is unknown to us and there is no need to speculate on it. The reply comes with a confession. The scene is concluded by stating how they ended up in this misery.

“This is because your Lord would not destroy the towns for their wrongdoing while their people were heedless. And for all, there will be ranks according to their deeds; and your Lord is not unaware of what they do.” The mercy of God has dictated that no judgment will be passed before a messenger was sent. The initial natural human disposition was prepared to receive guidance and to recognize the existence of God. The initial natural human disposition was also supported by human intellect. But, the initial natural human disposition may be misguided and the human intellect may succumb to temptation. That is why God sent His messengers to sharpen the initial natural human disposition and to provide a neutral environment for the human intellect to seek the truth. The message clearly indicates that human values have to be supported by God’s revealed message to create a better life for humankind and to support them in the struggle against worldly temptations. The reward is guaranteed according to the deed. God is well aware of what they do.

“And your Lord is Self-sufficient, the Possessor of Mercy; if He pleases, He could destroy you, and in your place appoints whom He pleases as your successors, as He raised you up from the seed of another people.” People should not forget that their existence is contingent on the mercy and will of God. Whatever one has of wealth or power is granted by God. If He wills He can replace the present generation with a new one as He has done with previous generations. This is a strong message to the transgressors who plot to control, those who defy God, and those who challenge the rules of religion. It is also a strong message to the believers who suffer from the transgression of the disbelievers.

“Surely what you are threatened with must come to pass and you cannot escape (it). Say, ‘My people, do whatever you can, I will do (my part); soon will you know who it is whose end will be (best) in the Hereafter; certain it is that the wrongdoers will not succeed.’” This message provides security and contentment in the hearts of the believers and poses a threat to the transgressors. Certainly, the promise will be fulfilled. Everything is in the firm grasp of God and under His will and control. There is no escape. One day, you will certainly be part of the scene of the Day of the Judgment that has been described. A challenge is posed, “My people, do whatever you can” This is a challenge posed by one who knows that he is on the right path; one who is confident that this path is supported by the truth from his Lord; one who is confident of the final result. Certainly, the transgressors will never succeed. This is a fundamental truth that has been established by God.

136. And they assign a portion for God out of what He has created of tilth and cattle, and they say, “This is for God - so they claim- and this for our associates; but the share of their associates, does not reach God, while the share of God reaches their associates; evil is that which they judge.
137. In the same way, their idols have induced many of the idolaters to kill their own children, bringing them ruin and confusion in their faith; and if God had pleased, they would not have done it, therefore leave them to what they fabricate.

138. And they say, "Such cattle and crops are forbidden, none shall eat of them except such as we please - so they claim." And cattle whose backs are forbidden, and cattle on which they would not mention God's name - forging a lie against Him; He shall requite them for what they forged.
139. And they say, "What is in the wombs of these cattle is reserved for our males, and forbidden to our wives, and if it be stillborn, then they are all partners in it;" He (God) will reward them for their attributing (falsehood to Him); surely He is Wise, Omniscient.
140. They are lost indeed those who kill their children foolishly without knowledge, and forbid what God has given them forging a lie against God; they have indeed gone astray, and they are not guided.
141. And He it is who produces gardens (of vine), with trellises and without, and dates, and crops of all kinds, and olives and pomegranates, similar (in kind) and different (in variety); eat of its fruit when it bears fruit, and pay its dues on the day of its reaping, and do not act extravagantly; surely He does not love the extravagant.
142. And of cattle (He created) beasts of burden and those which are fit for slaughter only; eat of what God has given you and do not follow in the footsteps of the Satan; surely he is your avowed enemy.
143. Eight in pairs- two of sheep and two of goats. Say, "Has He forbidden the two males or the two females or that which the wombs of the two females contain? Tell me on the basis of knowledge if you are truthful."
144. And two of camels and two of cows. Say, "Has He forbidden the two males or the two females or that which the wombs of the two females contain? Or were you witnesses when God gave you these commands?" Who, then, does greater wrong than he who forges a lie against God to lead people astray without knowledge? Surely God does not guide the wrongdoers.
145. Say, "I do not find in that which has been revealed to me anything forbidden to be eaten by one who wishes to eat it, except that it be carrion, or flowing blood, or flesh of swine- for that surely is unclean- or a sinful offering over which a name other than God's name has been invoked; but whoever is compelled, neither craving nor transgressing the limit, then surely your Lord is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy."
146. And to those who were Jews We made unlawful every animal having claws, and We forbade them the fat of the ox and the sheep, except what adheres to their backs or their entrails or what was mixed up with a bone. Thus did We recompense them for their rebellion, and We are surely truthful.
147. If they accuse you of falsehood, then say, "Your Lord is the possessor of vast mercy; and His punishment cannot be averted from the guilty people."
148. Those who are idolaters will say, "If God had pleased we would not have associated partners with Him, neither had our fathers, nor would we have forbidden (to ourselves) anything." Thus, did those who were before them reject until they tasted Our punishment. Say, "Have you any knowledge so you should bring it forth to us? You only follow a conjecture and you only tell lies."
149. Say, "Indeed God has the conclusive argument; had He willed, He would certainly guide you all."

150. Say, "Bring your witnesses who can bear witness that God has forbidden this, then if they bear witness, do not bear witness with them; and do not follow the whims of those who reject Our revelations, those who do not believe in the Hereafter, and those who deem (others) equal to their Lord."
151. Say, "Come, I will recite to you what your Lord has prohibited you from: do not associate anything with Him; be good to your parents; and do not slay your children for (fear of) poverty, We provide for you and for them; and do not come near indecencies, those of them which are apparent and those which are concealed; and do not kill the soul which God has forbidden except for the requirements of justice. This He has commanded you, that you may understand.
152. And do not approach the property of the orphan except in the best manner, until he attains his maturity; and give full measure and weight with justice, We do not burden any soul beyond its ability; and when you speak, then be just even though it be (against) a close relative; and fulfill God's covenant. This He has commanded you that you may be mindful.
153. Verily, this is My path, leading straight, therefore follow it, and do not follow (other) paths, for they will lead you away from His path; this He has commanded you that you may remain conscious of Him." (6:136-153)

"And they assign a portion for God out of what He has created of tilth and cattle, and they say, 'This is for God - so they claim- and this for our associates;' but the share of their associates, does not reach God, while the share of God reaches their associates; evil is that which they judge." The verse describes a practice that was prevalent among the idolaters. They forgot that God is He who created the plants and the animals and He is the only provider. They dedicated part of their provision to their idols and part to God. They were very careful that the part dedicated to their idols reaches the idols, but they were not as scrupulous about the part that was dedicated to God. Mejahed mentioned that they used to dedicate part of their harvest to the idols and another part to God. They did not care if some of the harvest dedicated to God was blown by the wind to fall on the part dedicated to the idols. However, if the opposite happened, then they were quick to compensate their idols for the loss in their share. They said that God does not need that which has been dedicated to the idols.

This is how the devils from among the jinn and humans justify their unjust practice. One can find parallels to this example in other communities. Some of these communities are ancient like the Romans, the Persians, and the Greek, while some still exist today in Africa, India and Asia. This can also be extended to modern practices in managing the wealth of the community when the rules of practice are controlled by the whims of the chiefs and they do not abide by the rule of God.

"In the same way, their idols have induced many of the idolaters to kill their own children, bringing them ruin and confusion in their faith; and if God had pleased, they would not have done it, therefore leave them to what they fabricate." Their idols also induced them to practice infanticide against their baby girls for fear of poverty. They also induced them to sacrifice their sons to the idols, as did Abdul Muttalib. These traditions were established to confuse people and to keep them away from understanding and following the true faith. Such practices result in moral degradation and will ruin the society as a whole. The message is that societal norms based on human thought with no divine guidance will not lead to a happy and healthy society. This is a fundamental rule that is valid for all times and places. The stories in the Quran are not meant only to narrate the history of ancient communities but also to establish fundamental principles that need to be observed at all times and in all places. However, believers should not be overwhelmed by the task of fighting these devils because this is the will of God. Ultimately, He is in control. They are given the leave to transgress for a wisdom that only God knows.

“And they say, ‘Such cattle and crops are forbidden, none shall eat of them except such as we please - so they claim.’ And cattle whose backs are forbidden, and cattle on which they would not mention God's name - forging a lie against Him; He shall requite them for what they forged.” Ibn Jareer said, “This is a statement by God, describing idolater’s practices for making things lawful or unlawful without divine guidance.” This rebuts their claim that they only did this because it was God’s law. They did usurp God’s right by introducing laws regarding the lawful and forbidden based on their whims and desires. God promised to punish them for the falsehood they invented.

“And they say, ‘What is in the wombs of these cattle is reserved for our males, and forbidden to our wives, and if it be stillborn, then they are all partners in it;’ He will reward them for their attributing (falsehood to God); surely He is Wise, Omniscient.” They went far in devising rules defining the lawful and prohibited based on old idolatrous myths. They will be punished for that. God surely knows what they are doing and He is wise in managing the affairs.

“They are lost indeed those who kill their children foolishly without knowledge, and forbid what God has given them forging a lie against God; they have indeed gone astray, and they are not guided.” Those who kill their children lost everything. They lost this life as well as the Hereafter. They lost themselves as well as their offspring. They lost their souls. They lost the dignity that God bestowed on them. They lost the guidance and they went astray.

“And He it is who produces gardens (of vine), with trellises and without, and dates, and crops of all kinds, and olives and pomegranates, similar (in kind) and different (in variety); eat of its fruit when it bears fruit, and pay its dues on the day of its reaping, and do not act extravagantly; surely He does not love the extravagant. And of cattle (He created) beasts of burden and those which are fit for slaughter only; eat of what God has given you and do not follow in the footsteps of the Satan; surely he is your avowed enemy.” God is the Creator, the Provider, the Lord, the Owner of everything. No one should dispense of His wealth except by His leave and His law, the law that came with the message revealed to the messengers. God created gardens which provide humankind with different types of crops. He created palm trees and plants with different colors, taste, and shapes. He created olives and pomegranates. He is the Creator of the animals which are used to carry burdens from one place to the other. It is God who created life, planned diversity, and decreed harmony.

Quran often addresses the issue of provision, stating that God is the Provider. It uses this fact as a platform to establish the requirement that it is only God who deserves to be served. No one else but the Creator, the Provider deserves to be worshipped. It is only He, who has the control, the power and the command. The words describe a scene of the harvest of different plants and the creation of different animals to support this concept. Then the command is issued: “Eat of its fruit when it bears fruit, and pay its dues on the day of its reaping, and do not act extravagantly; surely He does not love the extravagant.” Some of the commentators are of the opinion that this verse referred to the Zakat (poor dues) that is mandated when a crop is harvested. Accordingly, this would be a verse that was revealed in Medina. It is known that this whole Sura was revealed in Mecca. The contradiction is resolved if we take the opinion that what is meant here is a voluntary charity that is given when the crops are harvested. The verse provides two reminders: do not be extravagant and remember that the devil is your avowed enemy.

“Eight in pairs- two of sheep and two of goats. Say, ‘Has He forbidden the two males or the two females or that which the wombs of the two females contain? Tell me on the basis of knowledge if you are truthful.’ And two of camels and two of cows. Say, ‘Has He forbidden the two males or the two females or that which the wombs of the two females contain? Or were you witnesses when God gave you these commands?’ Who, then, does greater wrong than he who forges a lie against God to lead people astray without knowledge? Surely God does not guide the wrongdoers.” This is a list of the animals that the idolaters prohibited. The verse reiterated the fact that when it comes to making things lawful or unlawful we have to take recourse to divine guidance. The lawful and unlawful is determined by God alone.

“Say, ‘I do not find in that which has been revealed to me anything forbidden to be eaten by one who wishes to eat it, except that it be carrion, or flowing blood, or flesh of swine- for that surely is unclean- or a sinful offering over which a name other than God’s name has been invoked; but whoever is compelled, neither craving nor transgressing the limit, then surely your Lord is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.’ And to those who were Jews We made unlawful every animal having claws, and We forbade them the fat of the ox and the sheep, except what adheres to their backs or their entrails or what was mixed up with a bone. This is recompense for their rebellion, and We are surely truthful. If they accuse you of falsehood, then say, ‘Your Lord is the possessor of vast mercy; and His punishment cannot be averted from the guilty people.’”

Ibn Jareer said, “God said to His Prophet (PBUH) ‘Muhammad, ask the idolaters - who dedicated a share of their harvest and their animals to God and a similar share to their idols, those who prohibited some of their animals and harvest so that nobody can eat it without their permission, those who did not invoke the name of God intentionally when they slaughter their animals, those who prohibited specific animals to the females and allowed the males to eat from it, and they made a false claim that these were the commands of God – did God send a messenger with these commands? Or did you receive these commands directly from God? You are certainly telling a lie.’ Tell them, Muhammad, ‘The Book that has been revealed to me did not prohibit any of the things that you have prohibited. Only a dead animal, flowing blood, pig meat, or that which has been slaughtered as a sacrifice to the idols has been declared unlawful as food”

This was a declaration to the idolaters who argued with the Prophet (PBUH). The declaration determined clearly what has been prohibited by divine guidance. Even these foods which have been prohibited in normal life are allowed when human life is endangered. If one is faced with the choice whether to eat an unlawful food or to die, the choice should be clear. The duty to preserve human life changes the command.

God’s mercy is all encompassing. It is big enough for all of His creation: the believers as well as the disbelievers, and the pious as well as the sinners. However, His punishment is also severe.

“Those who are idolaters will say, ‘If God had pleased we would not have associated partners with Him, neither had our fathers, nor would we have forbidden (to ourselves) anything.’ Thus, did those who were before them reject until they tasted Our punishment. Say, ‘Have you any knowledge so you should bring it forth to us? You only follow a conjecture and you only tell lies.’” The idolaters lay the burden of their sins – associating partners with God and making what lawful unlawful and vice-versa – on the will of God. How did the Quran respond to this claim? The Quranic response consists of two steps. The first step was to point out the falsehood of their claim. They lied as did who came before them. Those who lied before did taste the wrath of God and so will they.

The second part of the response to the idolater’s claim consisted of correcting they way they think and argue. God did forbid them to do certain things. This is a fact of which they should be certain, but they had no way of knowing what God’s will was. They are simply following a conjecture and only telling lies.

“Say, ‘Then God has the conclusive argument; had He willed, He would certainly guide you all.’” This is God’s conclusive argument. God is able to create a race that has no choice but to accept guidance. But, God in His wisdom, wanted to test humankind with the ability to choose between guidance and misguidance.

“Say, ‘Bring your witnesses who can bear witness that God has forbidden this, then if they bear witness, do not bear witness with them; and do not follow the whims of those who reject Our revelations, those who do not believe in the hereafter, and those who deem (others) equal to their Lord.’” So, we finally come to the challenge. The prophet was asked to confront the idolaters and declare that what they were saying is falsehood. This confrontation states Islam’s rejection of the concept of associating partners with God, whether, these partners are physical like the idols which the idolaters worshipped, or they are manmade laws that are obeyed in spite of the fact that they defy what God has commanded. These are two sides of the same coin; both are rejected by Islam. This is the rule of God regarding those who usurp His role as the sole authority in judicial matters. God accuses those who invent laws without divine guidance of denying the revelations of God. Anyone who denies the right of God to be the sole authority in judicial matters denies the revelations of God. God also accused them of disbelieving in the Day of Judgment, because those who believe in the Day of Judgment would not dream of usurping the role of God as the sole authority in judicial matters. They were also accused of associating partners with God, because had they believed in the Oneness of God, they would not have allowed others to be partners with Him. The role of decreeing what is permissible and what is impermissible is God's only; no one else should assume that role.

“Say, ‘Come, I will recite to you what your Lord has prohibited you from.’” So, Muhammad (PBUH) tell them what are the things that are declared prohibited by your Lord; the Lord who is the sole authority in declaring what is lawful and what is unlawful.

“Do not associate anything with Him,” This is the fundamental principle on which the faith has been built. This is the principle which organizes the rituals, the commands, the duties, and the rights. It requires the absolute belief in God as a deity and as a Lord. It eliminates associating partners with God as a deity and as a Lord. To Him everyone is accountable. He controls the universe and the creatures that live in this universe. This fundamental concept purifies the soul from the impurities of associating partners with God and it purifies the intellect from the impurities of ancient mythology. All forms of associating partners with God are prohibited. That is why associating partners with God figures at the top of the list of what has been declared unlawful by God.

“Be good to your parents; and do not slay your children for (fear of) poverty, We provide for you and for them;” Maintaining strong family relations comes after maintaining a strong relation with God through the concept of the belief in the Oneness of God. God is most merciful, He admonished the children to be good to their parents and He admonished the parents to be kind to their children. He declared that He is the Provider so no child shall be overburdened by his duties towards his parents and no parent will be in fear of poverty because of his children.

“Do not come near indecencies, those of them which are apparent and those which are concealed;” The third command addressed the health of the community. Abstaining from indecencies protects the society and provides the right environment for strong families to exist and survive.

“Do not kill the soul which God has forbidden except for the requirements of justice.” Very often in the Quran the three crimes of associating partners with God, committing adultery, and killing of human beings are mentioned in this particular sequence. All of these crimes involve one form or another of killing. Associating partners with God can be construed as a killing of the initial natural human disposition. The initial natural human disposition which does not find its way to the realization of the Oneness of God is a dull nature. Adultery can result in the destruction of the community. One of the factors which led to the decline of previous civilizations was the spread of indecencies including adultery. The histories of the Roman and Greek civilizations attest to this. Murder is killing of individuals. The command is a general prohibition of the crime of murder and underscores the sanctity of life in Islam. This has been supported by another verse in the Quran which equates the murder of a single soul to the murder of whole humanity.

God admonishes you to think and reflect. The list of prohibitions continues:

“Do not approach the property of the orphan except in the best manner until he attains his maturity” Orphans are vulnerable, they lost their protecting parents. It is the duty of the community to protect its members who are vulnerable. Before Islam, orphans were often abused. God assigned the honorable task of delivering His Message to humankind to an orphan, and instituted in the religion of Islam the obligation to protect and care for orphans. Those who are trustees should be careful in handling an orphan’s wealth. They should invest it wisely and grow it the best way they can until the orphan comes out of age and receives his/her trust.

The point at which a child reaches the age of maturity has been debated by the scholars. ‘Abdel Rahman ibn Zaid and Malek are of the opinion that children reach the age of maturity when they reach the age of puberty, while Abu Haneefa and Al-Sadia fix the age at 25, years and 30 years, respectively. The scholars of Medina have two criteria: reaching the age of puberty and the ability to behave wisely.

“Give full measure and weight with justice, We do not burden any soul beyond its ability.” The command to be fair in all types of business ventures provides a link between human business dealings and the doctrine of Islam which emphasizes its importance. The belief in the Oneness of God should provide the foundation on which all practical human interactions are built. Faith should be reflected on the daily dealings between people. Quran condemned previous communities which used to consider matters of faith and daily business dealings as two separate issues.

“When you speak, then be just even though it be (against) a close relative.” Telling the truth even if it may be against one’s family is one of the principles that Islam emphasized to protect the society against injustice. People usually feel vulnerable when they are alone and therefore they seek protection with their families or tribes. In return, they have to provide support to their family members whether they are right or wrong. Islam came to tell people that security and protection can only be provided by God, so they have to tell the truth when they are asked to give a testimony even if it seems that the truth will hurt someone they care very much for. This is directly related to the next command, “Fulfill God’s covenant.” Telling the truth is a component of God’s covenant. In fact, the covenant of God encompasses all the commands made previously. The verse ends by reiterating that these are God’s commands and that they have to remember it and remind each other not to forget it.

These fundamental principles provide an outline of the doctrine and law in Islam. They outline the straight path of God that the believers should follow. These commandments provide a closure to the long discourse which started with the verse, “Should I seek a judge other than God.” The discourse included references to the issues of the enactment of laws and the issues of faith and the relationship between humankind and God. The closure emphasizes the requirement to follow the straight path and never deviate from it. The finishing verse reminds people that these are God’s commands and request the believers to endeavor to remain conscious of God, “This He has commanded you that you may be mindful. Verily, this is My path, leading straight, therefore follow it, and do not follow (other) paths, for they will lead you away from His path; this He has commanded you that you may remain conscious of Him.”

Verses: 154 to 165

154. Then, We gave Moses the Scripture completing Our favor on those who do good, and explaining all things in detail and a guide and a mercy, so that they might believe in the meeting of their Lord.
155. And this is a blessed Book which We have revealed; so follow it and be conscious of God that you may receive mercy.
156. Lest you say that the Book was only revealed to two parties before us and We were unaware of what they read.
157. Or lest you say, “If the Book had been revealed to us, we would certainly have been better guided than they.” So indeed there has come to you a clear proof from your Lord, a guidance, and a mercy. Who then does more wrong than he who rejects God's revelations and turns away from them? We will reward those who turn away from Our revelations with a dreadful torment because they turned away.
158. Are they waiting to see if the angels come to them, or that your Lord, or some of the signs of your Lord come. On the day when some of the signs of your Lord shall come, no soul will benefit from faith if it had not believed before, or earned good through its faith. Say, “Wait; we too are waiting.”
159. As for those who divided their religion and broke it up into sects, you have no concern with them; their case will go to God, then He will inform them of what they did.
160. Whoever brings a good deed, he will receive tenfold the like of it, and whoever brings an evil deed, he shall be recompensed only with the like of it, and they shall not be dealt with unjustly.
161. Say, “Surely, my Lord has guided me to the straight path - a right religion - the faith of Abraham the upright one, and he was not of the idolaters.
162. Say, “Surely my prayer and my sacrifice and my life and my death are (all) for God, the Lord of the worlds;
163. He has no partner; and this am I commanded, and I am the first of those who submit.”
164. Say, “What! Shall I seek a Lord other than God, when He is the Lord of all things.’ Each soul is accountable only for its own actions, and no bearer of burden shall bear the burden of another; then to your Lord is your return, so He will inform you of that in which you differed.”
165. And He it is who has made you successors in the land and raised some of you above others in rank, that He might try you by what He has given you; surely your Lord is swift in punishment, and He is most surely the All-Forgiving, the Giver of Mercy.” (6:154-165)

“Then, We gave Moses the Scripture completing Our favor on those who do good, and explaining all things in detail and a guide and a mercy, so that they might believe in the meeting of their Lord.” This is a continuation of the previous section in which the lawful and prohibited were discussed. God blessed Moses (PBUH) with the Scripture in which were given the details of everything as a reward for his obedience and his dedication in performing the tasks that he was asked to do.

“And this is a blessed Book which We have revealed; so follow it and be conscious of God that you may receive mercy.” God also revealed a blessed Book to Muhammad (PBUH). The believers are asked to follow it so they may receive mercy and guidance from their Lord. It should be pointed out that the Book was referred to earlier in the Sura in connection with the doctrine, and here it is mentioned in connection with the law. So, this Book deals with both the doctrine and the law and the believers are asked to follow it to receive the mercy and guidance of their Lord. The Book has all the details that are needed to conduct a life along the straight path. There is no need for other references.

“Lest you say, ‘that the Book was only revealed to two parties before us and We were unaware of what they read.’ Or lest you should say, ‘If the Book had been revealed to us, we would certainly have been better guided than they.’ So indeed there has come to you a clear proof from your Lord, a guidance, and a mercy. Who then does more wrong than he who rejects God's revelations and turns away from them? We will reward those who turn away from Our revelations with a dreadful torment because they turned away.” Prior to the advent of Muhammad (PBUH), God sent messengers to their people to convey the message to them in their own language. Then, God sent Muhammad (PBUH) to deliver the final Message to all humankind. No one can claim that the Message was not delivered. Those who deny the truth of this Message are truly committing injustice against themselves and against people. This message calls people to guidance and success and those who reject it aim at spreading mischief in the land by applying the manmade laws of the time of ignorance. God will punish those who turn away from the straight path.

A warning is posed to those who deny the truth, “Are they waiting to see if the angels come to them, or that your Lord, or some of the signs of your Lord come. On the day when some of the signs of your Lord shall come, no soul will benefit from faith if it had not believed before, or earned good through its faith. Say, ‘Wait; we too are waiting.’” It is a warning to the idolaters that they should be mindful of what they ask. If their requests were to be answered, and God would bring down the angels to speak to them or another of His signs, it will be too late.

There are various narrations which indicate that the verse, “On the day when some of the signs of your Lord shall come,” refers to the signs of the coming of the Day of Judgment. At that time, no deed will be accepted and no faith will be of benefit.

“As for those who divided their religion and broke it up into sects, you have no concern with them; their case will go to God, then He will inform them of what they did.” This is the demarcation line between the Prophet (PBUH) and the others who follow different faiths and traditions. The Prophet (PBUH) is then told not to associate with those who divided their religion into groups and sects. His path is distinct from their paths. His path is based on God's Book and law. God will judge among them on the Day of Judgment. God will reward everyone according to his/her deeds. God is merciful, those who will do good will get their reward tenfold, but those who do bad deeds will only be recompensed for what they had done. However, God in His mercy will deal with them fairly, "Whoever brings a good deed, he will receive tenfold the like of it, and whoever brings an evil deed, he shall be recompensed only with the like of it, and they shall not be dealt with unjustly."

"Say, 'Surely, my Lord has guided me to the straight path - a right religion - the faith of Abraham the upright one, and he was not of the idolaters.'" Muhammad (PBUH), tell them that you have been guided to the straight path. It is an announcement that embodies gratitude for the blessing that was received and an announcement full of confidence that he is on the right path.

The announcement is followed by an absolute submission and complete dedication. My acts of worship, my life, and my death are all dedicated to God. This is the ultimate expression of the belief in the Oneness of God. "Say, 'Surely, my prayer and my sacrifice and my life and my death are (all) for God, the Lord of the worlds; He has no partner; and this am I commanded, and I am the first of those who submit.'"

The expression is followed by a rhetorical question: who else is deserving of my dedication? Who else deserves to be my Lord and He is the Lord of everything, "Say, 'What! Shall I seek a Lord other than God, when He is the Lord of all things.' Each soul is accountable only for its own action, and no bearer of burden shall bear the burden of another; then to your Lord is your return, so He will inform you of that in which you differed." And He it is who has made you successors in the land and raised some of you above others in rank, that He might try you by what He has given you; surely your Lord is swift in punishment, and He is most surely the All-Forgiving, the Giver of Mercy."

It is a rhetorical question which berates the thought, "What! Shall I seek a Lord other than God, when He is the Lord of all things." He is the Lord who controls me, arranges my affairs, guides me, and advises me. He knows my intention and my deeds and will recompense me for whatever sin or virtue I gain. He is the owner of the whole universe. He is my Lord and your Lord. He is the Lord who will not burden a soul beyond its capacity and will not punish a soul for someone else's sin. He is my Lord to whom we will all return, and to whom we will be all accountable. He is my Lord who established people as vicegerents on earth. He is my Lord who tested people with prosperity and adversity. He is my Lord who is swift in reckoning and He is Merciful, Compassionate.

The Sura ends with this magnificent rosary of praise of God the Lord.

Sura 7: Al-A'raf (The Heights)

In the name of God, the Lord of Mercy, the Giver of Mercy

This is a Meccan Sura, like Surat Al-An'am (Chapter 6). The main theme of this Sura, like all the other Meccan Suras, revolves around the articles of faith. The two Suras follow two completely different approaches in addressing the same issues. Each Sura in the Quran has its own characteristics, approach, features, and style. All Suras deal with the same topic and have the same objective but each one has a different way in dealing with the topic and reaching the objective.

The Quranic Suras resemble the human creation. God willed that diversity be the model of the human race. All people share the same basic physical characteristics but each one is a separate entity completely different from everyone else. Each human being has different characteristics and traits which set him apart from other people. After being in the company of the Suras of the Quran for a long time, I began to feel the same way about them. I feel that each one is different. Each one has its own features and characteristics, as if they were different members of the same species. Having lived with them for a long time, I now consider them friends. I enjoy which each Sura offers. Each Sura takes one along an enjoyable journey to discover the depths of the human souls and the secrets of the universe.

The two Suras Al-An'am and Al-A'raf deal with the same topic: the creed of Islam. They both deal with the belief in the oneness of God. Al-An'am confronts the pre-Islamic age of ignorance with the truth that defies the entrenched myth of idolatry. But, Al-A'raf presents the truth of the oneness of God from an historical perspective. It takes you on a journey along the history of the human race from the time of Adam (PBUH) to the time of Muhammad (PBUH). It describes the interactions between the messengers of God and their peoples and the consequences of these interactions.

Verses: 1 to 9

1. Alif. Lam. Mim. Sad.
2. A Book revealed to you - let there be no heaviness in your heart therefrom - that you may warn thereby, and (it is) a reminder to the believers.
3. Follow what has been revealed to you from your Lord, and follow no protecting guardian beside Him. Little you do remember.
4. How many a town have We destroyed! Our punishment took them by night or while they were sleeping for their afternoon rest.
5. No plea had they, when Our terror came to them, save that they said, "We were truly wrongdoers."
6. Then verily We shall question those to whom (Our message) has been sent, and verily We shall question the messengers.
7. Then verily We shall narrate to them (the event) with knowledge, for We were not absent (when it came to pass).
8. The weighing on that Day will be true (weighing). As for those whose scale is heavy, they are the successful.

9. Those whose scale will be light are they who lost their souls because they used to wrongfully reject our revelations. (7:1-9)

“Alif. Lam. Mim. Sad.” Starting the Sura with letters from the Arabic alphabet has been discussed in the beginning of Surat Al-Baqara and Surat Al-‘Imran. We have chosen the view that this is a reference to the fact that Quran has been written using the same alphabet that the Arabs used, however, they were not able to compose a similar text. This is a proof that the Quran has not been written by a human being. Although, we consider this view to be probable, but God knows best.

“A Book revealed to you - let there be no heaviness in your heart therefrom - that you may warn thereby, and (it is) a reminder to the believers.” This Book serves as a warning and a reminder to people to follow God’s commands. In doing this, the Book confronts old beliefs and traditions; and establishes new systems and norms. The Book aims at replacing these old beliefs and changing the well established norms and systems. In doing this, there will be many times when the messenger will be heavy hearted and will face many adverse situations. This is not an experience unique to the early Muslims who tried to enlighten the idolatrous Arabs in the early days of Islam, but it is also the experience of every Muslim who wants to lead an Islamic way of life. This experience will continue to occur till the Day of Judgment. The Islamic morals and values will always be in confrontation with the hedonistic way of life that tends to exist in human societies in various places and at different times. Islam endeavors to replace the darkness that surrounds humankind when it indulges in carnal desires, submits to tyranny, or worships false deities with the light of guidance. It aims at replacing the darkness of oppression and injustice with the light of the truth. It endeavors to move people from the darkness of slavery to the light of serving God only. Islam came to emphasize the truth that there is no deity but God. It came to establish a society in which the dominion is God’s dominion. In this society there is no room for false deities, human or otherwise. Quran came to serve as a reminder of these facts.

“Follow what has been revealed to you from your Lord, and follow no protecting guardian beside Him. Little you do remember.” At the same time God’s command was given to the Messenger (PBUH) to warn the command was given to the believers to follow what has been revealed in the Quran. They were also commanded not to follow any one beside God. This is the crux of the matter, the issue of associating partners with God. The question is posed, do they follow God’s commands and become Muslims, or they follow commands issued by others and become idolaters? These are two distinct positions that cannot be reconciled. Following God’s command implies acknowledging God as the only Lord, and conceding all power to Him alone.

The previous verse addressed the Messenger (PBUH), “A Book revealed to you,” and this verse addresses the believers, “Follow what has been revealed to you from your Lord.” The command to the Messenger (PBUH) was to believe in the Book, to warn, and to remind; while the command to the believers is to believe in the Book and to follow this Book only. This is an endearing way for addressing the Messenger (PBUH) and the believers. It implies that the Book is a special gift from God to the Messenger (PBUH) and the believers. So, they should cherish it and be grateful to God for His gift.

The move from idolatry to monotheism is a tremendous leap of faith which requires a momentous effort. It involves a complete change of the thoughts, perspectives, morals, norms, and traditions of the society. It will result in a major upheaval of the economic, social, and political systems. It will reshape the relationship between the human being on one side and God, people, and the universe on the other. Motivating people to adopt such a momentous change requires an address that shakes the consciousness of people and moves their feelings; an address which serves as a wakeup call for those who are immersed in their well established traditions. Hence the reminder of the consequence of disregarding the warning, “How many a town have We destroyed! Our punishment took them by night or while they were sleeping for their afternoon rest. No plea had they, when Our terror came to them, save that they said, ‘We were certainly wrongdoers.’ Then verily We shall question those to whom (Our message) has been sent, and verily We shall question the messengers. Then verily We shall narrate to them (the event) with knowledge, for We were not absent (when it came to pass). The weighing on that day will be true (weighing). As for those whose scale is heavy, they are the successful. Those whose scale will be light are they who lost their souls because they used to wrongfully reject our revelations.” A reminder of the stories describing the destruction of people in the past, when they rejected guidance, is certainly the best warning.

Many a town was ruined when they rejected God’s revelations. Some were destroyed when they were napping during the day and some were destroyed while they were asleep at night. These are times of rest and peace when a disaster would be least expected. Their only reaction to what had befallen them was to admit their wrongdoing in associating partners with God. Associating partners with God is the highest level of wrongdoing. This scene depicts the wrongdoers taken by surprise when they faced the calamity, they realized the truth and had no recourse but to admit their guilt but it was too late and they were destroyed. Then the scene moves to another stage at a different time and place, a stage set on the theatre of the Day of Judgment. Thus, the destruction in this world is seamlessly connected with the torment in the Hereafter. The messengers will be asked so that all the details of the story would be revealed. Not only the guilty ones will admit to their guilt, but their crimes will also be made public. God will then remind them of the details which they have forgotten because God is aware of all events.

The deeds will be weighed with a true measure. Those whose deeds weigh heavily will be rewarded with success, and what better success than attaining salvation. They will be saved from Hell fire and will be admitted to paradise. But those whose deeds have no weight in God’s balance, they are the losers.

Verses: 10 to 25

10. And We have given you (humankind) power on earth, and appointed for you therein livelihoods. Little you give thanks.

11. And certainly We created you, then fashioned you, then told the angels, “Fall you prostrate before Adam.” And they fell prostrate, all save Iblis who was not of those who prostrated.

12. He (God) said, “What prevented you to prostrate when I commanded you?” (Iblis) said, “I am better than him. You created me of fire while You created him of mud.”

13. He (God) said, “Then go down from here. It is not for you to show pride here, so go forth. You are of the abject ones.”

14. He said, "Give me respite till the day they are raised up."
15. He (God) said, "You are among those who are given respite."
16. He said, "Now, because You sent me astray, verily I shall lurk in ambush for them on Your straight path."
17. Then I shall come upon them from before them and from behind them and from their right sides and from their left sides. And You will not find most of them thankful."
18. He (God) said, "Get out of here, despised, banished. I will fill Hell with all of those who follow you."
19. And Adam, dwell you and your wife in the Garden and eat from wherever you desire, but come not near this tree lest you become wrongdoers."
20. Then Satan whispered to them that he might manifest to them that which was hidden from them of their shame, and he said, "Your Lord forbade you from this tree, lest you should become angels or become of the immortals."
21. And he swore to them both, that he was their sincere adviser."
22. Thus, did he lead them on with guile. And when they tasted of the tree their shame became manifest to them and they began to heap on themselves some of the leaves of the Garden. And their Lord called them, (saying), "Did I not forbid you from that tree and tell you that Satan is your open enemy?"
23. They said, "Our Lord, we have wronged ourselves. If You do not forgive us and have mercy on us, we will certainly be lost."
24. He (God) said, "Go down (from whence), one of you is a foe to the other. There will be for you on earth a dwelling place and provision for a while."
25. He (God) said, "There you shall live, and there you shall die, and thence shall you be brought forth." (7:10-25)

This is how the great journey started. The narrative sets the stage for the beginning of the life of the human race on earth, "And We have given you (humankind) power on earth, and appointed for you therein livelihoods. Little you give thanks." God the Creator, of the earth and the humans, fashioned the earth to make it suitable for the survival of humankind and gave humankind the characteristics and the skills to be able to exploit the earth's resources to make it habitable. It is God who created the earth with its atmosphere, its composition, its size, its distance from the sun and the moon, its rotation around the sun, its tilted axis of rotation, its rotational speed, and all the necessary characteristics which made it a suitable residence for humankind. God created the resources necessary to start and sustain human life on earth. God appointed humankind as the master of all the creatures that live on earth. He gave humankind the talents, the skills, and the characteristics which enable him to dominate and domesticate these creatures. God gave humankind the ability to discover and understand the rules and laws that govern the universe; and use them to advance life on earth.

Humankind could not have been able to "conquer the nature" – a term that people, who do not understand God's role, like to use – without the power that God bestowed on him. The old Greek and Roman postulates – which form the basis of modern material western thought – imply an existing confrontation between humankind and the universe. They depict life on earth as a battle between humankind and nature. The process which humankind uses to discover, understand, and use the rules that govern the universe is called "conquering nature." These are silly and evil postulates. Had nature been an enemy to humankind, humankind would not have been able to exist.

Islam provides a holistic perspective on the creation. God created the universe, humankind, and nature. He controls all of them and it was His will to make the universe in such a way to allow human life to start and to flourish. This perspective allows humankind to live in harmony with the universe under the guidance of God; and enables humankind to lead secure and peaceful life and to fulfill the duties of God's vicegerent on earth for which he was created. But few people are grateful.

“And certainly We created you, then fashioned you, then told the angels, ‘Fall you prostrate before Adam.’ And they fell prostrate, all save Iblis who was not of those who prostrated. He (God) said, ‘What prevented you to prostrate when I commanded you?’ (Iblis) said, ‘I am better than him. You created me of fire while You created him of mud.’ He (God) said, ‘Then go down from here. It is not for you to show pride here, so go forth. You are of the abject ones.’ He said, ‘Give me respite till the day they are raised up.’ He (God) said, ‘You are among those who are given respite.’ He said, ‘Now, because You sent me astray, verily I shall lurk in ambush for them on Your straight path. Then I shall come upon them from before them and from behind them and from their right sides and from their left sides. And You will not find most of them thankful.’ He (God) said, ‘Get out of here, despised, banished. I will fill Hell with all of those who follow you.’” These verses describe the first scene of the story. It is an exciting and volatile scene.

However, we will delay the commentary on the story until we have finished the review of all the details of the story. In these verses the creation may mean formation of the body while fashioning may mean completion of the shape and characteristics. These are two levels in the process of creation and not two stages of development. From the linguistic point of view, the adverb “then” may indicate two concurrent events. So, these two events, the creation and fashioning, may have been two concurrent and not consecutive stages. This is similar to the verse, “Our Lord is He who gave to each (created) thing its form and nature, then gave it guidance,” (20:50) which indicates that God gave guidance to each created thing at the time of its creation in order that each creature would conduct the duties that he/she was created to perform. So, there is no time difference between the two levels. This is the view that we adopt in view of all the verses which deal with the creation of humankind. The conclusion that one can make from these verses is that humankind was created as a human being from the outset. We do not accept that humankind was the result of the evolution of a low level creation according to Darwin's theory. The unique biological, physiological, spiritual, and intellectual characteristics of the human being are a proof that humankind was created in a separate process and it did not evolve from another species.

The birth of the humankind was announced by God in a big celebration attended by God's high host. God commanded the angels to prostrate themselves to Adam (PBUH). The angels are a creation of God. They have their own characteristics and duties, but we only know of their characteristics that which has been mentioned earlier in the Quran. Iblis is another creation of God, different from the angels, “Iblis. He was of the jinn, so he rebelled against his Lord's command.” (18:50) Jinn were created from fire therefore, they are different from angels. However, Iblis was included in the command to the angels to prostrate themselves to Adam (PBUH). The angels, who were created to do what God commands them to do, prostrated themselves to Adam (PBUH). The command illustrates the honor that God bestowed on humankind and the compliance by the angels reflects their obedient nature. However, Iblis disobeyed God and refused to prostrate himself to Adam (PBUH).

The scene depicts three types of God's creation, each has a different nature: the angels, the jinn, and humankind. The angels are a model of absolute and total obedience. Iblis is a model of stark disobedience and hateful arrogance. The characteristics of humankind will be discussed later. Iblis did not comply with the command and was disobedient to his Lord. We will know later the thoughts that he entertained and caused him to disobey, knowing well that God is his Lord and his Creator. God asked Iblis about his reasons for disobeying God's command, Iblis's response was, "I am better than him. You created me of fire while You created him of mud." He chose to disobey in spite of God's clear command. When the Creator issues an unequivocal command, the created has no choice but to comply. God's punishment was pronounced immediately, "Then go down from here. It is not for you to show pride here, so go forth. You are of the abject ones." Iblis did not benefit of his knowledge of God's existence and characteristics and chose to adopt a decision different from that which was decreed by God. Thus, he came under the general rule: whoever refuses to accept any of God's commands is considered a disbeliever. It is a premeditated rejection of faith because Iblis had full knowledge that God is the only true God. It was neither the lack of knowledge of the existence of God, nor the lack of belief in God as the Creator that made Iblis a disbeliever. It was the disobedience that made him a disbeliever. For that, he was expelled from paradise, deprived of the mercy of God, and was cursed.

Iblis did not forget that it was Adam (PBUH) who was the cause of his doom. He did not give up. He asked God to give him respite till the Day of Judgment. When he was granted the respite, he announced his plan. He will seduce humankind and sway them away from the straight path. This was an expression of the premeditated evil and deliberate intention to sway humankind off the straight path. He vowed that he will approach humankind from all directions and ways and will cause them to be ungrateful.

God granted Iblis's request so that it would be a source of trial for humankind. God created humankind with a initial natural disposition that has equal propensity to goodness and evil. Humankind was given the intellect to be able to choose and make decisions, and the divine message to guide him in making these decisions. The ways for guidance and misguidance were delineated and humankind was given the tools for making the decision to choose which one to follow. Iblis was expelled from paradise and was deprived of God's mercy. This is the destiny of those who follow him. God gave Iblis the power to seduce and gave humankind the power to choose.

"Adam, dwell you and your wife in the Garden and eat from wherever you desire, but come not near this tree lest you become wrongdoers." The Quran does not specify which tree they were forbidden to eat from. This indicates that the prohibition was not related to the specific type of tree but it was a test in obedience. God gave Adam (PBUH) and his spouse the right to enjoy the fruits of the Garden and commanded them to observe His command which prohibited them to eat the fruits of a single specific tree. This was part of a training program to train humankind to respect the limits that God has set. It is a training to improve self-control and self-restraint. This training was required because humankind is endowed with carnal desires. The ability to control these desires is the criterion which separates humans from animals. Humankind is the master of his desires while animals are controlled by their desires.

Iblis was looking for a way to seduce this new creature: humankind - the creature which has been honored by God, whose creation was celebrated by the higher host, to whom the angels prostrated themselves, and who was the cause of the expulsion of Iblis from paradise. This new creature has propensity for both good and evil. The carnal desires of humankind, if not controlled, are his weaknesses. This is the door, which if left unchecked, can be accessed by Iblis. Iblis realized this, “Then Satan whispered to them that he might manifest to them that which was hidden from them of their shame, and he said, ‘Your Lord forbade you from this tree lest you should become angels or become of the immortals.’ And he swore to them both, that he was their sincere adviser.” We do not know exactly how does Satan whisper to people, but we know from the authentic source – which is the only source that we can rely upon – that Satan is able to tempt people to sin. The strength of Satan lies in the innate natural weakness of humankind. This weakness can be remedied by enhancing the faith and the remembrance of God. Satan has no authority on the believer who often remembers God. Satan’s scheming is weak. Satan’s objective was to reveal to them their private parts. However, he chose to appeal to the two deeply hidden desires that are part of the innate nature of all humans: being immortal and having an everlasting kingdom. This meaning can be gleaned from other verses. He swore to them that he is their sincere advisor. Adam and his spouse forgot God’s warning that Satan is their avowed enemy and fell under his spell. They forgot the prohibition and ate from the tree, “Thus did he lead them on with guile. And when they tasted of the tree their shame was manifest to them and they began to heap on themselves some of the leaves of the Garden. And their Lord called them, (saying), ‘Did I not forbid you from that tree and tell you that Satan is your open enemy?’” Satan tightened his noose and they fell in the trap. They discovered that they were naked and they were able to see their private parts for the first time. They heard words of blame from their Lord. How did God talk to them? How did He talk to the angels and to Iblis? These are all matters of the unseen. We believe that it happened but we do not know how it happened?

One of the characteristics of humankind becomes apparent, humankind forgets and makes mistakes. Humankind has a weak point that can be used by Satan to tempt him. Humankind may not be able to stay continuously committed to the straight path but he has the virtue that he realizes his mistakes and he seeks God’s forgiveness. He does not persist in his mistakes like Satan. “They said, ‘Our Lord, we have wronged ourselves. If You do not forgive us and have mercy on us, we will certainly be lost.’” This is the unique characteristic of humankind which connects him to his Lord. Human beings are able to repent and seek God’s forgiveness. They are able to recognize their weaknesses and they know that salvation can only be achieved through God’s power and mercy. This completes the first experience that Adam and his spouse went through in preparation for their mission on earth as vicegerents of God. This was also the beginning of the never ending battle with their enemy, “He (God) said, ‘Go down (from hence), one of you is a foe to the other. There will be for you on earth a dwelling place and provision for a while. There you shall live, and there you shall die, and thence shall you be brought forth.’”

They all came down to earth, but where was the Garden? This is part of the unseen which we are unable to fathom. God only knows the unseen. Any attempt to discover the unseen, after the cessation of God’s revelation, is doomed to failure. The tools available to us for acquiring knowledge are not appropriate for dealing with the unseen. However, the unseen is all around us.

What we don't know in this universe is more than what we know. The fact that we are unable to tap into the unseen does not mean that it does not exist.

They all came down to earth to live, Adam, his spouse, and Iblis and his host to start the eternal battle. It is a battle between two groups: a group who is bent on evil and another group who has propensity for both good and evil. The children of Adam have been destined to lead a life of work and enjoyment and eventually return to their Lord who will decide whether they are admitted to the Garden or to Hell fire. This is the conclusion of the first round in a long series of rounds between humankind and Iblis and his host. Humankind can only win these rounds if he sought refuge with his Lord otherwise he is doomed to failure.

Verses: 26 to 34

26. Children of Adam, we have indeed sent down to you clothing to cover your shame, and (clothing) for beauty and the clothing of God consciousness, that is the best. This is of God's signs that they may be mindful.

27. Children of Adam, do not let Satan seduce you, in the same manner that he got your parents out of the Garden, stripping them of their clothing, to expose their shame. He and his tribe see you from a position where you cannot see them. We made the devils friends to those who reject faith.

28. And when they commit a lewd act they say, "We found our fathers doing it and God enjoined it on us." Say, "God, verily, does not enjoin lewdness. Do you say things about God which you do not know?"

29. Say, "My Lord has commanded justice." And set your faces upright to Him at every place of prayer, and call upon Him, making your devotion sincere to Him. As He created you in the beginning, so you shall return.

30. A group has been guided by Him, while another error was their justly earned due. They choose the devils for protecting guardians instead of God and they thought they were rightly guided.

31. Children of Adam, wear your beautiful apparel at every place of prayer. Eat and drink, but do not be extravagant. He certainly does not love those who are extravagant.

32. Say, "Who has forbidden the adornment of God, which He has produced for His servants, and the things, clean and pure, (which He has provided) for sustenance?" Say, "Such, on the Day of Resurrection, will be only for those who believed during the life of the world." Thus, We detail Our revelations for people who have knowledge.

33. Say, "My Lord has indeed forbidden indecencies, whether open or secret; sins and trespasses against truth or reason; associating partners with God, for which He has given no authority; and saying things about God of which you have no knowledge."

34. And every nation has its term, and when their term is reached, they cannot delay it nor advance it even for an hour." (7:26-34)

"Children of Adam, We have indeed sent down to you clothing to cover your shame, and (clothing) for beauty and the clothing of God consciousness, that is the best. This is of the God's signs that they may be mindful." This address comes against the background of the previous scene. It is a scene which depicts the nakedness of Adam (PBUH) and his spouse and their attempt to cover themselves up with the Garden's leaves. This was the consequence of the sin of disobeying God. The Quran presents a different perspective for Adam's sin from that given in the Old Testament, where it is claimed that the forbidden tree was the tree of knowledge. In Islam, the tree was not forbidden to prevent Adam (PBUH) from gaining knowledge but it was forbidden as a part of Adam's (PBUH) training to obey God and to recognize his eternal enemy.

The verse refers to God's blessings in providing a cover for the children of Adam. The cover serves a dual purpose, to provide protection and ornament for the body. The Arabic word used in the verse for "cover" could also be extended to include other commodities and other household articles which make life comfortable. The verse also mentions the clothing of God consciousness and describes it as the best clothing. Abdel Al-Rahman bin Aslam said, "God covers those who are conscious of Him." There is a parallel between the two types of clothing, they go hand in hand. Regular clothing provides protection and beauty for the body and God consciousness provides protection and beauty for the soul. Physical and spiritual decency complement each other.

"Children of Adam, do not let Satan seduce you, in the same manner that he got your parents out of the Garden, stripping them of their clothing, to expose their shame. He and his tribe see you from a position where you cannot see them. We made the devils friends to those who reject faith. And when they commit a lewd act they say, 'We found our fathers doing it and God enjoined it on us.' Say, 'God, verily, does not enjoin lewdness. Do you say things about God which you do not know?' Say. 'My Lord has commanded justice.' And set your faces upright to Him at every time and place of prayer, and call upon Him, making your devotion sincere to His. As He created you in the beginning, so shall you return. A group has been guided by Him, while another error was their justly earned due. They choose the devils for protecting guardians instead of God and they thought they were rightly guided." This is the second time that God addressed the children of Adam in the course of the narrative about Adam's encounter with Satan. This discourse refers to the old pagan Arab's tradition to circumambulate naked around the Ka'ba claiming that this was God's command which came to them through their forefathers.

The first time God addressed the children of Adam during this discourse was when He reminded them of the difficult experience that Adam and his spouse went through and it was only God's blessings which guided them to covering their bodies. This time the address is a general warning to be cautious of Satan's tricks who will always be trying to tempt them to follow laws and traditions which will lead them away from God's way. They should be always on the alert so that Satan would not take them by surprise. God willed that those who reject faith befriend Satan and his tribe. This is a horrible state of affairs when they unwittingly take for friends those who are their avowed enemies. The devils will have no difficulty at all in leading those who reject faith astray. It is a fact that Satan is the friend of the disbelievers while God is the protecting friend of the believers. This has drastic consequences on people's perspective and attitudes. An example is given, "And when they commit a lewd act they say, 'We found our fathers doing it and God enjoined it on us.'" This is what the idolatrous Arabs used to say and do. Men and women would circumambulate around the Ka'ba in the nude claiming that they were following God's command. Even though they were associating partners with God, but they did not have the audacity to claim that faith has no role to play in people's life. Such as the claims that are being made now and accepted by some societies, claims which aim at replacing God's law with manmade laws.

The Prophet (PBUH) was commanded to respond to these claims, “God, verily, does not enjoin lewdness.” Being nude in public is a lewd act. These acts are unacceptable. Ages of ignorance are all similar even if they come centuries apart. God did neither command nor condone lewd acts. God’s commands are in the Scriptures which were revealed to His messengers. God only commanded what is moderate and just. God commanded people to follow His path, a path of decency and morality. God commanded that people believe in Him as the one true God. Then the verses remind people of the Day of Judgment. On that day, people will be separated into two groups: those who followed God and those who followed Satan. This is the end of the journey. The journey started with two groups: Adam (PBUH) and his spouse on one side and Satan on the other. The circle has been completed. Those who were obedient to God will return in the company of Adam (PBUH) and his spouse and those who were disobedient will return in the company of Satan.

“Children of Adam, wear your beautiful apparel at every time and place of prayer. Eat and drink, but do not be extravagant. He certainly does not love those who are extravagant. Say, ‘Who has forbidden the adornment of God, which He has produced for His servants, and the things, clean and pure, (which He has provided) for sustenance?’ Say, ‘Such, on the Day of Resurrection, will be only for those who believed during the life of the world.’ Thus, We detail Our revelations for people who have knowledge. Say, ‘My Lord has indeed forbidden indecencies, whether open or secret; sins and trespasses against truth or reason; associating partners with God, for which He has given no authority; and saying things about God of which you have no knowledge.’” These verses reiterate once more the basic premise of the doctrine, only God has the authority to determine what is lawful and what is forbidden. Children of Adam are commanded to enjoy the things that God made lawful to them, but they should not be extravagant. Al-Quortubi mentions in his book, “The Rules of the Quran,” that “The idolatrous Arabs used to abstain from eating cooked meat while they were performing pilgrimage and they only eat very little. They also used to go around the K’aba in the nude. They were then told, “Wear your beautiful apparel at every time and place of prayer. Eat and drink, but do not be extravagant.” Extravagance means exceeding the limits set by God by decreeing that what God has made lawful is unlawful. Extravagance can work both ways: decreeing what is lawful to be unlawful or decreeing the unlawful to be lawful. Both are acts of transgression, because only God has the authority to decree what is lawful and what is unlawful. The verses then go on to objugate the fact that there are people who forbid themselves and others to enjoy what God has made lawful. “Say, ‘Who has forbidden the adornment of God, which He has produced for His servants, and the things, clean and pure, (which He has provided) for sustenance?’” The believers have the right to enjoy the beautiful things that God blessed humankind with and in the Hereafter it will be exclusively theirs.

God only forbade indecencies whether open or secret. Indecencies include all sins, transgression against people, committing injustice, and associating partners with God. The norms that determine whether a dress is decent or not are integral to the way of life that God wants people to lead. This is how these norms are connected to the doctrine. The norms in the human way of life should be dictated by God’s law and not decreed by a manmade law. The norms of decency differentiate between humankind and beasts. Ages of ignorance distort the human values by endorsing indecent clothing as the accepted norm. Because of the importance of this issue, which may be considered a secondary issue by some, a reminder of the temporary nature of life on earth is given, “And every nation has its term, and when their term is reached, they cannot delay it nor advance it even for an hour.” The word “term” may mean the term of life for an individual which is reached upon the death of the individual or it may mean the term of life for a nation which is reached upon its demise.

Verses: 35 to 53

35. Children of Adam, whenever there come to you messengers from among you reciting My verses to you, then those who were conscious of God and did good deeds on them shall be no fear nor shall they grieve.

36. But those who rejected Our revelations and treated them with arrogance, they are companions of the Fire, to abide therein forever.

37. Who is more unjust than he who invents a lie against God or rejects His revelations? Those will receive their portion of the decree. Until Our messengers come to cause them to die, they will say, “Where is that which you used to call beside God?” They say, “They have left us.” And they testified against themselves that they were disbelievers.

38. He (God) said, “Enter in the company of nations, who passed away before you of humans and jinn, into the Fire.” Every time a new nation enters, it curses its sister-nation (that went before), until they follow each other, all into the Fire. The last one said to the first one, “Our Lord, it is these who misled us; so give them double torment in the Fire.” He (God) will say, “For each one there is double torment; but this you do not know.”

39. Then the first will say to the last, “See then, you were not better than us; so taste you of the torment for what you had earned.”

40. Certainly those who rejected Our revelations and treated them with arrogance, for them the gates of heaven will not open nor they will be admitted to the Garden until the camel can pass through the eye of the needle. Thus, We requite the guilty.

41. Theirs will be a bed of Hell, and over them coverings (of Hell). Thus, do We requite the wrongdoers.

42. But those who believed and did good deeds, We do not overburden any soul beyond its capacity. Those are the rightful owners of the Garden. They will abide therein forever.

43. And We shall remove whatever rancour that may be in their hearts. Beneath them will be rivers flowing, and they shall say, “Praise be to God, who has guided us to this (felicity). We could have never found guidance had it not been for the guidance of God. The Messengers of our Lord did indeed bring the truth.” And they shall hear the cry, “The Garden is before you; you have been made its inheritors, for what you have done.”

44. The dwellers of the Garden will call out to the dwellers of the Fire, “We have indeed found what our Lord promised us to be true. Have you also found what your Lord promised you to be true?” They shall say, “Yes.” Then a crier will proclaim to them, “The curse of God is on the wrongdoers.”

45. Those who hinder (people) from the path of God and seek to make it crooked, and they were those who denied the Hereafter.”

46. Between them shall be a veil; and on the heights will be men who would know everyone by his mark. They will call out to the dwellers of the Garden, “Peace be with you.” They will not have entered, but they still have hope.

47. When their eyes are turned towards the dwellers of the Fire, they will say, "Our Lord, do not place us with the wrongdoers."

48. The people on the heights will call to men whom they recognized by their marks, saying, "What did your multitude and your arrogance avail you?"

49. Are these whom you swore that God would not show them mercy? (Unto them it has been said), 'Enter the Garden. No fear shall come upon you nor will you grieve.'

50. And the dwellers of the Fire will cry out to the dwellers of the Garden, "Pour on us some water or some of what God has provided you." They will say, "God has forbidden both to those who rejected faith."

51. Who took their religion as a game and play; and who were deceived by the life of the world. So this day We have forgotten them as they have forgotten the meeting of this day and as they used to deny Our revelations.

52. Verily We have brought them a Book which We expounded with knowledge, a guidance and a mercy for a people who believe.

53. Are they just waiting for its fulfillment? On the day it is finally fulfilled, those who disregarded it before will say, "The messengers of our Lord did indeed bring true (tidings). Have we no intercessors now to intercede on our behalf? Or could we be sent back? So that we behave differently from our behavior in the past" In fact they will have lost their souls, and the things they invented will fail them. (7:35-53)

"Children of Adam, whenever there come to you messengers from among you reciting My verses to you, then those who were conscious of God and did good deeds on them shall be no fear nor shall they grieve. But those who rejected Our revelations and treated them with arrogance, they are companions of the Fire, to abide therein forever." The verse enunciates God's promise to Adam (PBUH) and his descendants. This promise is a covenant between God and Adam (PBUH) and his children. If they fulfill the conditions of the covenant, then they deserve the status of God's vicegerents on earth. This is the role that they were created for. However, if Adam's (PBUH) descendants do not fulfill this condition then they are not eligible for the status of vicegerents, their deeds in this world will be in vain, and they will be held accountable on the Day of Judgment for their failure to fulfill God's covenant.

Those who are God conscious and do good deeds shall have no fear because God consciousness will provide protection against sins and lewd acts. It will protect them especially of the worst of sins: associating partners with God. God consciousness will guide them to do good deeds and to be obedient to God. They will then enjoy a deep sense of security and peace having been assured of their destiny. On the other hand, those who reject God's revelations will be led to Hell fire together with their friend Iblis.

"Who is more unjust than he who invents a lie against God or rejects His revelations? Those will receive their portion of the decree. And when Our messengers come to cause them to die, they say, 'Where is that which you used to call beside God?' They will say, 'They have left us.' And they testified against themselves that they were disbelievers." Here we are watching the scene of those who fabricated lies about God and those who rejected His revelations as the angels come to capture their souls and put them to death. The angels will ask them, "Where is that which you used to call beside God?" The only answer they will have, is "They have left us." They let us down and we cannot find them. What a loss is it to lose one's deity in a time of need? What kind of deity is this who lets his servants down in such a critical moment? They confessed that they were disbelievers.

“He said, ‘Enter in the company of nations, who passed away before you of humans and jinn, into the Fire.’ Every time a new nation enters, it curses its sister-nation (that went before), until they follow each other, all into the Fire. The last one said to the first one, ‘Our Lord, it is these who misled us; so give them double torment in the Fire.’ He will say, ‘For each one there is double torment; but this you do not know.’ Then the first will say to the last, ‘See then, you were not better than us; so taste you of the torment for what you had earned.’” They will be told to join their colleagues and friends from among humans and jinn in Hell fire. Was not Iblis the one who disobeyed his Lord? Was not he who tricked Adam (PBUH) and his spouse and caused them to be expelled from paradise? Was not he who seduced Adam’s (PBUH) children? Did not God promise to admit him and his followers to Hell fire as a result of their disobedience? Now is the time to fulfill that promise. All those who followed Iblis will be admitted to Hell fire. Different groups who had been friends in the worldly life will now be fighting together and laying the blame on each other for this end. Each group will be asking God to inflict double the punishment on those whom they blame for this destiny. The final statement about the disbelievers is enunciated, “Certainly those who rejected Our revelations and treated them with arrogance, for them the gates of heaven will not open nor they will be admitted to the Garden until the camel can pass through the eye of the needle. Thus, We requite the guilty.” This is an amazing scene. Imagine a camel trying to pass through the eye of a needle. Those who rejected God’s revelations can only be admitted to paradise if this impossible act is performed. Hell fire is then their abode. In it, “Theirs will be a bed of Hell, and over them coverings (of Hell). Thus, do We requite the wrongdoers.” Not only they will have beds of fire but they will also have fire covers. This is the reward for the wrongdoers. The wrongdoers are the criminals who associated partners with God and who fabricated lies about Him.

We now look at another scene, “But those who believed and did good deeds, We do not overburden any soul beyond its capacity. Those are the rightful owners of the Garden. They will abide therein forever. And We shall remove whatever rancour that may be in their hearts. Beneath them will be rivers flowing, and they shall say, ‘Praise be to God, who has guided us to this (felicity). We could have never found guidance had it not been for the guidance of God. The Messengers of our Lord did indeed bring the truth.’ And they shall hear the cry, ‘The Garden is before you; you have been made its inheritors, for what you have done.’” Those who believed and did the best they could to perform good deeds, God does not overburden a soul beyond its capacity, are the companions of paradise. By God’s leave and grace, they inherit paradise because they believed and did good deeds. They followed God’s messengers and disobeyed Iblis. Because of this, they received God’s mercy which landed them in paradise. The Prophet (PBUH) has been quoted to have said, “No one will be admitted to paradise on the basis of their deeds alone.” The companions asked him, “Even you, Messenger of God?” He said, “Even I, unless God bestows His mercy and grace on me.” The scene of the disbelievers in Hell fire is juxtaposed against the scene of the believers in paradise. The groups in Hell fire are fighting while the believers live in peace and felicity together. The disbelievers are having beds of fire while the believers will enjoy rivers flowing underneath them. The disbelievers are busy laying the blame on each other while the believers are busy praising God. The disbelievers will be treated with contempt while the believers will be treated with dignity and honor. Rancour has been removed from the hearts of the believers. Their hearts will be cleansed of any traces of anger or bad feelings towards each other.

The verses continue to describe the scene after each group found its place: the believers comfortable in paradise, and the disbelievers suffering in Hell fire. The believers will call upon the disbelievers saying, “We have indeed found what our Lord promised us to be true. Have you also found what your Lord promised you to be true?” It is a rhetorical question which carries a tone of mockery. The answer comes back in one word, “Yes.” The dialogue is then interrupted, “Then a crier will proclaim to them, ‘The curse of God is on the wrongdoers. Those who hinder (people) from the path of God and seek to make it crooked, and they were those who denied the Hereafter.’” This clarifies the meaning of the term “wrongdoers.” A disbeliever is a wrongdoer. The wrongdoers hinder people from God’s path; they follow a crooked path; and they deny the Hereafter. This description underlines their real objective. They are not interested in the straight path they want to follow a crooked way. The straight path is the path delineated by God’s law, all other paths are crooked. It is obvious that these people do not believe in the Hereafter, because had they believed in the Hereafter they would have certainly followed the straight path.

“Between them shall be a veil; and on the heights will be men who would know everyone by his mark. They will call out to the dwellers of the Garden, ‘Peace be with you.’ They will not have entered, but they still have hope. When their eyes are turned towards the dwellers of the Fire, they will say, ‘Our Lord, do not place us with the wrongdoers.’ The people on the heights will call to men whom they recognized by their marks, saying, ‘What did your multitude and your arrogance avail you? Are these whom you swore that God would not show them mercy?’ (To them it has been said), ‘Enter the Garden. No fear shall come upon you nor will you grieve.’” It has been narrated that those men standing on the heights – the barrier between paradise and Hell fire- are people whose sins are exactly balanced by their good deeds. They are neither admitted to paradise nor destined to Hell fire. They are waiting for God’s grace and hope to receive His mercy. They will spot, among the people in Hell fire, people they used to know in life, people who were arrogant criminals. They will mock them saying, “What did your multitude and your arrogance avail you?” Here you are in Hell fire. They will remind them of what they used to say in their worldly life about the believers, “Are these whom you swore that God would not show them mercy?” Look where did they end? They are now happy in paradise; they will suffer no fear nor shall they grieve.

“And the dwellers of the Fire will cry out to the dwellers of the Garden, ‘Pour on us some water or some of what God has provided you.’ They will say, ‘God has forbidden both to those who rejected faith.’” The hopes of those in Hell fire are dashed and they are reminded with God’s final verdict, “This day We have forgotten them as they have forgotten the meeting of this day and as they used to deny Our revelations. Verily We have brought them a Book which We expounded with knowledge, a guidance and a mercy for a people who believe. Are they just waiting for its fulfillment? On the day it is finally fulfilled, those who disregarded it before will say, ‘The messengers of our Lord did indeed bring true (tidings). Have we no intercessors now to intercede on our behalf? Or could we be sent back? So that we behave differently from our behavior in the past.’ In fact, they will have lost their souls, and the things they invented will fail them.”

Verses: 54 to 58

54. Your Lord is God, who created the heavens and the earth in six days, then established Himself on the throne. He covers the night with the day, which is in haste to follow it, and has made the sun and the moon and the stars subservient by His command. His verily is all the creation and the commandment. Blessed be God, the Lord of the Worlds.

55. Call upon your Lord humbly and in secret. Certainly, He does not love the aggressors.

56. Do no mischief on the earth, after it has been set in order, but call on Him with fear and longing (in your hearts). Certainly the Mercy of God is (always) near to those who do good.

57. It is He who sends the winds as tidings heralding His mercy, till they have carried clouds heavy with rain, We derive them to a dead land, and then cause water to descend thereon and thereby bring forth fruits of every kind. Thus, We bring forth the dead. Haply you may be mindful.

58. From the land that is pure and good, by the will of its Lord, springs up produce, while bad land only produces scanty harvest. Thus do we explain the revelations to those who are grateful. (7:54-58)

“Your Lord is God, who created the heavens and the earth in six days, then established Himself on the throne. He covers the night with the day, which is in haste to follow it, and has made the sun and the moon and the stars subservient by His command. His verily is all creation and commandment. Blessed be God, the Lord of the Worlds.” It is God who created this huge universe and it is He who controls and manages it. He causes the night to follow the day in a perpetual cycle. It is He who controls the sun and the moon. This is your Lord. He deserves to be worshiped as your sole Lord. He raises you according to His program, He teaches you according to His discipline, He enacts the laws that you should follow according to His commands, and He judges among you according to His rules. He is the sovereign power that owns and commands. Since He is the sole Creator, then no one else should have the right to command except Him. This is the objective of this discourse, the issue of who is the Lord, who is the God, and who has the right to rule. This issue has been raised in connection with what to eat and how to be dressed as it has been raised in connection with cattle, plantations, and rituals in the previous Sura.

“Call upon your Lord humbly and in secret. Certainly, He does not love the aggressors. Do no mischief on the earth, after it has been set in order, but call on Him with fear and longing (in your hearts). Certainly the Mercy of God is (always) near to those who do good.” The verse directs believers to call upon their Lord when they are in the best mood for prayer. Those who call upon their Lord should do it humbly and in secret. Calling upon the Lord in private reinforces the relationship between the person and God. Muslim narrates on the authority of Abi Musa (RA), he said, “We were traveling with the Prophet (PBUH) when people started to say Allahu Akbar in a very loud voice. The Prophet (PBUH) said, ‘People, take it easy. God is not deaf nor is He far. God is near you, He hears you when you call, and He is with you.’” The Quran inculcates in the believers the feeling of God’s nearness to them. Those who feel that God is near realize that there is no need to raise one’s voice when calling upon God. They should also call upon Him fearing His punishment and hoping for His grace and reward. God’s mercy is always close to those who do good, who serve God as if they were able to see Him because He sees them even though they do not see Him.

“It is He who sends the winds as tidings heralding His mercy, till they have carried clouds heavy with rain, We derive them to a dead land, and then cause water to descend thereon and thereby bring forth fruits of every kind. Thus, We bring forth the dead. Haply you may be mindful.”

These are God’s signs in the universe, the signs of His power, dominion, management, and will. These signs are created by God, the only deity that deserves to be worshipped. He created these signs, out of His mercy, to provide for His servants. Each moment winds blow, they move the clouds and the clouds bring rain to a piece of land. The verse ties this physical phenomenon to God’s will. God sends the winds as a sign of His mercy. Winds blow according to God’s laws which control the universe. The believer perspective is that even though God created rules and allowed them to govern the universe and the physical phenomena around us, He is still in control of these phenomena. He allows them to happen. There is no contradiction between allowing the phenomena to be controlled by rules which God created in the first place and the fact that God is still in control of every single event.

The verse also highlights the connection between the ability of God to create humankind in the first place and His ability to raise the dead on the Day of Judgment. The miracle which produced humankind in the first instant is the same miracle that can be used to raise the dead at the end of the journey. God who produces fruits from a dead land is able to raise the dead on the Day of Judgment.

“From the land that is pure and good, by the will of its Lord, springs up produce, while bad land only produces scanty harvest. Thus do we explain the revelations to those who are grateful.” The Quran and the Prophet’s (PBUH) traditions draw the similitude between a good heart and a good land, and the similitude between an evil heart and a barren land. Both the land and the heart embrace the seeds and produce fruits. The heart bears fruits in the form of feelings, intentions, emotions, responses, attitudes, and will. The land bears the fruits that people eat and enjoy. Guidance and good advice to the heart are like water to the land. The good heart opens up for guidance and benefit from the good advice. The good heart becomes pure and produces good deeds. The hardness of the bad heart does not allow guidance to penetrate and cleanse it. The heart becomes impure and produces evil deeds. Only those who have good hearts will be grateful. The concept of gratitude to God is one of the themes of this Sura. It is repeated often together with the concepts of remembrance and warning.

Verses: 59 to 93

59. We sent Noah to his people. He said, “My people serve God. You have no other deity but Him. I fear for you the torment of a grievous day.”

60. The chieftains of his people said, “We see you in plain error.”

61. He said, “My people, there is no error in my mind, on the contrary I am a messenger from the Lord of the worlds.

62. I but convey to you the messages of my Lord and give you good counsel, and I know from God that which you do not know.

63. Do you wonder that there has come to you a message from your Lord, through a man of your own people, to warn you, so that you may be conscious of God and haply receive His Mercy?”

64. But they denied him, and We saved him, and those with him, in the Ark. We drowned in the flood those who rejected Our revelations. They were indeed a blind people.

65. To the (tribe of) 'Ad, (We sent) Hud, one of their (own) brethren. He said, "My people serve God. You have no other deity but Him, will you not be conscious of God?"

66. The chiefs of those who disbelieved from among his people said, "Most surely we see that you are an imbecile, and we think that you are a liar."

67. He said, "My people, I am no imbecile, but (I am) a messenger from the Lord of the worlds.

68. I convey to you the messages of my Lord and I am for you a true adviser.

69. Do you wonder that there has come to you a message from your Lord through a man of your own people, to warn you? Remember when He made you heirs after the people of Noah, and gave you a stature tall among the nations. Remember the bounties (you have received) from God, that so you may succeed."

70. They said, "Did you come to us so that we serve God alone, and forsake what our fathers used to serve? Bring us what you are threatening us with, if you are telling the truth."

71. He said, "Terror and wrath have already fallen upon you from your Lord. Do you dispute with me over names which you have named, you and your fathers, without authority from God? Then wait, I will be also waiting."

72. We saved him and those who were with him, by Our mercy; and We cut off the roots of those who rejected Our revelations and did not believe.

73. To the (tribe of) Thamud, (We sent) Salih, one of their own brethren. He said, "My people serve God. You have no other deity but Him. Now has come to you a clear sign from your Lord. This she-camel of God is a sign for you. So leave her to graze in God's land, and do not harm her, or you shall be seized with a painful torment.

74. And remember how He made you heirs after the 'Ad people and gave you habitations in the land. You build for yourselves palaces and castles in the plains and carve out homes in the mountains. So remember the bounties of God and do not spread mischief in the land."

75. The chiefs of those who disbelieved from among his people said to those who believed from among the powerless, "Do you know indeed that Salih is a messenger from his Lord?" They said, "We do indeed believe in the revelation which he has been sent with."

76. Those who were arrogant said, "We reject that which you believe in."

77. Then they ham-strung the she-camel, and insolently defied the order of their Lord, saying, "Salih, bring about what you are threatening us with, if you are a messenger (of God)."

78. So the earthquake seized them, and they lay dead in their homes.

79. Salih turned away from them, saying, "My people, I did indeed deliver my Lord's message to you and I gave you good counsel, but you do not love good counselors."

80. We also (sent) Lut. He said to his people, "Do you commit lewdness, which no people before you in world, ever committed?"

81. You approach males with lust instead of women. You are indeed people given to excesses."

82. The answer of his people was only to say (one to another), "Drive them out of your township. They are a people who want to keep themselves pure."

83. So We saved him and his household, except his wife she was of those who stayed behind.

84. And we showered them with rain. Then see what was the end of those who indulged in sin and crime.

85. To the (tribe of) Madyan, (We sent) Shu'ayb one of their (own) brethren. He said, "My people serve God. You have no other god but Him. Now has come to you a clear sign from your Lord. Give just measure and weight and do not withhold from people the things that are their due; and do no mischief in the land after it has been set in order. That will be best for you, if you are believers.

86. Do not lurk on every road to threaten (wayfarers), and to turn away from God's path him who believes in Him, seeking to make it crooked. And remember, when you were but few, how He did multiply you. And consider the end of the mischief-makers.

87. And if there is a party among you who believed in the message with which I have been sent, and a party which did not believe, then be patience until God judges between us. He is the Best of Judges.”

88. The arrogant chieftains of his people said, “Shu’ayb, we will certainly drive you out from our township, you and those who believed with you, unless you return back to our religion.” He said, “Even though we hate it?

89. We would indeed have invented a lie against God, if we returned to your ways after God has rescued us therefrom; nor could we by any means return thereto unless it is the will of God, Our Lord. Our Lord’s knowledge encompassed everything. In God we trust. Our Lord, expose the truth (and judge) between us and our people, for You are the best to judge.”

90. The chieftains of his people, who disbelieved, said, “If you follow Shu’ayb, then truly you shall be the losers.”

91. So the earthquake seized them, and they lay dead in their homes.

92. Those who denied Shu’ayb became as though they had not dwelt therein. Those who denied Shu’ayb, they were the losers.

93. Shu’ayb turned away from them, saying, “My people, I did indeed deliver my Lord’s message to you and I gave you good counsel. So why should I lament over a people who refuse to believe.” (7:59-93)

“We sent Noah to his people. He said, ‘My people serve God. You have no other deity but Him. I fear for you the torment of a grievous day.’ The chieftains of his people said, ‘We see you in plain error.’ He said, ‘My people, there is no error in my mind, on the contrary I am a messenger from the Lord of the worlds. I only convey to you the messages of my Lord and give you good counsel, and I know from God that which you do not know. Do you wonder that there has come to you a message from your Lord, through a man of your own people, to warn you, so that you may be conscious of God and haply receive His Mercy?’ But they denied him, and We saved him, and those with him, in the Ark. We drowned in the flood those who rejected Our revelations. They were indeed a blind people.” This is a brief review of Noah’s (PBUH) story. The story has been mentioned in details in other Suras. The focus of the narrative is on the themes we have mentioned earlier: the doctrine, the way the message was delivered, the way the message was received, the feelings that the messengers experienced, and the actualization of the warning for those who rejected the message. That is why only the features that touch upon these themes are mentioned. God sent Noah (PBUH) to his people according to the divine convention in delivering the message to people. Noah simply said to his people, “My people serve God. You have no other deity but Him.” It is the same statement which forms the basis of the doctrine. It is the foundation on which human life rests. It brings people together to march in the same direction and to reach the same objective. It guarantees the freeing of humankind of all forms of bondage: bondage to vain desires and bondage to other human beings. Noah then delivered a warning, “I fear for you the torment of a grievous day.” One notices that the concepts of the Hereafter and the accountability of humankind were mentioned in God’s message as far back as Noah’s (PBUH) time. Those who had a twisted mind responded, “We see you in plain error.” It is the same response that Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) received when he called upon his people to embrace Islam. It is a twisted logic that confuses between guidance and error. Noah (PBUH) continued with his argument, “My people, there is no error in my mind, on the contrary I am a messenger from the Lord of the worlds. I only convey to you the messages of my Lord and give you good counsel, and I know from God that which you do not know.”

One notices a jump in the dialogue, at this point, as is evident from the statement that Noah makes, “Do you wonder that there has come to you a message from your Lord, through a man of your own people,” This was Noah’s (PBUH) response to an objection that must have been raised by Noah’s (PBUH) people. The Quran did not mention the objection explicitly but the response was mentioned instead. There is no wonder, God chooses whomsoever to be His messenger. Noah (PBUH) continues to explain the objective of the message, “to warn you, so that you may be conscious of God and haply receive His Mercy?” The warning aimed at evoking the feelings that come with God consciousness. The warning fell on deaf ears and hard hearts. So, “They denied him, and We saved him, and those with him, in the Ark. We drowned in the flood those who rejected Our revelations. They were indeed a blind people.”

The verses carry us on a journey through history, and here we are witnessing what happened to the tribe of ‘Ad the people of Hud, “To the (tribe of) ‘Ad, (We sent) Hud, one of their (own) brethren. He said, ‘My people serve God. You have no other deity but Him, will you not be conscious of God?’ The chiefs of those who disbelieved from among his people said, ‘Most surely we see that you are an imbecile, and we think that you are a liar.’ He said, ‘My people, I am no imbecile, but (I am) a messenger from the Lord of the worlds. I convey to you the messages of my Lord and I am for you a true adviser. Do you wonder that there has come to you a message from your Lord through a man of your own people, to warn you? Remember when He made you heirs after the people of Noah, and gave you a stature tall among the nations. Remember the bounties (you have received) from God, that so you may succeed.’ They said, ‘Did you come to us so that we serve God alone, and forsake what our fathers used to serve? Bring us what you are threatening us with, if you are telling the truth.’ He said, ‘Terror and wrath have already fallen upon you from your Lord. Do you dispute with me over names which you have named, you and your fathers, without authority from God? Then wait, I will be also waiting.’ We saved him and those who were with him, by Our mercy; and We cut off the roots of those who rejected Our revelations and did not believe.” It is the same message, the same dialogue, and the same ending. It is the course of divine justice.

It is narrated that the tribe of ‘Ad were actually the descendants of the people who believed in Noah’s (PBUH) message and escaped the flood by accompanying Noah (PBUH) on the ark. So the tribe of ‘Ad were the descendants of people who believed in God, but as time passed they deviated from the path of submission to God the lord of the worlds. Satan seduced them by appealing to their vain desires of love of ownership and unlawful pleasures. So, when their prophet said to them, “My people serve God. You have no other deity but Him, will you not be conscious of God?” they rejected him. It is the same statement that Noah (PBUH) made to his people before, they refused and were punished. ‘Ad came after them. The verses did not mention where they resided, but we know from another Sura that they lived in an area called Al-Ahqaf. These were the sandy hills on the boundaries of Yemen. They followed in the footsteps of the people of Noah (PBUH). They never reflected on what happened to the people of Noah (PBUH) before. This is why Hud (PBUH) said to them, “Will you not be conscious of God?” The chiefs of his people were arrogant and felt slighted that Hud (PBUH) was asking them to serve God alone. They said to him, “Most surely we see that you are an imbecile, and we think that you are a liar.” They did not even bother to reflect or consider the seriousness of his call. He quietly refuted their claims of being imbecile or a liar and explained again that he is a messenger of God. They must have also doubted that a man from among them would become a messenger of God, because Hud (PBUH) gave them the same answer that Noah (PBUH) gave before, “Do you wonder that there has come to you a message from your Lord through a man of your own people, to warn you?” He also continued to remind them of God’s blessings which He bestowed on them, “Remember when He made you heirs after the people of Noah, and gave you a stature tall among the nations. Remember the bounties (you have received) from God, that so you may succeed.” They should have been grateful to God for the legacy and blessings He bestowed on them. Instead, they mocked him and challenged him to bring about the punishment that he threatened them with. The response of the Messenger was forthcoming, “Terror and wrath have already fallen upon you from your Lord. Do you dispute with me over names which you have named, you and your fathers, without authority from God? Then wait, I will be also waiting.” He tried to clarify that they only worship false deities. They made it up themselves and their forefathers. The true God never gave you authority to declare these false deities as gods. This statement is often repeated in the Quran. It is an evocative statement which emphasizes the fundamental truth that every word, every law, every tradition, and every norm has to be authorized by God. Anything that has not been authorized by God is in vain and will readily disappear. Many wonderful words, bright theories, and attractive views had no leg to stand on and quickly vanished because they were not authorized by God. The end is declared, “We saved him and those who were with him, by Our mercy; and We cut off the roots of those who rejected Our revelations and did not believe.”

Another page of the history of those who rejected the truth has been folded and we come to a new episode in the history of humankind, “To the (tribe of) Thamud, (We sent) Salih, one of their own brethren. He said, ‘My people serve God. You have no other deity but Him. Now has come to you a clear sign from your Lord. This she-camel of God is a sign for you. So leave her to graze in God’s land, and do not harm her, or you shall be seized with a painful torment. And remember how He made you heirs after the ‘Ad people and gave you habitations in the land. You build for yourselves palaces and castles in the plains and carve out homes in the mountains. So remember the bounties of God and do not spread mischief in the land.’ The chiefs of those who disbelieved from among his people said to those who believed from among the powerless, ‘Do you know indeed that Salih is a messenger from his Lord?’ They said, ‘We do indeed believe in the revelation which he has been sent with.’ Those who were arrogant said, ‘We reject that which you believe in.’ Then they ham-strung the she-camel, and insolently defied the order of their Lord, saying, ‘Salih, bring about what you are threatening us with, if you are a messenger (of God).’ So the earthquake seized them, and they lay dead in their homes. Salih turned away from them, saying, ‘My people, I did indeed deliver my Lord’s message to you and I gave you good counsel, but you do not love good counselors.’” The same story has been repeated again, the verses depict a new episode in the series of the confrontations between the truth and falsehood, “To the (tribe of) Thamud, (We sent) Salih, one of their own brethren. He said, ‘My people serve God. You have no other god but Him.’” It the same story but with a new dimension added. When the people of Salih (PBUH) requested a proof to support his claim, he challenged them with a sign from God, “This she-camel of God is a sign for you.” Many of the details of the story were omitted because the quick pace of the narrative focused only on the message and the consequences of rejecting the message. The she-camel was referred to as a sign of God, so it must have been a special animal. There may have been extraordinary circumstances around the animal which made it a sign of God and a proof for the prophet-hood of Salih (PBUH). The challenge Salih (PBUH) posed was, “Leave her to graze in God's land, and do not harm her, or you shall be seized with a painful torment.” She is God's camel so let her graze wherever she wants and do not touch her, and if you do, you will suffer the consequences. Having posed the challenge, Salih (PBUH) turned to his people with an advice to contemplate and reflect about what happened to the people before them. He urged them to consider the bounties of God which they have been blessed with, “And remember how He made you heirs after the 'Ad people and gave you habitations in the land. You build for yourselves palaces and castles in the plains and carve out homes in the mountains. So remember the bounties of God and do not spread mischief in the land.” The geographical site on which the tribe of Thamud lived is not mentioned in these verses, but it has been mentioned in another Sura that they lived in an area called the Hijr, a place between Arabia and Syria. The dialogue between Salih (PBUH) and his people indicates that they were well off. It also indicates that they lived in a valley surrounded by mountains. They used to build palaces in the valley and carve out houses in the mountains. The brief dialogue indicates that they had some advanced building technology. Although they did not live exactly at the same place as the tribe of 'Ad but they were made heirs to the civilization that was established by them. The legacy here must be a reference to the civilization that they were able to establish after the destruction of the tribe of 'Ad.

One can detect a jump in the narrative from the statement which alluded to the fact that some of the Thamud people believed in Salih (PBUH). The chiefs did not like that and they tried to sway the believers and bring them back to the fold of the old religion of their forefathers. The belief in God liberated the weak and strengthened them in the face of oppression. They said, “We do indeed believe in the revelation which he has been sent with.” The chiefs voiced their dissatisfaction, “We reject that which you believe in.” They not only voiced their dissatisfaction, but they followed that by assaulting the she-camel, “Then they ham-strung the she-camel, and insolently defied the order of their Lord, saying, ‘Salih, bring about what you are threatening us with, if you are a messenger (of God).’” They had the audacity to challenge the messenger, “So the earthquake seized them, and they lay dead in their homes.” The verses juxtaposed the conditions of the disbelievers before and after the punishment. Their condition changed from a state of insolence and defiance to a state in which they were first shaken to the core then they lay dead.

Thus, another page of the history of those who rejected the truth has been folded and we come to a new episode in the history of humankind, “We also (sent) Lut. He said to his people, ‘Do you commit lewdness, which no people before you in world, ever committed? You approach males with lust instead of women. You are indeed people given to excesses.’ The answer of his people was only to say (one to another), ‘Drive them out of your township. They are a people who want to keep themselves clean.’ So We saved him and his household, except his wife she was of those who stayed behind. And we showered them with rain. Then see what the end of those who indulged in sin and crime was.” The story of people of Lut (PBUH) is a story about deviation from the initial natural human disposition. This may seem a digression from the issues of the doctrine and the belief in the oneness of God, but in reality the two issues are closely related. The belief in the oneness of God leads the individual to the complete submission to God and to following His rules and laws. It is the will of God that the human race is created as males and females. They are two manifestations of the same soul. They were created to complement each other. The growth and survival of the human race is contingent on the procreation between the male and female. The male and female were created to perform this function and they were prepared biologically and psychologically for it. God instilled in their psyche the natural attraction to each other and rewarded this attraction with a deep pleasure which is received as a result of their mating. This was the guarantee for the continuation of the human race. This unique relationship between the two partners also provides the will to overcome the problems that every human family faces during the course of its life. This is the divine plan. Those who believe in God trust His wisdom and follow His plan.

The people of Lut (PBUH) were the first humans to deviate from the divine procreation plan, “Do you commit lewdness, which no people before you in world, ever committed? You approach males with lust instead of women. You are indeed people given to excesses.” Lut (PBUH) used the word “excesses” here to refer to the transgression against the divine project. The objective of procreation is to guarantee the continuation of the human race and to provide an incentive for the maintenance of strong family units. Sexual pleasure is part of the process. It is an incentive for the male and female to be attracted to each other. This pleasure is part of the divine project to create an environment of peace and tranquility between males and females. The response of the people of Lut (PBUH) was, “Drive them out of your township. They are a people who want to keep themselves clean.” See how twisted their logic was? Those who want to keep clean and pure became the criminals, so they should be driven out. The end followed quickly, “So We saved him and his household, except his wife she was of those who stayed behind. And we showered them with rain. Then see what the end of those who indulged in sin and crime was.”

Another page of those who rejected the truth was folded, and we come to the last episode of this series of stories.

“To the (tribe of) Madyan, (We sent) Shu’ayb one of their (own) brethren. He said, ‘My people serve God. You have no other deity but Him. Now has come to you a clear sign from your Lord. Give just measure and weight and do not withhold from people the things that are their due; and do no mischief in the land after it has been set in order. That will be best for you, if you are believers. Do not lurk on every road to threaten (wayfarers), and to turn away from God’s path him who believes in Him, seeking to make it crooked. And remember, when you were but few, how He did multiply you. And consider the end of the mischief-makers. And if there is a party among you who believed in the message with which I have been sent, and a party which did not believe, then be patient until God judges between us. He is the Best of Judges.’ The arrogant chieftains of his people said, ‘Shu’ayb, we will certainly drive you out from our township, you and those who believed with you, unless you return back to our religion.’ He said, ‘Even though we hate it? We would indeed have invented a lie against God, if we returned to your ways after God has rescued us therefrom; nor could we by any means return thereto unless it is the will of God, Our Lord. Our Lord’s knowledge encompassed everything. In God we trust. Our Lord, expose the truth (and judge) between us and our people, for You are the best to judge.’ The chieftains of his people, who disbelieved, said, ‘If you follow Shu’ayb, then truly you shall be the losers. ' So the earthquake seized them, and they lay dead in their homes. Those who denied Shu'ayb became as though they had not dwelt therein. Those who denied Shu'ayb, they were the losers. Shu'ayb turned away from them, saying, 'My people, I did indeed deliver my Lord's message to you and I gave you good counsel. So why should I lament over a people who refused to believe.' " This story has more details than the previous ones because it deals with business issues as well as doctrine issues. The story started with the same statement made by each messenger, "My people serve God. You have no other god but Him." The details of the story followed, "Now has come to you a clear sign from your Lord." However, there are no details mentioned here, nor elsewhere in the Quran, about the sign that God gave them. The statement is brief. They must have been given a sign which supported Prophet Shu'ayb (PBUH) claim that he was truly a messenger of God.

Shu'ayb (PBUH) started by reiterating God's commands, "Give just measure and weight and do not withhold from people the things that are their due; and do no mischief in the land after it has been set in order. That will be best for you, if you are believers. Do not lurk on every road to threaten (wayfarers), and to turn away from God's path him who believes in Him, seeking to make it crooked. And remember, when you were but few, how He did multiply you. And consider the end of the mischief-makers." One deduces from Shu'ayb's (PBUH) argument that his people were idolaters. They also did not follow God's law in their dealings with each other. They had their own business code which they used. This business code promoted unfair dealings. They were also thugs who were terrorizing people. They wanted to sway the believers away from worshiping God alone and to prevent them from following the straight path. So, Shu'ayb (PBUH) started with the fundamentals, he urged them to believe in the one true God alone. This is the basis of the straight way of life and the source of sound business dealings as well as good characters and high morals. He reminded them of God's blessings and warned them of God's wrath, "And remember, when you were but few, how He did multiply you. And consider the end of the mischief-makers."

Then he asked them to come to a fair agreement, "And if there is a party among you who believed in the message with which I have been sent, and a party which did not believe, then have patience until God judges between us. He is the Best of Judges." If you do not agree with me, then do not hurt the believers but wait until God judges between us. However, the tyrants would not be happy leaving the believers alone. The tyrants wanted to overpower the people and to maintain a monopoly over their loyalty. The existence of a group of believers presented a threat to the rule of the tyrants. Thus, their response was a blunt confrontation that did not leave room for negotiation, "Shu'ayb, we will certainly drive you out from our township, you and those who believed with you, unless you return back to our religion." Shu'ayb (PBUH) offered them a fair compromise: leave us alone until God judges between us. However, the tyrants did not accept this. They would not stop unless the believers reject their faith and go back to the tyrants' beliefs. This is where Shu'ayb (PBUH) drew the line. He was not willing to offer this concession. Believers find strength in their faith. They condemn the efforts that aim at depriving them of the light of faith, the light that showed them the straight path and freed them from the slavery to the tyrants. How can they relinquish the blessings of God which guided them to the truth, "Even though we hate it? We would indeed have invented a lie against God, if we returned to your ways after God has rescued us therefrom; nor could we by any means return thereto unless it is the will of God, Our Lord. Our Lord's knowledge encompassed everything. In God we trust. Our Lord, expose the truth (and judge) between us and our people, for You are the best to judge.” This statement showed the source of strength and security for the believers. They knew that it is God alone who judges between truth and falsehood and it is He alone who supports the believers in their fight against the tyrants.

The chiefs persisted in their rejection. They tried another trick. They thought that they can scare the believers off by threats, “If you follow Shu’ayb, then truly you shall be the losers.” It is the same strategy that all tyrants adopt. They start with the leader first to coerce him and stop him from delivering his message. If they are unsuccessful with the leader, then they turn to the followers. Threats and persecution are leveled against the followers. The tyrants have no valid argument against the morals and the values but they have the power to torture and persecute. However, the eternal divine project which supports the truth in its battle with falsehood always prevail, “So the earthquake seized them, and they lay dead in their homes. Those who denied Shu’ayb became as though they had not dwelt therein. Those who denied Shu’ayb, they were the losers.” In a split second everything was destroyed, as if the tyrants never existed. Shu’ayb (PBUH) made a last statement summarizing his experience, “My people, I did indeed deliver my Lord’s message to you and I gave you good counsel. So why should I lament over a people who refuse to believe.”

Verses: 94 to 102

94. Whenever We sent a prophet to a town, We did afflict its people by tribulation and adversity, in order that they might learn humility.

95. Then We changed their adversity into prosperity, until they grew affluent, and began to say, “Our fathers (too) were touched by adversity and affluence.” We called them to account suddenly while they were unaware.

96. Had the people of the towns believed and were conscious of God, We would have indeed opened for them (All kinds of) blessings from heaven and earth; but they rejected (the truth), and We seized them on account of what they had earned.

97. Can the people of the towns ever feel secure that Our wrath will not come upon them by night, while they are asleep?

98. Or can they ever feel secure that Our wrath will not come upon them in broad daylight, while they are playing.

99. Can they ever feel secure against God’s scheme? No one can feel secure against God’s scheme except the losers.

100. Is it not an indication to those who inherit the land after its people (who thus reaped the consequence of their evil-doing) that, if We will, We can smite them for their sins and seal upon their hearts so that they would not hear?

101. Such were the towns whose tidings We relate to you. Their messengers came to them with clear signs. But they would not believe what they had rejected before. Thus does God seal up the hearts of the disbelievers.

102. We found that most of them do not honor their covenants, and We certainly found most of them transgressors. (7:94-102)

“Whenever We sent a prophet to a town, We did afflict its people by tribulation and adversity, in order that they might learn humility. Then We changed their adversity into prosperity, until they grew affluent, and began to say, 'Our fathers (too) were touched by adversity and affluence.' We called them to account suddenly while they were unaware. Had the people of the towns believed and were conscious of God, We would have indeed opened for them (All kinds of) blessings from heaven and earth; but they rejected (the truth), and We seized them on account of what they had earned." The narrative in these verses does not tell a story but it uncovers a part of the divine project. The verses do not narrate the history of a people but it shows the steps of a divine plan. The verses show that events in the lives of people do not happen haphazardly but they occur according to a system of rules. God's message itself is a part of this system. God revealed His Message to contribute to the actualization of this system. Humankind is not alone in this world. God controls all the affairs of the universe with wisdom and knowledge.

The verses reveal a glimpse of the system of rules, "Whenever We sent a prophet to a town, We did afflict its people by tribulation and adversity, in order that they might learn humility." Tests and tribulation are not meant to be an act of vengeance; they are tools to teach people humility and to awaken the initial natural human disposition which longs to find God. People can then reach to God with their prayers seeking His mercy and forgiveness and proclaiming His dominion and power. Then, "We changed their adversity into prosperity, until they grew affluent," God replaces adversity with prosperity, difficulty with ease, fear with security, and illness with health. This is the other face of the coin of tests and trials. Many people persevere in face of adversity. Adversity sharpens the person's ability for survival and perseverance. It might also bring a person closer to God through prayers. Many people find refuge in their relationship with God during difficult times. They pray asking for His help and hoping for His mercy. But affluence may prove to be a more severe test for humankind. Affluence causes people to forget everything, worldly pleasures take people away from their duties, and wealth promotes arrogance.

Hedonistic societies are formed when people become accustomed to a life of affluence thinking that it will last forever. In such a society, people care only about themselves and their pleasures. Morals and values in a hedonistic society are shaped by material and physical pleasures. These societies suffer from a lack of collective responsibility towards the unfortunate and the vulnerable. They only realize the consequence of their way life when a calamity befalls them, "We called them to account suddenly while they were unaware." Their indulgence in material pleasures swept them away from the path of God. They forgot the meaning of God consciousness, so God called them to account. God's plan has been fulfilled.

Thus, history of humankind continues to evolve according to the divine plan and God's will. The Quran explains the divine plan and warns people of the trials that they will face. Trials do not come only in the form of adversity but also in the form of affluence. Human beings should always be vigilant not to fail the test in any form. Quran promised a great reward for those who are able to pass the test, "Had the people of the towns believed and were conscious of God, We would have indeed opened for them (All kinds of) blessings from heaven and earth; but they rejected (the truth), and We seized them on account of what they had earned." Had the people of the town accepted the truth instead of denying it, they would have received blessings and bounties from heaven and earth as they have never seen before. Although the verse did not leave any doubt about the certainty of the realization of the blessings promised to those who are God conscious but there are no details mentioned about the type or the amount of these blessings.

This indicates a flood of blessings of different types, shapes, and forms coming from all directions. This verse opens the question about the relationship between faith and people's daily lives. Those who think that faith is merely rituals that have no bearing on people's everyday lives do not understand the meaning of faith nor do they know what life is about. People sometime wonder about Muslim nations living in poverty while other non-Muslim nations live in abundance. This is a superficial look. Those who call themselves Muslims are neither believers nor are they God conscious. They did not dedicate their service to God alone. They do not live the true meaning of "there is no deity but God." They serve human beings like themselves and allow them to control their lives according to manmade laws and traditions. When Muslims adopted a way of life congruent with the true teachings of Islam they were on the top of the world and they were flooded with the blessings of God.

Those who revel in abundance of provision are being tested by affluence. This may be a more difficult test than being tested by adversity. There is a difference between God's blessings and affluence. The blessings that God promised His believing servants provide happiness even when the provision is not abundant. God's blessings enable the believers to use their resources efficiently and effectively and provide a comfortable and friendly environment. Affluence may provide material commodities but does not provide happiness and contentment. Many people who live in material affluence are impoverished spiritually. They lead insecure and unhappy life.

"Can the people of the towns ever feel secure that Our wrath will not come upon them by night, while they are asleep? Or can they ever feel secure that Our wrath will not come upon them in broad daylight, while they are playing. Can they ever feel secure against God's scheme? No one can feel secure against God's scheme except the losers. Is it not an indication to those who inherit the land after its people (who thus reaped the consequence of their evil-doing) that, if We will, We can smite them for their sins and seal upon their hearts so that they would not hear?" Having seen the end of others before and having experienced God's scheme, can the people of the towns ever feel sure that they will be safe from God's wrath? Can they be ever sure that God's wrath would not come upon them while they are in deep sleep? One cannot stand up for God's wrath even when one is fully awake and in full vigilance, how can one deal with God's wrath if it comes during sleep, when the person is powerless? Can they be ever sure that God's wrath would not come upon them when they playing in broad day light? God's wrath is overwhelming in any condition, but the verses expose the points of weakness of the human condition hoping to evoke the feelings of the need to reach for God's help. Those who do not feel they need God's help will be losers.

The divine plan is always in effect and God's will is always in force. There is no security against God's scheme except by taking refuge with God. The Quran poses a warning that whatever happened to the previous generations can still happen to the present and future generations. The warning is not meant to make people live always in fear and insecurity. This will result in complete paralysis of human life bringing all human activities to a halt. God wants life on earth to continue and to flourish. God wants people to be conscious of Him, to control their desires, to maintain self-discipline, to take lessons from history, and to maintain an open and uninterrupted channel of communication with God. When people declare God as their only deity and become dedicated to the implementation of His divine project, God will reward them with secure, comfortable, and happy life on earth.

The Quranic approach in dealing with the human psyche provides doses of safety, confidence, and security for those who are reaching to God in times of adversity and tribulations, and doses of warning and admonition for those who are lured away from the path of God by the material pleasures of life. God knows best His creation.

“Such were the towns whose tidings We relate to you. Surely, their messengers came to them with clear signs. But they would not believe what they had rejected before. Thus does God seal up the hearts of those who reject faith. We found that most of them do not honor their covenants, and We certainly found most of them transgressors.” The verses narrated stories of which the Prophet (PBUH) had no knowledge. These were God’s revelations brought down to educate the Prophet (PBUH). The Messengers came with clear signs but people did not heed the signs. They continued to reject faith as people before them rejected faith. The clear signs were not sufficient for them to become believers. Their problem was that their hearts were not open to receive the light and their initial natural disposition was not tuned to receive guidance. When they closed their hearts and blocked the path of guidance to penetrate and touch their souls, God sealed on their hearts. Never will they be able to receive guidance.

“We found that most of them do not honour their covenants, and We certainly found most of them transgressors.” The “covenant” that the verse refers to, may have been the covenant that God took from all human beings, which is referred to in verse 172 of this Sura, “And when your Lord drew forth from the Children of Adam - from their loins - their descendants, and made them testify concerning themselves (saying), ‘Am I not your Lord (who cherishes and sustains you)?’ They said, ‘Yes, we do testify.’” Another interpretation would be the covenant that God took from the ancestors of the people of these towns who believed the messengers who were sent earlier. Their descendants then strayed away from the straight path gradually as time passed until they lost their way completely and became disbelievers. Either way, the people of these towns did not honour their covenant with God. They followed their whims and desires and became transgressors.

Verses: 103 to 137

103. Then after them We sent Moses with Our signs to Pharaoh and his chiefs, but they wrongfully rejected them. So see what the end of those who make mischief was.

104. Moses said, “Pharaoh, I am a messenger from the Lord of the worlds.

105. Duty-bound not say except the truth about God. Now I have come to you with a clear sign from your Lord. So let the Children of Israel depart along with me.”

106. (Pharaoh) said, “If indeed you came with a sign, then bring it, if you are telling the truth.”

107. Then (Moses) threw his staff, and behold, it became a serpent, plain (for all to see).

108. And he drew his hand out, and behold, it was white to all beholders.

109. The chiefs of Pharaoh's people said, “This is a knowledgeable wizard.

110. His plan is to get you out of your land.” Pharaoh said, “Now, what do you advise?”

111. They said, “Keep him and his brother waiting (for a while); and send heralds into the cities;

112. To bring you every knowledgeable wizard.”

113. And the wizards came to Pharaoh, saying, "Surely there will be a reward for us if we are victors."

114. He said, "Yes, and surely you shall be of those brought near (to me)."

115. They said, "Moses, either you throw (first) or we will throw?"

116. He (Moses) said, "You throw." So when they threw, they bewitched the eyes of the people and they overawed them, and produced mighty magic.

117. We inspired Moses, "Throw your staff," and behold, it swallowed up all the falsehoods which they faked.

118. Thus, truth was confirmed, and all what they did was in vain.

119. Thus, they were defeated and were brought low.

120. The wizards fell down prostrating.

121. They said, "We believe in the Lord of the worlds,

122. The Lord of Moses and Aaron."

123. Pharaoh said, "Did you believe in him before I give you permission? Most assuredly, this is a plot which you have planned in the city to drive out its people, but you shall soon know.

124. I will cut off your hands and your feet on opposite sides, and I will crucify all of you."

125. They said, "We will certainly return to our Lord.

126. You are only taking revenge on us because we believed in the signs of our Lord when they came to us. Our Lord, pour out on us persvererance, and make us die in a state of submission."

127. The chiefs of Pharaoh's people said (to the king), "Are you going to leave Moses and his people to make mischief in the land, and forsake you and your gods?" He said, "We will slay their sons and spare their women, and indeed we will overpower them."

128. Moses said to his people, "Seek help from God, and persevere. The earth belongs to God. He gives it as a heritage to whomever He wills from among His servants. The end is (best) for those who are God conscious."

129. They said, "We have been persecuted before you came to us, and since you have come to us." He said, "It may be that your Lord will destroy your enemy and make you viceroys of the earth, that He may see how you will behave."

130. We punished the people of Pharaoh with years (of droughts) and shortness of crops; that they may be mindful.

131. But whenever good befell them, they said, "This is ours;" and whenever evil smote them they ascribed it to the evil omen of Moses and those with him. Indeed, their evil omen was only with God. But most of them do not know.

132. They said (to Moses), "Whatever sign you bring to bewitch us, we shall never believe in you."

133. So We sent on them the flood, locusts, lice, frogs, and blood as detailed signs; but they were arrogant and criminal.

134. Every time the plague fell on them, they said, "Moses, pray for us your Lord, as He promised you, if you removed the plague from us, we shall truly believe in you, and we shall send away the Children of Israel with you."

135. But every time We removed the plague from them to a fixed term which they had to fulfill, they broke their word.

136. Therefore, We exacted revenge on them; We drowned them in the sea because they denied Our revelations and were heedless of them.

137. And We made the people, considered weak (and of no account), inheritors of lands in both the east and the west, lands which We have blessed. The fair promise of your Lord was fulfilled for the Children of Israel, because they persevered. And We destroyed the great works and fine buildings which Pharaoh and his people erected. (7:103-137)

“Then after them We sent Moses with Our signs to Pharaoh and his chiefs, but they wrongfully rejected them. So see what the end of those who make mischief was.” Moses (PBUH) was sent after the towns were destroyed. This group of verses narrates an episode of the encounter between Moses (PBUH) and Pharaoh and his chiefs. The first verse summarizes the whole episode. The Quran uses the words “wrongdoing” and “transgression” interchangeably with words “rejecting faith” and “associating partners with God,” repeatedly. The present verse is an example of this usage. Rejecting faith and associating partners with God are indeed the worst forms of wrongdoing and transgression. Those who reject faith or associate partners with God are indeed committing a gross injustice against the greatest truth, the truth of the oneness of God, and they wrong themselves by subjecting themselves to God’s wrath. They also commit injustice against people whom they cause to sway away from the belief in the oneness of God to idolatry. The Quran says, “Those who reject faith are truly the wrongdoers.” (2:254)

Pharaoh and his chiefs were wrongdoers, see what their end was. Details of Pharaoh’s end will be described in the following verses, but for now let us reflect on the expression, “those who make mischief.” They are mischief makers because they spread corruption in the land. Rejecting faith is the worst form of corruption and mischief making. Life on earth will be free of corruption only when the concept of the oneness of God is established and inculcated in the psyche of people. The concept of the oneness of God guarantees that people live a life free of the domination of other human beings or the control of their own whims and desires. Corruption is spread on earth when the fate of people is dominated by few human beings who play the role of god. Being the servant of God alone is the ultimate expression of freedom. All tyrants are mischief-makers, they spread corruption in the land.

This is one of the styles of story-telling in the Quran: the opening verse summarizes the whole story. This brief summary brings the conclusion to the fore front and highlights the moral of the story. The verses then continue to tell the details of the narrative. We come to the first scene, “Moses said, ‘Pharaoh, I am a messenger from the Lord of the worlds. Duty-bound not say except the truth about God. Now I have come to you with a clear sign from your Lord. So let the Children of Israel depart along with me.’ (Pharaoh) said, ‘If indeed you came with a sign, then bring it, if you are telling the truth.’ Then (Moses) threw his staff, and behold, it became a serpent, plain (for all to see); and he drew his hand out, and behold, it was white to all beholders. The chiefs of Pharaoh’s people said, ‘This is a knowledgeable wizard. His plan is to get you out of your land.’ Pharaoh said, ‘Now, what do you advise?’ They said, ‘Keep him and his brother waiting (for a while); and send heralds into the cities; to bring you every knowledgeable wizard.’”

This is the first scene of the encounter between truth and falsehood, the encounter between faith and disbelief, the encounter between he who is calling to the worship of the Lord of the worlds and the tyrant who wants to usurp the role of god. The encounter started by Moses (PBUH) addressing Pharaoh, he addressed him by his name, “Pharaoh,” he did not address him as, “My Lord,” as people used to address Pharaoh. This form of address was meant to articulate the difference between Pharaoh and the real Lord of the world. This form of address was certain to catch the attention of Pharaoh and his chiefs. Moses (PBUH) followed this by another statement to highlight the seriousness of his mission, he said, I am “Duty-bound not say except the truth about God.” The message that Moses (PBUH) came with is the same message which each and every messenger brought before him, the message of the belief in oneness of God.

Moses (PBUH) emphasized the truthfulness of his words, “I have come to you with a clear sign from your Lord,” and then made his request, “So let the Children of Israel depart along with me.” The children of Israel are the servants of God; they should not be enslaved by Pharaoh. Whoever worships God has no master other than God. The opening statement that Moses (PBUH) made, “Pharaoh, I am a messenger from the Lord of the worlds,” established the logical foundation for the request, “So let the Children of Israel depart along with me.” The proclamation that there is only One God meant that Pharaoh cannot play the role of god. Moses’ (PBUH) proclamation announced the end Pharaoh’s reign. Pharaoh could no longer claim to be a god or that he has the right to enslave people.

Pharaoh and his chiefs wanted to embarrass Moses (PBUH), so they asked for a proof, “If indeed you came with a sign, then bring it, if you are telling the truth.” They expected to show the people that Moses (PBUH) is a liar, so his claim would be defeated. But, they were surprised by Moses’ (PBUH) response, “Then (Moses) threw his staff, and behold, it became a serpent, plain (for all to see); and he drew his hand out, and behold, it was white to all beholders.” The staff became a serpent, and his hand became white. Moses (PBUH) had a dark complexion, when he brought his hand out of his pocket; it looked white with no obvious ailment that could have caused the change in the color of the skin. As soon as he put his hand back into his pocket, the skin of his hand went back to its normal color.

Pharaoh and his chiefs would not give up that easily. It is a major claim with disastrous consequences for Pharaoh’s dominion. They accused Moses (PBUH) of being a magician, “This is a knowledgeable wizard. His plan is to get you out of your land.” Pharaoh said, ‘Now, what do you advise?’ The statement betrayed their real fear, “His plan is to get you out of your land;” they realized that proving the veracity of Moses’ (PBUH) claim meant the end of Pharaoh’s dominion. He will no longer be the legitimate ruler of the land and he has no right to enslave people. The advice was, “Keep him and his brother waiting (for a while); and send heralds into the cities; to bring you every knowledgeable wizard.” Magic was a flourishing trade in Egypt at that time. The high priests practiced magic in the temples of Egypt all the time. It was easy to round up a group of the best magicians to challenge Moses (PBUH). These were professionals, they expected compensation from Pharaoh, “And the wizards came to Pharaoh, saying, ‘Surely there will be a reward for us if we are victors.’” Pharaoh promised them not only a great reward but also a high rank in the royal court, as an enticement to use their utmost skill to defeat Moses (PBUH). Little they know about what they were up against.

“They said, ‘Moses, either you throw (first) or we will throw?’” They were quite confident of their ability to defeat Moses (PBUH), so they offered him the chance to start the show. Moses’ (PBUH) show of confidence was not less impressive than theirs, he simply said, “You throw.” He only responded with one word to show how little he cares about their apparent confidence. But when they threw, “they bewitched the eyes of the people and they overawed them, and produced mighty magic.” The magic was powerful, people were overawed, and their hearts were touched by fear. But, the truth is more powerful, “We inspired Moses, ‘Throw your staff,’ and behold, it swallowed up all the falsehoods which they faked. Thus truth was confirmed, and all what they did was in vain. Thus they were defeated and were brought low.” The balance was turned against them, truth was confirmed and falsehood was blown away. They realized that they were defeated and felt humiliated. They knew that Moses (PBUH) has more than magic working for him and they were in the best position to recognize the truth. Their position was turned around from daring challenge to complete submission, “The wizards fell down prostrating. They said, ‘We believe in the Lord of the Worlds, the Lord of Moses and Aaron.’”

“Pharaoh said, ‘Did you believe in him before I give you permission? Most assuredly, this is a plot which you have planned in the city to drive out its people, but you shall soon know. Surely, I will cut off your hands and your feet on opposite sides, and I will crucify all of you;” as if they should have taken his permission before their hearts could respond to the truth. Should they have suppressed the yearning of their souls to the light of guidance? Or should they have suppressed the fledgling feeling of faith that was growing inside them? But Pharaoh the arrogant tyrant could not understand. In his attempt to save his kingdom, he was in denial. The thought that he entrained was, “this is a plot which you have planned in the city to drive out its people.” Pharaoh and his chiefs were scared when Moses (PBUH) invited them to relinquish the lordship of Pharaoh and to believe in the “Lord of the worlds.” When the magicians submitted to the Lord of the worlds, they realized that they lost their last hope in saving Pharaoh’s kingdom. No other recourse was available except the threat, “I will cut off your hands and your feet on opposite sides, and I will crucify all of you.” It is the persecution and torture so that they relinquish their beliefs, but they had a deep rooted faith which helped them to stand up to the tyrant, “We will certainly return to our Lord.”

Those who understand the nature of the battle between the believer and the tyrant realize that in this battle there is no room for compromise. There are no middle grounds because the tyrant will not accept anything except for the believer to relinquish his/her faith. The recourse of the believer is only to God, “Our Lord, pour out on us perseverance, and make us die in a state of submission.”

The strong faith astounded the tyrant. He thought he could control the magicians’ hearts since he had control over their bodies. The magicians had already resigned themselves to the belief in God. The faith filled their hearts with peace and security. The tyrant felt that his power is unable to avail him of any control in face of their strong determination. This was one of these critical moments in history, when faith becomes dearer than life, when will power overcomes pain, and when humankind claims victory over Satan. This is the moment of the true liberation of humankind. True liberty is only attained when faith makes humankind beyond the control of the tyrants. Liberty is attained when spirituality overpowers materialism.

“The chiefs of Pharaoh's people said (to the king), ‘Are you going to leave Moses and his people to make mischief in the land, and forsake you and your gods?’ He said, ‘We will slay their sons and spare their women, and surely we are will overpower them.’” Pharaoh never claimed that he was the creator of his people and therefore they should treat him as god. He was their lord because he had the controlling power over them. He rules and he decides unopposed according to his whims and desires. The Egyptians had their deities to whom they performed rituals of worship, even Pharaoh himself performed rituals of worship to these deities. This is clear from the statement made by the Chiefs enquiring if Pharaoh was going to let Moses (PBUH) forsake him and his deities and worship only the one true God. They wanted to incite Pharaoh to act fiercely against Moses (PBUH) and his people. They insinuated that Moses (PBUH) intends to spread corruption in the land because they considered the destruction of the tyrant's rule mischief-making. Pharaoh reacted savagely he said, "We will slay their sons and spare their women, and surely we are will overpower them." This was a repeat of the persecution that the children of Israel suffered at the hands of Pharaoh when Moses (PBUH) was born. The Quran describes this persecution, "Truly Pharaoh elated himself in the land and broke up its people into divisions, oppressing a small group among them. He slew their sons, but he kept alive their females. He was indeed a mischief-maker." (28:4).

Moses advice to his people, "Seek help from God, and persevere. Surely, the earth belongs to God. He gives it as a heritage to whomever He wills from among His servants. The end is (best) for those who are God conscious." This was an advice motivated by the deep conviction of a prophet. He knew that there is only one Savior who can rescue his people. People should seek refuge with God, the Lord of the worlds. No one else would be able to save the people from the savage revenge of the tyrant. He asked his people to put their trust in God and persevere; victory will come at the time that God decides according to His knowledge and His wisdom. They should not hasten the results because they do not know what is best for them. The land is God's land, Pharaoh is not immortal, and God makes whomsoever the heir of the land.

But his people were impatient, "They said, 'We have been persecuted before you came to us, and since you have come to us.'" His answer was, "It may be that your Lord will destroy your enemy and make you viceroys of the earth, that He may see how you will behave." He was aware of the divine plan. He understood that God's law applies to all, believers and disbelievers. He was confident that God will support His believing servants who persevered in His way against their tyrant enemy. God's favour that He bestows on His servants is actually part of the divine project of testing people, "that He may see how you will behave."

The narrative moves to another scene, the scene of Pharaoh and his chiefs. It is a scene that describes how God fulfilled His promise to Moses (PBUH) and punished Pharaoh and his people.

"We punished the people of Pharaoh with years (of droughts) and shortness of crops; that they may be mindful. But whenever good befell them, they said, 'This is ours;' and whenever evil smote them they ascribed it to the evil omen of Moses and those with him. Indeed, their evil omen was only with God. But most of them do not know. They said (to Moses), 'Whatever sign you bring to bewitch us, we shall never believe in you.' So We sent on them the flood, locusts, lice, frogs, and blood as detailed signs; but they were arrogant and criminal. Every time the plague fell on them, they said, 'Moses, pray for us to your Lord, as He promised you, if you removed the plague from us, we shall truly believe in you, and we shall send away the Children of Israel with you.' But every time We removed the plague from them to a fixed term which they had to fulfill, they broke their word. Therefore, We took retribution from them; We drowned them in the sea because they denied Our revelations and were heedless of them. And We made the people, considered weak (and of no account), inheritors of lands in both the east and the west, lands which We have blessed. The fair promise of your Lord was fulfilled for the Children of Israel, because they persevered. And We destroyed the great works and fine buildings which Pharaoh and his people erected."

Pharaoh continued in his tyranny, he oppressed the children of Israel, killing their males and keeping their females alive. The children of Israel continued to suffer, waiting patiently for God's help. God's plan started to unfold, "We punished the people of Pharaoh with years (of droughts) and shortness of crops; that they may be mindful." The first warning sign was issued. The ever fertile land of Egypt became barren and the country suffered severe scarcity of crops. This should have been a wakeup call to Pharaoh. But the tyrant continued in his denial and the Egyptians followed him obediently. They could not comprehend that there is a connection between their attitude and behaviour and what is happening to them. They refused to believe that these are God's warning signs so that they may heed His commands. They refused to believe that there is a relationship between the unseen and real life. Pharaoh and his chiefs missed the signs of God's mercy which He bestows on His creation even when they go astray. Only believers are able to recognize God's signs, appreciate His mercy, and express their gratitude to Him. Only believers can recognize God's plan as it unfolds and heed the reminder.

Pharaoh and his people missed God's reminder. These reminders are signs of God's mercy. God sends these reminders so that people change their way of life before they are seized by the torment of God. Pharaoh and his people continued in their denial, "Whenever good befell them, they said, 'This is ours;' and whenever evil smote them they ascribed it to the evil omen of Moses and those with him." They continued to explain what is happening as natural phenomena. They believed that they rightly deserve all the good events that occurred. But, when an evil befell them they blamed it on Moses (PBUH) and his people. They did not realize that it is God who decrees all events. People are tested with good and bad incidents in life to identify those who persevere and pass the test, "We test you by evil and by good by way of trial. To Us must you will return." (21:35)

Pharaoh and his people continued to obstinate, "Whatever sign you bring to bewitch us, we shall never believe in you." They were stubborn in rejecting faith no matter what proof Moses (PBUH) would bring them. The decision was made before examining the evidence. This is typical of tyrants who are bent on denying the truth.

The signs continued to arrive one after another, "So We sent on them the flood, locusts, lice, frogs, and blood as detailed signs;" detailed signs to remind and to test. The present narrative put all signs together in one verse because they all came to fulfill the same purpose and they all ended up the same way. However, in real life, these signs came intermittently at different times. Each time a sign came, they hastened to ask Moses (PBUH) to pray his Lord to remove the affliction, promising to free the children of Israel and let them go with Moses (PBUH). Each time the affliction was removed, they would renege on their promise, "But every time We removed the plague from them to a fixed term which they had to fulfill, they broke their word." The narrative describes how Pharaoh and his people were given many chances, one after the other, so that they may heed the warning and accept faith. When all these signs were rejected, they had to meet their dreadful doom, "We took retribution from them; We drowned them in the sea because they denied Our revelations and were heedless of them." The verse describes the end very briefly, simply indicating that Pharaoh and his host were drowned. It is a forceful ending to have full impact on the reader. The sudden end was an appropriate response to Pharaoh's arrogance, obstinacy, heedlessness, and denial.

“And We made the people, considered weak (and of no account), inheritors of lands in both the east and the west, lands which We have blessed. The fair promise of your Lord was fulfilled for the Children of Israel, because they persevered. And We destroyed the great works and fine buildings which Pharaoh and his people erected.” As humans, we speak of “before” and “after,” so we say that those who were weak were made heirs “after” the demise of Pharaoh and his host. But God’s knowledge encompasses everything. God’s knowledge spans the whole span of time, there is no “before” and “after” for God. The curtain finally falls down and the scenes of the demise of Pharaoh and his host and the salvation of the Moses (PBUH) and his people are juxtaposed. On one side, it is a scene of death and demolition and on the other side it the scene of flourishing life.

Verses: 138 to 171

138. We took the Children of Israel across the sea. They came upon a people devoted to some idols they had. They said, “Moses, make for us a god like the gods they have.” He said, “Indeed, you are a people acting ignorantly.”

139. These people’s practice will be destroyed and all what they are doing is in vain.

140. He said, “Shall I seek for you a god other than the (true) God, when it is He who has favored you above all people?”

141. And remember when We delivered you from Pharaoh's people, who afflicted you with the worst of torment. They slew your male children and spared your females; in that was a momentous trial from your Lord.

142. We appointed for Moses thirty nights, and completed (the period) with ten (more). Thus, he completed the term (of communion) with his Lord, forty nights. And Moses had charged his brother Aaron (before he went up), “Act for me among my people. Do right, and follow not the way of those who do mischief.”

143. When Moses came to the place appointed by Us, and his Lord addressed him, He said, “My Lord, show me (Yourself), that I may look at You.” God said, “You will not see Me but look at the mount; if it remained standing in its place, then you shall see Me.” When his Lord manifested His glory to the mount, He sent it crashing down. And Moses fell down in a swoon. When he recovered his senses he said, “Glory be to You, I turn to You in repentance, and I am the first to believe.”

144. (God) said, “Moses, I have chosen you above the people, by the mission I (have given you) and the words I (have spoken to you). Take then the (revelation) which I have given you, and be of those who are grateful.”

145. And We wrote for him, upon the tablets, admonitions of every kind and explanations of all things. Hold fast to it; and enjoin your people to take hold of what is best thereof. I will show you the abode of the transgressors.

146. I shall turn away from My revelations those who, without any right, behave arrogantly on the earth; and if they see every sign they do not believe in it, and if they see the way of righteousness they do not choose it as their way; and if they see the way of falsehood they choose it as their way. That is because they deny Our revelations and they were heedless thereof.

147. The deeds of those who denied Our revelations and the meeting of the Hereafter are in vain. Can they expect to be rewarded save as what they used to do?

148. The people of Moses made, in his absence, out of their ornaments a statue of a calf, (for worship). It gave a mooing sound. Did not they see that it does not speak to them nor guide them in anyway? They chose it, and became wrongdoers.

149. And when they feared the consequences thereof and saw that they had gone astray, they said, "Unless our Lord have mercy on us and forgive us, we will certainly be of the losers."

150. When Moses came back to his people, angry and grieved, he said, "Evil it is that you have done in my absence. Did you hasten to bring on the judgment of your Lord?" He (Moses) threw down the Tablets, seized his brother (Aaron) by (the hair of) his head, and dragged him towards himself. Aaron said, "Son of my mother, the people did indeed overpower me, and they were almost going to slay me. Do not make the enemies rejoice over my misfortune, and do not count me among the wrongdoers."

151. Moses prayed, "My Lord, forgive me and my brother. Admit us into Your Mercy; for You are the Most Merciful of all those who are merciful."

152. Those who took the calf (for worship) will indeed be overwhelmed with wrath from their Lord and ignominy in this life. Thus do We recompense those who invent lies.

153. But those who do wrong then repent afterward and believe, verily your Lord is thereafter All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.

154. When the anger of Moses abated, he picked up the Tablets on which there were inscriptions of guidance and mercy for those who stood in awe of their Lord.

155. And Moses chose seventy of his people for Our appointment; and when they were seized with violent trembling, he prayed, "My Lord, if it had been Your will You could have destroyed both them and me, long before. Will You destroy us for the deeds of the foolish ones among us? This is no more than Your trial; by it You send whom You will astray, and You lead whom You will to the right path. You are our Patron; so forgive us and bestow Your mercy on us; for You are the best of those who forgive.

156. "And ordain for us that which is good, in this life and in the Hereafter. We have turned to You." He (God) said, "I inflict My torment on whomever I will; but My mercy extends to all things. That (mercy) I shall ordain for those who are conscious of God, and pay poor dues, and those who believe in Our revelations.

157. Those who follow the Messenger, the unlettered Prophet, whom they find mentioned in the Torah and the Gospel; he commands them what is just and forbids them what is evil; he allows them as lawful what is good (and pure) and prohibits them from what is bad (and impure); he releases them from their heavy burdens and from the yokes that are upon them. So it is those who believe in him, honor him, help him, and follow the light which is sent down with him who will succeed."

158. Say (Muhammad), "People, I am sent to you all, as the Messenger of God, to whom belongs the dominion of the heavens and the earth; there is no deity but He; it is He who gives both life and death." So believe in God and His Messenger, the unlettered Prophet, who believes in God and His words; and follow him so that you may be guided.

159. Of the people of Moses, there is a community who guide and establish justice in the light of truth.

160. We divided them into twelve tribes (as distinct) nations. We inspired Moses, when his people asked him for water, "Strike the rock with your staff." Out of it there gushed forth twelve springs. Each group knew its own place for water. We gave them the shade of clouds, and sent down to them manna and quails, (saying), "Eat of the good things We have provided for you." They did not wrong Us, but they wronged themselves.

161. And when it was said to them, "Dwell in this town and eat therein as you wish, and say relieve us (from the heavy burden) and enter the gate in a posture of humility. We shall forgive you your sins. We shall increase (the reward of) those who do good."

162. But the wrongdoers from among them changed the word which had been given them so We sent down on them a plague from heaven because of their wrongdoing.

163. Ask them about the town that was close to the sea, how its people broke the Sabbath. For on the day of their Sabbath their fish used to come to them, openly holding up their heads, but on the day they had no Sabbath, they would not come. Thus, did We try them, for they were transgressors.

164. When some of them said, "Why do you admonish a people whom God will destroy or will inflict a severe torment on them?" They said, "To discharge our duty to your Lord, and perchance they may become conscious of God."

165. When they disregarded the warnings that had been given them, We rescued those who forbade evil; and We seized the wrongdoers with awful torment because they were transgressors.

166. When in their insolence they persisted in doing what they had been forbidden to do, We said to them, "Be you apes, despised and rejected."

167. And when your Lord proclaimed that He would raise against them, till the Day of Judgment, those who would afflict them with grievous torment. Your Lord is quick in punishment, but He is also All-forgiving, Giver of Mercy.

168. We broke them up into separate nations on this earth. There are among them some that are righteous, and some that are far from it. We have tried them with both prosperity and adversity; in order that they might return (to us).

169. And a generation succeeded them who inherited the Scripture. They take the goods of this low life (as the price of evil-doing) and say, "We will be forgiven." And if there came to them (again) an offer of the like, they would accept it (and would sin again). Did they not pledge in the covenant of the Scripture that they should not say save the truth about God? And they have studied that which is therein. And the abode of the Hereafter is better, for those who are conscious of God. Why do you not understand?

170. As to those who hold fast to the Book and establish regular prayer, We will never squander the reward of the doers of good.

171. And when We shook the Mount over them, as if it were a canopy, and they thought it was going to fall on them (We said), "Hold firmly to what We have given you, and remember what is therein; perchance you may remain conscious of God." (7:138-171)

These verses describe the scene of the children of Israel after they crossed the sea and escaped the pursuit of Pharaoh and his host, "We took the Children of Israel across the sea. They came upon a people devoted to some idols they had. They said, "Moses, make for us a god like the gods they have." Moses (PBUH) answered angrily, "Indeed, you are a people acting ignorantly." Moses (PBUH) did not specify what is that which they were ignorant about, indicating that asking to worship a god other than God is comprehensive ignorance. Ignorance leads to associating partners with God, while knowledge and wisdom lead to the belief in the oneness of God. Moses (PBUH) continued to explain to his people the bad consequences of their request, “These people’s practice will be destroyed and all what they are doing is in vain.” Moses continued to rebuke his people for forgetting the blessings that God bestowed on them, “Shall I seek for you a god other than the (true) God, when it is He Who has favored you above all creatures?” God chose them to raise the banner of the oneness of God in a time when associating partners with God was prevalent. He also chose them to be the heirs of the holy land which at that time was dominated by polytheists. Are there any blessings better than these? How can they forget these blessings and ask their Prophet to appoint for them a god other than the one true God?

Following the Quranic style, God continued the narrative which Moses (PBUH) started, “And remember when We delivered you from Pharaoh’s people, who afflicted you with the worst of torment. They slew your male children and spared your females; in that was a momentous trial from your Lord.” The continuation of Moses’ (PBUH) speech through God’s address to the children of Israel links God’s words with Moses’ (PBUH) speech. It is also an honour that God bestows on His Prophet. The verse reminds the children of Israel of how God saved them from the bondage that they suffered under Pharaoh not long ago. This was a great blessing from God that they should have remembered. They should have expressed their gratitude for this great blessing.

“We appointed for Moses thirty nights, and completed (the period) with ten (more). Thus he completed the term (of communion) with his Lord, forty nights. And Moses had charged his brother Aaron (before he went up), ‘Act for me among my people. Do right, and follow not the way of those who do mischief.’” The first stage of Moses’ mission has been completed, the task of releasing the children of Israel from their bondage to Pharaoh and his host and leading them on their way to the holy land. However, they were not ready yet to assume the great responsibility that they were assigned to undertake in the holy land. They needed education and training to be able to assume this responsibility. The education came in a detailed message. God appointed a time for Moses (PBUH) to meet Him and receive the message. Moses (PBUH) himself needed to be prepared for the meeting with God. The preparation took forty nights during which Moses (PBUH) went into seclusion. This time for seclusion gave Moses (PBUH) the spiritual training needed to prepare him for God’s appointment. Moses’ appointed his brother Aaron (PBUH) to be his deputy during his absence, “Act for me among my people. Do right, and follow not the way of those who do mischief.” Moses (PBUH) knew that Aaron (PBUH) is a prophet sent by God to help him with his mission. However, giving such an advice is a duty to be fulfilled by the advisor as well as a right to be expected by the advisee. Aaron (PBUH) expected and accepted the advice. Only those who are insecure do not appreciate an advice.

Now, we come to another scene, the unique scene which only Prophet Moses (PBUH) was chosen to witness. This was the scene in which God addressed Moses (PBUH) directly, without the involvement of a mediator. It was a direct meeting between God and one of His servants, a meeting between a mortal body having limited faculties and the eternal immortal limitless existence.

“When Moses came to the place appointed by Us, and his Lord addressed him, He said, ‘My Lord, show me (Yourself), that I may look at You.’ God said, ‘You will not see Me but look at the mount; if it remained standing in its place, then you shall see Me.’ When his Lord manifested His glory to the mount, He sent it crashing down. And Moses fell down in a swoon. When he recovered his senses he said, ‘Glory be to You, I turn to You in repentance, and I am the first to believe.’ (God) said, ‘Moses, I have chosen you above the people, by the mission I (have given you) and the words I (have spoken to you). Take then the (revelation) which I have given you, and be of those who are grateful.’ And We wrote for him, upon the tablets, admonitions of every kind and explanations of all things. Hold fast to it; and enjoin your people to take hold of what is best thereof. I will show you the abode of the transgressors. I shall turn away from My revelations those who, without any right, behave arrogantly on the earth; and if they see every sign they do not believe in it, and if they see the way of righteousness they do not choose it as their way; and if they see the way of falsehood they choose it as their way. That is because they deny Our revelations and they were heedless thereof. The deeds of those who denied Our revelations and the meeting of the Hereafter are in vain. Can they expect to be rewarded save as what they used to do?”

To be able to appreciate the impact that such interaction had on Moses (PBUH), we need to form a mental image of this unique interaction. We need to immerse ourselves completely in such a mental image. “When Moses came to the place appointed by Us, and his Lord addressed him, He said, ‘My Lord, show me (Yourself), that I may look at You.’” It must have been a tremendous experience that made Moses (PBUH) forget who he was and who is talking to him to imagine that he can see God. Seeing God is beyond the ability of any human being. So, he is reminded firmly, “You will not see Me.” Then God, in His mercy, explains to him why he would not be able see Him. The explanation was visual, “look at the mount; if it remained standing its place, then you shall see Me.’ When his Lord manifested His glory to the mount, He sent it crashing down.” How did God manifest Himself to the mountain? It is beyond us mortals to be able describe or even to understand how did this happen. Moses (PBUH) was overwhelmed and he, “fell down in a swoon.” When Moses (PBUH) came to and realized what had just happened and realized the limitations of the mortal body he said, “Glory be to You, I turn to You in repentance, and I am the first to believe.” The Messengers are the first among people to believe in God and appreciate His glory. God asked His Messengers to pronounce this fact, as it has been told in the Quran.

God bestowed His mercy on Moses (PBUH) and gave him the glad tidings that he was chosen by God, “above the people, by the mission I (have given you) and the words I (have spoken to you). Take then the (revelation) which I have given you, and be of those who are grateful.” We understand from the narrative that God chose Moses (PBUH) above the people of his generation. But he was the only one among the messengers of God to have been spoken to directly by God. God commanded Moses (PBUH) to be grateful for the honour that God had bestowed on him. He should give the highest example to his people in expressing his gratitude to God for His blessings. So, Moses (PBUH) was given the Tablets which detailed the message to the children of Israel. God commanded him to persevere in propagating the message and to command the children of Israel to commit themselves to it. In return, God promised to make them the heirs of the holy land, “I will show you the abode of the transgressors.” This verse carried the glad tidings that soon the children of Israel will enter the holy land which was occupied at that time by polytheists. The children of Israel did not enter the holy land during Moses’ (PBUH) life because they were not ready yet to carry on the task assigned to them. When they were asked to enter the holy land they said to their Prophet, “Moses, in this land are a people of exceeding strength; never shall we enter it until they leave it; when they leave, then shall we enter.” (5: 22) When, “Two men whom God has blessed among those who were afraid said, ‘Enter upon them through the gate, for when you have entered you shall surely be victorious, and put your trust in God if you are true believers.’ They said, ‘Moses, we shall never enter it so long as they are in it; go therefore you and your Lord, and fight, surely we will stay here.’” (5: 23-25) This episode indicates that the children of Israel needed the education and preparation which were included in the message given to Moses (PBUH), this explains the divine command to Moses (PBUH) to, “Hold fast to it; and enjoin your people to take hold of what is best thereof.”

The scene ends with a description of the bad consequences that await those who are arrogant and those who turn away from the divine revelation, “I shall turn away from My revelations those who, without any right, behave arrogantly on the earth; and if they see every sign they do not believe it, and if they see the way of righteousness they do not choose it as their way; and if they see the way of falsehood they choose it as their way. That is because they deny Our revelations and they were heedless thereof. The deeds of those who denied Our revelations and the meeting of the Hereafter are in vain. Can they expect to be rewarded save as what they used to do?” It is God’s will that those who see the straight path but choose to turn away from it and follow instead the crooked path will not be able to benefit from His signs that He revealed in the Scripture or His signs which are all around us in the universe. They chose to ignore God’s revelations therefore; they were unable to benefit from them.

The verses provide an accurate description of these people. They are arrogant even though they have no right to be arrogant. Pride is one of the divine attributes, it is not befitting of a God’s servant to behave arrogantly. The worst kind of arrogance is for a human being to usurp god’s role on earth, control people, and force them to follow his way which contravenes the divine project. Such people are usually blinded by their arrogance. They are unable to see the truth even if the truth stares them in the eyes. God will treat them justly and will not wrong them. The recompense that they will receive is befitting to their deeds. They will be punished, “because they deny Our revelations and they were heedless thereof.”

“The deeds of those who denied Our revelations and the meeting of the Hereafter are in vain. Can they expect to be rewarded save as what they used to do?” The Arabic word which has been translated, “in vain” is the same one which is used to describe the condition which an animal suffers when it is poisoned; its belly becomes enlarged then it dies. The word depicts the meretricious growth and power of the falsehood before its demise.

While Moses (PBUH) was in the presence of God, a unique situation which every human being would yearn to be blessed with and a situation beyond the human imagination, his people were relapsing into a state of idolatry, worshiping the calf that had no life, “The people of Moses made, in his absence, out of their ornaments a statue of a calf, (for worship). It gave a mooing sound. Did not they see that it does not speak to them nor guide them in anyway? They chose it, and became wrongdoers. And when they feared the consequences thereof and saw that they had gone astray, they said, ‘Unless our Lord have mercy on us and forgive us, we will certainly be of the losers.’” When they saw people worshiping an idol, they asked their Prophet to get them a similar god to worship. Moses (PBUH) rebuked them for this request and explained to them the bad consequences of idol worship, but once he left them and went to meet his Lord, they were lured to the worship of the golden statue of a calf which the Samiri made for them using the jewellery they had brought from Egypt. It was a lifeless statue, but the Samiri managed to make it in such a way that it produced a sound similar to the sound of a bull. When the Samiri told them that this is their god, they forgot Moses’ (PBUH) warning and accepted the idol as a god. Prophet Aaron (PBUH) tried to talk sense into them but they would not listen. When the excitement abated and they realized their error they prayed God for mercy, “Unless our Lord have mercy on us and forgive us, we will certainly be of the losers.” This indicated that they still had some sense and faith which brought them back to the straight path.

“When Moses came back to his people, angry and grieved, he said, “Evil it is that you have done in my absence. Did you hasten to bring on the judgment of your Lord?” He threw down the tablets, seized his brother by (the hair of) his head, and dragged him to himself. Aaron said, “Son of my mother, the people did indeed overpower me, and they were almost going to slay me. Do not make the enemies rejoice over my misfortune, and do not count me among the wrongdoers.”

When Moses (PBUH) came back to his people and came to know what they had done while he was away, he became angry, “He threw down the tablets, seized his brother by (the hair of) his head, and dragged him to him.” These are the actions of a person who was very angry. He must have been extremely angry to throw the tablets which had the words of God written on them. Aaron (PBUH) tried to calm his brother, calling him the son of “my mother.” He explained to him that he tried his best to stop them but they would not listen, “The people did indeed overpower me, and they were almost going to slay me.” This shows how much the people were dazzled by the calf. Moses (PBUH) listened to his brother’s pleading, “Do not make the enemies rejoice over my misfortune, and do not count me among the wrongdoers.” Moses (PBUH) calmed down and asked God to forgive both himself and his brother, “My Lord, forgive me and my brother. Admit us into Your Mercy; for You are the Most Merciful of those who are merciful.”

The decree came down from He who has the right to judge, “Those who took the calf (for worship) will indeed be overwhelmed with wrath from their Lord and ignominy in this life. Thus do We recompense those who invent lies. But those who do wrong then repent afterward and believe, verily your Lord is thereafter All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.” It is a decree and a promise. It is a decree that those who, “took the calf (for worship) will indeed be overwhelmed with wrath from their Lord and ignominy in this life,” and a promise that God forgives those who repent after they have committed a sin. God has forgiven the children of Israel time after time.

“When the anger of Moses abated, he picked up the tablets on which there were inscriptions of guidance and mercy for those who stood in awe of their Lord.” The Arabic words used in this verse portrays “anger” as if it were a living being, a being that moved Moses (PBUH) around, influenced him, and motivated him. Moses (PBUH) was able to calm down once his anger stopped pushing him around. When Moses (PBUH) calmed down, he picked up the tablets which brought guidance and mercy to those who stood in awe of their Lord. Guidance opened up their hearts to receive God’s mercy. There is no heart more miserable than a lost heart. Nothing opens hearts for guidance like being in awe of God.

“And Moses chose seventy of his people for Our appointment;” There are different interpretations for the purpose of this appointment. The appointment may had been made to give the children of Israel an opportunity to seek God’s forgiveness. It may had been an appointment to execute retribution against those who committed the transgression. But who were these people whom Moses (PBUH) chose? those who were “seized with violent trembling.” They may have been those who told Moses (PBUH) that they would not believe in him until they see God, face to face.

Moses (PBUH) on the other hand prayed, “My Lord, if it had been Your will You could have destroyed both them and me, long before. Will You destroy us for the deeds of the foolish ones among us?” Moses (PBUH) pleaded for his Lord’s forgiveness; his prayer expressed complete submission to the will of God. It also expressed the hope that they would not be punished because of the transgression of a few. Moses (PBUH) continued to express his knowledge of the moral behind the whole event, “This is no more than Your trial; by it You send whom You will astray, and You lead whom You will to the right path. You are our Patron; so forgive us and bestow Your mercy on us; for You are the best of those who forgive.” Moses (PBUH) indicated that they understood the lesson and they were seeking God’s guidance, support, and forgiveness.

God’s answer was, “I inflict My torment on whomever I will; but My mercy extends to all things;” a statement which underlines the absolute power of God. The law is decreed by the divine will, and is executed according to the divine will. The law is executed with absolute justice, because God chose Justice to be one of His attributes. His wrath is inflicted on those who deserve to be punished; but His mercy encompassed everything. God’s mercy is immense; it reaches everything in this vast universe.

God’s statement continued to identify those who will receive God’s mercy, “I shall ordain (My mercy) for those who are conscious of God, and pay the poor due, and those who believe in Our revelation. Those who follow the messenger, the unlettered Prophet, whom they find mentioned in the Torah and the Gospel; he commands them what is just and forbids them what is evil; he allows them as lawful what is good (and pure) and prohibits them from what is bad (and impure); he releases them from their heavy burdens and from the yokes that are upon them. So it is those who believe in him, honour him, help him, and follow the light which is sent down with him who will succeed.” This is a great announcement. It indicates that the children of Israel received definite news about the mission of the unlettered Prophet of God. This Prophet, “commands them what is just and forbids them what is evil; he allows them as lawful what is good (and pure) and prohibits them from what is bad (and impure); he releases them from their heavy burdens and from the yokes that are upon them.” Those who follow this Prophet will be truly successful.

“Say, ‘People, I am sent to you all, as the Messenger of God, to whom belongs the dominion of the heavens and the earth; there is no deity but He; it is He who gives both life and death.’ So believe in God and His Messenger, the unlettered Prophet, who believes in God and His words; and follow him that (so) you may be guided.” This is the last and comprehensive message. It is a message for all people, not restricted to a single nation, land, or generation. Divine messages that came before it was meant for specific people and specific times. Whenever a new Messenger came with a message it replaced the one revealed before it. Usually, a newer message embodied changes that made it more relevant to the time and place in which it was revealed. Humanity was being prepared for the last message. The last message came with a complete set of fundamentals that made it applicable to all nations at all times. It is the eternal message, a message that satisfies the requirements of the initial natural human disposition which is shared by all people. This is the message brought by the Prophet (PBUH), “People, I am sent to you all, as the Messenger of God.” This verse was revealed in Mecca, so it was revealed very early in the history of the message to defy the claim made by the enemy of Islam. They claimed that originally Islam was meant to be a local message but Muhammad (PBUH), encouraged by the success he met, changed it to become a universal message.

The verse established the fact that to God, “belongs the dominion of the heavens and the earth; there is no god but He; it is He who gives both life and death.” Muhammad (PBUH) is a mere messenger delivering a message to humankind from God the owner of the dominion of the whole universe. God is the Lord of the universe, a manifestation of His power is the fact that He is in full control of people’s life and death. The Lord of the universe, the one who controls all creatures, is the only one who deserves to be worshiped by people. People, then should worship God according to the message which He sent to them through His Messenger.

The narrative continues to deal with the children of Israel, by describing a group of them, “Of the people of Moses there is a community who guide and establish justice in the light of truth.” It is a group that was guided by the truth and ruled with justice.

“We divided them into twelve tribes (as distinct) nations. We inspired Moses, when his people asked him for water, ‘Strike the rock with your staff.’ Out of it there gushed forth twelve springs. Each group knew its own place for water. We gave them the shade of clouds, and sent down to them manna and quails, (saying), ‘Eat of the good things We have provided for you.’ They did not wrong Us, but they wronged themselves.” God was ever watchful over Moses (PBUH) and his people. God forgave them for worshiping the calf and He raised them again from the dead after they requested to see God face to face. They were divided into twelve nations. The people in each nation were the descendants of one of the grandchildren of Prophet Jacob (Israel PBUH). God’s care was manifested in assigning a water spring to each nation, in providing a cover for them during their passage in the desert, and in bringing down honey and quails so they can eat.

“And when it was said to them, ‘Dwell in this town and eat therein as you wish, and say relieve us (from the heavy burden) and enter the gate in a posture of humility. We shall forgive you your sins. We shall increase (the reward of) those who do good.’” They refused to follow the command which they received to enter a specific town, whose name is not mentioned, to dwell in it, and to enjoy all its produce. They were commanded to recite a specific supplication and to show humility at the entrance to the town. God promised to forgive the sinners and to reward the good-doers in folds if they obey the command. But a group of them twisted the wording of the supplication and did not show humility at the entrance as they were commanded, “But the wrongdoers from among them changed the word which had been given them so We sent down on them a plague from heaven because of their wrongdoing.” So, God punished them because of their wrongdoing.

“Ask them about the town that was close to the sea, how its people broke the Sabbath. For on the day of their Sabbath their fish used to come to them, openly holding up their heads, but on the day they had no Sabbath, they would not come. Thus, did We try them, for they were transgressors.” A group of people living in a village by the sea tried to get around the prohibition of fishing on the Sabbath. They erected enclosures to keep the fish that usually come on the Sabbath within these enclosures, so that they can catch it on Sunday. They thought that by doing this they can circumvent the rules of the Sabbath. But another group realized that what the first group is doing is a violation of the rules of the Sabbath. They warned the violators of the consequences of their actions. A third group realized that there is no use in admonishing the violators. Nothing will stop the transgressors to violate the rules of the Sabbath. They said, “Why do you admonish a people whom God will destroy or will inflict a severe torment on them?” The second group answered, “To discharge our duty to your Lord, and perchance they may become conscious of God.” They felt that even though they knew that the admonition may fall on deaf ears, they had a duty to perform: the duty of enjoining what is good and forbidding what is evil. Thus, the people of the village were divided into three groups: a group who violated the rules of the Sabbath; the second group objected strenuously to the behaviour of the violators; and a third group who did not approve of the violations but did nothing to stop them.

When the admonition was not heeded nor the advice was listened to, God’s wrath befell the violators. Those who objected to the violations and tried to stop them were saved. The Quran does not tell us anything about the third group, “When they disregarded the warnings that had been given them, We rescued those who forbade evil; and We seized the wrongdoers with awful torment because they were transgressors. When in their insolence they persisted in doing what they had been forbidden to do, We said to them, ‘Be you apes, despised and rejected.’” Those who were determined to violate the rules of the Sabbath and continued to transgress, in spite of the fact that they were warned, were transformed into apes. They lost the main characteristic that makes people human: the free will. So God transformed them into animals having no free will. How did this transformation happen? And what happened to them after that? Neither the Quran nor the Prophet’s (PBUH) tradition gave answers to these questions.

adversity; in order that they might return (to us).” These verses talk about the children of Israel after the time of Moses (PBUH). They were divided into different groups: some were righteous, and others were not. God tested them with prosperity and adversity. God’s tests are forms of continuous warnings and reminders for people to heed God’s commands.

“And a generation succeeded them who inherited the Scripture. They take the goods of this low life (as the price of evil-doing) and say, ‘We will be forgiven.’ And if there came to them (again) an offer of the like, they would accept it (and would sin again).” The succeeding generations studied the Scripture but did not follow its injunctions. The study was an intellectual exercise that did not touch their souls. They succumbed to the pleasures of this life while entertaining the illusion that they will be forgiven. The verse berated them for twisting the wording of the Scripture which they studied and pledged to follow, “Did they not pledge in the covenant of the Scripture that they should not say save the truth about God? And they have studied that which is therein. And the abode of the Hereafter is better, for those who are conscious of God. Why do you not understand? Faith is not simply an intellectual exercise. Faith has to rest deep in one’s heart and shapes one’s behaviour. The Hereafter is truly better for those who are God conscious. Only those who aspire to the goods of the Hereafter are able to resist the lure of the pleasures of this world. The verse appeals to the ability of the human mind to analyse and understand the importance of the two fundamental concepts of the Hereafter and God consciousness.

“As to those who hold fast to the Book and establish regular prayer, We will never squander the reward of the doers of good.” Holding fast to the Book implies understanding the Book and applying its injunctions in a way that does not allow any excesses or looseness, the moderate way that God likes His book to be applied. Holding fast implies firmness without allowing excesses brought about by extremes. Loosely applying the injunctions is as bad as being extremely strict. The fact that holding fast to the Book is coupled with establishing prayers sends a message that the Book plays two roles: a role in people’s regular daily life and a role in performing the rituals. People will not be able to lead a healthy way of life unless both their material and spiritual needs are satisfied using the ways described in the Book. People’s lives are corrupted when either need goes unsatisfied, or when the Book is not used in satisfying these needs. The Book provides a comprehensive plan for a healthy way of life.

This group of verses concluded by making a reference to the covenant between God and the children of Israel, “And when We shook the Mount over them, as if it were a canopy, and they thought it was going to fall on them (We said), ‘Hold firmly to what We have given you, and remember what is therein; perchance you may remain conscious of God.’” The covenant was made in a dramatic circumstance. God raised the mount above them to show them His power. They were asked to solemnly pledge to take their covenant with God seriously and stay firm and steadfast in applying its injunctions. The dramatic circumstance which surrounded making the pledge to abide by God’s covenant was meant to make that covenant ingrained in their memories forever. Thus, reminding them continuously of their connection to God.

172. And when your Lord drew forth from the Children of Adam - from their loins - their descendants, and made them testify concerning themselves (saying), "Am I not your Lord (who cherishes and sustains you)?" They said, "Yes, we do testify." (This), lest you should say on the Day of Judgment, "Of this we were never mindful."
173. Or lest you should say, "Our fathers before us may have taken false gods, but we are (their) descendants after them; will You then destroy us because of the deeds of those who followed falsehood?"
174. Thus, do We explain the revelations in detail; and perchance they may return.
175. Relate to them the story of him to whom We gave Our revelations but he sloughed them off. So, Satan overtook him, and he went astray.
176. Had it been Our will, We would have elevated him with Our revelations; but he clung to the earth, and followed his own whims. His similitude is that of a dog: if you attack him, he lolls out his tongue and if you leave him alone, he (still) lolls out his tongue. That is the similitude of those who reject Our revelations. So relate the story; perchance they may reflect.
177. Evil is the example of people who reject Our revelations and wrong their own souls.
178. Whomever God guides is indeed on the right path and whomever He rejects from His guidance, these are the losers.
179. We have created for Hell many of the jinn and humankind. They have hearts that do not understand, eyes that do not see, and ears that do not hear. They are like cattle, even more misguided; for they are heedless (of warning).
180. The most beautiful names belong to God. So call on Him by them; but shun those who blaspheme His names. They will soon be recompensed for what they were doing.
181. And of those whom We created, there is a nation who guides with the truth and establishes justice therewith.
182. Those who reject Our revelations, We will lead them on from whence they do not know.
183. And I grant them respite; certainly, My scheme is effective.
184. Do they not reflect? Their companion is not seized with madness; he is but a perspicuous warner.
185. Do they not consider the dominion of the heavens and the earth, and what things God has created; and it may be that they have approached their appointed term? What other revelation will they believe in, if they do not believe in this?
186. Whomever God rejects from His guidance, will have no other guide; He will leave them in their trespasses, wandering in distraction.
187. They ask you about the (final) Hour - when will be its appointed time? Say, "The knowledge thereof is with my Lord (alone). None but He can reveal when it will occur; it is momentous through the heavens and the earth. It will happen suddenly." They ask you as if you were well informed thereof. Say, "The knowledge thereof is with God (alone), but most people do not know."

188. Say, "It is not in my power to bring benefit to or to avert harm from myself except what God wills. If I had knowledge of the unseen, I would have an abundance of good things and no evil could have touched me. I am only a warner, and a bringer of glad tidings to those who believe."
189. It is He who created you from a single soul, and from it made its mate, in order that he might dwell with her (in love). When he covered her, she bears a light burden and carries it about. When she grows heavy, they both pray God their Lord, (saying), "If You give us a goodly child, we vow we shall (ever) be grateful."
190. But when He gave them a goodly child, they ascribed to others a share in the gift they have received; but God is Exalted high above the partners they ascribe to Him.
191. Do they indeed ascribe to Him as partners, things that can create nothing, but are themselves created?
192. And they cannot support them, nor can they support themselves?
193. If you call them to guidance, they will not obey. It is the same whether you call them or you hold your peace.
194. Verily those whom you call upon besides God are servants like you; call upon them, and let them respond to you, if you are (indeed) truthful.
195. Do they have feet to walk with, hands to strike with, eyes to see with, or ears to hear with? Say, "Call your 'god-partners', and scheme (your worst) against me, and give me no respite.
196. My Patron is God, Who revealed the Book, and He protects the righteous."
197. Those whom you call upon besides Him, are unable to support you, and indeed they cannot support themselves.
198. If you call them to guidance, they do not hear. You will see them looking at you, but they see not. (7:172-198)

"And when your Lord drew forth from the Children of Adam - from their loins - their descendants, and made them testify concerning themselves (saying), 'Am I not your Lord (who cherishes and sustains you)?' They said, 'Yes, we do testify.' (This), lest you should say on the Day of Judgment, 'Of this we were never mindful.'" The verse discusses the connection between the initial natural human disposition and faith using the familiar theatrical Quranic style. The verse describes an amazing scene, a scene which depicts the whole human race being questioned by their Creator, at the time of the creation of Adam before any of them was yet born, "Am I not your Lord?" The whole human race answered, "Yes, You are." We recognize You as our sole Creator, we acknowledge Your Lordship, and we pledge to worship You alone. All human beings who were not yet born at the time of the creation of Adam (PBUH) participated in this dialogue with God.

Quran presented this scene more than fourteen hundred years ago. At that time no one knew about the human genes and how it keeps a record of the traits of each human being and his/her lineage. Ibn Greer narrated on the authority of Ibn Abbas (RA), "Your Lord wiped Adam's back from which came out each and every soul that will be created till the Day of Judgment. God then took their pledge and asked them, 'Am I not Your Lord?' They said, 'Yes.'" How did this happen? No one has the answer to this question. This is part of the unseen. Human beings are unable to understand the nature of God, consequently understanding how He does things is beyond our comprehension. We have to submit to the truth of the verses describing God's actions without trying to explain the nature of these actions. Verses which describe God's actions like, "Then He turned to the sky, which was smoke," (41:11), "Your Lord is God, who created the heavens and the earth in six Days, then established Himself on the throne." (7:54), "And your Lord came, and His angels, rank upon rank," (89:22) should be accepted as true, even though we do not know how these actions occur. We do not need to ask how these actions occurred because the way God does things is beyond the comprehension of a human being.

However, this verse could be understood to mean that God created all people with an initial natural disposition that recognizes God as the sole Creator and this disposition provides the initial drive for the human being to seek and discover God. However, this initial disposition may be corrupted by external influences. Ibn Katheer said in his interpretation of the Quran that the verse means that the initial natural human disposition is inclined to the belief in the oneness of God. We do not think that the scene described in the verse is implausible; God is able to do whatever He wishes. But, we also accept Ibn Katheer's interpretation, God knows best.

Either way, we come to the conclusion that the initial natural human disposition is bent on the belief in the oneness of God. Every human being is born with this disposition however, as the person grows up this initial disposition may be strengthened or weakened according to the influence of the external environment. The concept of the oneness of God is not only part of the initial disposition of the human being but it is also intrinsic to the creation of the universe. The initial natural human disposition is part of the law that govern the whole universe. This law which governs the whole universe is based on the fundamental concept of the oneness of the Creator.

"Or lest you should say, 'Our fathers before us may have taken false gods, but we are (their) descendants after them, Will You then destroy us because of the deeds of those who followed falsehood?'" God knows that the initial natural disposition may be corrupted by external influences. He thus, decided, as an act of mercy, that humans are held accountable only to the deeds they actually commit. God does not leave humans to decide on their own through the use of the intellect that he bestowed upon them, what is right and what is wrong; but He sends messengers to explain what is right and what is wrong. Had God known that the initial natural human disposition and the human intellect are sufficient to guide people to the right path, He would not have sent messengers with a message to guide people to the right path, "Thus, do We explain the revelations in detail; and perchance they may return." There is no excuse for rejecting the belief in the oneness of God, after receiving the detailed revelations of God.

"Relate to them the story of him to whom We gave Our revelations but he sloughed them off. So, Satan overtook him, and he went astray. Had it been Our will, We would have elevated him with Our revelations; but he clung to the earth, and followed his own whims. His similitude is that of a dog: if you attack him, he lolls out his tongue and if you leave him alone, he (still) lolls out his tongue. That is the similitude of those who reject Our revelations. So relate the story; perchance they may reflect. Evil is the example of people who reject Our revelations and wrong their own souls.” The verses describe another amazing scene. A human being who received God’s revelations, blessings, and knowledge; he got the chance to be guided, to rise and become connected to God, but he chose to exuviate all of this. The verse paints a picture of a human being who shed off these blessings as if he is shedding off the outer layer of his skin. These blessings were the protective cover that guided him on the right path and kept him safe from the temptation of Satan. When he shed off the protective cover he became an easy prey to Satan, who caused him to stray away from the path of guidance to the path of whims and desires, and he fell from the height of light to the bottom of darkness. His likeness is the likeness of a stray dog sitting close to the ground, afraid and insecure. This is an example of those who reject God’s revelations, “That is the similitude of those who reject Our revelations. So relate the story; perchance they may reflect. Evil is the example of people who reject Our revelations and wrong their own souls.” The signs of guidance were everywhere inside and around them. Their initial natural disposition as well as the signs in the universe around them pointed to the road of guidance, but they chose to ignore all these signs. They wronged themselves.

“Whomever God guides is indeed on the right path and whomever He rejects from His guidance, these are the losers.” God guides those who strive to be guided, “And those who strive in Our (cause), We will certainly guide them to our Paths.” (29:69), “Verily, never will God change the condition of a people until they change what is in themselves;” (13:11) similarly, those who choose to become misguided, God leaves them to pursue their crooked path, “We have created for hell many of the jinn and humankind. They have hearts that do not understand, eyes that do not see, and ears that do not hear. They are like cattle, even more misguided; for they are heedless (of warning);” (7:179) “There is a disease in their hearts; and God has increased their disease.” (2:10)

The divine will which controls the destiny of the human beings gave them equal propensity to guidance and misguidance. God created the human being with an initial natural disposition that is aware of the oneness of the Creator. This disposition drives the human being towards seeking God’s guidance. God also gave the human being an intellect that allows him/her to differentiate between right and wrong. God also sent His messengers to deliver His message to people.

God has decreed that He will guide those who seek guidance and will leave those who want to stray away to dwell in their misguidance. In all cases, everything is decided according to the divine will. The divine Will is the only power in this universe. No event can take place unless it has been decreed by God’s will.

“We have created for Hell many of the jinn and humankind. They have hearts that do not understand, eyes that do not see, and ears that do not hear. They are like cattle, even more misguided; for they are heedless (of warning).” This verse confirms what we have mentioned earlier. It states that many jinn and humans have been created for Hell fire, they deserve that. Why is this? There are two reasons. First, God knows, in his eternal knowledge, that these creatures are destined to Hell fire. God’s knowledge of an event is not contingent on the occurrence of such event. God’s knowledge is comprehensive and independent of time and occurrences. Second, God's eternal knowledge is not the cause that drives people to sin and thus deserve to be admitted to Hell fire. They are admitted to Hell fire because, "They have hearts that do not understand, eyes that do not see, and ears that do not hear." They did not open their hearts to examine the cogent evidence of faith given in the divine messages. They did not open their eyes to see the signs of God in the universe. They did not open their ears to listen to God's revelations that were recited to them. They were given these senses to use them to understand, to see, and to listen but they kept their senses isolated from all sources of guidance. They went through life heedless and with no reflection on the purpose of life. They were, "like cattle, even more misguided," Those who are unaware of the divine signs in life and in the universe and those who never reflect on the divine intervention in their daily life are more lost than cattle. Cattle are guided by their instincts. Humans and jinn were given a heart that understands, an eye that sees, and an ear that hears. If they do not use these senses to observe, hear, reflect, and understand the purpose of life they would be more lost than cattle which are guided by their instincts. These are the ones whom God created for Hell fire.

"The most beautiful names belong to God. So, call on him by them; but shun those who blaspheme His names. They will soon be recompensed for what they were doing." The idolatrous Arabs blasphemed God's name. They distorted the name of God, "Allah" into "Allat" and used it as a name for one of their idols. They distorted God's name, "Al-Aziz (the Eminent)" into "Al-Ozza" and used it as a name for another of their idols. The verse states that the beautiful names of God are His alone. The believers are commanded to use these names – without distortion- in calling upon God. The believers should not worry about those who blaspheme God's names, God will punish them.

The command not to worry about those who blaspheme God's name is not limited to this particular incident. This is a general command that should be applied to all forms of blasphemous acts. Claiming that God has a son, that God's will is controlled by the law of nature, that God's actions are similar to humans' actions, or that God's dominion is limited to heaven and He should not interfere in people's life on earth are all different forms of blasphemy. Muslims are commanded to turn away from people who blaspheme God's name in any form and do not worry about them. Those blasphemers will be punished by God.

"And of those whom We created, there is a nation who guides with the truth and establishes justice therewith." Humanity would not have deserved to be honoured by God, had it not been for the few who form the group that God calls, "nation." This is a nation which is united around the belief in the oneness of God. It is a nation that is led by people who believe in the oneness of God. It is a nation that lives according to the rule of God. It is the nation that has been appointed as a keeper of God's trust on earth. It is the nation that has been appointed as a witness over all people.

Let us stop here and reflect on the characteristics of this nation: it is a nation that guides with the truth and establishes justice. This nation, which always exists no matter how few its members are, guides with the truth. The members of this nation are persistent in their efforts to guide to the truth, they will never stop. They do not live in seclusion and they do not hide the truth that they know. They assume the role of leaders who lead to the truth. Their role does not stop at knowing the truth and guiding people to it, but they endeavour to establish justice on earth. The truth was not given so that it would be treated as a body of knowledge to be gained through study programs nor it was given to be sermons for admonishing people; but it was given to establish the rule of justice in people's lives.

The truth was revealed to provide a holistic approach to life. This truth guides people in all aspects of life. It explains the essence of the articles faith, it delineates the way the rituals should be performed, and it controls all the activities that constitute the daily lives of people. It encompasses faith, rituals as well as ethics, traditions, and behaviour.

“Those who reject Our revelations, We will lead them on from whence they do not know. And I grant them respite; certainly, My scheme is effective.” This is the power that they did not consider when they launched their aggressive war against this religion and against the nation that believes in this religion. They never thought that God is simply giving them respite, so they thought that they were beyond His reach. They forgot that God's scheme is effective.

“Do they not reflect? Their companion is not seized with madness; he is but a perspicuous warner.” The idolatrous Arabs used to say that Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) was a mad person. The Quran poses the question trying to bring them to their senses and make them think and understand. Muhammad (PBUH) lived among them all his life. They never doubted his saneness, his honesty, his truthfulness, and his wisdom. They accepted him as a judge and accepted his ruling in the conflict that arose when they were rebuilding the Ka'ba; and they had a disagreement about who should have the honor of placing the Black Stone in its designated place. They entrusted him with their valuables when they travelled. Even after he became a Prophet, they still entrusted him with their valuables. When the Prophet (PBUH) migrated from Mecca to Medina he entrusted his cousin Ali with the assignment to return back these valuables to their owners.

“Do they not consider the dominion of the heavens and the earth, and what things God has created; and it may be that they have approached their appointed term? What other revelation will they believe in, if they do not believe in this?” This is another question which tries to shake them up from their denial. The universe has the cogent evidence for anyone who is seeking the truth to realize the existence of a Creator. How long they think they will live? Are they not worried about what will happen after death? If they cannot believe in this, what other revelation would they believe in?

These different questions reveal the features of the Quranic style in addressing people. The questions address different aspects of the human being at the same time. They address the psyche, the intellect, and the feelings of the human being. The Quran does not approach humankind with a cold rational argument but it presents a dialogue that touches upon the different aspects of the lives of people. This is the right approach for addressing humankind at all times.

“Whomever God rejects from His guidance, will have no other guide; He will leave them in their trespasses, wandering in distraction.” Those who are misguided chose to be misguided because they refused to observe and reflect. Those who refuse to observe and reflect on the God's revelations are left to go astray. No injustice is inflicted on them because they are the ones who chose not to see, reflect, and understand.

“They ask you about the (final) Hour - when will be its appointed time? Say, ‘The knowledge thereof is with my Lord (alone). None but He can reveal when it will occur; it is momentous through the heavens and the earth. It will happen suddenly.’ They ask you as if you were well informed thereof. Say, ‘The knowledge thereof is with God (alone), but most people do not know.’” Those who were unaware of what was happening around them ask the Prophet (PBUH) about the Hour (the date of the Day of Judgment), they were unable to see what can be seen and yet they want to know about the unseen.

The idolatrous Arabs were shocked when they were introduced to the concepts of life after death and the accountability of humankind. Although, these concepts were integral to Abraham’s (PBUH) faith but they were long forgotten by the Arabs. The basic tenets of the faith that Abraham and Ishmael (PBUT) preached were lost over the passage of time. It was quite a surprise that Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) revived these concepts. The Quran records their reaction, “The disbelievers say (in ridicule), ‘Shall we point out to you a man that will tell you, when you are all scattered to pieces in disintegration, that you shall (then be raised) in a new creation?’ Has he invented a falsehood against God, or is he mad?’ No, it is those who do not believe in the Hereafter, that will suffer torment, and they are in gross error.” (34:7-8)

God knows that a nation which is destined to lead humanity and is assigned as a witness over it – such as the Muslim nation- would not be able to perform its required task unless it has a strong belief in the certainty of the Hereafter. A nation which believes that there is nothing beyond this worldly life cannot perform these major tasks. The belief in the Hereafter provides a wider perspective of life and it provides an extension of the worldly life necessary for the preparation of the human psyche to carry on these major assignments. A life beyond this worldly life provides an incentive for the human beings to guide to goodness and to perform charitable acts without expecting immediate rewards. It also provides a perspective for the human being wider than the one limited by material needs only. This is the rationale behind the strong emphasis on the belief in the Hereafter as an integral part of the faith of Islam. This emphasis was absorbed in the psyche of the Muslim nation in its early days when the nation provided a wise leadership for the world.

The Hour is part of the unseen. The unseen is part of the exclusive knowledge of God; no one is privy to it. The idolatrous Arabs came to Prophet (PBUH) to ask him about the Hour. The question may have been posed to test the Prophet’s (PBUH) knowledge; it may have been posed to express their surprise; or it may have been posed to ridicule the Prophet (PBUH). The Prophet (PBUH) was a human being he did not claim that he was privy to the unseen. The Prophet (PBUH) was commanded to leave the unseen to the owner of the unseen, “The knowledge thereof is with my Lord (alone). None but He can reveal when it will occur.” The Hour is part of the exclusive knowledge of God; He will reveal it when its time comes. The emphasis is then turned from its time to its nature, “it is momentous through the heavens and the earth. It will happen suddenly.”

It is going to be a tremendous event. They should pay attention to its nature rather than being obsessed by its timing. They should be busy preparing for its coming because it is going to happen suddenly and without warning. The verse comments on the ignorance of those who were asking the question, “They ask you as if you were well informed thereof. Say, ‘The knowledge thereof is with God (alone), but most people do not know.’” They do not understand the limitations of human knowledge, nor do they appreciate the nature of God.

“Say, ‘It is not in my power to bring benefit to or to avert harm from myself except what God wills. If I had knowledge of the unseen, I would have an abundance of good things and no evil could have touched me. I am only a warner, and a bringer of glad tidings to the believers.’” This proclamation defines the dimensions of the belief in the oneness of God. It is a belief that is free of any form of associating partners with God. This is also a statement of the uniqueness of God’s attributes. No human being shares any of these attributes, even if he were Muhammad (PBUH) who was chosen by God to be His messenger.

Muhammad (PBUH) is only a warner and a bearer of glad tidings for all people. Only those who “believe” benefit from the warning and the glad tidings that he brought. They understand what he has and are aware of the truth of what he brought. They are the chosen ones. The true meaning of a word is not understood unless the heart is prepared to receive and understand. The Quran does not yield its treasures, secrets, and fruits except to those who believe. It has been narrated by some of the companions of the Prophet (PBUH) that they said, “We were given the faith before we were given the Quran.” The faith enabled them to taste and appreciate the Quran. It enabled them to understand its true meaning and objectives. This was the reason behind their tremendous achievements. That generation lived by the Quran and they lived for the Quran. It was a unique generation that never happened again. We see only individual examples appearing in the succeeding generations who emulated the first generation.

This is another round that deals with the concept of the oneness of God. The narrative follows a story telling approach to depict the gradual deviation from the belief in the oneness of God to the concept of associating partners with God. It is as if the verses are narrating the stages that the idolatrous Arabs went through in their deviation from the religion of their forefather Abraham (PBUH) to become idolaters. The narrative then confronts the idolaters by uncovering the irrationality of idol worship. The round ends by issuing a command to the Prophet (PBUH) to challenge the idolaters and the idols they worshiped and to proclaim God as his only helper and supporter. “It is He who created you from a single soul, and from it made its mate, in order that he might dwell with her (in love). When he covered her, she bears a light burden and carries it about. When she grows heavy, they both pray God their Lord, (saying), ‘If You give us a goodly child, we vow we shall (ever) be grateful.’” The verse displays the role of the initial natural disposition which God created in each human being, in shaping the behavior of the human being. The first reaction of the human being in times of need and fear is to seek God’s help. The verse refers to the first couple of the human race. The male and the female were created from the same soul. However, their functions were different. The difference is intentional so that the spouses can find comfort and tranquility in the company of each other. This is Islam’s perspective of the relationship between human males and females. This is the original perspective that Islam introduced more than fourteen hundred years ago, at a time when distorted religions held that women were responsible for the misery of the human race and the idolaters treated women as chattel or at least as servants to men of no value or consequence.

Then the story starts, "When he covers her, she bears a light burden and carries it about." The Quran uses a decorous expression, "he covers her," to describe the intimate physical relationship between the spouses which is congruent with the atmosphere of tranquility referred to earlier. It is as if the verse describes the meeting of two apparitions rather than the meeting of two physical bodies. This alludes to the difference that should exist in the way the intimate physical relationship between the spouses is conducted in the human and animal domains. The humans' way is characterised by decency while the animals' way is characterised by pure physical lust.

Similarly, the early stage of pregnancy is described as, "a light burden," it is carried unnoticed. Then the second stage is reached, "When she grows heavy, they both pray God their Lord, (saying), 'If You give us a goodly child, we vow we shall (ever) be grateful.'" When the pregnancy became a reality and the love of the baby started to grow in the hearts of its parents, they started to worry about their baby. Is the baby going to be of sound body and mind? They sought God's help and support. They asked God to give them a goodly child, but, "But when He gave them a goodly child, they ascribed to others a share in the gift they have received; but God is Exalted high above the partners they ascribe to Him."

"Do they indeed ascribe to Him as partners, things that can create nothing, but are themselves created? And they cannot support them, nor can they support themselves?" Only the Creator deserves to be worshiped. These manmade deities cannot create anything; they are created themselves. How can anyone worship these so called gods? Only the one who has the power to support His servants deserves to be worshiped. Power and Dominion are attributes of God. The so called gods have neither power nor dominion.

The use of the pronoun "they" in the second half of the verse indicates the possibility of having human beings among those who were appointed gods. We are aware that the idolatrous Arabs did not worship other human beings. But the verse alludes to the fact that the chiefs were given the authority to legislate and to establish social rules which no one disputed. So, they usurped the role of god in determining the norms and rules that organize the lives of other human beings. The Quran thus draws the similarity between this kind of associating partners with God and actual idol worship.

The Quran drives this point further, "If you call them to guidance, they will not obey. It is the same whether you call them or you hold your peace. Verily those whom you call upon besides God are servants like you; call upon them, and let them respond to you, if you are (indeed) truthful. Do they have feet to walk with, hands to strike with, eyes to see with, or ears to hear with?" The Quran tried to show the idolatrous Arabs that idol worshiping is illogical and irrational. An argument appealing to the reason is made: if these gods do not have feet to walk, hands to fight, eyes to see, or ears to hear, how can they be worthy of being worshiped? How can a person, who has all these senses, worship something that does not even have any of these senses? If the idols are symbols of humans or angels, they still represent servants of God who have been created and have no power to create anything. They cannot help themselves let alone help anyone else. The pre-Islamic idolaters used idols to symbolize holy humans and angels.

This has been captured in the verse above by the use of pronouns that point to living as well as non-living things.

At the end of this round, the Quran commanded the Prophet (PBUH) to challenge them, “Say, ‘Call your “god-partners”, and scheme (your worst) against me, and give me no respite. My Patron is God, who revealed the Book, and He protects the righteous.’” This was the challenge, the Prophet (PBUH) asked them to do their best and to scheme their worst, because the true God is his supporter. He (God) will protect His Messenger.

The idolaters of Mecca used to assault Abo Bakr (RA). They would hit him with their shoes and mutilate his face. During these torture episodes, Abo Bakr (RA) never stopped repeating, “Lord, You are so Forbearing.” He knew deep in his heart that God is able to destroy these idolaters and he was certain that God will never let His close servants down. The idolaters of Mecca used to assault Abd-Allah bin Maso’ud (RA) for daring to recite the Quran near the Ka’ba. When they were finished with him he would not be able to walk. At the end of each of these torture sessions, he would say about those who tortured him, “By God, they never seemed to me to be more abased.” He was certain that God humiliates those who fight Him therefore; those who fight God should look petty in the eyes of the close servants of God.

These examples reflect the way this generation of Muslims – the generation that followed closely the Quran – understood and practiced the command, “Call your ‘god-partners’, and scheme (your worst) against me, and give me no respite. My Patron is God, who revealed the Book, and He protects the righteous.” They suffered patiently the torture inflicted on them by the idolaters, and sought God’s protection. The history is a witness to the victory that they achieved afterwards. God gave them victory, and those who tortured them ended conquered and abased.

God commanded His Prophet (PBUH) to challenge the idolaters and to explain to them the absurdity of worshiping these idols, “Those whom you call upon besides Him, are unable to support you, and indeed they cannot support themselves. If you call them to guidance, they do not hear. You will see them looking at you, but they see not.” This command should always be remembered by those who are involved in the call to Islam. The days of idolatry may be over, but there are still little deities being worshiped by their followers. These little deities will try to inflict harm on those who oppose them and challenge their authority.

199. Hold to pardoning; command what is right; and turn away from the ignorant.
200. If a thought from Satan assailed your (mind), seek refuge with God; for He is All-Hearing, Omniscient.
201. Those who are conscious of God, when a thought of evil from Satan assails them, remember God and they suddenly see.
202. But their brethren (the evil ones) plunge them deeper into error, and never desist.
203. If you do not bring them a revelation, they say, “Why did you not choose it?” Say, “I only follow what is revealed to me from my Lord. This is (nothing but) a light from your Lord, guidance, and mercy, for those who believe.”

204. And when the Qur'an is recited, listen to it and pay heed that you may receive mercy.
205. And do remember your Lord within yourself humbly and with awe, below your breath, at morning and evening. And do not be of those who are heedless.
206. Surely, those who are with your Lord are not too proud to serve Him, and they praise Him and prostrate before Him. (7:199-206)

“Hold to forgiveness; command what is right; and turn away from the ignorant. If a thought from Satan assailed your (mind), seek refuge with God; for He is All-Hearing, Omniscient. Those who are conscious of God, when a thought of evil from Satan assails them, remember God and they suddenly see.” Forgive people and accept their shortcomings. Do not expect people to be perfect and do not burden them with tasks beyond their capacity. These rules are acceptable in interpersonal relationships but they are not acceptable in matters of faith or religious duties. Matters of faith, Islamic law, and religious duties should be taken very seriously. However, when it comes to daily dealings between people, tolerance and forgiveness are encouraged. Command what is right. What is right includes things that have been accepted as good. These are things which are neither controversial nor are they contested. These are the things which have been deemed right by the sound initial natural human disposition. We need to train ourselves on commanding what is right until it becomes a natural and integral part of our psyche. Turn away from the ignorant. Ignorance is the opposite of wisdom and knowledge. One should ignore such people and avoid getting into arguments with them. Arguing with such people is a waste of time and energy. Ignoring them may allow them time to reflect on their positions and choose to rectify their error; and if they continue in their stubbornness and ignorance, they will be ignored.

“Those who are conscious of God, when a thought of evil from Satan assails them, remember God and they suddenly see.” When Satan assails people, he causes them to be blind. They can no longer see the truth. When they remember God, they are suddenly healed. Their sight is restored and they are connected with God. God consciousness provides a protection against Satan. Satan has no power over those who are conscious of God. This is how God conscious people deal with Satan: they remember God.

After this short digression about the role of God consciousness in protecting people against Satan, the narrative returns to discuss the ignorant, what motivates them in their ignorance and who drives them to be ignorant, “But their brethren (the evil ones) plunge them deeper into error, and never desist. If you do not bring them a revelation, they say, “Why did you not choose it?” Say, ‘I only follow what is revealed to me from my Lord. This is (nothing but) a light from your Lord, guidance, and mercy, for those who believe.’”

Their brethren who support them and encourage them to go deeper in their error are Satan’s host. They are also human beings who have been recruited by Satan to perform the same role. They continue tirelessly to lure them into error. The idolaters continued to ask the Prophet (PBUH) to come up with a miracle. They were ignorant of the nature of the message and the role of the Prophet (PBUH). The verse provides an example of these requests, “If you do not bring them a revelation, they say, “Why did you not choose it?” a request that reflects their misconception of the Prophet’s role and manners. The Prophet’s (PBUH) role is only to deliver the revelation not to concoct it, “I only follow what is revealed to me from my Lord.”

Then the Prophet (PBUH) was commanded to explain the nature of the message, “This is (nothing but) a light from your Lord, guidance, and mercy, for any who have faith.”

The verses continue with directives to the believers, “And when the Qur'an is recited, listen to it and pay heed that you may receive mercy.” The Sura started with a verse talking about the Quran, “A Book revealed to you - let there be no heaviness in your heart there from;” and ends with a verse explaining the etiquette of listening to the Quran.

There is a difference of opinion among the scholars about when to comply with this command. Some think that when in a prayer behind an Imam who is reciting Quran loudly, a Muslim should not raise his voice with Quranic recitation. This is the opinion of Imam Ahmed. This opinion is based on a Prophetic tradition narrated by Abo Hurriera (RA), “The Prophet (PBUH) asked his companions, after he had just finished a prayer in which he recited Quran loudly, ‘Did anyone of you recite Quran, while I was reciting?’ One of them answered, ‘Yes, I did.’ The Prophet (PBUH) said, ‘I say, no one should recite while I am reciting.’ So, people stopped this practice after they had heard the Prophet’s admonition.”

Ibn Gareer also mentioned that Ibn Mas’oud (RA) was leading the prayer once and he heard people reciting the Quran while he was reciting, he said to the people, “Do you not understand that when the Qur'an is recited, you should listen to it and pay heed that you may receive mercy.”

Another view indicates that this verse came down to disallow talking while one is praying. Ibn Mas’oud (RA) said, “We used to greet each other while we were praying until the verse, ‘And when the Qur'an is recited, listen to it and pay heed that you may receive mercy.’ was revealed, we then stopped.” Qatadah (RA) said, “A man would come while people were praying, and ask, ‘How many rak’a have you prayed? and how many is left? When this verse was revealed, we stopped talking while praying.”

Al-Qurtobi quoted Al-Naqash, who said, “It is the opinion of the scholars who wrote Quranic interpretations that this verse applies to all prayers.” This has been agreed by Al-Nahas who cited a linguistic rule indicating that the verse should be applied in all situations since it was written in a general form and no exceptions were cited.

We believe then that the command in the verse should be generalized. It should be followed whenever the Quran is recited. This is the proper etiquette and it is the way to receive God’s mercy. We base our opinion on the rule which states that commands issued in general terms should be complied with irrespective of the specific situation which surrounded their revelation. Listening to the Quran being recited brings comfort, understanding and awareness to the listener. Reciting Quran instils in the heart and mind of the reader greater insight, it invigorates the imagination, and builds up the determination. Reciting Quran opens the mind and heart to the truth of existence and the facts of life. It brings an understanding of human nature, with all its weaknesses and strengths, and it opens up the way to remedy spiritual ailments.

The Sura ends with a general command to the believers to remember God in all situations, “And do remember your Lord within yourself humbly and with awe, below your breath, at morning and evening. And do not be of those who are heedless. Surely, those who are with your Lord are not too proud to serve Him, and they praise Him and prostrate before Him.” Ibn Katheer mentioned in his book on the interpretation of the Quran that God commanded His servants to remember Him at the beginning and end of every day, as He commanded them to worship Him at these two times, “Celebrate the praise of your Lord before sunrise and before sunset.” (50:39) The remembrance of God is best done in secret or with a low voice while entertaining feelings of hope in God and fear of Him, “And do remember your Lord within yourself humbly and with awe, below your breath.” It has been reported by Al-Bukhari and Muslim that Abo Musa Al-Asha’ari (RA) said, “One time the Prophet (PBUH) heard people saying supplications in a loud voice. The Prophet (PBUH) said, ‘People, be kind to yourself (do not raise your voices with supplications) you are not calling upon one who is deaf or far away. He whom you call upon is near and He hears. He is even nearer to you than the neck of the camel you are riding.’”

The remembrance of God is not merely a lip service. It is an exercise which engages the heart, the soul, and the psyche of the human being. It has to resonate with the feelings of hope in God and fear of Him. One has to experience the magnificence of the presence of God within one’s heart. One should attain the spiritual transparency which connects the person to God. The decorum of the occasion should be preserved even when the tongue moves in unison with the heart and the lips in unison with the soul.

Believers should remember God not only at the beginning and end of the day. They should do it every minute of the day. However, the mention of the beginning and end of the day has significance because these are times when the cosmic phenomena of the succession of day and night remind us of the power of the Creator. It is a time when the believer can join the whole universe in celebrating the praise of God.

“And do not be of those who are heedless.” Remembrance of God is not only done using the tongue and the lips. Remembering God should be a task of the heart and the soul to control the senses and stop them from committing anything that displeases God. This is what is meant by remembrance of God in this verse: the remembrance which leads to obedience, hard work, and ethical behaviour following in the footsteps of the Prophet (PBUH).

God gave the example of those who are beyond the assault of Satan. These are the angels whose nature does not make them subject to the temptation of Satan, “Surely, those who are with your Lord are not too proud to serve Him, and they praise Him and prostrate before Him.” The angels are a creation of God which is beyond Satan’s reach. They are created to celebrate God’s praise and to perform the tasks God assigns to them. They have pure nature which is safe of any satanic invasion; they do not entertain evil thoughts or desires. However, they busy themselves always with celebrating the praise of God. Humankind who can be easily lured to evil thoughts and deeds by Satan is in greater need to celebrate God’s praise to be protected from Satan assaults.

Rituals and remembrance of God are fundamental concepts in the Islamic project. The Islamic project is not meant to be a project for academic study or religious discourses. It is a project that aims at changing people’s way of life from a way of life which is based on distorted beliefs and crooked traditions to a way of life based on the divine project. This transformation is a difficult feat that requires hard work and perseverant effort. The person who takes up such a responsibility is a human being with limited resources. Not only knowledge is needed but also other forms of help are necessary. Engaging in the rituals of worship provides the person with a supply line connected to God. Through this supply line come the support, the help, and the provision that enables him/her along this difficult road. It is therefore, quite appropriate to end this Sura with a command to serve God. It is the provision needed for the road.

Sura 8: Al-Anfal (The Spoils of War)

In the name of God, the Lord of Mercy, the Giver of Mercy

Following the two Meccan Suras of Al-An'am (Chapter 6) and Al-A'raf, (Chapter 7) we come to the Sura titled Al-Anfal which is a Medinian Sura. It should be noted that we have chosen to follow the order of the Suras as they appear in the Qur'anic text. We did not choose to follow the chronological order of the revelation because there is no definite authentic tradition that determines the correct chronological order of the revelation of the different Suras in the Qur'an. Authentic traditions which show the time of revelation of a specific verse or a number of verses exist only in few cases. It may be interesting to study the historical progress of the Islamic call by following the verses of the Qur'an in a chronological order. However, such feat is not only extremely difficult to achieve but will also result in mostly unsubstantiated order. It is then better to follow the order of the Suras as given in the well accepted Qur'anic text that we have today.

The Sura titled Al-Anfal (The Spoils of War) was revealed after the revelation of Surat Al-Baqara (Chapter 2). As a matter of fact, it was exactly revealed during the battle of Badr which took place during the month of Ramadan in the second year Hijri. We remind the reader that, the order of revelation of the Suras is assigned on the basis of the order of revelation of the opening verses in each Sura. It is known that the revelation of the verses of Surat Al-Baqara continued for about nine years, during this period other Suras were revealed including Surat Al-Anfal.

Some narratives claim that verses 30 to 36 were revealed in Mecca. These narratives may have been based on the fact that these verses deal with issues that were relevant to the Meccan period before the migration to Medina took place. However, this should not be considered enough of a reason to support such claim. Many of the verses that were revealed in Medina deal with issues which relate to events that happened in Mecca before the migration to Medina took place. Verse 26 in this Sura supports our opinion, "Remember when you were a small (band), despised through the land, and afraid that people might extirpate you, how He gave you refuge, strengthened you with His help, and provided you of the good things, that haply you might be thankful." (8:26) Verse 36, which is supposed to have been revealed in Mecca according to this narrative, deals with an issue that occurred after the battle of Badr when the disbelievers were preparing for the battle of Uhud, "The disbelievers spend their wealth to avert people from the path of God. They will continue to spend it; then it will be a source of intense regret for them and they will be conquered. The disbelievers will be gathered together to Hell." (8:36)

So, this Sura was revealed during the battle of Badr which was a milestone in the history of the Islamic movement. God called the day of Badr, "the day of the criterion, the day when the two armies met." (8:41) God also designated it as a demarcation point between believers and disbelievers, not only in this life but also in the Hereafter, "These two antagonists disputed with each other about their Lord. But those who deny (their Lord), for them will be cut out garments of fire, over their heads will be poured out boiling water melting their insides, as well as (their) skins. In addition, there will be maces of iron (to punish) them. Every time they wish to get away therefrom, from anguish, they will be forced back therein, and (it will be said), 'Taste the torment of burning.' God will admit those who believe and do righteous deeds, to gardens beneath which rivers flow. They shall be adorned therein with bracelets of gold and pearls; and their garments there will be of silk. For they have been guided (in this life) to the purest of speeches; they have been guided to the path of Him who is Worthy of (all) Praise." (22:19-24) It has been narrated that these verses came down to describe the two armies who met in the battle of Badr. These verses describe the end which each group will meet, not only in this life but also in the Hereafter.

We will be able to appreciate the dimensions of this battle only if we look at it from the perspective of the concept of striving (Jihad) in Islam. We need to understand that it was simply one of the links in the chain of striving in the way of God. We need to understand the reasons for and the objectives of striving in Islam. We will not be able to understand this, unless we understand the nature of the religion of Islam.

Imam Ibn El-Qaiem summarized the nature of striving in Islam in his book entitled (Zad El-Ma'ad), in a chapter entitled, "A chapter on the Prophet's (PBUH) model of behavior in dealing with the disbelievers and the hypocrites from the time he was sent until the time he died."

The first revelation he (Muhammad, PBUH) received from his Lord commanded him to read in the name of his Lord who created. This command proclaimed the beginning of his assignment as a prophet. This verse indicated that he was only commanded to read to himself, he was not commanded to deliver the message yet. Then the verse, "You, wrapped in your cloak, arise and give warning," (74:1-2) was revealed. God appointed him (Muhammad, PBUH) a prophet using the word, "Read," and God appointed him a messenger with the word, "You, wrapped in your cloak." God then gave him the command to warn. Muhammad (PBUH) was commanded to start with the call to his kinsfolk, then proceed to the surrounding Arab tribes, then to all Arabs, then to the rest of the world. He continued in the beginning to call people to Islam peacefully. He was commanded to persevere and forgive the persecution. Then, he was commanded to migrate to Medina and was given the permission to fight only those who fought him. Then he was commanded to fight the idolaters in Arabia so that the religion becomes pure to God.

The disbelievers were then divided into three categories: those who had a peace treaty with the Muslims, those who were at war with the Muslims, and those who were given a pledge to be protected by the Muslim state.

The Prophet (PBUH) was commanded to fulfill the conditions of the peace treaty that he concluded with the first category. He was asked to announce the annulment of the treaty, if he suspected treacherous behavior by the disbelievers. The Prophet (PBUH) was not allowed to start a fight until he had made his intentions public. He was also commanded to fight those who abrogate their peace treaty with the Muslims.

These rules were detailed in the Surat Al-Tawbah (Chapter 9). The Prophet (PBUH) was commanded to fight his enemies of the people of the Scripture until they surrender and pay the Poll tax or accept Islam. He was also commanded to strive against the disbelievers and the hypocrites and treat them harshly. He strove against the disbelievers with the sword and against the hypocrites with a clear convincing argument. He was commanded to abrogate the peace treaty with the disbelievers before fighting them.

The command classified those who had a peace treaty with the Muslims into three categories: a group who betrayed the treaty, a group who had a treaty valid for a specific period of time, and a group who did not have a treaty with Muslims but did not start any hostilities against them either. The Prophet (PBUH) was commanded to fight the first group, to fulfill the term of the treaty between him and the second group, and to give the third group an amnesty period of four months before he could fight them. Members of the third category accepted Islam at the end of the four months. The people of the Scripture accepted to pay the poll tax. Thus, people of the land became divided into three groups: Muslims, peaceful non-Muslims, and frightened enemy.

The Prophet (PBUH) was commanded to accept the hypocrites' statement of Islam at its face value, only God is privy to their intentions. He was commanded to strive against them using eloquent speeches, to turn away from them, and to treat them harshly. However, he was commanded not to perform funeral prayers for their dead, nor to seek forgiveness for them because even if he would ask God to forgive them, God will not forgive them. (Zad El-M'ad)

Those who try to apologize for the concept of striving in Islam do not understand the difference between two basic Islamic principles: let there be no compulsion in religion and fighting oppression which does not allow people the freedom of religion. Islam does not seek to change people's faith by force. Jihad has not been instituted to force people to accept Islam. But, it is the obligatory duty of Muslims to fight oppression, whether those who are oppressed are Muslims or non-Muslims. Freedom of faith is guaranteed to every human being. The principle of freedom of faith goes hand in hand with the concept of free will.

Islam came to announce the end of humankind's enslavement on earth by proclaiming God as the only one that deserves to be worshiped. This meant that Islam came to start a revolution against all forms of enslavement and oppression of people. It is a call to disinvest those who want to control others of their power. Systems which allow people to control their fellow human beings through manmade laws are systems which allow enslavement. These rulers have usurped the role of God. Islam came to abolish the kingdom of humankind and establish the kingdom of God. In Qur'anic terms, "It is He who is God in heaven and God on earth; and He is the Wise, the Omniscient." (43:84)

“The command is for none but God. He has commanded that you worship none but Him, that is the right religion...” (12:40) “Say, ‘People of the Scripture, come to common terms between us and you: that we worship none but God, that we associate no partners with Him; that we do not establish, from among ourselves, Lords and patrons other than God.’ If then they turn back, say, ‘Bear witness that we have submitted to God’s will.’” (3:64)

The kingdom of God does not mean accepting the rule of a theocratic government, but it means that the government should rule according to God’s law. Everything is referred to God for His ruling according to the law that He has decreed.

Establishing God’s kingdom on earth, removing the kingdom of humankind from power, and establishing God’s law as the law of the land will not happen peacefully. Those who are in power, who usurped God’s role, and who are controlling other human beings will not give up all of this voluntarily. This is the reality of life which this religion came to deal with. It was therefore, important that the “proclamation” should be supported by a “movement” to address the realities of human life on earth.

The proclamation confronted the prevailing ideologies, but the movement was confronted with material obstacles. The ruling power, the social system, and the established traditions are some of these obstacles. This religion was not only a message to the Arabs alone, nor did it come to free only Arabs, but it is a message for all humanity and it came to free all humankind on earth. God is not the Lord of the Arabs alone. God is not even the Lord of the Muslims only, but He is the Lord of the worlds. This religion wants to establish the fact that only God deserves to be worshiped. This frees people from being enslaved by other human beings. The major act of enslavement is embodied in ignoring God’s law and allowing manmade laws to govern people.

Al-Termidhi narrated, on the authority of ‘Adiey bin Hatem (RA) that ‘Adiey, who had previously converted to Christianity, fled to Syria upon receiving a call to Islam. His sister and a group of her people were captured by Muslims. The Prophet (PBUH) freed ‘Adiey’s sister and later she embraced Islam. She went to her brother and convinced him to adopt Islam, which he did. ‘Adiey (RA) then went to visit the Prophet (PBUH). Upon entering the Mosque to meet the Prophet (PBUH), he heard him reciting a verse, “They take their scholars and their monks as lords besides God,” (9:31). ‘Adiey (RA) said to the Prophet (PBUH), “They did not worship their scholars and monks.” The Prophet (PBUH) responded, “Did they (the scholars) not change what was rendered lawful (by God) to become unlawful and what was unlawful to become lawful and the people followed their ruling. This is the interpretation of the verse.”

The interpretation that the Prophet (PBUH) gave for this verse is unequivocal in rendering as disbelievers those who follow manmade laws which contravene God’s law.

It was therefore, imperative that Islam would take the necessary steps to change the reality of human life which runs against its proclamation. It was important to take the measures which allow all people to have access to the proclamation and allow them to choose freely. Islam came to free humankind from all forms of enslavement to anyone except God. Humankind should serve God only. The Islamic proclamation and movement aim at guaranteeing that each and every human being enjoys the right of the freedom of religion.

The battle of Badr was not the first battle between the Muslims and the idolaters of Mecca. This battle was preceded by a number of minor encounters between the two groups. Only one of these minor encounters involved real fighting. All these encounters followed the Islamic protocol for striving. It is true that all these encounters involved only the tribe of Quraish which expelled the Prophet (PBUH) and did not observe the sanctity of the Sacred Mosque, but the basic objective of striving in Islam is to free people from the persecution of tyrants and to establish their right to the freedom of religion. At that time, Quraish was the tyrant who persecuted people and deprived them the right to adopt the religion they choose.

Let us review briefly the events of the battle of Badr before we discuss the Sura so we can appreciate the ambience which surrounded the revelation of the verses of this Sura. This will help us understand the goals of the Sura. We can also comprehend the dual purpose of the verses: to describe the events as they were unfolding and to direct and guide the events as well. One cannot completely understand Qur'anic verses by studying the language in which they were written only but one needs also to live the history and understand the dynamics of the environment in which these verses were revealed. Understanding the context of the revelation provides a necessary ingredient to understand the intent of the verses.

Ibn Ishaq narrated that, “The Messenger of God (PBUH) came to know that Abu Sufian bin Harb was leading a group of about thirty to forty men bringing a big caravan with goods that belong to Quraish from Syria to Mecca. The Messenger (PBUH) arranged an expedition to capture the caravan. He said to his companions, ‘Go seek this caravan which carries goods for Quraish, it may be that God enables you to capture it as spoils of war.’ Some people obliged, while others were indolent because they understood that the command sounded like they have a choice to join the expedition or not.” Ibn El-Qaiem said, “The total number of those who participated in the battle of Badr was about three hundred and seventeen: eighty-six from the migrants, sixty-one from the tribe of Al-Aws, and hundred and seventy from the tribe of Al-Khazraj. The participants from the tribe of Al-Aws were less in number than the participants from the tribe of Al-Khazraj because the residence of the tribe of Al-Aws was far. However, the men from Al-Aws were stronger and more persistent in war than the men from the tribe of Al-Khazraj. The call to join the expedition was made in a hurry which left no time to prepare for people who wanted to join the expedition. The Prophet (PBUH) said, ‘Only those who have readily available mounts should follow us.’ When some asked for permission to go to bring their mounts, he did not give permission. So, the expedition was assembled in a hurry with very little preparation. The call came suddenly. It was God’s will to bring them together with their enemy without previous planning.”

Abu Sufian had his own intelligence apparatus who brought him news about the Muslims' campaign. When he came to know that Muhammad (PBUH) is preparing an expedition to attack his caravan, he employed a person by the name Damdam Al-Ghafary to go to Mecca to alert Quraish of the impending danger posed by the Muslims and to exhort them to form an army to defend their caravan.

Al-Maquerizi described in his book (Imta' Al-Asma', Bringing Pleasure to the Listeners) the reaction of Quraish to the news that Damdam brought. They were shocked to hear Damdam lamenting with a loud voice the lost caravan and warning the people of Quraish that they will lose all the money that they invested in the caravan if they do not hurry to defend it against Muhammad's expedition. A group of the chiefs of Quraish started a fund raising campaign to organize an army. They exhorted people to join the army to fight the "apostates" meaning the Muslims. Anyone who was not able or did not want to join the army supported another one to fight on his behalf. A'tikah bint Abd Al-Muttalib saw a dream which foretold a perilous encounter for Quraish. This dream discouraged many men to join the army. However, the chiefs were finally able to form an army of nine hundred and fifty fighters of those one hundred were well equipped knights. The army had seven hundred camels.

In the meantime, Abu Sufian decided to take a detour thus changing the caravan route to escape the Muslim's expedition. Abu Sufian diverted his caravan away from the traditional route that caravans between Syria and Mecca normally used. He took a route along the coast, thus avoiding the expedition and was able to escape with the caravan unhurt. Not aware of this development, the Quraishite army went towards the regular caravan route. They were met with Qais bin Imroi Al-Qais, who told them that the caravan was able to escape and they should go back to Mecca. He warned them that they may be slaughtered at the hands of the Yathribites (the people of Medina). However, Abu Jahl insisted that the army should continue until they reach Badr. He said, "By God, we will not go back until we reach Badr. We will stay for three days to celebrate, eat, drink, and listen to music and songs, so that the Arabs would fear us." When Qais went back to Abu Sufian to tell him about Abu Jahl's decision, he said, "My People, this is Abu Jahl's way of thinking. He did not want to return back because of his arrogance. Arrogance is a bad character and a bad omen. If Muhammad defeated our army we will be humiliated."

Ibn Ishaq mentioned that Al-Akhnas bin Shuraiq Al-Thaqafi said to Bani Zahra (he had an alliance with them), "Bani Zahara, God has saved your share of the goods. That was the objective for which you joined the Qurashite army. You do not need to fight so go back to your homes." The people from Bani Zahara heeded the advice and abandoned the army. Al-Maquerizi also mentioned that Taleb bin Abi Taleb was among the people who joined the army but decided to return back after he had heard that the caravan arrived Mecca safely.

Ibn Ishaq narrated that, "The Prophet (PBUH) and his companions left Medina some time during the month of Ramadan. They had a total of seventy camels so they used to have turns riding these camels. The Prophet (PBUH), Ali bin Abi Taleb and Marthad Al-

Ghanawi shared one camel; and Abu Bakr, Omar and Abd Al- Rahman bin Ao'uf shared another."

Al-Maquerizi mentioned that,

Upon arrival at the wells of Badr, the Messenger of God (PBUH) received the news of the Qurashite army. He asked his companions for advice. Abu Bakr (RA) gave an eloquent speech, then Umar (RA) gave an eloquent speech, he said, "Messenger of God, this is Quraish coming in its glory, by God they were never defeated before, by God, they never believed, and they will not capitulate easily. They will fight you so prepare yourself for a fierce fight." Al-Miqdad bin Amr (RA) said, "Messenger of God, go forward on the mission that has been decreed by God, we are with you. By God, we will never say to you what the children of Israel said to their prophet, 'Go, you and your Lord to fight, we are sitting right here.' But we are going to say, 'Go, you and your Lord to fight, we are going to fight alongside you.' By God, if you ask us to walk with you until you reach Berk Al-Ghamad (a place near Yemen) we would walk with you." The Messenger of God (PBUH) thanked him and asked again for advice. He wanted to know the stance of Al-Ansar (the original people of Medina). He did not know if they will join the fight because the terms of the agreement with Al-Ansar only stated their obligation to defend the Prophet and the Muslims if attacked within the boundaries of Medina. Sa'd bin Moa'z (RA) said, "I answer for the Ansar. Do you want us to join you in fighting Quraish?" The Messenger said, "Yes." Sa'd said, "It seems that the original purpose of the expedition has been changed by a revelation. We believed in you, we bore witness that what you brought is the truth, and we gave you our pledges to listen to you and to obey you. So, go forward to achieve the objective you aspire to attain. By God, who sent you with the truth, if you cross this sea we will cross it with you, no one will remain behind. Give your gift to whomever you wish, deprive from your gift whomever you wish, and take from our wealth whatever you desire. By God, we love to give you as a gift whatever wealth we have. I never came this road before, but we are not afraid to meet our enemy on the battle field tomorrow. You will find us perseverant in the battle and truthful in our words. I ask God to show you some of our deeds which will please you." When Sa'd finished his speech, the Messenger of God (PBUH) said, "Go with the blessing of God. God promised me one of the two groups. By God, I see now their images as they will meet their death in battle." The Muslims realized then that they will be fighting Quraish. The Messenger's words filled them with hope for victory. The Prophet (PBUH) gave the banners under which Muslims will fight to three people: Mosa'b bin O'mair (RA), Ali bin Abi Taleb (RA), and Sa'd bin Moa'z (RA). He then asked people to prepare their arms.

The Messenger (PBUH) and his army arrived at a well in the area of Badr closest to Medina on the evening of Friday, the seventeenth of Ramadan. The Messenger

(PBUH) sent Ali (RA), Al-Zubair (RA), and Sa'd bin Abi Waqas (RA) on a reconnaissance mission. He pointed to a small hill and said, "I hope you find news at that hill." They went there and found three young men from Quraish getting water for the army, they captured two of them and the third managed to escape. The man who fled went back to the Qurashite with the news that Muhammad's (PBUH) men took hold of the well. The two who were captured were taken back to the Prophet (PBUH). They told the Prophet (PBUH) that Quraish's army is camping behind the hill and their assignment was to bring water to army. He asked them how many camels they slaughter each day, they told him that one day they slaughter ten camels and the following day they slaughter nine camels. The Prophet (PBUH) said to his companions, "The army is between nine hundred and a thousand."

The Prophet (PBUH) then asked his companions about the best place for the army to camp. Al-Habab bin Al-Munzer bin Al-Jamooah (RA) said to the Prophet (PBUH), "Let us go to the well closest to the Qurashite army. I know a well full of sweet water, we can then camp in front of it. This way, our army will be able to access the water to drink but their army will not be able to reach any of the wells to get water to drink." The Prophet agreed and they camped at the place that Al-Habab (RA) suggested. Rain came down which solidified the ground on the side of the believers but the ground on the side of the disbelievers became slippery. The rain was a blessing for the believers and was a curse on the disbelievers. Then the believers experienced a state of slumber.

A tent was built as a command quarters for the Messenger (PBUH) and Sa's bin Mo'az (RA) stood guard in front of it. The Messenger (PBUH) surveyed the battle field, telling his companions the place where each one of the disbelievers will meet his death. The prophecies of the Messenger (PBUH) were all happened as in the exact way he mentioned. The Messenger (PBUH) organized the believers for the battle then went into his command quarters together with Abu Bakr (RA).

Ibn Ishaq said, "When the Messenger (PBUH) saw the Qurashite army standing at a nearby small hill, he prayed God saying, 'God, here it is Quraish coming with all its might and pride to fight You and to deny Your Messenger. God, I pray for the victory You have promised. God, smite them today.'"

Khofaf Al-Ghafary, seeing the Qurashite army passing by, gave them food. He also offered to join the army to fight the Muslims. The army chiefs thanked him and said, "If it is the people we are fighting, we are more powerful than them, but if it is God we are fighting – as Muhammad claims – no human power could fight God."

The Messenger (PBUH) allowed some men from Quraish to drink from his well. It was narrated that all of them perished in the battle afterwards except for Hakim bin Hezam (RA) who survived and accepted Islam.

It was also narrated by Ibn Ishaq that, “The Qurashites sent O’mair bin Wahb El-Jamhi on a reconnaissance mission. He reported, ‘The Muslims are around 300 men armed with swords. They are full of determination to win. Each one of them is determined to kill one of you before he would be killed.’ He then asked the chiefs of Quraish to contemplate what they want to do, having been warned that they will suffer major losses if they fight.”

When Hakim bin Hezam heard El-Jarhi’s report he tried to convince the chiefs of Quraish to rethink the situation and to refrain from fighting the Muslims. He was able to get some of the chiefs to side with him, however, Abu Jahl was able to stem the tide of dissent and to stay the course.

Ibn Ishaq narrated that, “Al-Aswad Al-Makhzoumi was an ill-mannered person, he swore to fight the Muslims until he is either killed or he would kill them and drank from the well they kept for themselves. Hamza bin Abd El-Muttalib (RA) killed Al-Aswad. Next came out ‘Otba bin Rabee’a, his brother Shaiba and his son Al-Waleed requesting a duel with three of the Muslims. Three young men from Al-Ansar came out to fight them. However, when ‘Otba realized that their opponents were from Al-Ansar, he cried out, ‘Although we respect you but we want to fight our equals from Quraish.’ The Messenger (PBUH) commanded ‘Obaida bin Al-Hareth (RA), Hamza bin Abd El-Muttalib(RA), and Ali bin Abi Taleb (RA) to fight them. The three Qurashite duelers were killed. O’baida (RA) was wounded so Hamza (RA) and Ali (RA) attacked his opponent and killed him.”

The two armies moved closer to each other, however, the Messenger (PBUH) commanded his companions not to engage the Qurashites until he commanded them to do so. He told them to defend themselves by throwing arrows at the Qurashites. He arranged the Muslim army in rows and went back together with Abu Bakr (RA) to his tent. The Messenger (PBUH) was engaged in an intense prayer to God for victory. He appealed to God saying, “God, if the Muslims were to be destroyed today, no one will remain to serve You.” Abu Bakr (RA) and Abd-Allah bin Rawaha (RA) were trying to comfort the Messenger (PBUH) but he continued to pray. The Messenger then came out of his tent and exhorted the Muslims to fight hard. He said, “I swear with Him who holds my soul in His hand, God will admit to paradise whoever perseveres in fighting the idolaters and dies moving forward on the battle field.” The Messenger (PBUH) then took a palm-full of dust and threw at the Qurashites saying, “God mar your faces.” The Muslims attacked and the Qurashites were defeated. Many of the idolaters were taken captives.

The Messenger then asked the fighters to bring back the spoils that they collected. An argument then ensued between those who fought and those who were protecting the Messenger (PBUH). This dispute was one of the topics dealt with in this Sura.

Ibn Ishaq said, “I have been told on the authority of Abd-El-Rahman bin Al-Hareth that ‘Obada bin El-Samet said, ‘Sura Al-Anfal dealt with the dispute that ensued among the companions who participated in the battle of Badr. We argued about how to distribute the spoils of war, so God took that right from us and gave it to the Messenger (PBUH). The Messenger (PBUH) gave each one of us an equal share.”

Ibn Ishaq also narrated, on the authority of Nabeeh bin Wahb (RA), that, “The Messenger (PBUH) distributed the captives among his companions and said, ‘Take good care of the captives.’ The companions obeyed the Messenger’s (PBUH) command and took good care of the captives to the extent that they would give them the best food they had.”

This is a summary of the events of the battle of Badr during which Surat Al-Anfal was revealed. The Sura described some of these events and illustrated the divine intervention which directed these events and made this battle a turning point in the history of humankind.

This battle was the first major battle between the Muslims and the idolaters of Mecca in which the Muslims had won a great victory over their enemy. However, initially the objective of the Muslims was not to engage in a battle with the idolaters. The initial objective was to capture Quraish’s caravan as a substitute for the wealth that they were forced to leave behind in Mecca when they were forced out of their homes and their families. However, God’s plan was different. God wanted this battle to be a turning point in the history of the struggle between the truth and falsehood. Muslims had been persecuted by the idolaters of Mecca, they were driven out of their homes and their country; their wealth was confiscated. The relationship between the idolaters (the tyrants) and the Muslims (victims) changed dramatically as a result of the victory in the battle of Badr. The battle taught the Muslims the practical application of the principle of putting their trust in God. They were taught that perseverance is an integral part of achieving success. They were taught that the divine plan eventually lead to victory even though conditions may be difficult in the beginning. The Sura also included guiding principles regarding the laws of peace and war, the distribution of the spoils of war, treating the captives, covenants and treaties, and the elements of victory and loss in war. The Sura also juxtaposed the living conditions of the Muslims before and after the battle and reminded the Muslims of the fulfillment of God’s promise which resulted in their victory.

Verses 1 - 29

1. They ask you (Prophet) about (the distribution of) the spoils of war. Say, “The decision concerning the distribution of the spoils is for God and the Messenger. So be conscious of God, and mend the relations between yourselves. Obey God and His Messenger, if you are true believers.”

2. The believers are those, whose hearts tremble with awe when God is mentioned, whose faith is strengthened when they hear His revelations are recited to them, and who put their trust in their Lord.

3. Who establish regular prayers and spend (freely) out of what We have bestowed on them.

4. Those are the true believers. For them are high levels of honor with their Lord, forgiveness, and generous provision.

5. Just as your Lord brought you out of your house in truth, even though a party among the believers disliked it;
6. Disputing with you concerning the truth after it was made manifest, as if they were being driven to death while they were looking on.
7. And when God promised you one of the two bands (of the enemy), that it should be yours. You wished that the unarmed one should be yours, but God willed to establish the truth according to His words and to cut off the roots of the disbelievers.
8. That He might establish the truth and abolish falsehood, even if the criminals disliked.
9. Remember when you sought the help of your Lord, and He answered you, "I will assist you with a thousand of the angels, following one another."
10. God made it a message of hope and a reassurance to your hearts. Victory comes only by the help of God. Certainly, God is Eminent, Wise.
11. Remember when He made the slumber fall on you as a reassurance from Him and sent down water from the sky to purify you, to remove from you the fear of Satan, to strengthen your hearts, and to firm (your) feet thereby.
12. Remember when your Lord inspired the angels (saying), "I am with you. Make those who believe stand firm. I will cast terror into the hearts of the disbelievers. Strike above their necks and smite of them every finger-tip."
13. That is because they opposed God and His Messenger. Whoever opposes God and His Messenger – indeed God is severe in punishment.
14. Thus (will it be said), "Taste you then of the (torment)." Certainly, for the disbelievers is the torment of the Fire.
15. Believers, when you meet the disbelievers in battle, never turn your backs to them.
16. Whoso on that day turns his back to them - unless it be in a stratagem of war, or to retreat to a troop (of his own) - he truly has incurred on himself the wrath of God, and his refuge is Hell – what an evil destination.
17. It is not you who slew them; it was God who slew them. And you did not throw when you threw, but it was God who threw, that He might test the believers by a gracious trial from Himself. Certainly, God is He All-Hearing, Omniscient.
18. That, and also (know) that indeed, God is He who weakens the plotting of the disbelievers.
19. (Disbelievers,) If you sought a judgment, now has the judgment come to you. If you desist (from wrong), it will be best for you, and if you return (to the attack), so shall We.

Not the least good will your forces be to you even if they were multiplied. Verily, God is with the believers.

20. Believers, obey God and His Messenger, and do not turn away from him when you hear him speak.

21. Do not be like those who say, "We hear," but they do not listen.

22. Indeed, the worst of beasts in the sight of God are the deaf, the dumb, and those who do not understand.

23. Had God known of any good in them He would have made them hear, but had He made them hear they would have turned away, averse.

24. Believers, respond to God and His Messenger, when he calls you to that which will give you life; and know that God comes in between a human being and his own heart, and that it is He to whom you shall (all) be gathered.

25. And fear a trial, which does not affect, in particular, only those of you who do wrong, and know that God is severe in punishment.

26. Remember when you were a small band, despised through the land, and afraid that people might extirpate you, how He sheltered you, strengthened you with His help, and provided you of the good things, that you might be thankful.

27. Believers, do not betray God and the Messenger, nor misappropriate knowingly things entrusted to you.

28. And know that your possessions and your progeny are but a trial; and that with God is immense reward.

29. Believers, if you remain conscious of God, He will grant you a criterion (to judge between right and wrong), absolve you of all your sins, and forgive you. God is the possessor of Great Bounty. (8:1-29)

"They ask you (Prophet) about (the distribution of) the spoils of war. Say, 'The decision concerning the distribution of the spoils is for God and the Messenger.' So be conscious of God, and mend the relations between yourselves. Obey God and His Messenger, if you are true believers. The believers are those, whose hearts tremble with awe when God is mentioned, whose faith is strengthened when they hear His revelations are recited to them, and who put their trust in their Lord. Who establish regular prayers and spend (freely) out of what We have bestowed on them. Those are the true believers. For them are high levels of honor with their Lord, forgiveness, and generous provision." El-Thawri narrated on the authority of Abi Saleh, that Ibn Abbas (RA) said, "On the day of Badr, the Messenger (PBUH) defined the reward for those who fought in the battle, each according to his achievement. Sa'd bin 'Obada (RA) objected saying to the Prophet (PBUH), 'If you give those who fought what you indicated, nothing will be left for those who stayed around you to protect you. We did not stay behind because we were not interested in earning a reward nor we were cowards. We were afraid that the enemy would come around from the back, so we stayed behind to protect you against enemy attacks.'” The two groups continued to argue together until these verses were revealed.

Imam Ahmed narrated on the authority of Moa'yeeah (RA), that Sa'd bin Abi Waqass (RA) said, “On the day of Badr my brother 'Umair (RA) was killed. I then fought Sa'eed bin Al-Ass and killed him and took his sword. I took the sword to the Prophet (PBUH) who commanded that I turn the sword to the collection of the spoils. I was devastated for the death of my brother and the confiscation of my gain. Very soon after this, the first verses of Surat Al-Anfal were revealed and the Prophet (PBUH) told me to go and get back the sword that I won in the battle.”

Imam Ahmed also narrated on the authority of Aswad bin 'Amer, that Sa'd bin Malek (RA) said to the Prophet (PBUH), “Messenger of God, I completed my fight safely today, so give me this sword (which I gained in my fight). The Messenger (PBUH) said, 'This sword is not yours and it is not mine so put it back with the rest of the spoils of war,' which I did. I then heard the Prophet (PBUH) saying that he received a revelation and I should go get the sword.”

All these stories describe the atmosphere which surrounded the revelation of this Sura. It may be shocking to read this story and realize how much those who fought the battle of Badr were obsessed by a strong interest in the gains from the battle. The army that fought this battle was comprised of those who migrated from Mecca leaving all their belongings behind their backs and fleeing with their faith and those who were the original inhabitants of Medina who gladly hosted their brethren who came to them from Mecca and gladly shared their wealth with them. Details of these stories shed some light on this strange phenomenon. According to the norms of the day, the allocation of the spoils of war should commensurate with the effort that a fighter expended in the battle. The share in the spoils of war was considered to be a measure of the valor of the fighter. It was a testament to the fighter's courage and effort. This testament had a special significance for the Muslims especially when it came from the Prophet (PBUH) himself. Their obsession with this achievement made them forget the noble characters that they were commanded to exercise towards each other. When the verses of Surat Al-Anfal were revealed, they were suddenly reminded with their transgression. The reminder came in two forms: a physical action and a long lecture. The action was taken by assigning the authority of the distribution of the spoils to the Prophet (PBUH). The lecture started by these verses and continued throughout the Sura to remind them of the behavior that went amiss.

The message to those who disputed about the distribution of the spoils of war, which woke them up, was a reminder of their duty to remain conscious of God. God knows best. The best way to divert the focus off the material gains is to remind people of a higher calling: their duty to remain conscious of God. God consciousness is the key to the hearts of the believers, “So be conscious of God, and mend the relations between yourselves.”

This message softened their hearts and reminded them with the duty to obey God and His Messenger.

The first step is to obey God's verdict regarding the distribution of the spoils of war. The spoils are not theirs. The spoils of war are the property of God and His Messenger. God and His Messenger have the right to dispose of it as they wish. Taking the right to dispose of the spoils off their hands removed the source of contention between them. Now they should go back and treat each other in a brotherly way as they used to do before this issue arose. The verse challenged the believers to listen and obey, "if you are true believers." Belief is not a lip service. Belief is an action. The Prophet (PBUH) has been quoted to have said, "Belief is not wishful thinking nor it is a superficial quality. Belief is something that rests deep in the heart and is reflected on the deed." The verses then continued to elaborate on the characteristics of the believers, "The believers are those, whose hearts tremble with awe when God is mentioned, whose faith is strengthened when they hear His revelations are recited to them, and who put their trust in their Lord. Who establish regular prayers and spend (freely) out of what We have bestowed on them. Those are the true believers. For them are high levels of honor with their Lord, forgiveness, and generous provision." The construction of the Qur'anic expression is very precise in its meaning. It indicates that the list of attributes mentioned in the verses constitute the characteristics which a believer should enjoy. Anyone who does not enjoy all these characteristics is not a believer. This meaning was emphasized by the sentence, "Those are the true believers." Pointing to the fact that one can be either a true believer or a disbeliever. There is nothing in between.

The believers' hearts tremble in awe when God's commands are mentioned. Remembering God's majesty and their own shortcomings are strong incentives for the believers to work hard seeking the pleasure of God. The believers' faith is strengthened when they listen to the verses of the Qur'an being recited. Qur'an finds its way to the hearts of the believers unobstructed to fill them with calmness and certitude. Disbelief forms a barrier that blocks the link through which Qur'an reaches the heart. The companions of the Prophet (PBUH) used to say, "We learnt how to believe before we learnt the Qur'an." Through their faith they were able to delve into the mystery of the Qur'an, sense its beauty, and taste its sweetness. That is how they were able to live according to the Qur'an. The sweet taste of the Qur'an was enhanced by the fact that they were able to translate faith into action guided by practical Qur'anic directives. It is no longer possible to experience the feelings of the first generation who witnessed the process of the revelation of the Qur'an. But every group of Muslims whose aim is to establish an Islamic way of life should be able to taste the sweetness of translating faith into action in the same way as the first generation.

Believers know how to put their trust in God, and never to associate anything with Him. Imam Ibn Kathir commented on this saying, "They have no hope in anyone but God. They seek help from no one but God. He is their only refuge. They ask no one but Him. They know that whatever He wills will be, and whatever He does not wish will not be. He is the absolute owner of the kingdom. He has no partners and His decrees cannot be appealed. He is swift in reckoning." Sa'id bin Jubair said, "Putting one's trust in God is the epitome of belief.” But trusting in God does not imply that a person does not do his/her best to achieve a result. Doing one’s best is a sign of the belief in God. God created the means to reach an end. Using the means that God created is an act of obedience to God. Once a person did his/her best by using the means that God created then he/she should trust God with the result. A believer should not think that the results are contingent only on the means. God decides the results and He is the one who created the means. He commanded us to use the means which He created and leave the attainment of the results for Him to decide. This frees the believer from being obsessed by the means and forgetting who created them.

Prayers are a visible expression of belief. Belief rests deep in the heart and should be reflected on the deeds of the believer; the first visible reflection is seen in establishing prayers. Establishing prayers means more than just performing prayers. Prayers are a communication between God and the believer. To establish prayers is to perform it in a way which reflects the sanctity of the meeting and makes it a testament of the belief in God.

Believers spend out of that which God gave them. The wealth is God’s wealth. God entrusted them with the wealth to be used in addressing their needs and to spend some of it in the sake of God.

These are the characteristics which identify the believers: the belief in the oneness of God, the continuous remembrance of God, the feeling of awe when listening to God’s verses, trusting in God, establishing prayers, and spending in God’s way. This list of characteristics is not exhaustive, other characteristics were mentioned in other places in the Qur’an, but these are the characteristics which are relevant to the situation addressed by these verses. The verses stated that those who do not enjoy these characteristics lost the sense of true belief.

The early Muslims realized that it is incumbent on the individual to seek and find the essence of true belief. Belief is not a proclamation, a lip service, nor wishful thinking. Al-Hafez El-Tabarani narrated on the authority of Abu Kareeb, that Al-Hareth bin Malek Al-Ansari (RA) said, “I came across the Messenger of God (PBUH) one morning, he asked me, ‘Hareth, how are you this morning?’ I answered, ‘I feel I am a true believer.’ The Messenger (PBUH) said, ‘Be careful of what you say. Each matter has an essence. What is the essence of your belief?’ I said, ‘I withdraw myself from this worldly life. I spend the night praying and the day fasting. It is as if I see the throne of my Lord, and as if I see the people of paradise enjoy their lives and the people of Hell suffering.’ The Messenger (PBUH) said, ‘Hareth, you have known the essence of belief, so keep it up.’ He said that three times.” Al-Hareth (RA) described his feelings and how these feelings drove him to act. His actions reflected his deep sense of belief.

“Just as your Lord brought you out of your house in truth, even though a party among the believers disliked it, disputing with you concerning the truth after it was made manifest, as if they were being driven to death while they were looking on. And when God promised you one of the two bands (of the enemy), that it should be yours. You wished that the unarmed one should be yours, but God willed to establish the truth according to His words and to cut off the roots of the disbelievers. That He might establish the truth and abolish falsehood, even if the criminals disliked.” We have reviewed the details of the battle of Badr and mentioned how Abu Bakr (RA) and ‘Umar (RA) gave good counsel to the Messenger (PBUH) when he asked for an advice whether to fight or not. Al-Miqdad bin ‘Amr (RA) said to the Messenger (PBUH), “Messenger of God, go forward to fulfill the command of your Lord. By God, we will not say to you as the children of Israel said to their prophet, ‘You and your Lord go and fight, we are going to wait right here.’ We will say to you, ‘You and your Lord go and fight, we are going with you.” When Sa’d bin Mo’az (RA) realized that the Prophet (PBUH) is waiting hear the opinion of Al-Ansar, he reassured the Prophet (PBUH) that Al-Ansar are with him. However, the opinions of Abu Bakr (RA), ‘Umar (RA), Al-Miqdad (RA), and Sa’d (RA) did not reflect the views of all Muslims in the army. Some Muslims objected to the decision to fight. They hated being dragged into a fight they did not prepare for. They came out after the caravan. When they realized that the caravan escaped and that Quraish has sent a huge army to fight them they hated the encounter, “as if they were being driven to a death they while they were looking on.”

Al-Hafez bin Mardaweeh narrated that Abi Ayoub Al-Ansari (RA) said, “While we were in Medina, the Messenger (PBUH) said, ‘I was told that Abu Sufian is leading a caravan for Quraish, would you like to go after it? God may enable you to win it.’ We agreed. We went after the caravan, however, after walking for about two days, the Messenger (PBUH) said, ‘The people (Quraish) were told about us, what you would say if we have to fight them?’ We said, ‘By God, we are no equal to them. We only came after the caravan.’ The Messenger (PBUH) repeated his question and we repeated the same answer. Al-Miqdad (RA) the said, ‘We will not say to you as the children of Israel said to their prophet, ‘You and your Lord go and fight, we are going to wait right here.’ We will say to you, ‘You and your Lord go and fight, we are going with you.’ We (Al-Ansar) wished that we said what Al-Miqdad (RA) had just said. This was when the verse, ‘Just as your Lord brought you out of your house in truth, even though a party among the believers disliked it.’”

This tradition describes what was going in the minds and hearts of some of the Muslims. They hated to fight as if, “they were being driven to death.” Even after the truth has been made manifest to them and they were promised victory over one of the two bands. However, it was clear that they had no choice but to fight after they came to know that the caravan was able to escape.

This illustrates the first reaction of human nature when faced with danger even for those who have a strong faith. It makes us aware of the frailness and vulnerability of human beings. We should be realistic in our expectations of people. However, we should not also despair of the ability of the believers to overcome such frailness and to regain their composure after the first shock. That was what the people of Badr did. They came together and won. They thus, deserved what the Prophet (PBUH) said about them, “It may be that God looked upon the people of Badr and said to them, ‘I have forgiven whatever you do.’”

They desired that the unarmed one should be theirs. But “God willed to establish the truth according to His words and to cut off the roots of the disbelievers.” God wanted that the encounter becomes an encounter between truth and falsehood. So that truth prevails and falsehood would be rooted out. God wanted the divine project to prevail over tyranny. This battle was a part of the process of the birth of the Muslim nation. After Badr, the Muslim nation stood on equal footing with the mighty Quraish. This could not have happened unless the Muslims won the battle of Badr. The Muslims needed this victory to prove to themselves that they are able to face a bigger power in the field and win the battle. The enemy needed this to realize that the few Muslims who fled Mecca escaping persecution are now a force to contend with.

In hindsight, this was by all means better for the Muslims than if they had been able to capture the caravan. Winning the caravan may have been a good project for the short term but winning the battle was much more impressive and effective in the long term.

“Remember when you sought the help of your Lord, and He answered you, ‘I will assist you with a thousand of the angels, following one another.’ God made it a message of hope, and a reassurance to your hearts. Victory comes only by the help of God. Certainly, God is Eminent, Wise. Remember when He made the slumber fall on you as a reassurance from Him and sent down water from the sky to purify you, to remove from you the fear of Satan, to strengthen your hearts, and to firm (your) feet thereby. Remember when your Lord inspired the angels (saying), ‘I am with you. Make those who believe stand firm. I will cast terror into the hearts of the disbelievers. Strike above their necks and smite of them every finger-tip.’ That is because they opposed God and His Messenger. Whoever opposes God and His Messenger – indeed God is severe in punishment. Thus (will it be said), ‘Taste you then of the (torment). Certainly, for the disbelievers is the torment of the Fire.’” Imam Ahmed narrated, on the authority of ‘Umar bin El-Khatib (RA), the story of God’s help. He said, “The Messenger (PBUH) looked at the battle field on the day of Badr. He estimated the number of the Muslims to be about three hundred and the number of the idolaters of Mecca to be more than one thousand. He then faced the Qibla and started praying. He said, ‘God, I ask you to fulfill the promise You made to me. God, if Your will is to destroy this band of Muslims, You will never be worshipped on earth again.’ He was so immersed in his prayer that he did not realize that his coat had slipped off his shoulders. Abu Bakr (RA) put the coat back on him and started comforting him saying, ‘Prophet of God, your Lord will fulfill His promise.’ This was when the verse, ‘Remember when you sought the help of your Lord, and He answered you, ‘I will assist you with a thousand of the angels, following one another,’ was revealed.”

There are many narrations that describe the details of how the angels fought alongside the believers. However, it suffices to take recourse to the verses of the Qur’an instead of citing unauthentic narrations dealing with the unseen. God responded favorably to the prayer of His Messenger. This was a glad tiding to reassure the believers. Although they were asked to do their best but they should know that victory is in the hand of God and is not contingent only on the means.

The slumber that fell on the believers before the start of the fight is an amazing psychological state that could not have happened except by the will of God. The believers panicked when they found out that they were fighting a much stronger and a better equipped army. Suddenly they were taken by slumber and when they woke up they were engulfed in a state of tranquility and serenity. The same experience was repeated in the battle of Uhud.

The story of the water, “and sent down water from the sky to purify you, to remove from you the fear of Satan, to strengthen your hearts, and to firm (your) feet thereby,” tells of another form of God’s support for the believers. This happened before the Muslims took their final camp site as suggested by Al-Habbab bin Al-Mundher (RA). It is known that when the Muslims reached the area of Badr (which had several wells), the Prophet (PBUH) commanded his companions to camp at the well closest to Medina. This left a number of wells between the Muslims and the idolaters of Mecca. Al-Habbab (RA) asked the Prophet (PBUH), “Messenger of God, were you commanded by God to camp here? Or is this your own choice?” The Messenger (PBUH) said, “It is not a command of God but it is my choice.” Al-Habbab (RA) said, “Then, this is not the best place to camp. Let us move forward to a place where we can have as many wells as we can behind us and we block the remaining wells between us and Quraish. This way, we can avail ourselves of the water and they would have no a source of water to drink.” The Messenger (PBUH) commanded the Muslims to set camp according to Al-Habbab’s (RA) advice.

The rain came down during the night before they changed their camp site. They needed the water to purify themselves for prayers and to make the ground firm under their feet. God supported them with spiritual as well as material help. Then came the help of the angels, “Remember when your Lord inspired the angels (saying), ‘I am with you. Make those who believe stand firm. I will cast terror into the hearts of the disbelievers. Strike above their necks and smite of them every finger-tip.’” It was a great experience, God told the angels, “I am with you.” We believe that angels exist but we do not know anything about them except what has been mentioned in the Qur’an about them. We know that they were commanded to fight alongside the believers and they did, because they do whatever God commands them to do. However, we do not know how they fought. God promised to cast fear in the hearts of the disbelievers and again we do not know how this happened.

“That is because they opposed God and His Messenger. Whoever opposes God and His Messenger – indeed God is severe in punishment. Thus (will it be said), ‘Taste you then of the (torment). Certainly, for the disbelievers is the torment of the Fire.’” It was not a coincidence that the believers won the battle and overcame the disbelievers by the support of God. The disbelievers chose to fight God and His Messenger, so they deserved to be punished. This is the rule.

“Believers, when you meet the disbelievers in battle, never turn your backs to them. Whoso on that day turns his back to them - unless it be in a stratagem of war, or to retreat to a troop (of his own) - he truly has incurred on himself the wrath of God, and his refuge is Hell - an evil destination.” This verse carried a dire warning for the believers. The believers are told to stand firm in the battle field and not to flee the field unless they were following a strategy that allowed them a better position to continue fighting. Those who flee the battle ground are doomed.

The scholars agreed that this is a general rule that applies to Muslim armies. Fleeing a battle field is one of the seven calamities. It was narrated by Al-Bukhary on the authority of Abu Hurriarah (RA) that the Messenger of God (PBUH) said, “Avoid the seven calamities.” When he was asked what are the seven calamities? he said, “Associating partners with God, sorcery, killing the soul that God has forbidden except for a legitimate reason, usury, devouring the wealth of an orphan, fleeing the battle field, slandering chaste believing women.”

A believing heart is a steadfast heart; it will not be overcome by any earthly power because it derives its strength from God. A believing heart may feel insecure when faced with an overwhelming crisis, but it recovers very quickly. Fleeing the battle field is not a thought that would be entertained by a believing heart because it knows that the time of death has been previously ordained by God. Fleeing the battle field will not change this fact. This is not an extraordinary burden for such a heart. When the believers face their enemy on the battle ground they know that they fight backed by the power of God which their enemy cannot avail themselves of. They know that they belong to God dead or alive.

The verses continued to warn the believers of the consequences of fleeing the battle field, and to explain God’s role in achieving victory, “It is not you who slew them; it was God who slew them. And you did not throw when you threw, but it was God who threw, that He might test the believers by a gracious trial from Himself. Certainly, God is All-Hearing, Omniscient.” It was God’s plan that the believers win this battle. The battle was a test for the believers to give them the chance to achieve God’s reward and blessing. God heard the believer’s call for help and He responded favorably to their call. He continued to bless them with His favor. God’s favor was not only meant to strengthen the believers but also to weaken their enemy, “That, and also (know) that indeed, God is who weakens the plotting of the disbelievers.”

“(Disbelievers,) if you sought a judgment, now has the judgment come to you. If you desist (from wrong), it will be best for you, and if you return (to the attack), so shall We. Not the least good will your forces be to you even if they were multiplied. Verily, God is with the believers.” The verse addressed the disbelievers denying them any hope that God would rule in their favor. God’s rule has already been decreed against the disbelievers who fought God and His Messenger. However, they were given a second chance, “If you desist (from wrong), it will be best for you,” But if they persist, then “Not the least good will your forces be to you even if they were multiplied.” God is with believers.

“Believers, obey God and His Messenger, and do not turn away from him when you hear him speak. Do not be like those who say, ‘We hear,’ but they do not listen. Indeed, the worst of beasts in the sight of God are the deaf, the dumb, and those who do not understand. Had God known of any good in them He would have made them hear, but had He made them hear they would have turned away, averse.” This was a command to the believers. They should obey God and His Messenger. They should not turn away from him when he recites God’s verses to them. The command comes at the end of the verses discussing the events of the battle. These events exhibited clearly to the believers God’s role in helping them. They were able secure victory only by the grace of God who supported them and weakened their enemy. There is no room now for any hesitation in expressing complete obedience to God and His Messenger. Only those who have no intellect and are unable to reason do not see the necessity of expressing obedience to God and His Messenger. Those who did not understand the lesson are similar to the beasts who do not think, hear, nor speak. God knew that such people are unable to reason and benefit of what they hear and see, “Had God known of any good in them He would have made them hear, but had He made them hear they would have turned away, averse.” They have corrupted the initial natural disposition that God gave them. They closed their hearts and prevented God’s guidance to reach them. Even if God made them to hear, they will not respond rightly to the commands.

“Believers, respond to God and His Messenger, when he calls you to that which will give you life; and know that God comes in between a man and his own heart, and that it is He to whom you shall (all) be gathered. And fear a trial, which does not affect, in particular, only those of you who do wrong, and know that God is severe in punishment. Remember when you were a small band, despised through the land, and afraid that people might extirpate you, how He sheltered, strengthened you with His help, and provided you of the good things, that you might be thankful.” The Messenger of God (PBUH) only calls the believers to that which will give them life. It is a call to a life full of meaning. He is calling them to a faith that gives life to the hearts and minds. It is a faith which frees the hearts and minds from beliefs based on superstition and ignorance, a faith that frees the human beings from being enslaved by anyone and anything except God. He is calling them to abide by God’s law which proclaims the freedom of all humankind and honors all humankind. It is a law under which all people are equal. No individual oppresses a people, no class oppresses a nation, no race oppresses another race, and no people oppress other people. Freedom and equality are guaranteed for all people.

The Messenger (PBUH) is calling to a way of life that guarantees freedom of thought and encourages the creativity of humankind. It frees the intellect of all shackles within the framework of the initial natural human disposition. This is a framework which God designed to protect wasting time and energy in useless pursuits.

The Messenger (PBUH) is calling the believers to be proud of their faith and their way of life and to feel secure by putting their trust in God. He is calling them to help all human beings in obtaining their freedom and in saving them from the tyranny of the tyrants. He is calling them to struggle in the way of God to establish His right to be worshipped on earth and to destroy all false deities. This is the call to life that the Messenger (PBUH) proclaimed to the believers.

“And know that God comes in between a human being and his own heart.” It is a frightening image which exhibits the dimensions of God’s power. God is able to control the heart of a person and do whatever He wants with it, while that person becomes helpless, unable to control his/her own heart. This is an image which impels the human being to be always alert to the feelings that fill his/her heart, fearing to entertain the slightest desire to slip away from God’s grace. This is a great danger. Even the infallible Messenger of God (PBUH) used to pray, “God, it is You who control the hearts, make my heart to be steadfast on Your way.” This is an image which shakes the heart of the believer, a shaking which would spread to engulf the whole body.

There is no escape from God, your hearts are under His control and you will be gathered to Him, “that it is He to Whom you shall (all) be gathered.” However, the call here is made to people who are free to choose. The consequences of denying the invitation and ignoring the call are explained, “And fear a trial, which does not affect, in particular, only those of you who do wrong, and know that God is severe in punishment.” The trial is a test. A nation which allows oppression in any form, does not stand up against the tyrants, and allows corruption is a nation which deserves to be punished as a whole. Islam encourages collective action against tyrants. It does not allow turning a blind eye to corruption and transgressions.

“Remember when you were a small band, despised through the land, and afraid that people might extirpate you, how He gave you refuge, strengthened you with His help, and provided you of the good things, that you might be thankful.” Remember this so that you realize that the Messenger (PBUH) is calling you to a good life. Remember this so that you do not shy away from standing up in face of corruption and oppression. Remember how weak you were before you were commanded to fight and how did you hate fighting the disbelievers, then you won and were honored and got your reward. God provided you with good things and gave you the opportunity to be grateful to Him so He would reward you again for being grateful.

The expression, “afraid that people might extirpate you,” paints an image for the believers as a small and weak group who were overcome with fear and apprehension, anticipating harm to befall them at the hands of their enemy. Then their lot changed and they became safe and secure, enjoying the newly acquired strength and good provision. The change happened when God, “gave you refuge, strengthened you with His help, and provided you of the good things, that you might be thankful.”

“Believers, do not betray God and the Messenger, nor misappropriate knowingly things entrusted to you. And know that your possessions and your progeny are but a trial; and that with God is immense reward.” To abdicate the responsibility that God commanded the Muslim nation to undertake is a betrayal of the covenant of God. The main objective of this religion is to establish the concept of the oneness of God. Muhammad's (PBUH) message is the way to establish this truth. The human race, over its long history, never doubted the existence of God. The problem was associating partners with God. Sometime people believed in other gods whom they worshipped, and very often they allowed other human beings to control their lives; they treated them as gods. The basic objective of this religion is to establish the concept of the oneness of God.

Abandoning this objective is construed as a betrayal of the believer's covenant with God. Muslims are warned not to betray God by abandoning their responsibility. The pledge that a Muslim undertook when he/she accepted Islam is not a lip service. Islam is not words and supplication to be recited without real conviction. It is a complete and comprehensive way of life. It is a way of life based on the belief in the oneness of God. The basic principles underlying this way of life include the right of God to be worshipped alone, the use God's law in shaping the laws which govern the society, resisting tyrants until they stop oppressing people, establishing justice in society on the basis of the rule of law, and establishing a flourishing civilization on earth. This is the mandate of a believer and whoever did not undertake this mandate has betrayed God's covenant which he/she pledged to observe. It is not easy to undertake such a responsibility. Undertaking such a responsibility requires perseverance and sacrifice. It requires perseverance and steadfastness in resisting the temptation posed by wealth and progeny, "And know that your possessions and your progeny are but a trial;" This Qur'an uses a style to address the human beings which is based on the knowledge of the Creator of His creatures. The Creator knows the deep secrets of the human soul and the inner thoughts of the human intellect. The Creator is aware of human weaknesses and He knows that the love of wealth and children is one of the weak points of the human being. The verse alludes to the fact that wealth and children are gifts from God. These are gifts that God bestowed on His servants to test them. Will they be grateful or will they be thankless? The trial can be effected with either abundance or scarcity, "and we test you with evil and with good as trial." (21:35)

Having alerted the believers to the impending test, God provides the support that can help them succeed in the test, "and that with God is immense reward."

The final message in this passage to the believers is to remain conscious of God, "Believers, if you remain conscious of God, He will grant you a criterion (to judge between right and wrong), absolve you of all your sins, and forgive you. God is the possessor of Great Bounty." This is the sustenance that the believers need to support them on the road. It is the provision that arouses the hearts from their sleep and provides beacons to guide them along the way. It is a fact that God consciousness provides the heart with the light (a criterion) that shows the road to the believer, but it is a fact that only those who experienced it know it.

The sound initial natural human disposition can easily discover the truth. The road to the truth is fogged by caprice and vain desires. One cannot overcome caprice by a logical argument. Only God consciousness can drive caprice away. This is how the heart acquires the light (criterion) which makes the heart able to differentiate between truth and falsehood. It is a priceless gift from God, “the possessor of Great bounty.”

Verses: 30 to 40

30. Remember how the disbelievers plotted against you, to take you captive, to slay you, or to evict you. They schemed and God also schemed. God is certainly the best of schemers.

31. When Our revelations are recited to them, they say, “We have heard this (before), we could say (words) like these, if we wanted to. This is nothing but ancient fables.”

32. Remember when they said, “God, if this is indeed the truth from You, then rain down on us a shower of stones from the sky, or send us a grievous torment.”

33. But God was not going to torment them while you were among them; nor was He going to torment them while they could seek forgiveness.

34. Why should God not torment them, when they bar people from the Sacred Mosque and they are not its guardians? Only those who are God conscious (deserve) to be its guardians; but most of them do not know.

35. Their prayer at the House (of God) is nothing but whistling and clapping of hands. So, taste the torment because you rejected faith.

36. The disbelievers spend their wealth to avert people from the path of God. They will continue to spend it; then it will be a source of intense regret for them and they will be conquered. The disbelievers will be gathered together to Hell.

37. In order that God may separate the wicked from the good and place the wicked, one on top of another, heaping them all together, and consign them to Hell. They will be the losers.

38. Say (Prophet) to the disbelievers, if they desist, that which is past will be forgiven them; but if they persist, then the precedent of those who went before them has already taken place.

39. And fight them on until there is no oppression and the religion is all for God. But if they cease, then God sees what they do.

40. If they turn away, be sure that God is your Patron. Excellent is the Patron and excellent is the Helper. (8:30-40)

“Remember how the disbelievers plotted against you, to take you captive, to slay you, or to evict you. They schemed and God also schemed. God is certainly the best of schemers.” The verse brings to mind the situation in Mecca just before Hijra (migration to Medina) took place. It carried a message of hope in the future. It was a reminder of God's infinite power and wisdom in planning. The Muslims who were listening to these verses as they were being revealed experienced the situations before and after Hijra. They were able to still remember the experience of living in Mecca, a life of insecurity, fear and apprehension. They could compare between the two states, as their situation changed from persecution to freedom, from fear to security, and from weakness to strength. The Qurashites were contemplating different schemes: do they tie the Messenger (PBUH) down and imprison him until he dies, do they kill him, or do they exile him to a place far away from Mecca? They finally decided that they should kill him. They selected a number of strong young men, one from each tribe, to form the assassination team. This team was assigned to kill Muhammad (PBUH) in one collective strike. This way the crime would fall on all the tribes. Banu Hashem would not be able to seek revenge, since they will not be able to fight all the tribes which participated in killing the Messenger (PBUH).

But, "They schemed and God also schemed." One can see with the eye of imagination the chiefs conspiring in their meeting completely unaware of God's plan which was designed to thwart their scheme. It is an ironic image but in the meantime, it is a fearful one. It is a reminder of the helplessness of the weak human beings in face of the overwhelming power of God.

"When Our revelations are recited to them, they say, 'We have heard this (before), we could say (words) like these, if we wanted to. This is nothing but ancient fables.'" Ibn Katheer mentioned in his interpretation of the Qur'an on the authority of Sa'eed bin Jubair (RA) and others that the person who said this was Al-Nadhr bin El-Hareth. He said, "Al-Nadhr went to Persia and studied the history of their pervious kings. When he came back to Mecca he used to watch the Messenger (PBUH) as he was reciting the Qur'an to people. Once the Messenger (PBUH) had finished his recitation, Al-Nadhr would sit in the same place and start reciting the fables that he learned in Persia. Then he would ask his listeners who do they think is a better story teller, he or Muhammad (PBUH)." Al-Nadhr was captured in the battle of Badr and was executed by the Muslims.

The Qur'an tells very often of how the disbelievers called the Qur'an "ancient fables." This was one of the tactics that they used to fight back the Qur'an. The Qur'an was successful in reaching and touching the initial natural human disposition. The message of the truth was delivered and received. The chiefs felt threatened and they were looking for tactics to bedevil the people. This was one of these tactics.

The verses continue to describe the amazing tenacity of the disbelievers in opposing the truth. Their arrogant defiance made them challenge God, "Remember when they said, 'God, if this is indeed the truth from You, then rain down on us a shower of stones from the sky, or send us a grievous torment.'" Instead of asking for guidance, they made this strange request. Those who have a sound initial natural disposition ask God to guide them to the truth. They would incline to the truth when they recognize it. But, the disbelievers in their arrogant refusal of the truth would rather be destroyed by a shower of stones from sky or punished by a grievous torment than to follow the truth brought by the Messenger (PBUH).

God's response was that even though they deserve whatever torment they wished for, God will not annihilate them with torment – as was done to peoples before them – as long as the Prophet (PBUH) continued to call them to guidance, since there was still a chance that they may turn around and seek forgiveness, “But God was not going to torment them while you were among them; nor was He going to torment them while they could seek forgiveness.” It is God's mercy that protected them from being destroyed as a result of their obstinacy which allowed them to bar Muslims from visiting and worshipping God in the Sacred Mosque, “Why should God not torment them, when they bar people from the Sacred Mosque and they are not its guardians? Only those who are God conscious (deserve) to be its guardians; but most of them do not know.” They claimed that they are the guardians of the Sacred Mosque and allowed themselves to bar Muslims from it, but they were neither the guardians of the Sacred Mosque nor they deserved to be. Even their prayers at the Mosque were a mockery and empty of respect to the Mosque, “Their prayer at the House (of God) is nothing but whistling and clapping of hands. So, taste the torment because you rejected faith.” They should then taste the torment if they do not desist.

“The disbelievers spend their wealth to avert people from the path of God. They will continue to spend it; then it will be a source of intense regret for them and they will be conquered. The disbelievers will be gathered together to Hell. In order that God may separate the wicked from the good and place the wicked, one on top of another, heaping them all together, and consign them to Hell. They will be the losers.”

This verse described the actions that the disbelievers embarked upon after their failure in the battle of Badr. Muhammad bin Ishaq narrated on the authority of El-Zuhary and others, they said, “When the remnants of the Quraishite army returned to Mecca after the battle of Badr a group of the disbelievers, which included of Abd-Allah bin Rabia'h, E'kremah bin Abi Jahl, and Safwan bin Omayah in addition to people whose fathers and sons were killed in the battle of Badr, went to Abi Sufian bin Harb who led the caravan to safety and asked him and the merchants who profited from this caravan to pledge some of their profits to prepare an army to attack the Muslims in revenge for the loss of their relatives who died in the battle of Badr.” This verse came down to warn the disbelievers that the money that they were collecting to prepare an army to attack the Muslims will only be a source of great grief for them. At the end, they will not only lose their wealth in this life but they will also end up in Hell fire in the Hereafter.

“Say (Prophet) to the disbelievers, if (now) they desist, that which is past will be forgiven them; but if they persist, then the precedent of those who went before them has already taken place. And fight them on until there is no oppression and the religion is all for God. But if they cease, then God sees what they do. If they refuse, be sure that God is your Patron –Excellent is the Patron and excellent is the Helper.” The Qur'an commanded the Prophet (PBUH), to tell the disbelievers that they were given a second chance. They were given a chance to stop their attacks on Muslims and to seek God's forgiveness. If they desist, then all previous mischief will be forgiven. But if they persist, then God's law will take its course.

The verse commanded the believers to fight the disbelievers, “And fight them on until there is no oppression and the religion is all for God. But if they cease, then God sees what they do. If they refuse, be sure that God is your Patron – Excellent is the Patron and excellent is the Helper.” The verse enunciates some of the rules of fighting in the way of God. However, these were not the final rules. These rules were supplemented with the rules given in Surat Al-Tawbah (Chapter 9). Islam is a dynamic movement. Its rules continuously evolve to be able to deal with the ever changing requirements of the situation. However, the rule enunciated in, “And fight them on until there is no oppression and the religion is all for God,” states a general rule that should be always applied in face of the ever present ignorant society. It is important to understand what is meant by, “the religion is all for God.” It means the removal of the physical barriers set up by the tyrants who want to oppress and enslave people. Without these barriers people will be able to choose freely what to believe in. This is the only way that the freedom of faith will be guaranteed.

Verses: 41 to 54

41. And know that one fifth of all the battle gains is for God, the Messenger, near relatives, orphans, the needy, and the wayfarer; if you believe in God and in that which We have sent down to Our servant on the day of the criterion, the day when the two armies met. God has power over all things.

42. When you were on the near bank (of the valley), and they were on the far side, and the caravan was below you. Even if you had made a mutual appointment to meet, you would certainly have failed in keeping the appointment. But (thus you met), that God might bring about something that has already been ordained; so that he who would perish might perish by a clear proof, and he who would live might live by a clear proof; and most surely God is All-Hearing, Omniscient.

43. Remember (Prophet) when God showed them to you in your dream as few; if He had shown them to you as many, you would have certainly faltered, and you would have certainly disputed the matter; but God saved (you). He knows well what is in the breasts.

44. And remember when you met, He showed them to you as few in your eyes, and He made you appear as contemptible in their eyes, so that God might accomplish a matter already destined. To God all things are brought back.

45. Believers, when you meet an army, stand firm, and remember God much; that you may succeed.

46. And obey God and His Messenger; and do not dispute one with another lest you lose heart and your power desert you; and persevere. God is with those who are perseverant.

47. And do not be like those who came forth from their homes boastfully and showing off to people, to hinder them from the path of God. God's knowledge encompasses all that they do.

48. Remember when Satan made their deeds seem fair to them, and said, "No one among people can overcome you this day, for I am your protector." But when the two armies came in sight of each other, he turned on his heels, and said, "I disassociate myself from you; I see what you do not see; I fear God. God is severe in punishment."

49. When the hypocrites and those in whose hearts is a disease say, "These were deluded by their religion." Whoso puts his trust in God, God is indeed Eminent, Wise.

50. If you could see, when the angels took the souls of the disbelievers, (how) they did smite their faces and their backs, (saying), "Taste the torment of the blazing Fire."

51. This is because of the deeds which your (own) hands sent forth; for God is never unjust to His servants.

52. They are like the people of Pharaoh and those before them. They rejected the revelations of God, and God seized them for their crimes. God is indeed Strong, and severe in punishment.

53. That is because God will never change the blessings which He has bestowed on a people until they change what is in themselves. Verily, God is All-Hearing, Omniscient.

54. In the same manner as Pharaoh's people and those before them; they rejected the revelations of their Lord, therefore We destroyed them on account of their sins and We drowned Pharaoh's people, and they were all wrongdoers. (8:41-54)

"And know that one fifth of all the battle gains is for God, the Messenger, near relatives, orphans, the needy, and the wayfarer; if you believe in God and in that which We have sent down to Our servant on the day of the criterion, the day when the two armies met. God has power over all things." There are many variant opinions in the books of jurisprudence regarding the definitions of the "battle gains" and the "Anfal," whether they are the same thing or not. There are also discussions on how to distribute the one fifth of the battle gains which is left for God, the Messenger, near relatives, orphans, the needy, and the wayfarer. We will not comment on the jurisprudence rules that can be derived from this verse and we will leave that to books on jurisprudence. In addition, the discussion of the battle gains is really an academic endeavor. The issue of battle gains is not an issue that touches upon the daily lives of Muslims. At the moment there is no Muslim nation in the world to which these rules would apply.

The general rule that the verse indicates is that battle gains are to be divided into five portions: four portions are divided among those who fought the battle, and the spending of the fifth portion is left to the discretion of God and His Messenger (PBUH). However, verse introduces the criteria which can be used to differentiate between believers and disbelievers. The verse bases the entitlement of the Muslims who fought in the battle of Badr to be described as “believers” on their acceptance of God’s ruling regarding the distribution of the battle gains. Thus, the condition for becoming a believer is to accept and apply the divine law. Disbelief is simply refusal to accept and apply the divine law.

The battle of Badr – the battle that was started, planned, and executed under divine guidance - was certainly a demarcation point and a milestone (a criterion) which differentiated the truth from falsehood. It provided a demarcation point between the truth - which is the basis of the creation of the heavens and earth, which supports the sound initial natural disposition of all living things, and which is the symbol of the oneness of God - and the falsehood supported by the tyrants.

It was a criterion which differentiated between truth represented by the belief in the absolute oneness of God and the falsehood which is represented by associating partners with God.

It was a milestone in the history of Islam. It separated two different eras in the history of the Islamic movement: the era of perseverance, preparation, and anticipation and the era of maturity, taking initiative, and forward motion. It was a milestone at which Islam assumed its identity as a new way of life, a new project for humankind, a new order for the society, and a new form for governing. This is a milestone which gave rise to a new Islamic perspective, the perspective of Islam as a universal proclamation for liberating the human being and destroying the tyrants.

The battle of Badr provided a change in the Islamic perspective on the kernels of victory and defeat. The battle between Quraish and the Muslims, started with Quraish having all the means of victory while the Muslims had all the reasons for defeat. This was reflected in the comments made by the hypocrites, who said, “These were deluded by their religion.” God wanted the first battle, between the few believers and the many disbelievers, to start this way to manifest the difference between two different perspectives on the kernels of victory and defeat. One perspective considers the strong faith as the kernel of victory, while the other considers the numbers of fighters and the magnitude of the equipment as the means to victory. This demonstrated to people that the ultimate victory belongs to strong and sound faith. The believers should not delay the engagement with the falsehood until they attain the same level of apparent material power as their enemy, because they have another power which will tip the balance in their favor. This statement is not merely words to be uttered but it is a fact that has been proven on the battle field.

There is also another dimension to the fact that the battle of Badr is considered a criterion between truth and falsehood. This was the dimension which was stated early in the Sura, “And when God promised you one of the two bands (of the enemy), that it should be yours. You wished that the unarmed one should be yours, but God willed to establish the truth according to His words and to cut off the roots of the disbelievers. That He might establish the truth and abolish falsehood, even if the criminals disliked.” The original objective of the Muslim expedition was to capture the caravan but God wanted them to fight the Quraishite army instead. The reason behind this change in objective is that this was the way to establish the truth and to eradicate the falsehood. This statement points out to a major fact: the truth could not be established by issuing a manifesto nor by stating a theoretical belief. Falsehood had to be eradicated before the truth could be established. The forces of the truth should overcome the forces of the falsehood on the battle ground. This religion uses a dynamic approach to deal with the realities of life.

The truth has been established and the falsehood has been eradicated on the battle ground. The actual victory was then the criterion which differentiated between the truth and falsehood. This is the criterion which the verses alluded to in its narrative. This the truth which was behind the will of God in bringing the Prophet (PBUH) with the truth to the battle ground, allowing the caravan to evade the pursuit of Muslims, and bringing the army of Quraish to fight the Muslims.

“When you were on the near bank (of the valley), and they were on the far side, and the caravan was below you. Even if you had made a mutual appointment to meet, you would certainly have failed in keeping the appointment. But (thus you met), that God might bring about something that has already been ordained; so that he who would perish might perish by clear proof, and he who would live might live by clear proof; and most surely God is All-Hearing, Omniscient. Remember (Prophet) when God showed them to you in your dream as few; if He had shown them to you as many, you would have certainly faltered, and you would have certainly disputed the matter; but God saved (you). He knows well what is in the breasts. And remember when you met, He showed them to you as few in your eyes, and He made you appear as contemptible in their eyes, so that God might accomplish a matter already destined. To God all things are brought back.” Reading these verses, one can see with the eyes of imagination the troops lined up against each other. One can sense the divine planning in the background, moving people around in a strategic way. The divine plan was to belittle the number in each group in the eyes of the other group. This was so that the Muslims would not be scared to fight a much larger army than theirs and the disbelievers would become lax in fighting what they think a much smaller army than theirs. The timing of the meeting was divinely ordained as well to achieve a pre-ordained decree, and the Muslims were the tool to make this achievement. What was it that God decreed? “So that he who would perish might perish by clear proof, and he who would live might live by clear proof.” The word “perish” could be construed to mean death or to mean disbelief. Similarly, the word “live” could be construed to mean the literal meaning of being alive or it can be used to indicate faith. It seems that in these verses the words perish and live are used to mean disbelief and belief, as they were used in the verse, “Is he who was dead then We raised him to life and made for him a light by which he walks among the people, like him whose likeness is that of one in utter darkness from which he can never come out?” (6:122) In this verse life and death were used to mean a state of belief and disbelief, respectively. The reason we choose this interpretation of the words “perish” and “live” here is that God called the battle of Badr the “Day of the Criterion” in which God differentiated between truth and falsehood. So, the choice of belief or disbelief would be based on a clear proof that would be gleaned from the battle.

The way the battle was conducted shows beyond a shadow of a doubt that the divine power was behind the planning and the execution of the battle. If the battle was left to human measures the Muslims would have never won. The disbelievers themselves said to their ally who offered to support them with fighters from his tribe, “If it is the people we are fighting, we are more powerful than them, but if it is God we are fighting – as Muhammad claims – no human power could fight God.” They soon realized that they were fighting God, as they were told by Prophet Muhammad (PBUH).

This is what comes to mind when one reads these verses, but there is also another meaning. A battle in which the army of the truth conquers the army of falsehood and establishes the truth in reality after it had been established in the believers’ consciousness is a means for opening up the eyes and minds of people to see the truth. This clarifies all misunderstandings and removes all doubts. It provides the people with a clear evidence to enable them to make their choice: to believe or not to believe. God is certainly, “All-Hearing, Omniscient.”

“Remember (Prophet) when God showed them to you in your dream as few; if He had shown them to you as many, you would have certainly faltered, and you would have certainly disputed the matter; but God saved (you). He knows well what is in the breasts.” It was the divine planning which made the Messenger (PBUH) see in his dream that the army of disbelievers is small in number. When he told the believers about his dream, they were reassured and were encouraged to fight. In this verse, God told His Prophet (PBUH) that this was deliberate because had the believers known of the true size of the army of the disbelievers they would have been discouraged and they would have faltered. This would have had catastrophic consequences but, “God saved (you). He knows well what is in the breasts.”

The dream was not a lie, because even if they were large in number they were few in effectiveness. This was the true message that was delivered in the dream: the disbelievers are weak and can be easily conquered by the believers. When the two armies met, the same message was delivered to the fighting armies. This was the divine plan to get the two sides to fight.

“Believers, when you meet an army, hold firm, and remember God much; that you may succeed. And obey God and His Messenger; and do not dispute one with another lest you lose heart and your power desert you; and persevere. God is with those who are perseverant. And do not be like those who came forth from their homes boastfully and showing off to people, to hinder them from the path of God. God’s knowledge encompasses all that they do.” These are the true kernels of victory: to persevere and to be steadfast in facing the enemy, to continuously remember God, to obey God and His Messenger, to avoid disputes, to persevere, and to avoid showing off.

Being perseverant and steadfast is the first step towards victory. The army who is perseverant and steadfast is the army who will win the battle. The believers should know that their enemy suffers as much as they suffer but they do not have hope in God as the believers have. The disbelievers do not get the divine support that the believers get. If they persevere for another moment, their enemy will crumble. Is there anything that can shake the ground under the feet of the believers when they are certain they will get one of the two excellent results: martyrdom or victory?

Remembrance of God at the time of battle provides the believer with constant guidance and continuous training. Obedience to God and His Messenger guarantees that the believers engage in the battle with hearts submitting to the will of God. This will eliminate any tendency for disputes to arise. Disputes arise when orders emanate from multiple sources. Submitting to God and His Messenger eliminates personal whims and desires. Disputes do not arise because there are different points of view but they arise when personal whims and desires take control and prevent objective dialogue from taking place. Any army should exercise a great deal of discipline hence the requirement to obey God and His Messenger (PBUH).

The last piece of instruction was to avoid arrogance and showing off. The believers fight for the sake of God. They fight to destroy the tyrants and establish God's right to be worshipped alone. The believers fight to proclaim the liberation of the human being and free humankind from the shackles of all types of slavery. They fight to protect people against oppression. They do not fight to control people or for the mere love of aggression against people. The believers do not fight for any worldly gain.

It was Quraish who came out to fight in arrogance as was demonstrated by Abu Jahl who refused to go back to Mecca after he was told that the caravan escaped and that there were no longer reasons for fighting. He was adamant to engage in a battle with the Muslims. He said, “By God, we will not go back to Mecca. We will go and camp at Badr for three days. We will slaughter animals, eat, drink, and listen to music. This way the Arabs would continue to fear us.” When the messenger, whom Abu Sufian sent to tell Abu Jahl that the caravan escaped and that there is no longer a need to fight, came back with Abu Jahl's answer Abu Sufian said, “This is characteristic of Abu Jahl, he hated to change his mind because he was a tyrant. Tyranny is a bad trait and a bad omen. If Muhammad wins, we will be ever humiliated.” It did happen and Muhammad (PBUH) won and the disbelievers were humiliated. God is aware of what they do, “God's knowledge encompasses all that they do.”

“Remember when Satan made their deeds seem fair to them, and said, ‘No one among people can overcome you this day, for I am your protector.’ But when the two armies came in sight of each other, he turned on his heels, and said, ‘I disassociate myself from you; I see what you do not see; I fear God. God is severe in punishment.’” The verse states that Satan enticed the disbelievers to think that what they were doing was the right thing. This enticement encouraged them to prepare for fighting the believers. However, when the fight was about to start, “he turned on his heels, and said, ‘I disassociate myself from you; I see what you do not see; I fear God. God is severe in punishment.” We accept the truth of this statement. However, we have no way of knowing how did this take place. I am not in agreement with the interpretations made by Sheikh Muhammad Abdu and Sheikh Rasheed Reda for this verse. They belong to a school which tries to find logical material explanations for events which belong to the unseen.

The hypocrites thought that the believers were doomed, “When the hypocrites and those in whose hearts is a disease say, ‘These were deluded by their religion.’ Whoso puts his trust in God, God is indeed Eminent, Wise.” The hypocrites were people who adopted Islam but their faith was weak. They joined the Muslim army reluctantly. When they saw the Qurashite army they thought that the Muslims had been deluded. The hypocrites and those in whose hearts is a disease had no insight to make them perceive the true kernels of victory and defeat. They were only able to judge on the basis of the superficial balance of material power. They were unable to understand how deep faith and strong trust in God could change this balance of power. Only believing hearts are able to perceive the complete set of forces that will decide the final result of war. These forces include both the material as well as the spiritual forces, because believing hearts realize that, “Whoso puts his trust in God, God is indeed Eminent, Wise.” The believers are always asked to include the effect of faith and creed in the balance of power and to see with the insight of a believer how this effect is able to change the balance. They were asked to use God’s light as their guide. They were asked not to fear the material power of the tyrants. God will always be there to support the believers who put their trust in Him, “Whoso puts his trust in God, God is indeed Eminent, Wise.”

“If you could see, when the angels take the souls of the disbelievers, (how) they did smite their faces and their backs, (saying), ‘Taste the torment of the blazing Fire.’ This is because of the deeds which your (own) hands sent forth; for God is never unjust to His servants.” It may be that these two verses were describing what happened to the disbelievers as they were dying in the battle of Badr. The verses could also be giving a description of what will happen to the disbelievers whenever and wherever they die. The expression, “If you could see,” is used to address anyone who could see. The verses paint a fearful image for the death of the disbelievers, having the souls taken away in humiliation. The Qur’anic style changed to a dialogue between the angels and the disbelievers. The angels will address the disbelievers as if they were present, “Taste the torment of the blazing Fire.” You have not been wronged; you only reap the result of what you had done.

These verses give rise to a question: do the disbelievers suffer the torment of the blazing fire immediately after they die, or will it be postponed till the Day of Judgment? Both explanations are equally probable. This is one of the matters of the unseen. Only God has knowledge of the answer. We are obliged to believe in the certainty of its occurrence.

The verses continued to relate the response of the disbelievers to other disbelievers, “They are like the people of Pharaoh and those before them. They rejected the revelations of God, and God seized them for their crimes. God is indeed Strong and severe in punishment.” All people are judged according to the same divine standard, whatever happened to the disbelievers in the battle of Badr did happen to other disbelievers before them, like the people of Pharaoh, “They rejected the revelations of God, and God seized them for their crimes. God is indeed Strong and severe in punishment.” God bestowed upon them his blessings, gave them abundant provisions, and appointed them kings and rulers. This was a test to see whether they would be grateful or thankless. But they were thankless and they became tyrants, oppressing people and spreading injustice. They rejected God’s revelations. So, they deserved to be punished. “That is because God will never change the blessings which He has bestowed on a people until they change what is in themselves. Verily God is All-Hearing, Omniscient.” They were destroyed when they rejected the revelations. God could have destroyed them even before they were given the revelations, but the divine law is, “nor do We punish until We had sent a Messenger (to give warning).”

We need to stop here for a moment and discuss this verse, “God will never change the grace which He has bestowed on a people until they change what is in themselves.” It outlines God’s justice in holding people to account. He would not take away a blessing that He had previously bestowed on them unless they change their intentions, behavior, and where they stand. When they fail the test and declare their ingratitude then they deserve to be deprived of the blessings of God. The verse also indicates that the destiny that has been pre-ordained is linked to human behavior. This destiny will not take place until the human behave in a certain way that makes him/her deserve the pre-ordained destiny. This is in a way an honor that God bestowed on humankind. It is the responsibility of humankind to appreciate this honor and to strive to earn the blessings of God by showing gratitude to Him.

This major truth represents one of the dimensions of the Islamic perspective of the nature of humankind, the relationship between humankind and the will of God, and the relationship between humankind and the universe. It is clear from this verse that God values humankind. It also becomes clear that humankind has a role in shaping his/her own destiny as well as what is happening around them. The intentions, actions, and behavior of humankind are effective tools in shaping his own destiny – with the will of God and according to His pre-ordained destiny. God honored humankind by bestowing on them this effective role in contrast to the negative role that humankind is thought to play in the materialistic approach to life. In the materialistic approach, humankind is hopelessly lost in the dialectic materialism.

This truth also establishes the principle that the recompense is always commensurate with the deeds which is a sign of the divine justice, “God is never unjust to His servants.”

“In the same manner as Pharaoh’s people and those before them; they rejected the revelations of their Lord, therefore We destroyed them on account of their sins and We drowned Pharaoh’s people, and they were all wrongdoers.” Praise be God the Lord of the worlds.

Verses: 55 to 75

55. The worst of creatures in the sight of God are those who reject Him. They will not believe.

56. The ones with whom you made a covenant, but they break their covenant every time, and they are not conscious of God.

57. Therefore, if you gain dominance over them in war, then disperse those who are behind them ((by making them an example), that they may be mindful.

58. If you (have a reason to) fear treachery from a group, throw back (their covenant) to them, (so as to be) on equal terms. Indeed, God does not love the treacherous.

59. Let not the disbelievers think that they have won. They will never escape.

60. Prepare for them all you can muster of (armed) force and of horses tethered, that thereby you may terrify the enemy of God and your enemy, and others beside them whom you do not know. God knows them. Whatsoever you spend in the way of God it will be repaid to you in full, and you will not be wronged.

61. But if they incline to peace, incline you also to it, and put your trust in God. He is the All-Hearing, the Omniscient.

62. And if they intend to deceive you, verily God is sufficient for you. It is He who strengthened you with His help and with the believers.

63. And (moreover) He has put affection between their hearts. If you had spent all that is in the earth you could not have put affection between their hearts, but God has done it. He is Eminent, Wise.

64. Prophet, God is Sufficient for you and those who follow you of the believers.

65. Prophet, exhort the believers to fight. If there be of you twenty perseverant they shall overcome two hundred and if there be of you a hundred (perseverant) they shall overcome a thousand of those who disbelieved, because they (the disbelievers) are people who do not understand.

66. Now has God lightened your burden, for He knows that there is weakness in you. So, if there be of you a hundred perseverant they shall overcome two hundred, and if there be of you a thousand (perseverant) they shall overcome two thousand by God's permission. God is with the perseverant.

67. It is not fitting for a prophet that he should have prisoners of war until he has thoroughly subdued the land. You desire the temporal goods of this world; but God desires the Hereafter. And God is Eminent, Wise.

68. Had it not been previously ordained by God, an awful torment would have befallen you for the (ransom) that you took.

69. Now enjoy what you have won, as lawful and good, and remain conscious of God. God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.

70. Prophet, say to those captives who are in your hands, "If God knows any good in your hearts, He will give you something better than what has been taken from you, and He will forgive you. God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy."

71. And if they intend to betray you, indeed, they have betrayed God before, but He gave (you) power over them. God is Omniscient Wise.

72. Those who believed, and emigrated, and strove with their wealth and their lives in the cause of God, as well as those who sheltered and aided, these are (all) friends and protectors, one of another. As to those who believed but did not emigrate, you owe no duty of protection to them until they emigrate; but if they seek your aid in religion, it is your duty to help them, except against a people with whom you have a treaty of mutual alliance. Indeed, God is All-Seeing of what you do.

73. And those who disbelieve are protectors one of another - If you do not do the same, there will be persecution in the land, and great corruption.

74. Those who believed, and emigrated, and strove in the cause of God as well as those who sheltered and aided, these are the true believers. For them, is forgiveness of sins and a provision most generous.

75. And those who afterwards believed and emigrated and strove along with you, they are of you; and those of (blood) relationship are more entitled (to inheritance) in God's Book. God knows of all things. (8:55-75)

*"The worst of creatures in the sight of God are those who reject Him. They will not believe. The ones with whom you made a covenant, but they break their covenant every time, and they are not conscious of God. These verses address a situation that faced the fledgling Muslim community in Medina. They established the rules which delineate the dealings with external states and organizations. The rules organize the relationships between the Muslim states and other states. These rules continue to apply. Verses in Surat Al-Tawba (Chapter 9) came later on to amend these rules and to state the details of the final protocol for war and peace between Muslims and other states.

The rules stated that the Muslim state can have peace agreements with other non-Muslim states. The Muslim state should respect these agreements and take them very seriously. However, if it came to be known that the other state is using such an agreement to camouflage their aggressive intent and is actively involved in the preparation for war against the Muslims, then the Muslims should announce the annulment of the agreement. The Muslims then are able to respond to the aggression posed by its enemy in whatever way they feel appropriate. The Muslim state should retain its peaceful relationship with those who choose to have peaceful relationships with the Muslims. This is obviously, a reasonable and realistic approach to international relations.

“The worst of creatures in the sight of God are those who reject Him. They will not believe. The ones with whom you made a covenant, but they break their covenant every time, and they are not conscious of God.” The word “creature” which is used in this verse includes any creature that walks on earth. However, the use of this word in reference to a human being is an aspersion. It denigrates those who are in a state of mind which not only prevents them from accepting the truth but it does not allow them also to honor their agreements. They keep reneging on their agreements over and over again.

There are several narratives which identify those whom the verse is referring to. One narrative indicated that the verse refers to one of the Jewish tribes of Medina. Another narrative stated that the verse refers to Arab tribes living near Medina. Regardless of to whom the reference was made, the verse delineated general rules to be followed in similar situations.

Those who rejected faith and were obstinate in their rejection, corrupted the initial natural human disposition that God gave them. Having lost aspects of their human nature, they resist any binding constraints which usually come with an agreement, just like beasts who roam around freely resisting any constraints. They are even worse than beasts, because beasts are controlled by their own initial natural disposition while these human beings have broken every constraint.

These people could not be trusted. Their just recompense is to take away from them the security that they took away from others, “Therefore if you gain dominance over them in war, then disperse those who are behind them (by making an example of them), that they may be mindful.” It is a strange expression. It paints a picture of overwhelming fear which acts as a deterrent to those who are contemplating aggression but have not yet started to rethink their plans against the Muslims.

This is the nature of the divine project which needs to be instilled in the hearts of the Muslims. This religion should be strong and it should be respected so that it will be able to destroy the tyrants who fight it and try to stop its movement to free people on earth.

This is the first rule regarding those who breach their peace agreement with the Muslims. The second rule deals with the case when the Muslims anticipate treacherous behavior from a party that has a peace agreement with them, “If you (have a reason to) fear treachery from a group, throw back (their covenant) to them, (so as to be) on equal terms. Indeed, God does not love the treacherous.” Muslims should honor their pledges and agreements. If there is a threat that the people, with whom a peace agreement has been ratified, would breach their agreement then Muslims should take a proactive step and proclaim the annulment of the agreement. This is the honorable way to deal with an enemy in such a situation. Muslims should behave in an honorable manner even when dealing with a treacherous enemy. Declaring the agreement null and void brings the conflict to light instead of scheming in the dark. Muslims should not launch a surprise attack against an enemy, with whom they had a peace agreement, before they announce that the agreement has become null and void.

Islam promotes high ethical behavior. Islam does not permit treachery and treason. Islam does not approve of the principle that the results justify the means. Muslims should uphold these principles because, “God does not love the treacherous.”

We have to put these laws and rules in perspective. These rules were being established at a time when people fighting each other were required only to observe one law: the law of the jungle. Islam introduced the concept and rules of a just war while Europe was still immersed in its medieval traditions.

Qur’an then assured the Muslims and promised them a victory over their disbelieving enemy, “Let not the disbelievers think that they have won. They will never escape.” Betrayal and treachery will not avail them victory nor will they be able to escape. God will support the believers and will not acquit the treacherous. The disbelievers will never be able to frustrate God and they will never be able to frustrate the believers because God is on the side of the believers. Those who behave ethically will always win over the unethical, as long as they are sincerely devoted to God.

Islam, however, commands its followers to use all possible material tools necessary for the achievement of victory. This is the solid ground that the Muslims should stand on before high expectations in victory are granted by God, “Prepare for them all you can muster of (armed) force and of horses tethered, that thereby you may terrify the enemy of God and your enemy, and others beside them whom you do not know. God knows them. Whatsoever you spend in the way of God it will be repaid to you in full, and you will not be wronged.” The obligation to prepare all material means necessary for the achievement of victory is part of the obligation to fight in the way of God. The verse commands the believers to amass all sorts of material means that can make them superior over their enemy in the battle field. The verse mentions horses because they were the familiar war equipment at that time. However, the general statement, “Prepare for them all you can muster of (armed) force,” encompasses all sorts of war equipment.

Islam needed force and power to free people from the tyranny of the tyrant. This power provides security to the believers and allows them to practice their faith freely without being subjected to oppression or persecution. It deters any attempt of the enemy of Islam to attack the Muslim state. It fills the hearts of the enemy of Islam with fear so they would not entertain any notion of standing in the way of the spread of Islam. Power is also necessary to destroy the tyrants who assume godship, do not acknowledge the supremacy of God, and force human beings to follow their self-made rules.

Let us explore the limits of the command, “Prepare for them all you can muster of (armed) force.” The command implies that all means should be explored and prepared. Muslims should not ignore any means within their reach. The first objective of this command is to, “terrify the enemy of God and your enemy, and others beside them whom you do not know. God knows them.” This preparation needs money. Therefore, the command for fighting in the way of God has been conjoined with the command to spend in the way of God. This spending should be made with the sole intention of seeking the pleasure of God. This removes any doubt that Islam engages in wars which aim at achieving any worldly gains. Islam does not condone wars which are waged by a nation to exploit people, to open markets for its products, to conquer and humiliate other nations, or to establish the supremacy of its race or ethnicity. God does not want a nation, a race, a class, or a people to rule over another nation or a people. God wants to establish the supremacy of His law. God does not need people to worship Him, but the supremacy of His law paves the road for happiness, freedom, and dignity for all people on earth.

The third rule that these verses indicate is the rule regarding how to deal with those who want to establish peaceful relations with the Muslim camp, “But if they incline to peace, incline you also to it, and put your trust in God. He is All-Hearing, Omniscient.” The term used to describe this interest in peace is a gentle expression: if they incline to peace. It paints an image of the elegant motion of a wing which points nicely to the objective of establishing peace. The command to Muslims to incline to peace is conjoint with command to put their trust in God. He hears everything and knows all secrets. Putting their trust in God provides a safety net for the believers.

“And if they intend to deceive you, verily God is Sufficient for you. It is He who strengthened you with His help and with the believers. And (moreover) He has put affection between their hearts. If you had spent all that is in the earth you could not have put affection between their hearts, but God has done it. He is Eminent, Wise.” The Qur’an addressed the Prophet (PBUH) saying that, “God is Sufficient for you,” God supported you in achieving victory and He supported you by making the believers, who fulfilled their pledge to God, a force to reckon with. They were a disparate group but God united them together. This was the state of the Arabs before Islam. They were always fighting each other for one reason or another, but when they adopted Islam they became one brotherhood. This was a miracle. Only God was able to do it through the faith of Islam. The antagonists became friends. The Prophet (PBUH) has been reported to have said, “The status of some of God’s servants, who were neither prophets nor martyrs, will be the envy of the prophets and martyrs on the Day of Judgment.” The companions asked the Prophet (PBUH), “Will you tell us who these people are?” He said, “Those who love each other. They were motivated to share this love because they shared the spirit God. They were neither kin nor did they have business interests that brought them together. Their faces will have lights and they walk with this light. They will not fear when people will be frightened and they will not grieve when people are saddened.” The Prophet (PBUH) has also been quoted to have said, “When a Muslim takes the hand of his fellow Muslim to greet him when they meet, both their sins will fall off as the leaves fall off a tree on a windy fall day. God will forgive all their sins even if these sins were like the foam on sea surface.”

“Prophet, God is Sufficient for you and those who follow you of the believers. Prophet, exhort the believers to fight. If there be of you twenty perseverant they shall overcome two hundred, and if there be of you a hundred (perseverant) they shall overcome a thousand of those who disbelieved, because they (the disbelievers) are people who do not understand. Now has God lightened your burden, for He knows that there is weakness in you. So if there be of you a hundred perseverant they shall overcome two hundred, and if there be of you a thousand (perseverant) they shall overcome two thousand by God’s permission. God is with the perseverant.” These verses bring to mind the image of a tiny force represented by those who oppose God’s army standing in the face of the mighty power of God. Such trivial force stands no chance in front of the overwhelming power of God. The result is then easy to predict as reflected in, “Prophet, God is Sufficient for you and those who follow you of the believers.” Then a command which exhorts the believers to fight is issued, “Prophet, exhort the believers to fight.” They are on par with their enemy, even though they are much fewer in number, “If there be of you twenty perseverant they shall overcome two hundred, and if there be of you a hundred (perseverant) they shall overcome a thousand of those who disbelieved,” Why can they overcome a much bigger army, “because they (the disbelievers) are people who do not understand.” On the face of it, one may not be able to perceive that a relationship between understanding and winning a battle exists. However, the relationship between the two is real and strong. The believers understand their program, they understand the purpose of their lives, they understand the relationship between the true God and His servants, and they accept the supremacy of God. The believers understand that they are guided by God’s guidance, they are the vicegerents of God on earth and they are given the task of bringing guidance to people to take them from the realm of the worship of the creatures to the realm of worship of the Creator. They understand that their task is to establish a flourishing and sustainable life on earth, a life that is ruled with justice. They understand that their task is to establish the kingdom of God on earth, a kingdom based on justice. This understanding fills the hearts of the believers with light, confidence, strength, and certainty. It motivates them to fight their enemy who do not understand. The ratio one to ten is the standard for the measure of strength between the believers who do understand and the disbelievers who do not understand. For the weak among Muslims the ratio is reduced to one to two, “Now has God lightened your burden, for He knows that there is weakness in you. So if there be of you a hundred perseverant they shall overcome two hundred, and if there be of you a thousand (perseverant) they shall overcome two thousand by God's permission. God is with the perseverant."

"It is not fitting for a prophet that he should have prisoners of war until he has thoroughly subdued the land. You desire the temporal goods of this world; but God desires the Hereafter. And God is Eminent, Wise. Had it not been previously ordained by God, an awful torment would have befallen you for the (ransom) that you took. Now enjoy what you have won, as lawful and good, and remain conscious of God. God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy. Prophet, say to those captives who are in your hands, 'If God knows any good in your hearts, He will give you something better than what has been taken from you, and He will forgive you. God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.' And if they intend to betray you, indeed, they have betrayed God before, but He gave (you) power over them. God is Omniscient, Wise." Ibn Ishaq narrated in his account of the battle of Badr, "The Prophet (PBUH) was in his tent surveying the battle ground, while Sa'd bin Mo'az (RA) together with other companions were standing guard at the tent's door when the Muslim army overpowered the disbelievers and Muslims started taking the disbelievers captives. The Prophet (PBUH) sensed that Sa'd (RA) did not like what he saw. He asked Sa'd (RA), 'I can see in your face that you are not happy with what the Muslims are doing.' Sa'd (RA) said, 'Yes, by God, Messenger of God. This is our first battle with the disbelievers. We should have finished off the men instead of taking them captives.'"

Imam Ahmed narrated on the authority of Ali bin Hashem, that Anas (RA) said, "The Prophet (PBUH) asked his companions to advise him what to do with the men that were taken captives in the battle of Badr. 'Umar bin Al-Khattab (RA) said, 'Messenger of God, they should be executed.' The Prophet (PBUH) declined this advice and said, 'Not long ago, these people were your brethren. Today, God has given you power over them.' 'Umar (RA) repeated his suggestion again and the Prophet (PBUH) ignored it for the second time. Abu Bakr (RA) said, 'Messenger of God, I suggest that you forgive them and accept a ransom from each one of them.' The Prophet (PBUH) was pleased with this suggestion and freed the captives for a ransom. It was then that the verse, 'Had it not been previously ordained by God, an awful punishment would have befallen you for the (ransom) that you took.'"

Al-Aa'mash narrated on the authority of 'Umar bin Murrah that Abd-Allah (RA) said, "The Messenger of God (PBUH) asked his companions what to do with the enemy combatants who were taken as captives after the battle of Badr. Abu Bakr (RA) said, 'Messenger of God, these are your people and your family do not execute them and ask them to repent, may God accept their repentance.' 'Umar (RA) said, 'Messenger of God, these are people who denied you and exiled you, they deserve to be executed.' Abd-Allah bin Rawahah (RA) said, "Set up a big fire and throw them into it.' The Prophet (PBUH) did not comment and went into his tent. The Muslims were wondering which advice would the Prophet (PBUH) follow. When the Prophet (PBUH) came out of his tent, he said, 'God softens hearts of some men and their hearts become softer than milk; and God hardens hearts of others until their hearts become harder than a rock. Abu Bakr (RA) you follow the example of Prophet Abraham (PBUH) who said (to God), "Whoever followed me is from me and whoever disobeyed me, You are the All-Forgiving the Giver of Mercy," and the example of Prophet Jesus (PBUH) who said (to God), "If You torment them, they are your servants but if You forgive them, You are certainly the Eminent, Wise." 'Umar (RA) you follow the example of Prophet Moses (PBUH) who said (to God), "Our Lord, obliterate their wealth and harden their hearts so that they will not believe until they see the painful punishment," and the example of Prophet Noah (PBUH) who said (to God), "My Lord, do not leave upon earth from among the disbelievers an inhabitant." I say they either pay the ransom or would be killed.' Ibn Maso'od (RA) said, 'I said to the Messenger of God, "Messenger of God, make an exception for Suhail bin Baidaa because he accepted Islam." I was never so frightened in my life as I was frightened that day that stones would fall from the sky on top of my head (because I said this).' The Prophet (PBUH) said, 'with the exception of Suhail bin Baidaa.' Then the verse, 'It is not fitting for a prophet that he should have prisoners of war until he has thoroughly subdued the land,' was revealed." (This tradition was narrated by Imam Ahmed and Termidhi).

The verse reprimanded the Prophet (PBUH) and the Muslims for taking prisoners of war and freeing them later for a ransom, before making sure that the enemy has been completely subdued. Those prisoners of war who were freed will go back to join the ranks of the disbelievers' army and will continue to fight the Muslims. The battle of Badr was the first battle, in a long war, between the disbelievers and the believers. The believers were still very few in number. The freed prisoners of war would most certainly join the ranks of the disbelievers' army again to fight the believers. This puts the believers at a disadvantage because they were few in number in comparison with their enemy. Another principle may have been behind the reprimand that needed to be established. This is the principle which was outlined in 'Umar's (RA) statement, "So that God would know that we do not harbor any kind feelings towards the disbelievers."

God has forgiven the believers who fought in the battle of Badr and bestowed His grace upon them so He gave them the permission to enjoy the gains of the battle including the ransom they received. They were also reminded to remain conscious of God, "Now enjoy what you have won, as lawful and good, and remain conscious of God. God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy."

The verses made a proposition to the captives, a proposition that could have touched their hearts with kindness and filled them with light and hope. The proposition promised a future better than their past, a life more dignified than they had before, and a gain that would compensate what they had already lost, "Prophet, say to those captives who are in your hands, 'If God knows any good in your hearts, He will give you something better than what has been taken from you, and He will forgive you. God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.'"

This grace is contingent on the sincerity of their hearts. If their hearts are opened to receive the light of the truth, then God will bestow all His blessings on them. However, the promise of hope is followed by a warning, "And if they intend to betray you, indeed, they have betrayed God before, but He gave (you) power over them. God is Omniscient, Wise.”

They did betray God before because they associated partners with Him and did not take Him as their only Lord. This is a betrayal of the covenant that all human beings pledged to their Creator. They should remember that their betrayal to God was the cause of their captivity, and their punishment will be greater if they harbor an intention to betray the Messenger (PBUH). God knows what they harbor in themselves and He is Wise.

The Sura ends with a lesson about the nature of the bonds between people in a Muslim society and the rules and regulations that control these bonds. The relationships that bond Muslims together are not formed by blood relationships, patriotism, ethnicity, history, language, economic interests, or nationalism. The bond that binds Muslims together in one community is a bond that is rooted in sharing the same faith, the same leadership, and the membership in the same dynamic movement. Those who believed and migrated to the house of Hijra and Islam leaving behind all their belongings, their homes, their interests, and strived for the sake of God with their wealth and their lives; and those who joined them in the same faith, accepted them in their land, opened up their homes for them, supported them, and joined their movement are protectors of one another.

The Muslim community does not owe those who believed but did not migrate any obligation for protection. They believed but they did not completely devote themselves to the faith. They did not obey the leadership, nor did they follow the organization. These are the main principles that govern the relationship between Muslims as enunciated in the following verses, “Those who believed, and emigrated, and strove with their wealth and their lives in the cause of God, as well as those who gave (them) asylum and aid, these are (all) friends and protectors, one of another. As to those who believed but did not emigrate, you owe no duty of protection to them until they emigrate; but if they seek your aid in religion, it is your duty to help them, except against a people with whom you have a treaty of mutual alliance. And (remember) God sees all that you do. And those who disbelieve are protectors one of another - If you do not do the same, there will be persecution in the land, and great corruption. Those who believed, and emigrated, and strove in the cause of God as well as those who gave (them) asylum and aid, these are the true believers. For them, is forgiveness of sins and a provision most generous. And those who afterwards believed and emigrated and strove along with you, they are of you; and those of (blood) relationship are more entitled (to inheritance) in God’s Book. God knows of all things.”

The brotherhood pact that Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) established between the Muslims in the fledgling Muslim society at the time of Hijra and which continued till the time of the battle of Badr replaced the blood relationship that they acquired by birth. It implied that those who enter into a brotherhood pact can inherit, support, and be responsible for paying ransom money if required for each other. When the Muslim state was established and became recognized as a state after the battle of Badr the rights of inheritance attained by virtue of brotherhood pacts were revoked.

The verses refer to the migration from Mecca to Medina for those who were able to migrate but chose not to migrate. The Muslim state did not have any obligation to protect Muslims who were able to migrate but chose to stay in Mecca because they cared more for their interests or their families than for their faith. However, the Muslim state is obligated to help those Muslims, if they were persecuted because of their faith provided that those who persecuted them did not have a peace agreement with the Muslim state. A Muslim state should keep its word and should respect its agreements with others.

“Those who believed, and emigrated, and strove with their wealth and their lives in the cause of God, as well as those who sheltered and aided, these are (all) friends and protectors, one of another. As to those who believed but did not emigrate, you owe no duty of protection to them until they emigrate; but if they seek your aid in religion, it is your duty to help them, except against a people with whom you have a treaty of mutual alliance. And (remember) God sees all that you do. And those who disbelieve are protectors one of another - If you do not do the same, there will be persecution in the land, and great corruption.” Once a person made the proclamation that he/she bears witness that “there is no deity but God, and that Muhammad is His messenger,” the loyalty to a family, a nation, a people, or a tribe is replaced by the loyalty to the Messenger (PBUH). The Messenger (PBUH) brought these individuals together into the fold of a new fledgling community which persevered in the face of the persecution of the idolatrous tribal community. The common faith, which they strongly believed in, was the binding principle which brought all Muslims together into one community. When the Muslims migrated to Medina, the Prophet (PBUH) established the brotherhood pacts between the Muslims of Mecca and the Muslims of Medina.

“Those who believed, and emigrated, and strove in the cause of God as well as those who sheltered and aided, these are the true believers. For them, is forgiveness of sins and a provision most generous.” These are the true believers. Islam is not established by a mere oral announcement, a proclamation of faith, or even by performing its rituals. Islam is established by adopting it as a dynamic way of life for the community. Those who live according to the Islamic way of life are the true believers. God will provide for them generously. They will be compensated generously for the money that they spent in hosting the migrants and in preparing for the war.

Those who became believers afterwards, migrated, and strived in the way of God will be counted among the early believers, “And those who afterwards believed and emigrated and strove along with you, they are of you; and those of (blood) relationship are more entitled (to inheritance) in God’s Book. God knows of all things.”

The requirement for Hijra remained valid until the Muslims captured Mecca. After the opening of Mecca, the whole Arab land came under the control of Muslims and the need for Hijra ceased to exist.

The establishment of the state and the community in the early days of Islam required the use of certain rules to organize the relationships within the community and to meet the special requirements of the fledgling society. One of these rules was that brotherhood in faith took priority over blood relationship among family members, which was reflected in the laws of inheritance adopted after Hijra. After the battle of Badr temporary inheritance laws were revoked, “those of (blood) relationship are more entitled (to inheritance) in God’s Book.” This was a natural step after the community became well established and there was no need to institute special measures to meet the consequences of Hijra. “God knows of all things.”

Islam sought to bring people together around the solidarity in faith. This solidarity aimed at promoting the value of the human being. It is a solidarity based on free choice and not on compulsion. The human being is unable to change his/her sex, ethnic roots, or his/ her color of skin, but he/she is able to choose his/her faith. Ethnicity, language, and color of skin cannot be changed once the individual has been born, but a human being has the free will to adopt whatever faith he/she believes in. This concept dignifies the human being.

Sura 9: Al-Tawba (Repentance)

This Medinian Sura was one of the last few Suras of the Quran to be revealed. The first few verses of the Sura were revealed in the 9th. year after Hijra. The Prophet (PBUH) sent ‘Ali ibn Abi Taleb (RA) to recite in front of people during the season of Pilgrimage.

Most of its verses were revealed after the battle of Tabuk, which was the last battle that the Prophet (PBUH) participated in. The battle of Tabuk was conducted in the summer, when the weather was hot. The hypocrites used this as an excuse for not participating in the battle. The Sura stated the final version of the rulings which organize the relationship between the Islamic state and the international community. The Sura also included a classification of the Muslim community, a definition of its values, and ethics. It described the different groups that constituted this community. It described clearly the actual condition of the community and the conditions of each group and class in this community.

This Sura, unlike the other Suras in the Quran, does not start with the traditional opening of, “In the name of God, the Lord of Mercy, the Giver of Mercy.” It has been narrated that Ibn Abbas (RA) said, “I asked ‘Uthman bin A’fan, why did you join the two Suras Al-Infal and Al-Tawba without using the traditional ‘In the name of God, the Lord of Mercy, the Giver of Mercy,’ between the two Suras. ‘Uthman replied, ‘The Prophet (PBUH) used to tell his scribes where to place the different verses when they were revealed to him. Surat Al-Anfal was among the first Suras to be revealed in Medina while Surat Al-Tawba was among the last Suras to be revealed in Medina. Both these two Suras dealt with similar topics so, I thought they belonged together. The Prophet (PBUH) died before I was able to ask him about this. That is why I put them together without placing, ‘In the name of God, the Lord of Mercy the Giver of Mercy,’ between them as usual.” I included these two Suras among the seven long Suras.”

This narration provides a reasonable explanation for the absence of “In the name of God, the Lord of Mercy the Giver of Mercy,” in the beginning of this Sura. The narration emphasized that the order of the verses within each Sura, as well as the order of the Suras in the Quran, were dictated by the Prophet (PBUH) himself. This indicates that there is a rationale for the order of the verses within each Sura and for the order of the different Suras in the Quran.

Hawwa indicated that the Sura has three main divisions. The first consists of the first thirty-seven verses. The second division consists of the verses thirty-eight to verse one hundred and twenty-two. The third division consists of the verses one hundred and twenty-three to the end.

Verses: 1 to 28

1. Release from obligation (is proclaimed) from God and His messenger toward those of the idolaters with whom you made a treaty.
2. Travel freely in the land for four months, and know that you cannot escape God and that God will disgrace the disbelievers.

3. And a proclamation from God and His Messenger to all people on the day of the greater pilgrimage that God is dissociated from any connection to the idolaters, and (so is) His Messenger. So, if you repent, it will be better for you; but if you turn away, then know that you cannot escape God. Give tidings (Muhammad) of a painful torment to those who disbelieve.
4. Excepting those of the idolaters with whom you have a treaty, and who have honored the treaty you made with them and have not supported anyone against you. (As for these), fulfill your obligations of the treaty to them to the end of their term. God loves those who are conscious of Him.
5. Then, when the Sacred Months have passed, slay the idolaters wherever you find them, and take them (captive), and besiege them, and prepare for them each ambush. But if they repent and establish prayers and pay the poor-due, then let them travel freely on their way. God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.
6. If one of the idolaters should seek your protection (Muhammad), then grant him protection so that he may hear the Word of God, and afterward bring him to his place of safety. That is because they are a folk who do not know.
7. How can there be a treaty between God and His messenger and the idolaters, save those with whom you made a treaty at the Sacred Mosque? So long as they are true to you, be true to them. God loves those who remain conscious of Him.
8. How (can there be any treaty with the others) when, if they have the upper hand over you, they would not respect any tie with you of kinship or of treaty? They please you with their mouths while their hearts are averse to you. And most of them are transgressors.
9. They have sold God's revelation for a little gain, and barred others from His way. Surely, evil is that which they were doing.
10. They neither observe a tie of kinship nor a treaty with a believer. These are they who are aggressors.
11. But if they repent and establish prayer and pay the poor-due, then they are your brethren in faith. We detail Our revelations for a people who have knowledge.
12. But if they break their pledges after they have entered in a treaty with you, and defame your faith, then you should fight the chiefs of disbelief – oaths mean nothing to them – so that they may desist.
13. Will you not fight people who broke their oaths, plotted to expel the Messenger, and attacked you first? Do you fear them? It is God you should fear if you are believers.
14. Fight them, God will torment them by your hands, cover them with shame, help you to have victory over them, and heal the hearts of a believing people.
15. And He will remove the anger of their (the believers) hearts. God relents toward whom He wills. God is Omniscient, Wise.
16. Or do you think you shall be left alone while God has not yet made evident those of you who will strive hard and will not take any one besides God and His Messenger and the believers as intimates. God is Totally-Aware of what you do.
17. It is not for the idolaters to maintain God's mosques, bearing witness against themselves of disbelief. As for such, their deeds are in vain and in the Fire they will abide.
18. The mosques of God are only to be maintained by those who believe in God and the Last Day, establish regular prayers, pay the poor due, and fear none (at all) except God. It is they, who will be among the rightly guided.

19. Have you made providing drinking water to pilgrims, or maintaining the Sacred Mosque, equal to (the pious service of) those who believe in God and the Last Day, and strive with might in the cause of God? They are not equal in the sight of God. God certainly does not guide the wrongdoers.
20. Those who believe, emigrated, and strived with might in God's cause, with their wealth and their persons, have the highest rank in the sight of God. Those are the achievers (of triumph.)
21. Their Lord gives them glad tidings of mercy from Himself, His good pleasure, and gardens for them, wherein lasting bliss will be theirs.
22. They will dwell therein for ever. Verily, with God there is an immense reward.
23. You who believe, do not take your fathers and your brothers as protecting guardians if they prefer disbelief over faith. Whosoever of you do so, such are the wrongdoers.
24. Say (Prophet), "If your fathers, your sons, your brothers, your mates, or your kindred; the wealth that you have acquired; the trade in which you fear a decline; or the dwellings in which you delight are dearer to you than God, and His Messenger, and striving in His cause, then wait until God brings His command to pass." God does not guide the transgressors.
25. God has given you victory in many battlefields and on the day of Hunain, when you exulted in your great numbers, but they were of no use to you; and the earth, vast as it is, was straitened for you; then you turned back in flight.
26. Then God sent His tranquility down upon His Messenger and upon the believers, and sent down hosts you could not see, and tormented those who disbelieved. Such is the reward of the disbelievers.
27. Then afterward God will accept the repentance from whom He wills. God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.
28. You who believe, truly the idolaters are unclean. So let them not, after this year of theirs, approach the Sacred Mosque. And if you fear poverty, soon will God enrich you, if He wills, out of His bounty, for God is Omniscient, Wise. (9:1-28)

"Release from obligation (is proclaimed) from God and His messenger toward those of the idolaters with whom you made a treaty. Travel freely in the land for four months, and know that you cannot escape God and that God will disgrace the disbelievers. And a proclamation from God and His Messenger to all people on the day of the greater pilgrimage that God is dissociated from any connection to the idolaters, and (so is) His Messenger. So, if you repent, it will be better for you; but if you turn away, then know that you cannot escape God. Give tidings (Muhammad) of a painful torment to those who disbelieve. Excepting those of the idolaters with whom you have a treaty, and who have honored the treaty you made with them and have not supported anyone against you. (As for these), fulfill your obligations of the treaty to them to the end of their term. God loves those who are conscious of Him. Then, when the Sacred Months have passed, slay the idolaters wherever you find them, and take them (captive), and besiege them, and prepare for them each ambush. But if they repent and establish prayers and pay the poor-due, then let them travel freely on their way. God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy. If one of the idolaters should seek your protection (Muhammad), then grant him protection so that he may hear the Word of God, and afterward bring him to his place of safety. That is because they are a folk who do not know."

These verses -and the following verses up to verse 28 – were revealed to provide the final version of the protocol which establishes the basis for the relationship between the Muslim community, which had settled in Medina, and the idolaters who did not embrace Islam and were still living in Arabia. Arabs who did not embrace Islam were divided into three groups. Some concluded a treaty with the Prophet (PBUH) but later reneged on their treaty when they thought that the Romans will annihilate the Muslims. The second group were idolaters who were neutral to the Muslims but never concluded a treaty with them. The third group were idolaters who concluded a treaty with the Muslims and did not breach that treaty.

The verses came to provide a proclamation; the style and rhyme of the verses fit the style of such a proclamation. There are many narrations which describe who delivered the proclamation, how it was delivered, and the general ambience in which it was delivered. The most plausible of these is the version narrated by Ibn Jareer. Ibn Jareer quoted Mejahed (RA) saying, “When the Messenger of God (PBUH) returned back from the battle of Tabuk he wanted to perform pilgrimage but he said, ‘I do not want to perform pilgrimage while the idolaters perform pilgrimage in the nude because I fear that it would be construed that I approve of their actions.’ The Messenger (PBUH) sent Abu Bakr (RA) and ‘Ali (RA) to perform pilgrimage in his stead. They then offered the tribes which concluded an armistice agreement with the Muslims an extension of the agreement for four months, at the end of which fighting would resume unless the idolaters chose to embrace Islam. All of them embraced Islam.” Mejahed (RA) then continued by saying, “Having reviewed all narrations regarding what is meant by the word ‘Obligation’ in the first verse of this group of verses, to whom was this obligation owed, and the duration of the obligation, we conclude that, the word “obligation” referred to the armistice agreement between the Muslims and the idolaters who breached their treaty with the Prophet (PBUH) and allied themselves with the enemy of Islam. The verse offered those idolaters a unilateral extension of the armistice agreement for a period of four months. On the other hand, the Prophet (PBUH) was commanded to honor his treaties with the idolaters who did not breach their agreements with him to the end of the appointed terms of such agreements.” Those who think otherwise, namely, those who think that the verses commanded the Prophet (PBUH) to fight all idolaters at the end of the four months’ armistice extension are in error. Verse 6, supports our conclusion, ‘How can there be a treaty with God and with His messenger for the idolaters save those with whom you made a treaty at the Sacred Mosque? So long as they are true to you, be true to them. God loves those who remain conscious of Him.’ (9:6) The verse clearly commanded the Messenger of God (PBUH) to remain true to the idolaters as long as they remain true to him.”

We thus, conclude, having reviewed all narrations, that the Prophet (PBUH) appointed Abu Bakr (RA) as a leader of the pilgrimage expedition and when the first verses of this Sura were revealed he sent ‘Ali (RA) to make the proclamation regarding the armistice agreement. Al-Termidhi narrated that ‘Ali (RA) said, “When the first few verses of Surat Al-Tawba were revealed, the Prophet (PBUH) sent me with four announcements: No one should circumambulate around the Ka’ba in the nude, no idolater is allowed near the Ka’ba after this year, the Messenger (PBUH) will honor existing peace treaties with the idolaters, only Muslims will be admitted to paradise.” This is the best account we could find for this incident.

“Release from obligation (is proclaimed) from God and His messenger toward those of the idolaters with whom you made a treaty.” This was a general proclamation which delineated the protocol organizing the relationship between the Muslims and the idolaters within Arabia. The proclamation was clear, unequivocal, and binding for each and every Muslim. Then came the conditions, “Travel freely in the land four months, and know that you cannot escape God and that God will disgrace the disbelievers.” The idolaters were given a grace period of four months, during which they can travel, conduct their business, and make arrangements and future plans. During this grace period, their safety and security were guaranteed by the Muslims, even though they were the ones who acted treacherously and breached their treaty with the Muslims when they thought that the Muslims will be defeated and taken captives by the Romans. They repeatedly breached their treaties with the Muslims. However, Muslims treated them according to the Islamic traditions which came to replace the law of the jungle that ruled the world at the time of the advent of Islam. In case of conflicts, Islam replaced the law of the jungle with a civilised war protocol. These rules did not evolve over time but were the standard that Islam brought to the world since its advent. The verse warned the idolaters that they should not be deluded by the generosity of the Muslims because they will not be able to escape God. Where would they escape? Could they escape God in whose hand is the control of heavens and earth? He has decreed that the idolaters will be disgraced.

The date of the proclamation was also given, “And a proclamation from God and His messenger to all people on the day of the greater pilgrimage that God is dissociated from any connection to the idolaters, and (so is) His messenger. So, if you repent, it will be better for you; but if you turn away, then know that you cannot escape God.” The scholars differed whether it was the day of ‘Arafat or the day of the sacrifice that was meant by the expression, “the day of greater pilgrimage.” It seems that the reference here was to the day of the sacrifice. The proclamation was made in a general form and then the exception was made in the verses that followed. The verse also opened the door for repentance. This is an example of the style of the Quran which provides the warning of the consequences of disobedience and in the same time opens up the opportunity for the reward that comes with obedience. The Quran’s objective is to provide a way for guidance. So an opportunity is given for people to reflect and make an informed decision. However, the consequences of making the wrong decision are clearly indicated. This approach also reassures the Muslims that the final decision is in God’s hand. They need not be hesitant or fearful in dealing with the idolaters.

An exception from the general rule was then made, “Excepting those of the idolaters with whom you have a treaty, and who have honored the treaty you made with them and have not supported anyone against you. (As for these), fulfill their treaty to them till their term. God loves those who are conscious of Him. Then, when the Sacred Months have passed, slay the idolaters wherever you find them, and take them (captive), and besiege them, and prepare for them each ambush. But if they repent and establish prayer and pay the poor due, then let them travel freely on their way. God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy. If one of the idolaters should seek your protection (Muhammad), then grant him protection so that he may hear the Word of God, and afterward bring him to his place of safety. That is because they are a folk who do not know.”

The exception in the verse referred to a clan called Banu Khuzaimah who honoured the treaty which they concluded with the Muslims when the Hudaibiyah armistice agreement was ratified. The term of this agreement was ten years. The verse came to command the Muslims to honor the terms of the agreement. The verse emphasized the strong relationship between the fulfilment of the promise and God consciousness, “fulfill their treaty to them till their term. God loves those who are conscious of Him.” Fulfilment of the promise is an integral component of the code of Islamic ethics, God promised to reward those who fulfill their promises. Ethical behaviour in Islam is a means to achieve God consciousness. Ethical behaviour is an integral component of worship in Islam and it is an important tool for building safe and secure communities.

However, once the appointed term of the grace period (four months) has expired then, “slay the idolaters wherever you find them, and take them (captive), and besiege them, and prepare for them each ambush. But if they repent and establish prayer and pay the poor-due, then let them travel freely on their way. God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.” This command reflects the fact that the state of war between the Muslims and the idolaters will resume after the grace period had ended. Ample warning had been given to the idolaters to opt either for the resumption of hostilities or seeking peace by entering the fold of Islam. Establishing prayers and paying the poor due (Zakat) are used in this verse as a sign for their acceptance of Islam.

However, the war between the Muslims and the idolaters was not a war to annihilate all idolaters. It was a war against those who committed treason and started the fight against Muslims. Those who were not party to this conspiracy and who sought refuge and protection with the Muslims should be granted such protection. So that they get an opportunity to learn about this religion, “If one of the idolaters should seek your protection (Muhammad), then grant him protection so that he may hear the Word of God, and afterward bring him to his place of safety. That is because they are a folk who do not know.” Even if they did not accept Islam, Muslims are obliged to grant them protection until they reach their safe destination. Islam brought a program for guidance not for revenge and annihilation. This verse refutes the claim that some make saying that the objective of Jihad was to convert people and force them to accept Islam. The objective of Jihad is to destroy the tyrants and to establish the people’s right to be free to adopt the religion of their choice.

“How can there be a treaty with God and with His Messenger for the idolaters save those with whom you made a treaty at the Sacred Mosque? So long as they are true to you, be true to them. God loves those who remain conscious of Him. How (can there be any treaty for the others) when, if they have the upper hand over you, they would not respect any tie with you, of kinship or of treaty? They please you with their mouths while their hearts refuse. And most of them are transgressors. They have sold God’s revelation for a little gain, and barred others from His way. Surely, evil is that which they were doing. They neither observe a tie of kinship nor a treaty toward a believer. These are they who are aggressors.” How can there be a treaty between the idolaters and God and His Messenger (PBUH) when they only take recourse to these treaties when they are weak and unable to conquer the Muslims? Had they been strong enough to overcome the Muslims, they would have overwhelmed the Muslims and assaulted them regardless of any existing treaty. They would have not had any regard to kin relationships, a treaty with the Muslims, nor would they have observed any human decency in dealing with the Muslims. They were bent on taking revenge against the Muslims.

This verse indicates that prohibiting the Muslims to be party to a treaty with the idolaters was a matter of principle. These idolaters did not submit completely to God and they neither believed in His Message nor His Messenger. How can God have a treaty with them; while they challenge God's authority and refuse adamantly to show any gratitude to Him? This may seem at odds with the fact that the Messenger of God (PBUH) had conducted agreements with the idolaters at that time and the verses of this Sura conveyed God's command to the believers to honor these agreements. Our understanding of the Islamic dynamic program is that the treaties that were conducted with the idolaters before the revelation of this verse constituted a temporary phase for the interaction between the Muslims and the idolaters. These agreements were conducted to meet certain needs that were dictated by the realities of life at that time. However, the final rule is that the Muslims should not conduct treaties with the idolaters after the revelation of this verse.

“But if they repent and establish prayer and pay the alms, then they are your brethren in faith. We detail Our revelations for a people who have knowledge.” So the door was open for forgiveness if they repent. They would then become part of the Muslim community and all previous sins would be wiped out. But if they break their pledges, then the only alternative is the resumption of hostilities.

“Will you not fight people who broke their oaths, plotted to expel the Messenger, and did attack you first? Do you fear them? It is God you should fear if you are believers.” The idolaters had a long history of breaking the agreements they made with the Muslims. The latest in this series of broken agreements was the agreement of Hudaibiyah. The Messenger (PBUH) accepted – based on God's revelation - all the conditions that the idolaters stipulated, even though some of the Prophet's (PBUH) companions considered them unfair. The Prophet (PBUH) respected and honored each and every stipulation they made. But it was they, who less than two years later, reneged on their agreement. They were the same people who conspired to kill the Prophet (PBUH) and forced him to flee his home. They did not honor the sanctity of the Sacred Mosque and planned to kill the Prophet (PBUH) in defiance of God's command to keep the Sacred Mosque a safe place for everyone. Their aggression continued even after the Muslims migrated to Medina. These memories flash in the minds of Muslims when they listen to the question, “Do you fear them?” The response follows quickly with a reminder and a rebuke, “It is God you should fear if you are believers.” A believer should never fear another human being, a believer should only fear God.

“Fight them, God will torment them by your hands, cover them with shame, help you to have victory over them, and heal the hearts of a believing people, And He will remove the anger of their (the believers) hearts.” When you fight them, God will give you the power and the ability to be the tool with which He will punish them. They will be defeated at your hands and the believers will be pleased. In addition, you will be rewarded with God's forgiveness, “God relents toward whom He wills. God is Omniscient, Wise.” The believers' victory may also act as a wakeup call for some disbelievers. They may open their eyes to heed the guidance and see the truth when they see the miracles which the believers performed and realize that there is a super natural power behind these miracles.

“Or do you think you shall be left while God has not yet made evident those of you who will strive hard and will not take any one besides God and His Messenger and the believers as intimates. God is aware of what you do.” The test was absolutely necessary to uncover those who did not completely submit to God, those who excelled in conniving with the disbelievers for their own benefit while pretending to be part of the Muslim community.

“It is not for the idolaters to maintain God's Mosques, bearing witness against themselves of disbelief.” It is quite illogical that those who do not believe in God claim the right to maintain God's mosques. God's mosques are built so that only God would be worshipped therein. Those who disbelieve associate partners with God. Thus, it is against the nature of things that the disbelievers would be entrusted with the maintenance of God's mosques, and even if they do, their deeds would not be accepted, “As for such, their deeds are in vain and in the Fire they will abide.” Worship is an expression of faith; bad faith can only produce bad worship. Thus, only those who have pure faith can maintain God's mosques, “The mosques of God are only to be maintained by those who believe in God and the Last Day, establish regular prayers, pay the poor due, and fear none (at all) except God. It is they who are expected to be rightly guided.” The verse did not only stress the requirements that a believer should have deep belief in God and that this belief should be reflected on his/her deeds, but also emphasized that a believer should fear God alone. A believer should not fear anyone else but God. Believers should rid themselves of any shadow of associating partners with God. They should devote themselves fully to God. This devotion should be embedded in their psyche and be manifested on their behaviour. Those who will be rightly guided and those who deserve to carry the responsibility of maintaining God's mosques.

Can one say that those who used to provide water for the pilgrims but did not believe fully in God have the same status as those who believed in God and strived in His cause? They are not equal according to God's standard, “Have you made providing drinking water to pilgrims, or maintaining the Sacred Mosque, equal to (the pious service of) those who believe in God and the Last Day, and strive with might in the cause of God? They are not comparable in the sight of God. God certainly does not guide the wrongdoers.” God does not guide those who associate partners with Him. These are the wrongdoers.

“Those who believe, emigrated, and strived with might in God's cause, with their wealth and their persons, have the highest rank in the sight of God. Those are the achievers (of success.) Their Lord gives them glad tidings of mercy from Himself, His good pleasure, and gardens for them, wherein lasting bliss will be theirs. They will dwell therein forever. Verily, with God there is an immense reward.” This is a clear statement that outlines the status of the believers who migrated and strived in God's cause. They are promised the highest rank with their Lord. As for the others, their deeds will be nullified and in Hell fire they will abide forever.

“You who believe, do not take your fathers and your brothers as protecting guardians if they prefer disbelief over faith. Whosoever of you do so, such are the wrongdoers.” All blood relationships should be broken if the bonds between the hearts are broken as a result of the deviation in faith. God's bond between the believers should be valued more than the tribal or family bonds. God's bond brings the whole humanity in one family. Those who pledge allegiance to the disbelievers are truly wrongdoers. The term wrongdoers in this verse refer to those who associate partners with God.

The verses did not only state the general principle regarding the formation of alliances with others but provided a detailed list of all possible relationships that may pose a temptation for the believers, "Say (Prophet), "If your fathers, your sons, your brothers, your mates, or your kindred; the wealth that you have acquired; the trade in which you fear a decline; or the dwellings in which you delight are dearer to you than God, and His Messenger, and striving in His cause, then wait until God brings His command to pass." God does not guide the transgressors." A question is posed. Will the scale be tipped in favour of the love for fathers, sons, brothers, mates, or kindred (an expression of relationships acquired through blood or marriage), wealth, trade (an expression for the natural disposition towards the love of ownership), or the dwellings in which you delight (an expression for worldly pleasures) over the love of God, His Messenger, and striving in God's cause?

This kind of devotion is not only a requirement for the individuals but it is also mandated for the whole Muslims community and the Muslim nation. No benefit or a relationship should take precedence over the requirement of the faith in God and striving in His cause. This kind of obligation would not have been mandated unless God knew that the believers were able to fulfil the undertaking. God inculcated in the initial natural disposition of His servants a great ability for endurance and dedication. The endurance and dedication are rewarded by the great pleasure obtained from feeling the closeness to God, hoping for His grace, rising high above the material requirements of the physical body, and aspiring to a brilliant horizon.

"God has given you victory in many battlefields and on the day of Hunain, when you exulted in your great numbers, but they were of no use to you; and the earth, vast as it is, was straitened for you; then you turned back in flight." The memory of the victory that they achieved in the different battles which was only possible because of God's grace was still fresh in their memory. The battle of Hunain took place after the conquest of Mecca in the 10th month of the 8th year of Hijra. After the conquest of Mecca, most of the people in Mecca embraced Islam. News came to the Prophet (PBUH) that the tribe of Hawazen under the leadership of Malek bin 'Awf Al-Nadari had formed an alliance with the tribes of Thuqaif, Banu Jashm, Banu Bakr, and others to attack the Muslims. The Prophet (PBUH) moved with his army of ten thousand Muslims who came from Medina in addition to two thousand from the people of Mecca. The two armies met at a valley called Hunain which is located between Mecca and Al-Taieef. The battle started early in the morning. The disbelievers camped stealthily around the valley and ambushed the Muslims as they came in. The Muslims turned back on their heels and fled the battle field. The Prophet (PBUH) together with few of his companions stood fast. The Prophet (PBUH) charged towards the enemy while calling the Muslims to come back to fight. The Prophet (PBUH) asked his uncle Al-'Abbas (RA) to call upon the companions of the tree (those were the companions who pledged their allegiance to the Prophet (PBUH) during the battle of Hudaibiyah, the pledge which was called the pledge of Riddwan). Muslims started to gather around the Prophet (PBUH) and he lead them against the disbelievers. The battle ended by a victory for the Muslim army.

This was the first battle in which the Muslims were able to form an army of twelve thousand people. They were impressed by their numbers and thought that an army of this size could not be defeated. They forgot the basic requirement for victory, so God reminded them. God made them suffer defeat first and then showed them that a small army of true believers can achieve the victory that eludes a huge non-committed army, “Then God sent His tranquility down upon His Messenger and upon the believers, and sent down hosts you could not see, and tormented those who disbelieved. Such is the reward of disbelievers. Then afterward God will accept the repentance from whom He wills. God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.” The verses paint a dynamic picture, first there was rejoicing, jubilation, and exultation in numbers; then there came the earthquake of defeat, the feeling of collapse, and the turning away. Then, the picture changed by the arrival of God’s help. Tranquility engulfed the believers and made them to stand their ground and God’s host fought with them and turned the balance against the disbelievers. The disbelievers were punished, but the door for God’s forgiveness is always open for those who sin and later repent.

The story of the battle of Hunain, narrated through these verses to illustrate the futility of the dependence on any power other than God’s, highlights another principle. It is the principle of the power of true and strong faith. Strength is not in the large number, but strength is in true and strong faith.

A final verdict is then given regarding the idolaters, “You who believe, truly the idolaters are unclean. So let them not, after this year of theirs, approach the Sacred Mosque. And if you fear poverty, soon will God enrich you, if He wills, out of His bounty, for God is Omniscient, All-wise.” The verse indicates that idolatry is a spiritual impurity. This spiritual impurity defiles the purity of the precinct of the Sacred Mosque. Thus, idolaters are not fit to gain access to the precinct of the Sacred Mosque. But, what about the economic opportunities and the wealth that were brought to Mecca during the time of pilgrimage. The people of Mecca depended in their living on the financial gains which they made from people who come to perform pilgrimage. The verse reminded the believers that it is God who provides.

Verses: 29 to 35

29. Fight those who disbelieve in God and the Last Day, who do not forbid that which God and His Messenger have forbidden, who do not acknowledge the religion of truth, (even if they were) of the People of the Scripture, until they pay the Jizya with willing submission, and feel themselves subdued.
30. The Jews said, “Ezra is the son of God,” and the Christians said, “The Messiah is the son of God.” That is their saying with their mouths. They imitate the saying of those who disbelieved before. May God destroy them; how deluded are they?
31. They took their rabbis and their monks to be their lords beside God, (also) the Messiah, the son of Mary. They were commanded to worship only One God. There is no deity but He. Be He glorified above all that they ascribe as partners (to Him.)
32. They want to extinguish the light of God with their mouths, but God refuses except to perfect His light, though the disbelievers hate it.

33. It is He who sent His Messenger with guidance and the religion of truth, to proclaim it over all religion, even though the idolaters may hate it.
34. You who believe, many of the rabbis and the monks devour the wealth of people unjustly and turn them away from the way of God. Those who hoard up gold and silver and do not spend it in the way of God, give them tidings (Muhammad) of a painful torment.
35. On the Day when it will (all) be heated in the fire of Hell, and their foreheads and their sides and their backs will be branded therewith (and it will be said to them), "Here is that which you hoarded for yourselves. Now taste of what you used to hoard." (9:29-35)

"Fight those who disbelieve in God and the Last Day, who do not forbid that which God and His Messenger have forbidden, who do not acknowledge the religion of truth, (even if they were) of the People of the Scripture, until they pay the Jizya with willing submission, and feel themselves subdued." This verse and the subsequent ones were revealed shortly before the battle of Tabuk against the Romans and their Christian Arab vassals. These verses were revealed to deal specifically with the impending battle with the Romans. The verses describe the doctrine of these people and explain the reasoning behind fighting them. It should not be taken as a directive to fight the people of the Scripture in general. The bases for fighting the Romans and their allies were summarized as: they disbelieve in God and the Last Day, they do not forbid that which God and His Messenger have forbidden, and they do not acknowledge the religion of truth. Four facts were given to support these statements.

First, "The Jews said, 'Ezra is the son of God,' and the Christians said, 'The Messiah is the son of God.' That is their saying with their mouths. They imitate the saying of those who disbelieved before. May God destroy them; how deluded are they?" Those who make such a claim do not believe in God and the Day of Judgment.

Second, "They took their rabbis and their monks to be their lords beside God, (also) the Messiah, the son of Mary. They were commanded to worship only One God. There is no deity but He. Be He glorified above all that they ascribe as partners (to Him.)" This contravenes the belief in the oneness of God.

Third, "They want to extinguish the light of God with their mouths, but God refuses except to perfect His light, though the disbelievers hate it." They launched war against the religion of God.

Fourth, "Many of the rabbis and the monks devour the wealth of people unjustly and turn them away from the way of God." They did not forbid what God and His Messenger forbade.

These were actual attributes of the Romans and their Christian Arab vassals whom the Muslims were getting ready to engage in battle. The rule enunciated in these verses is a general rule that should be applied to all people of the Scripture who satisfy the above mentioned criteria. However, there were exceptions made by the Prophet (PBUH). Muslims were commanded not to attack non combatants like women, children, and elderly people; and priests and hermits.

The verse commands the believers to fight the people of the Scripture who, "who disbelieve in God and the Last Day." Those who believe that Ezra or the Messiah are the sons of God do not believe in the Oneness of God. The verse gives another criterion for the people of the Scripture who should be fought, “who do not forbid that which God and His Messenger have forbidden.” The command applies whether the word Messenger in the verse refers to Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) or refers to the Messenger that God sent to these people before. The succeeding verses explained this by stating that they used to, “devour the wealth of people unjustly and turn them away from the way of God,” which was forbidden in all God’s messages. The verses also indicated that they, “do not acknowledge the religion of truth.”

The condition that the Quran gave for the believers to stop fighting these people was not that they would become Muslims – let there be no compulsion in religion - but was that, “they pay the Jizya with willing submission, and feel themselves subdued.” Why was paying the Jizya a condition for the hostilities to cease? The people of the Scripture who satisfied the above mentioned criteria represented a threat to Islam. They had different ideology and their behavior contravened the norms of Islam. They also posed a threat to the Muslim society because of the confrontation between their doctrine and the doctrine of Islam. History bears witness that the threat did materialize later. The only way Islam would have been able to establish its objective, to guarantee the freedom of religion for every human being, was to subdue the tyrants who oppressed the people. Those authorities who were placing obstacles in the way of people and robbing them of the freedom to choose had to be subdued. Agreeing to pay the Jizya was the sign they have been subdued.

The objectives of paying this tax were

- It is a sign of submission and an agreement not to attack the Muslims or hinder others from receiving information about Islam.
- It is a contribution to the state’s treasury to cover protection expenses. The Muslim community was obliged to offer protection for those who pay the tax.
- It is a contribution to the state’s treasury dedicated to helping those who need help whether Muslims or non-Muslims. Muslims were required to pay the poor due; this tax was the contribution by non-Muslims to the treasury.

“The Jews said, ‘Ezra is the son of God,’ and the Christians said, ‘The Messiah is the son of God.’ That is their saying with their mouths. They imitate the saying of those who disbelieved before. May God destroy them; how deluded are they?” This verse draws a parallel between the doctrine of those who say Ezra the son of God and those who say the Messiah is the son of God and the doctrine of the idolatrous Arabs. A doctrine that claims that God has a son defies the fundamental doctrine that states that God is One. Although these verses were revealed to prepare the believers for the impending fight with the Romans and their Christian Arab allies, but we notice that the verses also mention the Jews as well. We think that they were mentioned in this verse for two reasons:

- The verses establish a general rule that applies to all people of the Scripture. The verses explain the reasons for fighting the people of the Scripture. The people of the Scripture include the Christians and the Jews.

- The Jews, at this time, resided in an area north of Syria after they had been evacuated from Medina. The Muslims may have had to pass by them on their route to meet the Romans.

“That is their saying with their mouths. They imitate the saying of those who disbelieved before. May God destroy them; how deluded are they?” The Quranic expression indicates that this was their statement which they made using their mouths. The expression provides a dynamic image as if the reader hears their statement as they spoke. It also alludes to the fact that the statement is mere words that were not supported by any proof. Their statement is similar to the statement made by the idolaters before. The scholars explained that the similarity between the statements of the Christians and the Jews and the statement of the idolatrous Arabs stems from the fact that the Arabs claimed that the angels were the daughters of God. But the similarity is much deeper than this. The concept of the trinity existed in many religions before Christianity; of these we mention the old Egyptian and the Hindu religions. The Assyrians believed in the concept that God has a son. This shows the parallel between the sayings of the Jews and Christians on one side and the idolaters on the other side. These facts were not known to the Arabs at that time which provides another proof that Quran is a revealed message.

“They took their rabbis and their monks to be their lords beside God, (also) the Messiah, the son of Mary. They were commanded to worship only One God. There is no deity but He. Be He glorified above all that they ascribe as partners (to Him.)” Ibn Katheer mentioned in his interpretation of the Quran that, “‘Adi bin Hatem (RA), who was a Christian, fled to Syria when he received the Messenger’s (PBUH) invitation to Islam. His daughter was taken captive in a skirmish with the Muslims. The Prophet (PBUH) freed ‘Adi’s sister and she accepted Islam. She later went to her brother and asked him to accept Islam. ‘Adi went to Medina to meet with the Prophet (PBUH) and heard him reciting, ‘They took their rabbis and their monks to be their lords beside God.’ ‘Adi (RA) objected saying, ‘They did not worship their rabbis and their monks.’ The Prophet (PBUH) said, ‘did not the rabbis and the monks forbade them to do things that God made lawful and allowed them to do things which God forbade. This is worship.’”

Based on the obvious meaning of the Quranic text, the interpretation of the Prophet (PBUH) (which is the final reference) and the understanding of the early and later scholars who interpreted the Quran, we come to the following conclusion:

- Worship means following the rules enunciated in the Quran and explained in the tradition of the Prophet (PBUH). The statement, “They took their rabbis and their monks to be their lords beside God,” does not mean they believed in them as gods. It means that they followed blindly the laws devised by the rabbis and priests. These were laws which contravened the law of God. This is synonymous to associating partners with God. Blindly accepting laws devised by a human being and which contravene the laws of God is synonymous to worshipping that human being.

Although the main objective of these verses was to prepare the Muslims for the battle with the Romans, and to deal with hesitation on the part of Muslims to fight people of the Scripture, but they state general principles.

The fundamental meaning of the word “religion” is the complete submission to God. This is the only religion that God will accept. Submission encompasses following God’s law as well as performing the rituals. Those who perform the rituals but follow those who usurp God’s right to legislate cannot be considered Muslims. These are the ones who take lords beside God.

“They want to extinguish the light of God with their mouths, but God refuses except to perfect His light, though the disbelievers hate it. It is He Who sent His Messenger with guidance and the religion of truth, to proclaim it over all religion, even though the idolaters may hate it.” They fight Islam and would like to extinguish the light of God. They fabricate lies against Islam and motivate their followers to attack Islam. But, God’s light will prevail. God sent His Messenger (PBUH) with the true religion. The true religion is God’s light. God will perfect His light in spite of the attempts of those who want to extinguish it. The verse indicates that the religion of truth is the religion that God sent Muhammad (PBUH) with.

“You who believe, many of the rabbis and the monks devour the wealth of people unjustly and turn them away from the way of God. They who hoard up gold and silver and spend it not in the way of God, give them tidings (Muhammad) of a painful torment.” The verses continued to deal with the rabbis and monks who usurped the right of God to legislate and were followed blindly by their followers by referring to the ways they devised to devour people’s wealth. It should be noted that the verse did not generalize. It stated that “many” of the rabbi’s and monks do this and not all of them. Then the warning of a severe torment in the Hereafter is issued, “On the Day when it will (all) be heated in the fire of hell, and their foreheads and their flanks and their backs will be branded therewith (and it will be said to them), ‘Here is that which you hoarded for yourselves. Now taste of what you used to hoard.’”

Verses: 36 to 37

36. God has decreed that the number of months is twelve - so ordained by Him in His book, the day He created the heavens and the earth - of them four are sacred. That is the straight religion. So wrong not yourselves in them. And wage war on all of the idolaters as they are waging war on all of you. And know that God is with those who remain conscious of Him.

37. Postponement (of a sacred month) is only an excess in disbelief whereby those who disbelieve are misled. They allow it one year and forbid it (another) year that they may make up the number of the months which God has hallowed, so that they allow that which God has forbidden. Their evil deeds have been made pleasing to them. God does not guide the disbelieving folk. (9:36-37)

“God has decreed that the number of months is twelve - so ordained by Him in His book, the day He created the heavens and the earth - of them four are sacred. That is the right religion.” This verse indicates that time is a part of God’s original plan of the creation of the universe. The verse indicates that there is a perpetual periodic cycle which is composed of twelve months. God fixed the length of the cycle as well as the number of the months. This is God's law. God also fixed the number and the place of the Sacred Months within this periodic cycle. No one has the right to change this. This is part of the right religion which conforms to God's creation plan.

“So wrong not yourselves in them.” Do not wrong yourselves during these months which had been established by God's law. Do not wrong yourselves by violating what God has forbidden during these months. God wanted these months to be a period of safety and security for people, free of hostilities. But when the Sacred Months had ended, “wage war on all of the idolaters as they are waging war on all of you. And know that God is with those who remain conscious of Him.” They fight you indiscriminately, so repel their aggression by fighting all of them together. The idolaters collectively are party to the battle between faith and disbelief, the battle between guidance and misguidance. This is a battle between two distinct groups. The differences between these two groups cannot be reconciled and there is no hope of an eternal peace between the two. The differences between the two groups are not caused by a difference in interest that can be settled through compromise or land claims that can be settled through negotiations. It is a battle between different doctrines which cannot be resolved through compromise. The verse ends by a reminder to the believers to remain conscious of God by following God's commands regarding the lawful and forbidden, by participating in fighting the idolaters, and by observing the protocol of war that God had decreed.

“Postponement (of a Sacred Month) is only an excess in disbelief whereby those who disbelieve are misled. They allow it one year and forbid it (another) year that they may make up the number of the months which God has hallowed, so that they allow that which God has forbidden. Their evil deeds have been made pleasing to them. God does not guide the disbelieving folk.” Mejahed (RA) explained this verse by saying, “A man from the tribe of Kenanah used to come each year (during the time of pilgrimage) riding a donkey. The man would say, ‘People, what I say goes, we have made the month of Muharram a Sacred Month and we have postponed the month of Safar.’ The following year, he would say, ‘we have made Safar a Sacred Month and we have postponed the month of Muharram.’ This is how they used to change God's law regarding the Sacred Months.” Another story was narrated by Abd El-Rahman bin Aslam. He said, “The Arabs used to honour the Sacred Months by abstaining from fighting during these months to the extent that a man would face his father's killer but would not raise a hand against him to avenge his father's death, till a man from Kenanah commanded his tribe to fight during the month of Muharram. When his people reminded him that they could not fight during the month of Muharram, he said, ‘We will postpone Muharram, the present month is the month of Safar. This year has two months by the name of Safar. The month of Safar of the following year would then be considered a Sacred Month.’”

These are two versions of the way the idolaters used to change the Sacred Months around. In one version they make the month of Safar sacred instead of the month of Muharram. Thus, the number of Sacred Months remains four but they are not the months which God had decreed to be sacred. In the second version, they would have three sacred months in one year and five sacred months in the subsequent year. Either way they change God's law. This is an excess in disbelief.

Verses: 38 to 41

38. You who believe, what is the matter with you, that, when you are asked to go forth in the cause of God, you cling heavily to the earth? Are you satisfied with the life of this world rather than the Hereafter? But little is the enjoyment of this life, as compared with the Hereafter.
39. Unless you go forth, He will punish you with a grievous torment, and replace you with others and you will not harm Him at all. God is Able to do all things.
40. If you do not help him, God did indeed help him when the disbelievers drove him out, the second of two; when the two of them were in the cave, when he said to his companion, "Do not grieve. God is with us." Then God caused His tranquility to descend upon him and supported him with hosts you could not see, and made the word of those who disbelieved the lowest, while God's word became the uppermost. God is Eminent, Wise.
41. Go forth, light-armed and heavy-armed, and strive with your wealth and your lives in the way of God. That is best for you if you only knew. (9:38-41)

It is most probable that these verses were revealed right after the Prophet (PBUH) announced his intention to form an army to fight the Romans in the battle of Tabuk. The Prophet's (PBUH) move was in response to the intelligence he received that the Roman emperor has formed a huge army to fight the Muslims. The emperor gave his soldiers one-year salary as an incentive to fight the Muslims. The vassal Christians Arab tribes who lived near the boundary between Arabia and the Romans also allied themselves with the Romans against the Muslims and the front of the Roman army had already reached Syria. It was the Prophet's (PBUH) policy to keep the objective of his expedition confidential to gain the advantage of surprising his enemy. However, in this particular incident he did announce that the objective was to fight the Romans. The reason for this change in policy was that this was a particularly difficult battle for the Muslims. The distance that the army had to travel was very long, the people of Medina were preparing to harvest their fields, and it was summer time which made travel more difficult. This was a golden opportunity for the hypocrites to dampen the spirits of the Muslims and to tempt them to stay home and to abandon the Prophet's (PBUH) expedition.

"You who believe, what is the matter with you, that, when you are asked to go forth in the cause of God, you cling heavily to the earth?" The love of life, the love of wealth, and the love of comfort and worldly pleasures make people heavy in weight and hinder their movement. All of these meanings are reflected on the expression, "Cling heavily to the earth." Greed and short sightedness are shackles which increase the gravity of the body and impede its movement.

“Are you satisfied with the life of this world rather than the Hereafter? But little is the enjoyment of this life, as compared with the Hereafter.” Going out to fight in the cause of God is a step towards destroying the worldly shackles which attach humankind to the earth and prevents him from flying in the space of spirituality towards the eternal life. No one with a sound faith in God would resist the call to strive in the cause of God.

The verses issue a very stern warning, “Unless you go forth, He will punish you with a grievous torment, and replace you with others and you will not harm Him at all. God is Able to do all things.” Although the warning was meant to address a specific group of people, in a specific circumstance but its scope can be generalized. The torment that was promised in the verse was not only meant to happen in the Hereafter but it included a punishment in this life as well. God is able to replace you with another people who will obey His commands and will be able to overcome the weakness to cling to the earth. The following verses provide an example, that they knew very well, “If you do not help him, God did indeed help him when the disbelievers drove him out, the second of two; when the two of them were in the cave, when he said to his companion, “Do not grieve. God is with us.” Then God caused His tranquility to descend upon him and supported him with hosts you could not see, and made the word of those who disbelieved the lowest, while God's word became the uppermost. God is Eminent, Wise.” The verse tells the story of the migration of the Prophet (PBUH) to Medina. When Quraish was fed up with the Prophet (PBUH) they plotted to kill him. But God revealed their plot to the Prophet (PBUH) and commanded him to migrate to Medina. The Prophet (PBUH) migrated from Mecca in the company of his friend Abu Bakr (RA). On their way to Medina, they hid in a cave to lose the idolaters who were in their pursuit. While they were in the cave, they saw the idolaters who were following them standing at the opening of the cave. Abu Bakr (RA) was worried that they may decide to enter the cave and apprehend them. The Prophet (PBUH) calmed the fears of Abu Bakr (RA) saying, “What do you think of two, God is their third?” Quraish had the might and the physical power, but with God on their side, Muhammad (PBUH) and his companion prevailed. God sent His host to support them and made, “The word of those who disbelieved the lowest, while God's word became the uppermost.”

This was an example of how God’s intervention awarded His Messenger victory over the idolaters and made God’s word to prevail. God is able to repeat this intervention for another group who are willing to strive in God’s cause.

The command to strive in God’s cause was then given subsequent to the reminder of God’s help, “Go forth, light-armed and heavy-armed, and strive with your wealth and your lives in the way of God. That is best for you if you only knew.” The believers were then commanded to stop making excuses and to go forth and strive with their wealth and their persons. The believers realized the benefit of following God’s command and they fought and won; and God’s word prevailed.

Verses: 42 to 92

42. Had it been a near adventure and an easy journey they would have followed you, but the distance seemed too far for them. Yet, they will swear by God (saying), “If we had been

- able, we would surely have set out with you.” They destroy their souls, and God knows that they are indeed liars.*
43. God pardoned you (Muhammad); why did you grant them leave before it had become clear to you those who spoke the truth and you had known the liars?
  44. Those who believe in God and the Last Day do not ask you for an exemption from fighting with their wealth and their persons. And God knows well those who are conscious of Him.
  45. Only those who disbelieve in God and the Last Day will ask you for an exemption, those whose hearts are in doubt, so they waver in their doubt.
  46. If they had intended to go forth, they would certainly have prepared for it; but God was averse to their being sent forth, so He made them lag behind. They were told, “Sit among those who stayed behind.”
  47. Had they gone forth with you, they would have contributed nothing save trouble and they would have scurried around seeking to cause sedition among you; and among you there are some who would have listened to them. God knows the wrongdoers.
  48. Indeed, they sought to cause sedition before and raised difficulties for you until the truth came out and God’s decree was made manifest, though they hated it.
  49. Of them is he who says, “Grant me an exemption (to stay at home) and do not subject me to temptation.” Indeed, it is into temptation that they (thus) have fallen. Certainly, Hell will encompass the disbelievers.
  50. If good befalls you, it grieves them; but if a misfortune befalls you, they say, “We took indeed our precautions beforehand,” and they turn away rejoicing.
  51. Say, “Nothing will befall us except that which God has decreed for us, He is our Protecting Guardian,” and in God let the believers put their trust.
  52. Say, “Do you expect for us (any fate) other than one of the two glorious things (Martyrdom or victory)? But we expect that God will either torment you Himself, or by our hands. So wait (expectantly); we too will wait with you.”
  53. Say, “Spend (for the cause) willingly or unwillingly. It will not be accepted from you. You were indeed a transgressing folk.”
  54. The reasons their contributions were not accepted, were that they rejected God and His Messenger; that they come to prayer slothfully; and they offer contributions grudgingly.
  55. So let not their riches nor their children impress you (Muhammad). God only wishes to torment them thereby in the life of this world and that their souls shall pass away while they are disbelievers.
  56. They swear by God that they indeed belong to you while they do not belong to you, but they are people who are afraid.
  57. If they could find a place to flee to, or caves, or a place of concealment, they would turn to it in great haste.
  58. And among them are those who disparage you in the matter of (the distribution of) the poor due. If they are given part thereof, they are pleased, but if not, they become enraged.
  59. If only had they been content with what God and His Messenger gave them, and had said, “God is sufficient for us. God and His Messenger will soon give us of His bounty, and to God do we turn our hopes.”
  60. The poor due are only for the poor, the needy, those who are employed to administer the (funds), those whose hearts have been (recently) reconciled (to truth), those in bondage, those in debt, in the cause of God, and for the wayfarer. This is ordained by God, and God is Omniscient, Wise.

61. Among them are men who abuse the Prophet and say, "He is (all) ear." Say, "He listens to what is best for you. He believes in God, has faith in the believers, and is a mercy to those of you who believe." But those who abuse the Messenger will have a painful torment.
62. They swear by God to you (Muslims) to please you, but it is more fitting for them to please God and His messenger, if they were believers.
63. Do they not know that whoever opposes God and His Messenger, he shall certainly have the fire of Hell to abide in it? That is the great ignominy.
64. The Hypocrites are apprehensive lest a Sura should be revealed telling them plainly of what is in their hearts. Say, "Go on mocking; God will certainly expose what you fear."
65. If you (Muhammad) ask them, they will say, "We were only talking idly and in jest." Say, "Was it at God and His revelations and His Messenger that you were mocking?"
66. Make no excuses. You have disbelieved after you had believed. If We pardon a party of you, We shall torment another party because they were criminals.
67. The hypocrite men and hypocrite women are all alike; they enjoin evil and forbid good and withhold their hands; they have forsaken God, so He has forsaken them; indeed, the hypocrites are the transgressors.
68. God promised the hypocrites, both men and women, and the disbelievers the fire of Hell. Therein shall they dwell. It will suffice them. God cursed them, and theirs is a lasting torment.
69. As in the case of those before you, they were mightier than you in power and more abundant in wealth and children. They had their portion of enjoyment and you had yours, as did those before you; and you indulged in idle talk as they did. Such are they whose deeds are fruitless in this world and in the Hereafter, and it is they who are the losers.
70. Have they never heard the stories of those who came before them? - The People of Noah, 'Ad, and Thamud; the people of Abraham, the people of Madyan, and the cities overthrown. Their messengers came to them with clear signs. God would have never wronged them, but they wronged their own souls.
71. The believers, men and women, are protecting guardians of one another. They enjoin what is right and forbid what is evil; they establish regular prayers and pay the prescribed poor due; and they obey God and His Messenger. God will have mercy on them. God is Eminent, Wise.
72. God promised the believers, men and women, gardens under which rivers flow to dwell therein and beautiful mansions in gardens of everlasting bliss. But the greatest bliss is the good pleasure of God. That is the supreme triumph.
73. Prophet, strive hard against the disbelievers and the hypocrites, and be harsh against them. Their refuge is Hell, an evil destination indeed.
74. They swear by God that they said nothing (evil), but indeed they uttered the word of disbelief, and they did disbelieve after they had accepted Islam. They meditated a plot which they were unable to carry out. They were not resentful except (for the fact) that God and His Messenger had enriched them of His bounty. So, if they repent it will be better for them; and if they turn away, God will afflict them with a painful torment in the world and the Hereafter, and they have no protecting guardian nor a helper on earth.

75. And of them is he who made a covenant with God (saying), "If He gives us of His bounty we will certainly spend in charity and become of the righteous."
76. But when He bestowed of His bounty on them, they became niggardly, and turned back (from their covenant), averse.
77. He penalized them with hypocrisy in their hearts, (to last) till the Day whereon they shall meet Him - because they broke their covenant with God, and because they lied (again and again).
78. Do they not know that God knows their secret (thoughts) and their secret counsel, and that God knows well all things unseen?
79. Those who criticize the believers who give freely to charity and those who can find nothing to give except the fruits of their labour, so they mock them. God will mock them and they shall have a painful torment.
80. Whether you (Muhammad) ask God to forgive them, or do not. If you ask seventy times for their forgiveness, God will not forgive them. This is because they disbelieved in God and His Messenger. God does not guide the transgressors.
81. Those who were left behind (in the Tabuk expedition) rejoiced for staying behind when the Messenger of God departed. They hated to strive and fight, with their wealth and their persons, in the cause of God. They said, "Do not go forth in the heat." Say, "The fire of Hell is more intense in heat." If only they could understand.
82. Let them laugh a little (then) weep much. This is the recompense they earned for the (evil) that they did.
83. If God should return you to a party of them, and they ask for your permission to go out (with you), say, "Never shall you go out with me, nor fight an enemy with me. Indeed, you preferred to stay (at home) on the first occasion. Then sit you (now) with those who lag behind."
84. And never (Muhammad) pray for one of them who dies nor stand by his grave. They disbelieved in God and His messenger, and they died while they were transgressors.
85. Let not their wealth nor their children impress you. God intends to punish them with these things in the world, and that their souls may perish while they are disbelievers.
86. When a Sura is revealed, enjoining them to believe in God and to strive along with His Messenger, those with wealth and influence among them ask you for exemption saying, "Let us stay (behind). We would be with those who sit (at home)."
87. They preferred to be with those who remain behind (at home). A seal was set on their hearts so they understand not.
88. But the Messenger, and those who believed with him, strived with their wealth and their persons. For them are all the good things and it is they who will be successful.
89. God prepared for them gardens under which rivers flow, to dwell therein. That is the supreme triumph.
90. And those among the wandering Arabs who had excuses came in order that permission might be granted them. And those who lied to God and His messenger stayed at home. A painful torment will fall on those of them who disbelieved.
91. There is no blame on those who are infirm, or ill, or who find no resources to spend (on the cause), if they are sincere (in duty) to God and His Messenger. No ground (of complaint) can there be against such as do right. God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.
92. Nor (is there blame) on those who came to you to be provided with mounts, you said, "I can find no mounts for you," they turned back, their eyes streaming with tears of grief

that they could not find the means to spend. (9:42-92)

Had it been a short trip which they considered safe, they would have followed you. But, it was a long and difficult trip that you have invited them to. This was a test for the weak who did not aspire to higher goals. This is a common human model, “Had it been a near adventure and an easy journey they would have followed you, but the distance seemed too far for them.” Many people fall short of achieving higher goals. They are tempted with minor worldly achievements. They live on the fringe of life. They never venture into attempting higher feats, “Yet, they will swear by God (saying), ‘If we had been able we would surely have set out with you.’ They destroy their souls, and God knows that they are indeed liars.” So they lie to hide their cowardice. Lying and cowardice go hand in hand. They destroy themselves with their oaths and lying. They thought that they will be saved by lying to people, but God knows the truth and He revealed it. Thus, the liars become exposed.

It is out of the grace of God that He forgave His Messenger before He blamed him, “God forgave you (Muhammad); why did you grant them leave before it had become clear to you those who spoke the truth and you had known the liars?” Those who stayed behind used the Prophet’s (PBUH) permission as an excuse to avoid joining the army. However, even if they had not obtained the Prophet’s (PBUH) permission, they would have stayed behind. But, then their delinquency would have been exposed. The verses then describe the different attitudes of the believers and the hypocrites, “Those who believe in God and the Last Day do not ask you for an exemption from fighting with their wealth and their persons. And God knows well those who are conscious of Him. Only those who disbelieve in God and the Last Day will ask you for an exemption, those whose hearts are in doubt, so they waver in their doubt.” This is the true criterion. Those who believe in God and the Day of Reckoning are not hesitant to strive in the way of God with their wealth and persons. They hasten to respond to the call to strive. The hypocrites, on the other hand, are hesitant. They try hard to find a way out which allows them to stay behind. The way to God is straight and clear. Only those who do not know the way and those who know it but find it difficult to follow are hesitant to join the ranks of the believers in their strive. Those who stayed behind could have gone forth, if they wanted to, “If they had intended to go forth, they would certainly have prepared for it; but God was averse to their being sent forth, so He made them lag behind. They were told, ‘Sit among those who stayed behind.’” But God was aware of their hypocrisy, so He made them lag behind. They stayed back with the elderly, the women, and children.

This was better for the believers, “Had they gone forth with you, they would have contributed nothing save trouble and they would have scurried around seeking to cause sedition among you; and among you there are some who would have listened to them. God knows the wrongdoers.” Had they went forth with the believers, they would have gone forth half hearted. This would have spread trouble among the ranks of the believers. They would have also sought to spread sedition among the Muslims. “Indeed they sought to cause sedition before and raised difficulties for you until the truth came and God's decree was made manifest, though they hated it." They tried to spread sedition before when the Prophet (PBUH) arrived at Medina, but God supported him and gave him victory over the hypocrites.

"Of them he is who says, 'Grant me an exemption (to stay at home) and do not subject me to temptation.' Indeed, it is into temptation that they (thus) have fallen. Certainly, Hell will encompass the disbelievers. If good befalls you, it grieves them; but if a misfortune befalls you, they say, 'We took indeed our precautions beforehand,' and they turn away rejoicing. Say, 'Nothing will befall us except that which God has decreed for us, He is our Protecting Guide,' and in God let the believers put their trust. Say, 'Do you expect for us (any fate) other than one of the two glorious things (Martyrdom or victory)? But we expect that God will either torment you Himself, or by our hands. So wait (expectantly); we too will wait with you.'" Muhammad bin Ishaq narrated on the authority of Al-Zuhary, "While the Messenger of God (PBUH) was preparing for the battle of Tabuk, he asked Gad bin Qais, 'Gad, will you fight the Romans?' Gad said, 'Messenger of God, grant me an exemption and do not subject me to temptation. I am extremely prone to seduction by women. I fear that I would fall for the women of the Romans.' The Prophet (PBUH) granted him an exemption." Such were the lame excuses that the hypocrites advanced to seek exemptions from joining the Muslim expedition to Tabuk. The verse paints the image of an abyss in which those who were tempted fall in and then get torched by Hell fire. They never wished the Messenger and the believers well. They would rejoice when something bad befalls the believers. They had a very short sighted view of what was happening. The believers on the other hand, looked at the big picture. They were promised victory by God and it is in God that they had put their trust. They had absolute trust in God and His decrees. However, they also knew that putting one's trust in God goes hand in hand with preparing the best they can to achieve their goal. The believers knew that either way it is good for them. If they die in battle, they will gain martyrdom and if they survive they will enjoy victory. The hypocrites on the other hand had nothing to look forward to except severe punishment from God.

"Say, 'Spend (for the cause) willingly or unwillingly. It will not be accepted from you. You were indeed a transgressing folk.' The reasons their contributions were not accepted, were that they rejected God and His Messenger; that they come to prayer slothfully; and that they offer contributions grudgingly." The verses paint a classic picture for the hypocrites. Hypocrisy results in hearts with no conviction. Hypocrisy breeds cowardice. Hypocrites are afraid to express their true beliefs. They have no internal drive to motivate them to perform prayers or to spend in the way of God. They perform prayers reluctantly and they spend out of fear. God does not accept superficial acts which are not based on a deep conviction of the belief in Him.

The hypocrites were wealthy and powerful in their community. But no one should be impressed by their wealth or power because this was the way God tested them. "So let not their riches nor their children impress you (Muhammad). God only wishes to torment them thereby in the life of this world and that their souls shall pass away while they are disbelievers." Wealth and offspring are blessings from God; He bestows them on His servants. Servants who are blessed with wealth and offspring should express their gratitude to God for His bounty. Gratitude is expressed by raising good offspring and spending the wealth in a way that pleases God. In this case, wealth and offspring will be a source of happiness and content. If they suffer a loss in wealth or offspring, then they put their trust in God and they say “God is sufficient for us.” Wealth and offspring are a source of trouble and misery for those who do not put their trust in God.

Hypocrites came to the fold of Islam motivated by fear and greed. “They swear by God that they indeed belong to you while they do not belong to you, but they are people who are afraid.” They tried all the time to assure the Muslims that they were part of the Muslim community. They wanted to cover up their true nature, a nature of cowardice and insecurity. The expression, “If they could find a place to flee to, or caves, or a place of concealment, they would turn to it in great haste,” reflects how desperate they were to cover up their true feelings.

“And among them are those who disparage you in the matter of (the distribution of) the poor due. If they are given part thereof, they are pleased, but if not, they become enraged.” The verse addresses the Messenger of God (PBUH) telling him about the hypocrites who were critical of the Messenger’s way of distributing the poor due. Their criticism was motivated by their greed. If they were given plenty, they were pleased. They did not care whether there were others who were more deserving than them. Several stories were narrated about those hypocrites who complained about the Prophet’s (PBUH) unfairness in distributing the poor due among the believers. Their complaints were only motivated by greed and the hatred they harboured for the believers. Their approach was not befitting a believer. The Quran illustrated how the proper approach should have been, “If only had they been content with what God and His Messenger gave them, and had said, ‘God is sufficient for us. God and His Messenger will soon give us of His bounty, and to God do we turn our hopes.’” This is the proper approach for those who learnt the manners in the school of faith. Believers should be content with whatever God and His Messenger (PBUH) bestow on them. It is a contentment that is the result of voluntary submission to God, not a contentment that is forced upon them. Believers should put their hopes in God and devote themselves to Him without looking for any material gains.

Having clarified the proper etiquette in dealing with God and His Messenger, the verses continue to emphasize that the Messenger (PBUH) had no say in how the poor due are to be distributed. Poor due are distributed according to God’s command, “The poor due are only for the poor, the needy, those who are employed to administer the (funds), those whose hearts have been (recently) reconciled (to truth), those in bondage, those in debt, in the cause of God, and for the wayfarer. This is ordained by God, and God is Omniscient, Wise.” This is God’s legislation regarding the poor due. It is not a gift or a donation that is given by the rich. It is a duty that has to be fulfilled by those who are eligible to pay; and it is a right for those who are eligible to receive. It is an integral part of the system of social justice in Islam. The poor due is only one of the components of the social justice in Islam. There are other components which complement the poor due which make the system a comprehensive system that covers all aspects of the needs of the members of the society.

The verse lists those who are eligible to receive the poor due. The first category includes the poor and the needy. Then, there are those who are employed to collect the poor due. Next come those whose hearts have been reconciled. This category includes those who reverted to Islam recently and those who are in the process of reverting to Islam. There is a difference in opinion between the scholars whether this category exists today or not. It is important to continue to give people in this category their due share from the poor due because of the real life dynamics of the Muslim society. The verse indicates that the poor due can also be used to free slaves. At the time of the revelation of the Quran, slavery was a well established world-wide institution. Islam established a practical tool to help slaves who wanted to buy their freedom. The poor due can also be used to pay the debt for those who are in debt and are unable to pay their debt. The poor due can also be spent in the way of God. This is a comprehensive category which encompasses any activity that would be beneficial to the community. Finally, the poor due can be used to support the travellers whose means were depleted and are unable to cover the expenses needed for them to reach their destination. The verse ends by a reminder that that the poor due and its distribution have been mandated by God, He knows best what is good for His servants.

Having stated the rules for distributing the poor due, the verses return to address those who casted doubt on the fairness of the Prophet (PBUH), “Among them are men who abuse the Prophet and say, ‘He is (all) ear.’ Say, ‘He listens to what is best for you. He believes in God, has faith in the believers, and is a mercy to those of you who believe.’ But those who abuse the Messenger will have a painful torment.” They misunderstood the decency of the Prophet (PBUH) in dealing with people. The Prophet (PBUH) used to treat people nicely according to the Islamic etiquette. He listened to people and took what they said at its face value. The hypocrites underestimated the Prophet (PBUH) and thought they could deceive him. The Quran responds to their allegations, saying that the Prophet (PBUH) has a good ear. He listens to the revelations and conveys it to them and he listens to people but he is able to differentiate between the truthfulness and falsehood. The Prophet (PBUH) believed in God and he was sent as a mercy to those who believed. Those who attempted to hurt the Prophet (PBUH) will suffer a painful torment.

“They swear by God to you (Muslims) to please you, but it is more fitting for them to please God and His messenger, if they were believers.” The verse described the classical approach for the hypocrites at all times. The hypocrites always avoid confrontation. They work behind the scenes but when they come face to face with the believers they try to please them by all means. It is God that they should try to please. They deserved to be rebuked and they should be warned of the consequence of their deeds, “Do they not know that whoever opposes God and His Messenger, he shall certainly have the fire of hell to abide in it? That is the great ignominy.”

“The Hypocrites are apprehensive lest a Sura should be revealed telling them plainly of what is in their hearts. Say, ‘Go on mocking, God will certainly expose what you fear.’” The verse provided a general description of the insecurity of the hypocrites. The verse was revealed to address several incidents which occurred at that time. Muhammad bin Ishaq narrated that a group of the hypocrites were among the army that the Prophet (PBUH) led to the battle of Tabuk. They were talking to each other about how deluded the Muslims were in trying to fight the Romans. They were spreading rumours to weaken the spirits of the Muslims. The verse came to tell the Prophet (PBUH) about the hypocrites’ talk. The Prophet (PBUH) sent ‘Ammar bin Yaser (RA) to warn them that the Prophet (PBUH) is aware of their plots. One of them came to the Prophet (PBUH) to apologize saying that they were only joking, “If you (Muhammad) ask them, they will say, ‘We were only talking idly and in jest.’ Say, ‘Was it at God and His revelations and His Messenger that you were mocking?’ Make no excuses. You have disbelieved after you had believed. If We pardon a party of you, We shall torment another party because they were criminals.” The verse emphasized the gravity of their deed. Their deed brought them back to disbelief after they had adopted Islam. The verse warned them of the grievous punishment that awaits those of them who did not repent.

“The hypocrite men and hypocrite women are all alike; they enjoin evil and forbid good and withhold their hands; they have forsaken God, so He has forsaken them; indeed, the hypocrites are the transgressors. God promised the hypocrites, both men and women, and the disbelievers the fire of Hell. Therein shall they dwell. It will suffice them. God cursed them and theirs is a lasting torment.” All hypocrites share the same characteristics and they have the same nature. They behave in deceptive ways. They are afraid to look people in the eye and say exactly what they actually believe in. They encourage evil and discourage good deeds. They are stingy unless they want to show off. They forgot God, and God will forget them. They are truly transgressors. They have transgressed the limits of faith. They have been cursed and destined to Hell fire.

The Quran reminded the hypocrites with previous generations who behaved similarly. The Qur’an warned them that they will meet the same fate, “As in the case of those before you, they were mightier than you in power and more flourishing in wealth and children. They had their portion of enjoyment and you had yours, as did those before you; and you indulged in idle talk as they did. Such are they whose deeds are fruitless in this world and in the Hereafter, and it is they who are the losers.” God bestowed on those who came before them power and children to test them. Those who were afraid of God spent their wealth in God’s way. They showed their gratitude for the bounty that God bestowed on them by raising their children to obey God. But those who forgot the source of the blessings and the power they received became arrogant. Their deeds were all in vain and they lost everything.

“Have they never heard the stories of those who came before them? - The People of Noah, ‘Ad, and Thamud; the people of Abraham, the people of Madyan, and the cities overthrown. Their messengers came to them with clear signs. God would have never wronged them, but they wronged their own souls.” The verse narrates the examples of people who were destroyed before, Noah’s people who perished in the flood, the tribe of ‘Ad who were destroyed with severe wind, the tribe of Thamud who met their death as a result of the loud scream, the tribe of Madyan who were destroyed in an earth quake, and others. The Quran wonders at the heedlessness of people who knew about these stories. God did not wrong them. It is they that wronged themselves by being heedless. They were blinded by their power and wealth and forgot that these were means that God used to test them. So, they failed the test.

Opposite to those who were heedless, stand the true believers, “The Believers, men and women, are protecting guardians of one another. They enjoin what is right and forbid what is evil; they establish regular prayers and pay the prescribed alms; and they obey God and His Messenger. God will have mercy on them. God is Eminent, Wise.” The verse describes the believers as “protecting guardians” of one another while the previous verse which talked about the hypocrites said, “The hypocrite men and hypocrite women are all alike;” Offering protection to one another requires a noble character which is bent on courage and sacrifice. Such attributes are part of the character of a believer. Hypocrites are usually lacking in this area. The believers are engaged in enjoining what is good and forbidding what is evil. Such actions require a united front which is formed by the believers who stand side by side each others. They establish prayers and pay the prescribed poor due and obey God. They follow the commands of God and His Messenger (PBUH) and they are happy with whatever God and His Messenger (PBUH) decree for them. They will gain the mercy of God. Mercy is not meant to be in the Hereafter only, but it will engulf the believers in this life as well. The believers enjoy four attributes: they enjoin what is right, they forbid what is evil, they establish prayers, and they pay the prescribed poor due. The hypocrites, on the other hand, have four opposing attributes: they enjoin what is evil, they forbid what is good, they forget God, and they are stingy. God is able to bestow His honour on the believers and He is wise in timing this honour.

The reward for the believers are then stated, “God promised the believers, men and women, gardens under which rivers flow to dwell therein, and beautiful mansions in gardens of everlasting bliss. But the greatest bliss is the good pleasure of God. That is the supreme felicity.”

“Prophet, strive hard against the disbelievers and the hypocrites, and be firm against them. Their abode is Hell, an evil destination indeed.” The Messenger was quite lenient in dealing with the hypocrites. This verse commanded him to change his strategy in dealing with the hypocrites. The verse combined the hypocrites and the disbelievers in one category. Leniency did not work with the hypocrites so it was time to try another strategy.

The hypocrites had a long history of trying to hurt the Messenger (PBUH) and the believers, “They swear by God that they said nothing (evil), but indeed they uttered the word of disbelief, and they did disbelieve after they accepted Islam. They meditated a plot which they were unable to carry out. They were not resentful except (for the fact) that God and His messenger had enriched them of His bounty. So, if they repent it will be better for them; and if they turn away, God will afflict them with a painful torment in the world and the Hereafter, and they have no protecting guardian nor a helper on earth.” They were never ill treated by Muslims, so why were they bent on hurting the Muslims? Were they angry because they were given their share of the wealth that the Muslims gained? However, God gave them another chance for repentance. Those who forfeited this chance will suffer great torment in this life as well as in the Hereafter.

The verses continued to describe examples of the hypocrites, “And of them is he who made a covenant with God (saying), ‘If He gives us of His bounty we will certainly spend in charity and become of the righteous.’ But when He bestowed of His bounty on them, they became niggardly, and turned back (from their covenant), averse. He penalized them with hypocrisy in their hearts, (to last) till the Day whereon they shall meet Him - because they broke their covenant with God, and because they lied (again and again).” Of them were those who asked God of His bounty, promising God that they if He bestows His bounty on them they would be generous to the needy. However, when God responded favourably to their request and provided them with His bounty, they reneged on their promise. Hypocrisy took hold of their hearts as a result of reneging on their promise to God. Reneging on the promise is one of the signs of hypocrisy. The Prophet (PBUH) has been quoted to have said, “A hypocrite has three attributes: He lies when he talks, he reneges on his promise when he makes a promise, and he betrays the trust when he is entrusted with a trust.”

“Do they not know that God knows their secret (thoughts) and their secret counsel, and that God knows well all things unseen?” They should have known that God knows what is in their hearts. Did they really, thought that they can keep a secret from God?

“Those who criticize the believers who give freely to charity and those who can find nothing to give except the fruits of their labour, so they mock them. God will mock them and they shall have a painful torment.” Ibn Jareer narrated a story, on the authority of E’kremah (RA), about an event that occurred before the revelation of this verse. He said, “The Messenger (PBUH) urged the believers to provide financial support for the army going to the battle of Tabuk. Abd El-Rahman bin A’wf (RA) contributed half his wealth and kept the other half as a provision for his family. The Prophet (PBUH) said, ‘God bless what you contributed and what you kept.’ Another man by the name of Abu O’kael (RA) contributed half the date that he had and kept the other half for his family. The hypocrites scoffed at these contributions saying, ‘Ibn A’wf’s (RA) contribution is only a show off and Abu O’kael’s (RA) contribution is trivial.” The verse responded to their mocking, “God will mock them and they shall have a painful torment.”

“Ask (Muhammad) God to forgive them, or do not. If you ask seventy times for their forgiveness, God will not forgive them. This is because they disbelieved in God and His Messenger. God guides not the transgressors.” Their destiny has been sealed. There is no use for asking God to forgive them because they have already gone too far and there is no hope that they will return back to the straight path. The number “seventy” is a number which indicates a multitude in the Arabic language and should not be taken literally.

The theme changes to address the case of those who remained behind, “Those who were left behind (during the Tabuk expedition) rejoiced at sitting still behind the Messenger of God. They hated to strive and fight, with their wealth and their persons, in the cause of God. They said, ‘Do not go forth in the heat.’ Say, ‘The fire of Hell is more intense in heat.’ If only they could understand.” Those are the people whose love for a comfortable life and their greed kept them from joining the ranks of the believers in fighting their enemy. Their hearts were void of faith and they did not have the spirit to fight. They said to each other, “Do not go forth in the heat.”

Tell them, “The fire of Hell is more intense in heat.” Their happiness will be short lived and soon they will be recompensed for what they had done, “Let them laugh a little (then) weep much. This is the recompense they earned for the (evil) that they did.” They will laugh in this life for a few days but they will weep in the Hereafter forever. They will receive a reward commensurate with their deeds.

“If God should return you to a party of them, and they ask your permission to go out (with you), say, ‘Never shall you go out with me, nor fight an enemy with me. Indeed, you preferred to sit still on the first occasion. Then sit you (now) with those who lag behind.’” Those were people who were not worthy of joining the ranks of the believers because of their weak will and lack of commitment. They forfeited their right to be treated honourably when they die, “And never (Muhammad) pray for one of them who dies nor stand by his grave. They disbelieved in God and His messenger, and they died while they were transgressors.” There are narratives which relate this verse to specific incidents. However, the verse states a general rule. It indicated that honor should be bestowed only on those who work hard and are committed to the Muslim nation at the time of need. The Prophet (PBUH) was commanded not to perform funeral prayers for the hypocrites because, “They disbelieved in God and His messenger, and they died while they were transgressors.”

“Let not their wealth nor their children impress you. God intends to punish them with these things in the world, and that their souls may perish while they are disbelievers.” Being impressed with their wealth or children is a recognition that they did not deserve.

“When a Sura is revealed, enjoining them to believe in God and to strive along with His Messenger, those with wealth and influence among them ask you for exemption saying, ‘Leave us (behind). We would be with those who sit (at home).’ They preferred to be with those who remain behind (at home). A seal was set on their hearts so they understand not. But the Messenger, and those who believed with him, strived with their wealth and their persons. For them are all the good things and it is they who will be successful. God prepared for them gardens under which rivers flow, to dwell therein. That is the supreme triumph.” Whenever a Sura came to command the believers to strive in the way of God, those who have the means to fight came seeking an exemption. They were happy to be left behind with the women and children who do not fight. They did not feel any shame that their delinquency became apparent because they had no appreciation of the pride of being part of a striving force. On the other hand, the Messenger (PBUH) and the believers with him strived very hard with their wealth and their selves. They carried the burden and performed the duty entrusted to them. They will reap the best results in this life and in the Hereafter. They will be honoured in this life and they will have the great reward in the Hereafter.

“And those among the wandering Arabs who had excuses came in order that permission might be granted them. And those who lied to God and His messenger sat at home. A painful torment will fall on those of them who disbelieved.” Those who had legitimate reasons for seeking exemption not to fight, their reasons were accepted. But those who had no legitimate reasons only told a lie. Those among them who had disbelieved will suffer grievous torment.

“There is no blame on those who are infirm, or ill, or who find no resources to spend (on the cause), if they are sincere (in duty) to God and His Messenger. No ground (of complaint) can there be against such as do right; God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy. Nor (is there blame) on those who came to you to be provided with mounts, you said, ‘I can find no mounts for you,’ they turned back, their eyes streaming with tears of grief that they could not find the means to spend.’ Neither the weak, the elderly, nor the ill who were unable to bear arms were to be blamed for not joining the Muslim army in its expedition. No blame also should fall on those who were able to fight but could not afford an animal to ride on. These were sincere in their wish to help in God’s cause. They felt bad for their inability to provide such help. It was narrated that Ibn Abbas (RA) said, “A group of people came to the Prophet (PBUH) asking for rides so that they can fight with the Muslims. The Prophet (PBUH) told them that he had no rides for them. They left crying and feeling sad they were unable to join the expedition. It was then that this verse was revealed to accept their excuse.”

Verses: 93 to 96

93. Indeed, there is grounds for a complaint against those who claim exemption while they are rich. They preferred to stay with those who remained behind. God has placed a seal over their hearts so that they do not know.
94. They will make excuses to you (Muslims) when you return back to them. Say, “Make no excuse, for we shall not believe you. God has informed us of your news. God and His Messenger will observe your deeds, and then you will be brought back to Him who knows the unseen as well as the seen, and He will tell you what you used to do.
95. They will swear to you by God, when you return to them, that you would leave them alone. So leave them alone. They are indeed an abomination, and their refuge is Hell as a reward for what they used to earn.
96. They will swear to you, that you may be pleased with them but if you are pleased with them, God is not pleased with the transgressing folk. (9: 93 – 96)

“The ground (of complaint) is against only those who claim exemption while they are rich. They preferred to stay with those who remained behind. God has sealed their hearts so they do not know.” The verse states that only those who could afford, both physically and financially, to fight with the Muslim army but chose to stay behind are the one who deserve to be rebuked. They had no real excuse that prevented them to join the army but they were delinquent in the fulfilment of their duty. For these reasons God sealed upon their hearts. God told His Messenger (PBUH) on the way back from the expedition how those who remained behind will continue to make excuses and how he should respond to them, “They will make excuses to you (Muslims) when you return back to them. Say, ‘Make no excuse, for we shall not believe you. God has informed us of your news. God and His messenger will observe your deeds, and then you will be brought back to Him who knows the unseen as well as the seen, and He will tell you what you used to do.’” Nothing can be kept secret from God. He knows your secret intentions.

“They will swear to you by God, when you return to them, that you would leave them alone. So leave them alone. They are indeed an abomination, and their abode is hell as a reward for what they used to earn.” The verse continued to tell the Prophet (PBUH) about the hypocrites. The Prophet (PBUH) was commanded to turn away from them because they are an abomination. They are destined to Hell fire; this is a result that they gained because of their deeds.

“They will swear to you, that you may be pleased with them but if you are pleased with them, God is not pleased with the transgressing folk.” They started by asking the Muslims to forgive them, they will ask for Muslims’ acceptance to secure their safety in the Muslim community. They were hoping that the Muslims would continue to take what they say at its face value as they used to do before. However, this verse came with the final decree regarding these hypocrites. They were transgressors because they stayed behind. God is not pleased with them because He does not like those who are transgressors.

Verses: 97 to 110

97. The wandering Arabs are worst in disbelief and hypocrisy and more likely to be ignorant of the limits which God has revealed to His messenger; and God is Omniscient, Wise.
98. Some of the wandering Arabs consider what they spend as a loss and wait for an (evil) turn of fortune for you. The evil turn of fortune will be theirs; God is All-Hearing, Omniscient.
99. But some of the wandering Arabs believe in God and the Last Day, and consider what they spend as pious gifts bringing them nearer to God and receiving the blessings of the Messenger. Indeed, their gifts bring them nearer (to Him); God will admit them to His Mercy; God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.
100. God is pleased with the forerunners (in faith) of the emigrants (who migrated from Mecca) and the supporters (inhabitants of Medina) and those who followed them in good deeds; as they are well pleased with Him. He prepared for them gardens under which rivers flow, to dwell therein for ever. That is the supreme triumph.
101. And among those around you of the wandering Arabs, there are hypocrites; and among the townspeople of Medina (there are some who) persist in hypocrisy. You (Muhammad) do not know them, We know them. We will torment them twice; then they will be relegated to grievous torment.
102. And (there are) others who have admitted their sins. They mixed a righteous deed with another that was bad. It may be that God will relent toward them; God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.
103. Take from their wealth a charity, wherewith you may cleanse and purify them, and pray for them. Your prayer will be a source for comfort for them; God is All-Hearing, Omniscient.
104. Do they not know that God accepts repentance from His servants and receives their charity? God is Ever-Relenting, Giver of Mercy.
105. And say (Prophet), “Act,” God will observe your deeds, and His Messenger, and the believers. Soon you will be brought back to Him who knows what is seen and what is unseen, and He will tell you what you used to do.

106. There are (yet) others who await God's decree, whether He will torment them or will forgive them. God is Omniscient, Wise.
107. And there are those who chose a place of worship to cause harm and disbelief, and in order to cause dissent among the believers, and as an outpost for those who fought against God and His Messenger aforetime. They will certainly swear, "We only intended the best." God bears witness that they are indeed liars.
108. Never stand (to pray) there. A place of worship which was founded upon God consciousness from the first day is more worthy for you to stand (to pray) therein, wherein are men who love to purify themselves. God loves those who purify themselves.
109. Is he who founded his building upon God consciousness and His good pleasure better; or he who founded his building on the brink of a crumbling, overhanging precipice so that it toppled with him into the fire of Hell? God guides not the wrongdoing folk.
110. The building which they built will never cease to be a source of doubt in their hearts until their hearts are torn to pieces; God is Omniscient, Wise. (9:97-110)

This section of the Sura provides a description of the different groups which constituted the Muslim community at the time when the battle of Tabuk took place. The first group of people were the wandering Arabs who lived around the city of Medina. These Arabs used to attack the Muslims in Medina but later they accepted Islam. The verse described the nature of this group, "The wandering Arabs are stronger in disbelief and hypocrisy, and more likely to be ignorant of the limits which God has revealed to His messenger; and God is Omniscient, Wise." These tribes lived an isolated life in the desert with little interaction with the civil society in Medina. They had little chance to learn from the Messenger of God (PBUH). They lived a tough life dominated by material values. The harshness of the character of the wandering Arabs is the subject of many old anecdotes.

After this general statement about the original characteristic of the wandering Arabs, the verse describes how Islam changed some of them while it failed to change others. "Some of the wandering Arabs consider what they spend as a loss and await for an (evil) turn of fortune for you. The evil turn of fortune will be theirs; God is All-Hearing, Omniscient." This was the group that reluctantly accepted Islam motivated by greed. They neither wanted to contribute to the community, nor did they care for the welfare of this community. They hated the duties that were ordained for the Muslims: paying the poor due and striving in God's cause. They bemoaned the fact that they had to spend in the way of God and considered the money they spent a loss. They had ill wishes for the Muslims and wanted them to be defeated. God hears what they say and knows what they do.

But the hearts of some of the wandering Arabs were touched by Islam, "But some of the wandering Arabs believe in God and the Last Day, and consider what they spend as pious gifts bringing them nearer to God and obtaining the prayers of the Messenger. Indeed, they (their gifts) bring them nearer (to Him); God will admit them to His Mercy; God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy." They accepted Islam motivated by true belief in God and the Last Day. These people considered spending in the way of God a means for pleasing God and seeking His nearness. They aspired for the Messenger's (PBUH) prayers as a sign for the acceptance of their deeds. God will forgive them and admit them to His mercy. The verse visualizes God's mercy as a home to which they would be admitted.

“God is pleased with the first forerunners (in faith) of the emigrants (who migrated from Mecca) and the supporters (inhabitants of Medina) and those who followed them in good deeds; as they are well pleased with Him. He prepared for them gardens under which rivers flow, to dwell therein forever. That is the supreme triumph.” The verse mentions the three categories of Muslims who constituted the strong foundation of the Muslim community in Arabia after the conquest of Mecca. There are many interpretations given for the term “first forerunners,” but we think that most probably it refers to those who accepted Islam before the battle of Badr. God will reward the first forerunners as well as those who followed in their footsteps by bestowing His pleasure on them. God's pleasure is the greatest reward. They will also be pleased with their Lord. Their pleasure emanates from their feelings of security under God's care, their trust in Him, their acceptance of His decrees, their gratitude for His blessings, and their perseverance during times of trial. The term “pleasure” conveys a comprehensive meaning of contentment that shapes the relationship between them and God. It is a great honour for them that they were allowed to engage in such a relationship with their Lord. This is truly the supreme triumph.

In contrast to those who will win the supreme triumph, there was another group, “And among those around you of the wandering Arabs there are hypocrites, and among the townspeople of Medina (there are some who) persist in hypocrisy. You (Muhammad) do not know them, We know them. We will torment them twice; then they will be relegated to grievous torment.” The verse warned the Prophet (PBUH) of a group of the hypocrites who excelled in the practice of hypocrisy to the extent that even the Prophet (PBUH) did not recognize their true colors. But, God knows them and He will foil their plots. They will be punished twice in this life: a punishment which they will suffer as a result of living in fear that their plot will be discovered, and a second punishment at the hands of the angels who will come to capture their souls at the time of death.

There was yet a third group, “who have admitted their sins. They mixed a righteous deed with another that was bad. It may be that God will relent toward them; God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.” The verse commanded the Prophet (PBUH) to deal with this group in a specific way which indicates that they were known to him. They were the people who did not join the Muslim army in the battle of Tabuk, but later recognized their sin and repented. Ibn Gareer said that “It may be that God will relent toward them” implies that God will forgive them.

The Prophet (PBUH) was commanded to “Take from their wealth a charity, wherewith you may purify them and may make them grow, and pray for them. Your prayer will be a source for comfort for them; God is All-Hearing, Omniscient.” They regretted what they had done and repented so, God gave them hope and filled their hearts with comfort. God listens and knows.

“Do they not know that God does accept repentance from His servants and receives their charity? God is verily the Ever-Relenting, Giver of Mercy.” This is a rhetorical question. They should know that God accepts the repentance of His slaves, receives their charity, and forgives them.

The Islamic project is based on a creed that should be manifested in the deeds of the believers. “And say (Prophet), ‘Act,’ God will observe your deeds, and His Messenger, and the Believers. Soon you will be brought back to Him who knows what is seen and unseen, and He will tell you what you used to do.” The sign that shows the truth of their repentance is if they act upon their words. In this life, their deeds will be seen by God, His Messenger, and all the believers. But in the Hereafter, It is God who will judge their deeds; He knows their actions as well as the secrets of their hearts. It is not enough to regret one’s sin and to express repentance but it is important to act accordingly. Islam provides a plan for a realistic way of life. Good intentions have to be confirmed with appropriate deeds.

The last group mentioned in these verses is a group whose fate had not been decreed by God yet, “There are (yet) others who await God's decree, whether He will torment them or will forgive them. God is Omniscient, Wise.” This was a group of people who did not participate in the battle of Tabuk but they were not among the other groups described above.

“And there are those who chose a place of worship to cause harm and disbelief, and in order to cause dissent among the believers, and as an outpost for those who fought against God and His messenger aforetime. They will certainly swear, ‘We only intended the best.’ God bears witness that they are indeed liars.” The verse narrates an event contemporaneous to the battle of Tabuk. Ibn Katheer mentioned in his interpretation of Quran that, “One of the chiefs of the tribe of Khazraj by the name of Abu A’mer El-Raheb who had embraced Christianity resented the fact that the Prophet (PBUH) migrated to Medina and became the head of the Medinian government. When the Prophet (PBUH) called him to Islam, he refused and decided to move from Medina to join the idolaters of Mecca in their war against the Muslims. Abu A’mer then approached the Roman king to move against Muhammad (PBUH). The Roman king was agreeable. Abo A’mer wrote to his followers in Medina, in anticipation of the Roman expedition against the Muslims in Medina, to build a place to be used as his headquarters upon his victory over the Muslims. Abo A’mer’s followers established a building which looked like a Mosque near the Mosque of Qibaa. They were able to finish the building just before the battle of Tabuk had started. They came to the Prophet (PBUH) asking him to bless their Mosque with his prayers. However, the Prophet (PBUH) was already on his route to Tabuk so he said to them that he will do that after he comes back from Tabuk. On his way back from Tabuk, the Prophet (PBUH) received a revelation disclosing the plan of the hypocrites and their collusion with Abu A’mer. The Prophet (PBUH) commanded one of his companions to destroy the mosque.” This was the story of the mosque that was built to be a base for hypocrites who wanted to hurt the believers.

“Never stand (to pray) there. A place of worship which was founded upon God consciousness from the first day is more worthy for you to stand (to pray) therein, wherein are men who love to purify themselves. God loves those who purify themselves. Is he who founded his building upon God consciousness and His good pleasure better; or he who founded his building on the brink of a crumbling, overhanging precipice so that it toppled with him into the fire of Hell? God guides not the wrongdoing folk. The building which they built will never cease to be a source of doubt in their hearts until their hearts are torn to pieces. God is Omniscient, Wise.” The verses paint a dynamic image of two buildings side by side. One of the buildings is well established on a strong foundation, while the other is built on an overhanging edge that has no support. The overhanging edge very quickly gave way and the building that it carried fell into Hell fire. The destruction of the building left traces of doubt into their hearts. These doubts will linger forever in their hearts depriving them of safety and security.

Verses: 111 to 129

111. Indeed, God has purchased from the believers their persons and their wealth in return for paradise. They fight in God’s cause, and shall slay and be slain. It is a promise which is binding on Him in the Torah, the Gospel, and the Quran. And who is more faithful to his covenant than God? Then rejoice in the bargain which you have concluded. That is the supreme triumph.
112. (The believers are) those who turn (to God) in repentance, who serve Him, who praise Him, who wander in devotion in God’s cause, who bow down, who prostrate themselves in prayer, who enjoin good, who forbid evil, and who observe the limits set by God; and give glad tidings to the believers.
113. It is not fitting, for the Prophet and those who believe, that they should pray for forgiveness for the idolaters, even though they may be of kin, after it has become clear to them that they are companions of the Fire.
114. The prayer of Abraham for the forgiveness of his father was only because of a promise he had promised him, but when it had become clear to him that he (his father) was an enemy to God, he (Abraham) disowned him. Abraham was soft hearted, forbearing.
115. And God will not mislead a people after He had guided them, until He had made clear to them what they should avoid. God has knowledge of all things.
116. Indeed, to God belongs the dominion of the heavens and the earth. He gives life and He takes it. You have neither a protecting guardian nor a helper besides God.
117. God has forgiven the Prophet, the migrants (Muhajirin) and the supporters (Ansar) who followed him in the time of distress, after the hearts of a group of them had nearly swerved aside; then He turned to them (also) in mercy. He is to them All-Pitying, Giver of Mercy.
118. And (He also forgave) the three who were left behind, when the earth, vast as it is, was straitened for them, and their own souls were straitened for them till they knew for certain that there is no refuge from God except with Him. Then turned He to them in mercy that they (too) might turn (repentant to Him); God, He is the Ever-Relenting, the Giver of Mercy.
119. You who believe, be conscious of God and be with the truthful.

120. It was not fitting for the people of Medina and the wandering Arabs of the neighbourhood, to refuse to follow God's Messenger, nor to prefer their own lives to his. Nothing could they suffer or do, but was reckoned to their credit as a deed of righteousness - whether they suffered thirst, fatigue, or hunger in the cause of God, or they trod paths to raise the ire of the disbelievers, or received any injury from an enemy. Certainly, God does not waste the reward of those who do good.
121. Nor do they spend anything (for the cause) - small or great- nor cut across a valley, but the deed is recorded to their credit so that God may reward them the best (possible reward).
122. And the believers should not all go out to fight. Of every company of them, a party only should go forth, that they (who are left behind) may gain sound knowledge in religion, and that they may warn their folk when they return to them, so that they may beware.
123. You who believe, fight the disbelievers who are near to you, and let them find harshness in you, and know that God is with those who are conscious of Him.
124. Whenever a Sura is revealed, there are some of them who say, "Which one of you has this increased his faith? As for those who believe, it has increased them in faith and they rejoice.
125. But those in whose hearts is a disease, it will add wickedness to their wickedness, and they die while they are disbelievers.
126. Do they not see that they are tested once or twice every year? Yet they do neither turn in repentance, nor do they take heed.
127. And whenever a Sura is revealed, they look at each other (as if to say), "Does anybody see you?" Then they turn away. God turned away their hearts because they are a folk who do not understand.
128. Certainly a Messenger has come to you from among yourselves; grievous to him is your suffering. He is full of concern for you; to the believers (he is) compassionate, merciful.
129. But if they turn away, say (Muhammad), "God suffices me. There is no deity but He. In Him I put my trust. He is the Lord of the Supreme Throne." (9:111-129)

"Indeed, God has purchased from the believers their persons and their wealth in return for paradise. They fight in God's cause, and shall slay and be slain. It is a promise which is binding on Him in the Torah, the Gospel, and the Quran. And who is more faithful to his covenant than God? Then rejoice in the bargain which you have concluded. That is the supreme triumph. The believers are) those who turn (to God) in repentance, who serve Him, who praise Him, who wander in devotion in God's cause, who bow down, who prostrate themselves in prayer, who enjoin good, who forbid evil, and who observe the limits set by God; and give the glad tidings to the believers." I have heard and read these verses numerous times while reciting, memorizing and studying the Quran for more than twenty-five years. Yet, only when I read this text during writing this book that I understood meanings that I did not understand before. It is a tremendous text. It reveals the nature of the relationship between the believers and God and the nature of the oath of allegiance that the believers made to God. Only those who made that oath of allegiance are true believers. Through this oath of allegiance, which God by His grace called “purchase,” the believers gave up all rights to their persons and their wealth and devoted them solely to God. They have given up all rights to their persons and their wealth so, they have no right to dispose of any of them in any way except as God ordains. He had bought their wealth and their persons and thus, He acquired the sole right to dispose of them as He wishes. Those who sold their souls and their wealth no longer had any right to argue or contest how they are being disposed of. The price that they will receive for their bargain is paradise; the road to paradise is striving and fighting; and the end result is either victory or martyrdom.

The believers sold their persons and their wealth to God. It is by God’s grace that He decreed a price for this merchandise. It is by the Grace of God that He honoured the believers and allowed them to have the will to sell their persons and their wealth. God bestowed on humankind the right and ability to engage in contracts. Humankind was honoured by the ability to engage in a contract with God Himself. The fulfilment of the contract of God is a criterion that differentiates humans and beasts, “The worst of creatures in the sight of God are those who reject Him. They will not believe. The ones with whom you made a covenant, but they break their covenant every time, and they are not conscious of God.” (8:55-56) I was awed by these words. It is a great responsibility. It is an obligation for each one of those who call themselves Muslims, who abandoned striving in the way of God allowing tyrants to rule the earth.

The early Muslims used to listen to the words of Quran and act upon them. It was narrated that Abd Allah bin Rawaha (RA) said to the Prophet (PBUH), during the deliberations that preceded the Oath of Allegiance of ‘Aqaba, “Tell us the terms of the oath of allegiance that would satisfy you and your Lord.” The Prophet (PBUH) said, “I ask you to serve my Lord alone and do not associate partners with Him and I ask for your protection the same way you protect yourselves and your wealth.” Ibn Rawaha (RA) said, “If we do this, what do we get in return?” The Prophet (PBUH) said, “Paradise.” Ibn Rawaha (RA) said, “This is a profitable bargain. We will keep our part of the deal.”

This is God’s covenant, “And who is more faithful to his covenant than God?” which He made in the Torah, the Gospel and the Quran. The original Torah and Gospel are no longer available. The present texts have suffered many changes. However, the old Testament still has references to the obligation of striving in the way of God but there are no similar references in the Gospel.

Striving in the way of God is not simply an impulse to fight. It is a duty that is based on a solid foundation of faith. Faith is a combination of feelings, high morals, ethical behaviour, and actions. Those who strive in the way of God are, “those who turn (to God) in repentance, who serve Him, who praise Him, who wander in devotion in God’s cause, who bow down, who prostrate themselves in prayer, who enjoin good, who forbid evil, and who observe the limits set by God.” They regret their previous sins and they seek God’s forgiveness. They have the strong conviction to abandon bad practices and purify themselves. They serve God alone, never associating partners with Him. They praise God. Their hearts beat with the gratitude to God. Their tongue continuously utter God’s praises, both in secret and in the open, whether rich or poor.

There are different interpretations of the expression that has been translated here as “who wander in devotion in God’s cause.” Some say the expression refers to those who migrate. Some say it refers to those who strive in God’s cause. Others say, it refers to those who travel seeking knowledge. Still others say, it refers to those who fast. We are of the opinion that it refers to those who contemplate God’s creation. They are those who were mentioned in the verse, “In the creation of the heavens and the earth and the alternation of night and day, there are indeed signs for men of understanding. Those who celebrate the praises of God, standing, sitting, and lying down on their sides, and contemplate the (wonders of) the creation of the heavens and the earth, and say, “Our Lord, You have not created all of this in vain.” Glory be to You.” (3: 190 – 191) This interpretation seems a logical extension of the other attributes of the believers which are mentioned in these verses. Repentance, worshiping God, and showing gratitude to Him lead to the contemplation about the wonders of the creation of God. Through contemplation they gain knowledge of the purpose of God’s creation which helps them build a better life on this earth.

The verse continues to list the attributes of the believers; those who bow and prostrate in prayers; those who enjoin good and forbid evil; and those who observe the limits set by God. These are the attributes of the believers who made an oath of allegiance with God and who sold their persons and their wealth for a place in paradise.

“It is not fitting, for the Prophet and those who believe, that they should pray for forgiveness for the idolaters, even though they may be of kin, after it has become clear to them that they are companions of the Fire.” It seems that some Muslims used to pray God to forgive their parents who were idolaters. They also used to ask the Prophet (PBUH) to pray God to forgive their parents. The verse was revealed to command the Muslims to cease asking for forgiveness for their relatives who were still, or who died while, being idolaters. The bond of faith takes precedent over the blood bond.

“The prayer of Abraham for the forgiveness of his father was only because of a promise he had promised him, but when it had become clear to him that he (his father) was an enemy to God he (Abraham) disowned him. Abraham was soft hearted, forbearing.” Prophet’s Abraham (PBUH) request for forgiveness for his father should not be taken as a precedent. Prophet Abraham (PBUH) wanted his father to believe, however, when his father died while being an idolater, Prophet Abraham (PBUH) stopped praying God to forgive him.

When the believers heard the previous two verses, they were worried that they had committed a sin by asking God to forgive their idolatrous parents. So, the next verse was revealed to assure the believers that God does not pass laws retroactively, “And God will not mislead a people after He had guided them, until He had made clear to them what they should avoid. God has knowledge of all things.” God will take people to task only after He had made things clear to them. God had made this religion a religion of ease. God stated what is allowable and what is forbidden. There were things which were not mentioned in either category. God did not forget them, but they were left out deliberately to make things easy for people. We should accept God’s mercy gratefully.

“Indeed to God belongs the dominion of the heavens and the earth. He gives life and He takes it.”

You have neither a protecting guardian nor a helper besides God.” God has control over wealth, souls, heavens, earth, life, death, protection, and victory. The most important relationship that we need to maintain is our relationship with God. The main theme that these verses emphasized over and over again is that the faith bond is the real bond between people. It takes precedence over blood relationships.

“God has forgiven the Prophet, the migrants (Muhajirin) and the supporters (Ansar) who followed him in the time of distress, after the hearts of a group of them had nearly swerved aside; then He turned to them (also) in mercy. He is to them the All-Pitying, Giver of Merc.” God’s forgiveness of the Prophet (PBUH) may be understood in the context of an earlier verse which referred to the permission that some of the strong wealthy Muslims requested in order not to participate in the battle of Tabuk and the Prophet (PBUH) gave them the permission they requested, “God forgave you (Muhammad), why did you grant them leave before it had become clear to you those who spoke the truth and you had known the liars?” (9:43) The forgiveness that God bestowed on the migrants and the supporters was for the sin which some of the sincere believers committed by being slothful in joining the army going to the battle of Tabuk but later they joined the army.

It may be better to describe the atmosphere during which the battle took place and some of the details leading to the battle, which was nick-named the “hour of adversity,” so that we can appreciate the feelings of the Muslims and the dynamics of the situation. The following is a summary that is based on the books by Ibn Hesham, Ibn Katheer and Al-Maqreezi. The Prophet (PBUH) started the preparation for fighting the Romans upon the receipt of the verse, “Fight those who disbelieve in God and the Last Day, who forbid not that which God and His Messenger have forbidden, who do not acknowledge the religion of truth, (even if they are) of the People of the Scripture, until they pay the Jizya with willing submission, and feel themselves subdued.” (9:29) This was at the beginning of the summer when people were ready to harvest the fruits from the fields. It was also the time during which the Arabs liked to stay in the shade of their gardens to avoid the scorching heat of the desert. The Prophet (PBUH) used to keep the objectives of his expeditions confidential, but this time he announced the destination of the expedition. Some of the hypocrites came to seek his permission for not joining the army and he gave them his permission. The hypocrites said to each other do not go forth in the heat. They schemed together to demoralize the believers and to weaken their spirits so that they would not go with the expedition. The Prophet (PBUH) urged the believers to support the expedition. Muslims responded favourably. Notable among those who made great contributions was ‘Uthman bin ‘Afan (RA). It is narrated that he paid a thousand Dinar. The Prophet (PBUH) prayed God to bless ‘Uthman (RA). Some Muslims wanted to join the army but could not afford the rides. They asked the Prophet (PBUH) to provide them with rides, but he was not able to secure rides for them. These sincere Muslims went away with eyes welling with tears when they realized that they will not be able to join the army. Finally, an army of thirty thousand people was ready to go forth. A group of Muslims had sincere intentions to join the army but for one reason or another were not prompt in joining the army, so they were left behind. Some of the people in this group were K’ab bin Malek (RA), Mararah bin El-Rabi’ (RA), Helal bin Umaiya (RA), Abu Khaithamah (RA) and ‘Umair El-Jamhi (RA). As the army went forth, people started to fall behind. Some were deserters but others could not keep up with the moving army. The first deserters were a group of hypocrites under the leadership of ‘Abd Allah bin Saloul, the chief of hypocrites. One of those who fell behind was Abu Zar El-Ghafary (RA). Abu Zar's camel could not keep up with the army, so Abu Zar (RA) abandoned his camel and continued the trip walking until he joined the army again. The Prophet (PBUH) said, "May God have mercy on Abu Zar. He was a loner when he walked, he will be a loner when he dies and when he will be resurrected." Abu Khaithamah (RA) regretted his tardiness, so he decided to embark of a trip to join the army, which he did.

This was the story of the "hour of adversity." The Muslims who remained behind were divided into three groups. The first group were the hypocrites. The second group were, "those who have admitted their sins. They mixed a righteous deed with another that was bad. It may be that God will relent toward them; God is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy." God forgave them. The third group were those, "who await God's decree, whether He will punish them or will forgive them. God is Omniscient, Wise." Before we discuss the verse, let us hear their story as narrated by one of them. K'ab bin Malek (RA) said, "I always participated in the expeditions that the Prophet (PBUH) led, except for the battles of Badr and Tabuk. No one was rebuked for missing the expedition to Badr because the Prophet (PBUH) did not make it mandatory for Muslims to participate. I pledged my allegiance to the Prophet (PBUH) at 'Aqaba. This was a great day for me. When the Prophet (PBUH) decided to lead an army to fight the Romans, he urged the Muslims to get ready and join the army. I was in my best shape both physically and financially. However, I procrastinated until the army departed Medina. A huge number of the Muslims joined the army. Many thought that they would not be missed if they remained behind because there was no record for those who volunteered. The Prophet (PBUH) enquired about me when he reached Tabuk. They told him that I was delinquent. When I heard that the Prophet (PBUH) returned to Medina, I went to see him. I thought about ways to explain my delinquency. I finally decided that the best way to deal with this is to tell the truth. Those who remained behind came to the Prophet (PBUH) and offered their excuses and he accepted their excuses and asked God to forgive them. When he saw me, he said, 'Come here. Why did you remain behind? Did you not buy a camel for the expedition?' I said, 'Messenger of God, if it were anyone other than you I would have made excuses. But I don't want to make a false excuse and later you become angry with me. I will tell you the truth. I did not have any excuse to miss the expedition. I was physically and financially able to join your expedition.' The Prophet (PBUH) said to his companions, 'He is telling the truth.' Then he said to me, 'Wait for God's judgement.' Some of the brothers from Bani Salamah rebuked me for not making an excuse like the others. I asked them, 'Did anyone else approach the Prophet (PBUH) the same way I did? They said, 'Yes. Mararah bin El-Rabi' (RA) and Helal bn Omaiya (RA).' These were two of the men who participated in Badr and I always looked up to them. The Prophet (PBUH) commanded the Muslims to boycott the three of us. Suddenly, everything was different. This continued for about fifty days. During this time, the other two stayed home, but I used to go the Mosque to pray and go to the market but people ignored me and no one ever spoke to me. I used to watch the Prophet (PBUH) to see if he would relent. One day, while I was in the Market a man approached me with a message from the king of Ghassan. The message was an invitation to abandon Islam and join the king's court. I said to myself, 'This is a real trial.' I burned the message. After forty days of boycott had passed, I received a message from the Prophet (PBUH) commanding me to separate from my wife. I asked whether this meant that I should divorce her. They said no, but you should not have intimate relationship with her.

On the fiftieth day of the boycott, after I prayed Fajr, I heard someone bringing me glad tidings. I realized that I was forgiven and prostrated myself in gratitude to God. I gave the person who brought me the glad tidings my dress as a gift. I went to see the Prophet (PBUH) at the Mosque. On my way to Mosque many people offered their congratulations. Upon my arrival at the Mosque, I saw the Prophet (PBUH) sitting with a group of his companions. Talha bin 'Ubaid (RA) was among them, when he saw me he rose hurriedly to welcome and congratulate me. This was something that I cherished and I loved him for it. I saw that the Prophet (PBUH) was quite pleased, when I greeted him he said to me, 'Rejoice, this is the best day that you have ever seen since you were born.' I asked him, 'Is this your decision? Or is it God's forgiveness?' He said, 'It is God's forgiveness.' I said, 'Messenger of God, I would like to confirm my repentance by giving away all my wealth as a charity in the way of God.' The Prophet (PBUH) said, 'Keep some of your wealth. This would be better for you.' I said, 'I will keep my share that I received from the Khaiber. Messenger of God, God saved because I told the truth. I vow to tell the truth as long as I live.' I never told a lie deliberately since I made this vow."

This story shows the depth of the meaning of the verse, "when the earth, vast as it is, was straitened for them," what is the meaning of "the earth"? Is it not the people, the morals, and the relationships? Then, "their own souls were straitened for them," as if their souls were crowded in a tight place. And, "till they knew for certain that there is no refuge from God except with Him." Is there any place to go to other than God? But then came the deliverance, "then turned He unto them in mercy that they (too) might turn (repentant unto Him); God, He is the Ever-Relenting, the Giver of Mercy."

"You who believe, be conscious of God and be with the truthful." The people of Medina were the ones who supported Islam, and welcomed the Prophet (PBUH) in their city. They were the solid foundation upon which Islam was supported. It was not befitting for them to be indolent when the call to fight was proclaimed. They were then called upon to be among those who are truthful to their faith and their messenger. "It was not fitting for the people of Medina and the wandering Arabs of the neighbourhood, to refuse to follow God's Messenger, nor to prefer their own lives to his. Nothing could they suffer or do, but was reckoned to their credit as a deed of righteousness - whether they suffered thirst, fatigue, or hunger in the cause of God, or they trod paths to raise the ire of the disbelievers, or received any injury from an enemy. Certainly, God does not waste the reward of those who do good. Nor do they spend anything (for the cause) - small or great - nor cut across a valley, but the deed is recorded to their credit so that God may reward them the best (possible reward)." The verse provides a mild rebuke to remind the Muslims of their duty. Nothing is more painful for a believer than to be considered of those who prefer themselves over the Prophet (PBUH). This call is still valid today as it was valid then. God will reward them for each and every effort they make, difficulty they face, or money they spend. Each contribution, small or large, will be rewarded.

"And the believers should not all go out to fight. Of every company of them, a party only should go forth, that they (who are left behind) may gain sound knowledge in religion, and that they may warn their folk when they return to them, so that they may beware." Not all the believers should go out to fight every time there is an expedition. They should be divided into groups and these groups should participate alternately in the different expeditions. The experience of being in the army is part of the education of people. Those who go out with the army will understand the meaning of striving in God's way and they will receive practical training in the protocol of war. They can then teach the others when they return to their homes. Our opinion has origins in Ibn Abbas' (RA) interpretation; and agrees with the interpretation by Al-Hassan Al-Basri, as well as opinions made by Ibn Jareer and Ibn Katheer. Islam is a dynamic religion. A great deal of knowledge is gained by getting actively involved in the different aspects of life. Those who strive in the way of God will become most knowledgeable about the rules of striving in the way of God.

"You who believe, fight the disbelievers who are near to you, and let them find firmness in you, and know that God is with those who are conscious of Him." This was the strategy of the Prophet (PBUH) and the guided caliphs after him. They needed to secure the boundaries around the Muslims land. However, we understand that the text commands Muslims to go forth rather than engage the disbelievers only when they attack. We differ with those who place the condition that Muslims should not fight unless they are attacked first. The intention to fight the disbelievers should be made known to them before the war is waged. They should be given the choice of accepting Islam, paying the Jiziah, or fight. No war should be waged against any people who have a treaty with the Muslims unless they breach the treaty first.

"Whenever a Sura is revealed, there are some of them who say, 'Which one of you has this increased in faith?' As for those who believe, it has increased them in faith and they rejoice." Such query reflects a confused state of mind that doubts the value of the revelation and shows a lack of belief in its authenticity. The query is answered unequivocally, only the faith of those who believe will increase. "But those in whose hearts is a disease, it will add wickedness to their wickedness, and they die while they are disbelievers."

"Do they not see that they are tested once or twice every year? Yet they neither turn in repentance nor do they take heed." How many times they were tested but they did not benefit from these tests. They continue in their hypocritical ways, "whenever a Sura is revealed, they look at each other (as if to say), 'Does anybody see you?' Then they turn away. God turned away their hearts because they are a folk who do not understand."

Finally, the Sura ends with two verses which we believe were revealed in Medina. The two verses describe the Prophet's (PBUH) relationship with his people and his interest in their welfare. It is a timely reminder that the request to go forth in the heat of the summer was not motivated by a desire to make them suffer. The second verse commands the Prophet (PBUH) to put his trust fully in his Lord when others turn away from him.

"Certainly a Messenger has come to you from among yourselves; grievous to him is your suffering. He is full of concern for you; to the believers (he is) compassionate, merciful." The verse announced that the Messenger was from "among them" to emphasize the deep and personal relationship between the Prophet (PBUH) and the Muslims. He is not only one of them but he is also connected spiritually to them. He grieves when they suffer. He is keen on their welfare. He does not want them to suffer nor does he want them to be humiliated.

“But if they turn away, say (Muhammad), ‘God suffices me. There is no deity but He. In Him I put my trust. He is the Lord of the Supreme Throne.’” God is the Almighty, the King. He is the Lord of the Supreme throne. He is sufficient for those who seek refuge in Him. This is an appropriate ending for the Sura which talks about striving and fighting in the way of God.

Sura 10: Yunus (Jonah)

In the name of God, the Lord of Mercy, the Giver of Mercy

We return once more to the Meccan Quran with its special atmosphere, its shadows, and its allusions after having lived with two Medinian Suras, Al-Anfal and Al-Tawba. Although the Meccan Quran enjoys the same general characteristics of the Quran as a whole, but it has its own specific features which enable it to express its main topics: the essence of God, the nature of the creation of God, and essence of the relationship between God and His creation. The Meccan Suras exhibit clearly the nature of pure faith and introduce people to their true God who deserves to be worshipped alone.

Verses 1 to 25

1. Alif. Lam. Ra. These are the verses of the wise Book.
2. Is it a wonder for people that We have revealed to a man among them, that he should warn people; and give those who believe the glad tidings that they are on a sure footing with their Lord? The disbelievers said, "This man is clearly a wizard."
3. Verily your Lord is God, who created the heavens and the earth in six days, then established Himself firmly on the throne, governing all things. No intercessor (can plead with Him) except after His leave (has been obtained). This is God, your Lord so worship Him. Will you not take heed?
4. To Him you will all return. This is a true promise from God. It is He who begins the process of creation, and repeats it, that He may justly reward those who believe and do good deeds; but those who disbelieve will have boiling drink and painful torment, because they disbelieved.
5. It is He who made the sun a shining glory and the moon a light, and determined for it phases that you may know the number of years and the reckoning (of time). God did not create this except in truth. Thus, does He explain His signs in detail, for people who know.
6. Verily, in the alternation of the night and the day, and in all that God has created, in the heavens and the earth, are signs for those who are conscious of Him.
7. Certainly, those who do not expect to meet with Us, but are pleased and satisfied with the life of this world, and those who are heedless of Our signs,
8. Their refuge is the Fire, because of the (evil) they earned.
9. Those who believe and do righteous deeds, their Lord will guide them because of their faith. Beneath them will flow rivers in gardens of bliss.
10. Their prayer therein, "Glory be to You, God;" and their greeting is, "Peace." Their final prayer is, "Praise be to God, the Lord of the worlds."
11. If God were to hasten for people the evil (they have earned) as they wish to hasten on the good, their respite would already have expired. But We leave those who do not expect to meet with Us to wander blindly on in their contumacy.
12. And if an affliction touches a man, he cries out to Us, whether lying on his side or sitting or standing; but when We relieve him of his affliction, he passes on as though he had never cried out to Us to remove his affliction. Thus, do the deeds of those who are given to excesses seem fair to them.

13. We destroyed the generations before you when they did commit injustice; and their messengers (from God) came to them with clear signs but they would not believe. Thus do We recompense the criminal folk.
14. Then We made you their successors in the land after them, to see how you would behave.
15. And when Our clear revelations are recited to them, they who do not expect to meet Us say, "Bring a Quran other than this, or change it." Say (Muhammad), "It is not for me to change it of my own accord. I only follow that which is revealed to me. If I disobey my Lord, I fear the torment of a grievous Day.
16. Say, "If God had so willed, I would not have recited it to you nor would He have made it known to you. I dwelt among you a whole lifetime before it (came to me). Have you then no sense?
17. Who does greater wrong than he who forged a lie against God, or denied His revelations? Certainly the criminals will never succeed.
18. They worship beside God that which neither hurts them nor profits them, and they say, "These are our intercessors with God." Say, "Would you inform God of (something) that He does not know in the heavens or in the earth? Glory be to Him; He is Exalted above all that they associate (with Him).
19. Humankind was but one nation then they differed. Had it not been for a word that had already gone forth from your Lord, the matter in which they differed would have been settled.
20. And they say, "Why is a sign not sent down to him from his Lord?" Say, "The unseen is only for God (to know), then wait, I too will wait with you."
21. When We make people taste some mercy after an adversity has touched them, they take to plotting against Our revelations. Say, "God is more swift in plotting." Verily, Our messengers record all the plots that you make.
22. He it is who enables you to travel through land and sea; when you are aboard ships and they sail with them in a favorable wind, and they rejoice therein; then comes a stormy wind and the waves come to them from all sides, and they think they are being overwhelmed; they cry to God, professing their sincere devotion to Him saying, "If You deliver us from this, we shall indeed show our gratitude."
23. But when He delivered them, they transgress insolently through the earth in defiance of the truth. People, your transgression is against your own souls - an enjoyment of the life of the present - in the end you will return to Us and We shall tell you of all that you did.
24. The likeness of the life of this world is as the rain which We send down from the sky which is absorbed by the plants of the earth of which people and cattle eat. When the earth has taken on its ornaments and is embellished, and its people deemed that they are its masters, Our command comes by night or by day and We make it as a field mown down as if it had not flourished yesterday. Thus, do we expound the revelations for people who reflect.
25. And God summons to the abode of peace, and leads whom He wills to a straight path.
(10:1-25)

"Alif. Lam. Ra. These are the verses of the wise Book." The wise Book is composed of words that use the same letters of the Alphabet that the idolatrous Arabs were familiar with. They were unable to compose a single verse similar to it. Yet, they deny that this is a revelation from God. They should reflect on the fact that Muhammad (PBUH), a human being like them, brought this Book. He could not have concocted it; otherwise anyone of them could have been able to do the same. It must have been a revelation from God. The wise Book addresses people in a style that is appropriate to their nature. The wise Book exposes specific aspects of the nature of humankind which are reflected on the behavior of different generations of the human race. The wise Book invites people to think and reflect on the signs of God around them.

“Is it a wonder for people that We have revealed to a man among them, that he should warn people, and give those who believe the glad tidings that they are on a sure footing with their Lord? The disbelievers say, ‘This man is clearly a wizard.’” This verse questions the disbelievers reprovingly, deprecating their amazement at the fact that a human being like them should receive a revelation from God. This reaction reflects how human beings underestimate their own value. They were amazed that a human being should become a messenger of God. They expected the messenger of God to belong to a superior kind of creation. They forgot that God honored humankind and made him worthy of delivering God’s message, which guides to the straight path, to his fellow human beings. The intent of the revelation was to warn people of the consequences of disobedience and to bring glad tidings to those who obey. The warning is for all people, while the glad tidings are only for those who believe. Obedience is rewarded by giving the believers a firm footing in the presence of their Lord.

The rationale behind sending a human being as a messenger of God is obvious. A human messenger knows his people and they know him. He is able to communicate with them easily and naturally. We may ask why God would send a messenger in the first place. Humankind was created with propensity to both goodness and evil; however, he was given an intellect to distinguish between good and evil and to be able to make the right choice. The human mind needs a constant reminder of the standard of right and wrong to save it from the perils of succumbing to human desires and lust. This standard is provided by God’s guidance and law.

The disbelievers were unable to find an explanation for the miracle that the Prophet (PBUH) brought, so they said, “This man is clearly a wizard.” Had they been open to the truth, they could have reached the conclusion that he was a messenger of God. They should have realized the difference between this revelation and wizardry. Wizardry is unable to produce a divine project which helps people in leading life on earth.

“Verily your Lord is God, who created the heavens and the earth in six days, then established Himself firmly on the throne, governing all things. No intercessor (can plead with Him) except after His leave (has been obtained). This is God your Lord so worship Him. Will you not take heed?” This is the fundamental principle in the doctrine: the principle of the Lordship of God. The principle of existence of God was not challenged by the idolaters. The Quran does not indulge in philosophical arguments about the nature of God but it addresses the initial natural disposition of the human being. It is He who created the heavens and earth and what they encompass. He gave the sun its shining glory and the moon its light. He decreed that the moon should have phases and that day and night should alternate. These phenomena, which are obvious to anyone who can see, should touch the inner feelings and motivate the heart to reflect. The Creator of the universe who maintains it in its equilibrium state is the only one who deserves to be the Lord to be worshiped by all people. He created the heavens and earth in “six days.” We are not going to discuss the nature, meaning, and length of these days because they are part of the unseen. This discussion is irrelevant. The lesson to be learnt is that the process of creation needed careful planning and wise execution.

Then God, “established Himself firmly on the throne, governing all things.” This expression is a metaphorical representation of the well-established and absolute authority of God. The expression has been phrased in a language that can be easily understood by humans. The word, “then,” in the verse does not mean a sequential arrangement of events because “time” as we know it has no meaning in this context. God governs and controls everything. No intercessor can plead with Him, except after His leave has been obtained. This statement rebuts the false belief of the idolaters that the idols are able to intercede on their behalf.

“This is God your Lord so worship Him.” We mentioned before that the idolaters believed that God is the Creator, the Provider, the One Who gives life, and the One who takes it. However, that belief was not reflected on their way of life. What they missed was to believe in God as a Lord. The direct consequence of this belief is to worship God alone. Worship is servitude, obedience and submission to God. Worship is not limited to the performance of rituals, as the idolaters believed. Performing the rituals is only a component of worship.

Remember that you will return to Him alone, “To Him you will all return. This is a true promise from God. It is He Who begins the process of creation, and repeats it, that He may justly reward those who believe and do good deeds; but those who disbelieve will have boiling drink and painful torment, because they disbelieved.” God’s promise will be fulfilled and His judgment will pass and people will be judged fairly. Those who believed and did good deeds will receive the endless and perfect bliss that they were promised. But those who disbelieved will be recompensed justly for their deeds.

Then the narrative goes back to describe cosmic phenomena, “It is He who made the sun a shining glory and the moon a light, and determined for it phases that you may know the number of years and the reckoning (of time). God did not create this except in truth. (Thus) does He explain His signs in detail, for people who know.” We are used to the scenes of the sunrise, sunset, moon rise and moon set. We see them every day so they no longer evoke any feeling of awe in our hearts. The verse urges us to look at the scenes as if we are seeing them for the first time. What kind of feelings would be evoked in our hearts, when we see for the first time a blazing sun and a moon that gives light? Phases of the moon help us keep track of time. This can only be a reflection of the truth behind the creation. God is the truth. The truth is His tool and His object.

The alteration of night and day, the changing lengths of the day and night, the creation of God in heavens and earth are all signs of the truth, “Verily, in the alternation of the night and the day, and in all that God has created, in the heavens and the earth, are signs for those who are conscious of Him.” Those who observe and reflect should become conscious of God.

Those who observe all these phenomena and do not expect to meet God are heedless of the fact that there will be an end to this transient life and there will certainly be a Day of Judgment, “Certainly, those who do not expect to meet with Us, but are pleased and satisfied with the life of this world, and those who are heedless of Our signs,” Those who do not reflect on the creation of the universe, a universe that indicates that it has been created by a Creator, do not reach the conclusion that this universe will end one day. The Hereafter is an integral part of the creation of God and it is necessary for justice to be implemented. These people have no sense of accountability. They are pleased with the life of this world and their souls do not seek a higher goal other than their material satisfaction of this worldly life, “Their refuge is the Fire, because of the (evil) they earned.”

On the other side, those who believed and did good deeds and worked hard for the Hereafter will be rightly guided, “Those who believe and do righteous deeds, their Lord will guide them because of their faith. Beneath them will flow rivers in gardens of bliss.” God will guide them to do good deeds. The faith that connects them to God will guide them to the straight path. They will be admitted to a paradise having flowing rivers. Water is the symbol of fertility and growth. They will have nothing to worry about in paradise. Their main interest will be to be fully engaged in the remembrance of God, “Their prayer therein, ‘Glory be to You, God;’ and their greeting is, ‘Peace.’ Their final prayer is, ‘Praise be to God, the Lord of the worlds.’”

“If God were to hasten for people the evil (they have earned) as they would hasten on the good, their respite would already have expired. But We leave those who do not expect to meet with Us to wander blindly on in their contumacy.” The idolaters used to challenge the Messenger of God (PBUH) to hasten the torment that they were promised if they deny him. Several verses in the Quran reiterated this challenge, “And they say, ‘When is this promise, if you are truthful;” (34:29) this challenge reflected their obstinacy in rejecting God’s guidance. God, in His wisdom, chose to give them respite. God did not send a punishment to wipe them out as has been done to previous peoples because He knew that many of them will later accept Islam. The verse told them that had God accepted their challenge they would have been decimated. But He gave them respite.

The verses continue to explore the contradictory nature of humankind. They challenged the Prophet (PBUH) to hasten the punishment, yet when they were touched by an affliction they would pray God, “And if an affliction touches a man he cries out to Us, whether lying on his side or sitting or standing; but when We relieve him of his affliction, he passes on as though he had never cried out to Us to remove his affliction. Thus, do the deeds of those who are given to excesses seem fair to them.” The verse paints an image for an all too common model of people. When they are in good health and feeling well they enjoy life and commit sins forgetting to remember God. They remember God only when an adversity strikes. They resort to prayers asking God to remove such adversity. However, once the adversity has been removed they go back to their old ways.

“We destroyed the generations before you when they did commit injustice; and their messengers (from God) came to them with clear signs but they would not believe. Thus, do We recompense the criminal folk.” The transgression of previous generations led them to self-destruction. Their remnants still exist in the Arabian desert as a witness to their demise. Their messengers came to them, as your Messenger came to you, but they were tyrants and were not prepared to receive God's guidance. Thus, they ended up criminals. God made you their successors, "Then We made you their successors in the land after them, to see how you would behave," to test you. It is a message that moves the heart of a person having been told that he became the heir of a powerful kingdom whose owners perished a long time ago. The message also stresses the fact that just as the previous generations perished before, so will the present one. Life on earth is merely a testing period.

"And when Our clear revelations are recited to them, they who do not expect to meet Us say, 'Bring a Quran other than this, or change it.' Say (Muhammad), 'It is not for me to change it of my own accord. I only follow that which is revealed to me. If I disobey my Lord, I fear the torment of a grievous Day.'" The new heirs were not any better than the previous ones. They made a strange request of the Prophet (PBUH): bring another Quran. This is a silly request which reflects complete ignorance of the objective of the Quran and its seriousness. Only a people who do not expect that one day they will stand before God could make such a request. The Quran brought a comprehensive constitution for the way of life that human beings should lead, a way of life that is well designed to suit people, to meet their expectations, and to satisfy their needs. No one can change it. They may have thought that the Quran is only a piece of prose that can be composed by those who are fluent and articulate in the language. But the Prophet (PBUH) was not sent to participate in literary competitions.

"Say, 'If God had so willed I would not have recited it to you nor would He have made it known to you. I dwelt among you a whole lifetime before it (came to me). Have you then no sense?'" Tell them Muhammad (PBUH) that this is a revelation from God. I was commanded to deliver it to you. Had He willed, I would have never recited it to you. The Messenger (PBUH) lived in Mecca for forty years before he became a messenger of God. During these forty years he never recited anything similar to the Quran. Can he suddenly do that out of his own accord? It is God's revelation and he has no control over it.

Say to them that I could never tell a lie about God, "Who does greater wrong than he who forged a lie against God, or denied His revelations? Certainly the criminals will never succeed."

"They worship beside God that which neither hurts them nor profits them, and they say, 'These are our intercessors with God.' Say, 'Would you inform God of (something) that He does not know in the heavens or in the earth? Glory be to Him; He is Exalted above all that they associate (with Him).'" They worship those who neither benefit nor harm them. They think that they can intercede on their behalf. This is indeed ludicrous.

"Humankind was but one nation then they differed. Had it not been for a word that had already gone forth from your Lord, the matter in which they differed would have been settled." This verse indicates that God created humankind with an initial natural disposition towards the concept of the Oneness of God. The idea of idolatry was developed later. God in His wisdom gave people respite to a certain time before He would settle what they differed about.

“They say, ‘Why is a sign not sent down to him from his Lord?’ Say, ‘The unseen is only for God (to know), then wait, I too will wait with you.’” As if all of the signs given in this great miraculous Book were not enough. The signs of God were all around them. They requested a material miracle similar to the ones that the previous prophets brought. They did not completely understand the nature of the message that Muhammad (PBUH) was asked to deliver. Muhammad’s message did not need a miracle that happens only once to show its authenticity. A miracle is only witnessed by those who were present at the time it occurred. The effect of such a miracle is limited and temporary. This message was meant to be an eternal Message, so it required an eternal miracle which addresses the hearts and minds of people one generation after the other. The unseen is only for God. He is able to produce a miracle if He so wills, “then wait, I too will wait with you.” The statement conveys several messages. It implies that the waiting period is a respite given by God; it also carries a threat to the disbelievers; and it shows that even though Muhammad (PBUH) is one of the greatest messengers of God, he has no authority over the unseen. Muhammad (PBUH) is a servant of God and has no authority over people. This statement clearly defines the demarcation line between God’s authority and the Messenger’s authority.

“When We make people taste some mercy after an adversity has touched them, they take to plotting against Our revelations. Say, ‘God is more swift in plotting.’ Verily, Our messengers record all the plots that you make.” One wonders at the nature of humankind. They only remember God at the time of need. God is quickly forgotten when life is safe and comfortable, except for those who believe; those whose initial natural disposition remained pure and are always in contact with God. This is clearly exemplified in the way the people of Pharaoh dealt with Prophet Moses (PBUH). Whenever an affliction befell them, they would hurry to Moses (PBUH) asking him to pray God to remove that affliction and making promises to believe in God once the affliction has been removed. However, once Moses’ (PBUH) prayers were granted they renege on their promises and go back to their old habits. God’s messengers record everything. God is Omniscient, His knowledge encompasses everything.

The following verse paints a dynamic picture illustrating God’s power, “He it is who enables you to travel through land and sea; when you are aboard ships and they sail with them with a favorable wind, and they rejoice therein; then comes a stormy wind and the waves come to them from all sides, and they think they are being overwhelmed; they cry to God, professing their sincere devotion to Him saying, ‘If You deliver us from this, we shall indeed show our gratitude.’” The verse describes the scene of people enjoying a trip at sea. The sea was calm and the ship was pushed gently by the wind. Then suddenly the wind picked up and the sea became stormy, threatening the safety of the ship. When they recognized the eminent danger and their vulnerability became evident, they prayed God to save them.

But when the storm subsided and they became safe, they forgot God and became tyrants, “But when he delivered them, they transgress insolently through the earth in defiance of the truth.”

People, your transgression is against your own souls - an enjoyment of the life of the present - in the end you will return to Us and We shall tell you of all that you did.” The verse reminds them that they will be the victims of their own transgression. They will taste the result of their transgression in this life before they receive the ultimate punishment in the Hereafter.

“The likeness of the life of this world is as the rain which We send down from the sky which is absorbed by the plants of the earth of which people and cattle eat. When the earth has taken on its ornaments and is embellished, and its people deemed that they are its masters, Our command comes by night or by day and We make it as a field mown down as if it had not flourished yesterday. Thus, do we expound the revelations for people who reflect.” This is an example that illustrates the situation of those who lead a hedonistic life. When water falls down from the sky the plants grow and flourish. The earth becomes covered with plants of different types and colors, such a beautiful scene. Then suddenly, it is destroyed by the command of God and in a split second the beautiful scene disappears as if it never existed before. This is an example of this worldly life for those who are only interested in its material benefits.

“And God summons to the abode of peace, and leads whom He wills to a straight path.” It is quite a contrast between the example of life described in the previous verse and the peace and security that God calls to.

Verses: 26 to 70

26. For those who did well is a good (reward) and more. Neither darkness nor ignominy will cover their faces. Such are the rightful owners of the Garden; they will abide therein eternally.
27. And those who earned evil, the recompense of an evil deed is its equivalent and ignominy will cover them. They have no protector from God, as if their faces had been covered with a cloak of a very dark night. Such are the rightful owners of the Fire; they will abide therein eternally.
28. On the day when We gather them all together, then We say to those who ascribed partners (to God), “Stand back, you and your partners.” And We separate them, one from the other. Their partners will say, “It was not us you worshipped.”
29. God suffices as a witness between us and you, that we were unaware of your worship.
30. There, (on that day) every soul will be put to trial for what it did before. They will be brought back to God their rightful Lord, and their invented falsehoods will leave them in the lurch.
31. Say (Muhammad), “Who provides for you from the sky and the earth? Who owns the hearing and the sight? Who brings forth the living from the dead and brings forth the dead from the living? And who manages everything? They will say, “God.” Then say, “Will you not be conscious of Him?”
32. That is God, your true Lord. What is there beyond the truth except error? How then are you turned away?
33. Thus is the word of your Lord proved true against those who rebel - they will not believe.

34. Say (Muhammad), "Is there of your partners who can originate creation and repeats it?" Say, "It is God who originates the creation and repeats it, then how deluded you are?"
35. Say, "Is there of your partners who guides to the truth?" Say, "It is God who guides to the truth, is then He who gives guidance to the truth more deserving to be followed, or he who does not find guidance (himself) unless he is guided? What is then the matter with you? How do you judge?"
36. But most of them follow nothing but conjecture. Assuredly conjecture can by no means replace truth. God knows what they do.
37. It was not possible for this Quran to be produced by other than God; but it is a confirmation of (revelations) that came before it, and an explanation of the Book - wherein there is no doubt - from the Lord of the worlds.
38. Or do they say, "He forged it"? Say, "Bring then a sura like it, and call (to your aid) anyone you can besides God, if you are truthful."
39. But they denied that whose knowledge they cannot encompass, even before the elucidation thereof had reached them. Similarly, those before them did deny. See what the end of the wrongdoers was?
40. Of them there are some who believe therein, and some who do not. Your Lord knows best those who are the mischief-makers.
41. And if they deny you, say, "For me are my deeds and for you are your deeds. You are neither responsible for my actions nor I am responsible for yours."
42. And of them are some who listen to you. But can you make the deaf to hear even though they do not understand?
43. And of them is he who looks at you. But can you guide the blind even though they see not?
44. Verily God does not wrong people at all; but it is people who wrong themselves.
45. And on the day He will gather them together, (it will seem) as if they had tarried but an hour of a day. They will recognize each other. Assuredly those will be lost who denied the meeting with God; and they were not guided.
46. Whether We show you some of what We promise them or We take your soul - in any case - to Us is their return. Ultimately God is a witness to all that they do.
47. To every people (was sent) a messenger. When their messenger comes, it will be judged between them fairly and they will not be wronged.
48. And they say, "When will this promise be fulfilled if you are truthful?"
49. Say, "I have no power over any harm or benefit to myself except as God wills. To every people is an appointed term. When their term is reached, they can neither delay it nor can they hasten it, even for an hour."
50. Say, "Have you considered: When His torment comes to you by night or by day, what is there of it that the guilty ones desire to hasten?"
51. Would you then believe in it at last when it actually comes to pass?" It will be said, "Now (you believe), when before you wished to hasten it.
52. Then it will be said to the wrongdoers, "Taste the torment of eternity, are you being recompensed except for what you used to earn?"
53. And they ask you, "Is it true?" Say, "Yes, by my Lord, verily it is true, and you cannot escape."

54. And if every soul that did commit injustice had all that is on earth, it would be willing to give it in ransom. They will express remorse within themselves when they see the torment, but they will be judged with justice, and they will not be wronged.
55. Verily, whatever is in the heavens and on earth belongs to God? God's promise is true, but most of them do not know.
56. It is He who gives life and who takes it, and to Him shall you all be brought back.
57. People, there has come to you an admonition from your Lord, and a healing for what is in your breasts; and guidance and mercy for the believers.
58. Say, "In the grace of God and in His Mercy let them rejoice." That is better than what they amass.
59. Say, "Have you considered the provision which God has sent down for you, how you have made (some) lawful and (some) unlawful?" Say, "Did God permit you (to do so), or do you invent a lie concerning God?"
60. And what do those who invent lies against God will think on the Day of Judgment? Verily God is bountiful towards people, but most of them are ungrateful.
61. Whatever business you may be engaged in, whatever portion you may be reciting from the Quran, and whatever deed you (people) may be doing, We are witnesses thereof when you are deeply engrossed therein. Nothing is hidden from your Lord (even as much as) the weight of an atom on the earth or in heaven. Nor what is less than that or greater than that, but it is (recorded) in a clear Record.
62. Verily the allies of God shall have no fear nor will they grieve?
63. Those who believe and are conscious of God,
64. For them are glad tidings, in the life of this world and in the Hereafter. The words of God will not be changed. This is indeed the supreme triumph.
65. And let not their speech grieve you (Muhammad). All might belong wholly to God; He is the All-Hearing, the Omniscient.
66. Verily to God belong whosoever is in the heavens and whosoever is on the earth? Those who invoke other than God do not (actually) follow (His) partners. They follow only a conjecture, and they are only telling lies.
67. He it is who made the night that you may rest therein, and the day to make things visible (to you). Verily in this are signs for those who listen.
68. They say, "God has begotten a son;" Glory be to Him; He is Self-Sufficient. His are all things in the heavens and on earth. You have no authority to say this. Do you say about God that which you do not know?
69. Say, "Those who invent a lie against God will never succeed."
70. (They will have) a little enjoyment in this world. Then, to Us will be their return. Then shall We make them taste the severe torment for their disbelief. (10:26-70)

"For those who did well is a good (reward) and more. Neither darkness nor ignominy will cover their faces. Such are rightful owners of the Garden; they will abide therein eternally. And those who earned evil, the recompense of an evil deed is its equivalent and ignominy will cover them. They have no protector from God, as if their faces had been covered with a cloak of a very dark night. Such are the rightful owners of the Fire; they will abide therein eternally." This verse gives details of the reward that awaits those who are guided and the punishment that awaits those who are misguided. The details exhibit God's mercy and justice. Those with strong faith who did good deeds and who understood God's universal law theirs will be a good reward and more. The extra reward is an unlimited bounty from God. They will be secure on the Day of Judgment, "Neither darkness nor ignominy will cover their faces." They will not display any sign of sadness. They are the owners of paradise. They will live therein forever. Those who earned evil in their lives will be judged fairly. They will only be punished according to the evil they have done, nothing more, "the recompense of an evil deed is its equivalent and ignominy will cover them. They have no protector from God, as if their faces had been covered with a cloak of a very dark night. Such are the rightful owners of the Fire; they will abide therein." They will feel humiliated and their faces will be darkened by their sadness; they will be destined to Hellfire, where they are going stay forever.

But where did their partners go, and why did not they protect them from God's wrath? Here is their story, "On the day when We gather them all together, then We say to those who ascribed partners (to God), 'Stand back, you and your partners.' And We separate them, one from the other. Their partners will say, 'It was not us you worshipped.'" Those who associated partners with God will be gathered with whom they associated as partners with God. The Quran sarcastically calls them "the partners" to emphasize that they never were associates to God. They will be told to stand back and wait for God's command. The associates will defend themselves claiming their innocence and denying that they had asked anyone to worship them. They will ask for God's testimony, "God suffices as a witness between us and you, that we were unaware of your worship." At this moment the deeds of every person will be evaluated by the One true God, and all false claims will vanish, "There, (on that day) every soul will be put to trial for what it did before. They will be brought back to God their rightful Lord, and their invented falsehoods will leave them in the lurch." These verses paint a dramatic account of the scene of the gathering on the Day of Judgment.

"Say (Muhammad), 'Who provides for you from the sky and the earth? Who owns the hearing and the sight? Who brings forth the living from the dead and brings forth the dead from the living? and who manages everything?' They will say, 'God.' Then say, 'Will you not be conscious of Him?'" We have mentioned before that the idolatrous Arabs did not contest the fact that God is the Creator. This verse reminds them of that belief to eradicate any doubt about the fact that the idols they worship have no power. God is He who brings down water from the sky to make the plants grow. He provides for them from the sky as well as on land. These facts were easy for them to understand. God is He who awards the power of hearing and seeing. He "brings forth the living from the dead and brings forth the dead from the living." The word "dead" is used metaphorically to describe the state of being quiescent or dormant. The Arabs used to refer to a dormant plant as dead and to a growing plant as alive. They knew how a dormant seed produces a live plant and how a dormant egg produces a live chicken. God is He who controls the universe. If you ask them, Muhammad (PBUH), these questions they will admit that God is He who does all of that. Should not they then be conscious of Him?

"That is God, your true Lord. What is there after the truth except error? How then are you turned away?" There is only one truth, those who deviate from the truth have only error to fall in. God's command will pass, "Thus is the word of your Lord proved true against those who rebel - they will not believe." Not because God steered them away from belief but because they chose to deviate from the straight path which leads to belief.

“Say (Muhammad), ‘Is there of your partners who can originate creation and repeats it?’ Say, ‘It is God who originates the creation and repeats it, then how deluded you are?’” The idolatrous Arabs did acknowledge God’s power and His ability to start the creation but they did not accept the idea of life after death. The verse explained that God’s power is not only limited to starting life on earth and to ending it by death, but God’s power encompasses the resurrection and bringing people to account on the Day of Judgment. He who started the creation is able to repeat it again. How can they miss this fact? The argument continues, “Say, ‘Is there of your partners who guides to the truth?’ Say, ‘It is God who guides to the truth, is then He who gives guidance to truth more deserving to be followed, or he who does not find guidance (himself) unless he is guided? What is then the matter with you? How do you judge?’” God sent messengers and Scripture to explain His divine project which guides to goodness and forbids evil. God who guides to the truth deserves to be followed. The verse berates the idolaters for being blind to the fact that those whom they associate with God, whether humans or idols, are unable to offer any guidance. In fact, they need guidance.

“But most of them follow nothing but conjecture. Assuredly conjecture can by no means replace truth. God is Aware of what they do.” They only follow baseless conjectures. Certainly, conjectures are not legitimate alternative to the truth.

“It was not possible for this Quran to be produced by other than God; but it is a confirmation of (revelations) that went before it, and an explanation of the Book - wherein there is no doubt - from the Lord of the worlds.” The Quran is a miraculous book in its literary style. It is a comprehensive book. It deals with a wide range of topics which not only explain the doctrine but they also teach the correct appreciation of the Creator, the understanding of human nature, the understanding of the nature of life, and the understanding of the nature of the universe. Only God could reveal a book with such depth and breadth. The Quran came to confirm the previous Scriptures and to provide a detailed explanation for God’s message embodied in them. The different Scriptures which have been revealed to different messengers agree on the fundamentals but differ in the details. The details of each revelation were appropriate for the time at which it was revealed. The Quran came to provide the final details of God’s message.

“Or do they say, ‘He forged it?’ Say, ‘Bring then a sura like it, and call (to your aid) anyone you can besides God, if you are truthful.’” They were challenged and they failed to meet the challenge. They had the same linguistic ability and resources that Muhammad (PBUH) had but they failed to compose a book like the Quran. Those who are able to appreciate the linguistic beauty of the Quran and understand the various systems which it brought are certain that this book could not have been written by a human being. The Quran is a miraculous book, not only because of the beauty of its language but also because it embodies a collection of harmonious systems which organize human life.

“But they denied that whose knowledge they cannot encompass, even before the elucidation thereof had reached them. Similarly, those before them did deny. See what the end of the wrongdoers was.” They denied the truth so they will meet the fate of those who denied the truth before them.

“Of them there are some who believe therein, and some who do not. Your Lord knows best those who are the mischief-makers.” Those who do not believe are the mischief-makers. Those who lost guidance and strayed away from the straight path are the source of mischief on earth. They only follow their whims and desires which demonize their lives as well as people’s lives.

“And if they deny you, say, ‘For me are my deeds and for you are your deeds. You are neither responsible for my actions nor I am responsible for yours.’” So, the Messenger was commanded to simply ignore those who denied him. Everyone will be judged according to their deeds. Leaving them alone may send a message which reaches their inner consciousness.

Types of those who denied the Messenger (PBUH) are then described, “And of them are some who listen to you. But can you make the deaf to hear even though they do not understand? And of them is he who looks to you. But can you guide the blind even though they see not?” Some hear but do not understand and some see but do not reflect. They stopped utilizing the senses that God bestowed on them. The Messenger (PBUH) can be of no benefit to them because they rendered their senses useless, “Verily God does not wrong people at all; but it is people who wrong themselves.”

These verses carried a message of consolation to the Prophet (PBUH). The message stated that the Messenger (PBUH) was not derelict in his duty. He did his best but these people were determined not listen therefore; they could not understand the truth.

The verses turn to a description of a scene of the scenes of the Day of Judgment, “And on the Day He will gather them together, (it will seem) as if they had tarried but an hour of a day. They will recognize each other. Assuredly those will be lost who denied the meeting with God; and they were not guided.” The verse reminds people that the life of this world will pass as if it were merely an hour long event. Or does the verse describe the lives of people who made no contribution to life? They only spend an hour to get to know each other. They certainly lost the opportunities that were awarded them during their lives.

The following verses address a new theme. They start by emphasizing the fact that all people will return to God, “Whether We show you some of what We promise them or We take your soul - in any case - to Us is their return. Ultimately God is a witness to all that they do.” God’s plan will pass: a messenger will be sent to each people, they will be then judged according to their response to their messenger, “To every people (was sent) a messenger. When their messenger comes, it will be judged between them fairly and they will not be wronged.” These two verses emphasize God’s role as the Creator and the Messenger’s role as a deliverer of the message. The Messenger’s role is to deliver the message; God’s role is to judge people.

“And they say, ‘When will this promise be fulfilled if you are truthful?’” The idolaters used to challenge the Prophet (PBUH) to hasten the punishment which the Quran threatened them with if they reject the message. The Prophet (PBUH) was commanded to tell them, “I have no power over any harm or benefit to myself except as God wills. To every people is an appointed term. When their term is reached, they can neither delay it nor can they hasten it, even for an hour.” So if the Prophet (PBUH) has no power over any harm or benefit to himself, how can he inflict harm on them or provide benefit to them. God controls the fate of people, when their term has been reached they will get their recompense. Nothing can change the appointed term. The term for a nation can either end by physical destruction, as it did happen to nations before, or by suffering a loss of identity as a result of general defeat. Some nations recover from the loss of identity but some never recover. The revival of the Muslim nation is contingent on following the Messenger’s way. The Messenger (PBUH) came to invite the nation to its revival, not only by adopting the Islamic creed but also by adopting a way of life which reflects this creed in all aspects of life.

Their challenge is rebuffed by a threat, “Say, ‘Have you considered: When His torment comes to you by night or by day,’ what is there of it that the guilty ones desire to hasten?” What would you do if the punishment came by day or by night? Why then you want to hasten this punishment? The following verse addressed the disbelievers as if the punishment had already taken place, “Would you then believe in it at last when it actually comes to pass?” It will be said, “Now (you believe), when before you wished to hasten it.” This group of verses ends with a scene from the Day of Judgment, “Then it will be said to the wrongdoers, ‘Taste the torment of eternity, are you being recompensed except for what you used to earn?’”

The following verse indicates the doubt that fills the hearts of the disbelievers, “And they ask you, ‘Is it true?’ Say, ‘Yes, by my Lord, verily it is true, and you cannot escape.’” The Prophet (PBUH) is commanded to give them a definite and unequivocal answer. The punishment is true and you will not escape.

“And if every soul that did commit injustice had all that is on earth, it would be willing to give it in ransom. They will express remorse within themselves when they see the torment, but they will be judged with justice, and they will not be wronged.” No ransom will be accepted from anyone, even if they could afford paying the ransom, to be able to escape the punishment. Their hearts will be full of remorse when they see the torment. They will be judged fairly and they will not be wronged.

“Verily, whatever is in the heavens and on earth belongs to God? God’s promise is true, but most of them do not know. It is He who gives life and who takes it, and to Him shall you all be brought back. People, there has come to you an admonition from your Lord, and a healing for what is in your breasts; and guidance and mercy for the believers. Say, ‘In the grace of God and in His Mercy let them rejoice.’ That is better than what they hoard.” It is a loud proclamation that God's kingdom encompasses all what is on earth and all what is in heavens. His promise will come to pass no one can frustrate Him. The disbelievers deny or doubt only because they are ignorant. God controls life and death and to Him all will return. The purpose of the proclamation is then pronounced, "People, there has come to you an admonition from your Lord, and a healing for what is in your breasts; and guidance and mercy for the believers." The admonition came to you in the Book that was sent to you from your Lord. It is not a fabrication, and it has not been authored by a mortal. The admonition will revive your hearts and cleanse your breasts. It will replace the myth that fills your hearts with doubt and insecurity with the certainty and security of faith. You then can revel in God's grace and enjoy His mercy. These are the true sources of happiness for the believers. Islam teaches people that there is more to life than accumulating wealth. Wealth is a mean not an end in itself, but the purpose of life for a believer is to enjoy God's grace and mercy.

"Say, 'Have you considered the provision which God has sent down for you, how you have made of it lawful and unlawful?' Say, 'Did God permit you (to do so), or do you invent a lie concerning God?'" This is an address to those who associate partners with God. Consider the provision that God sent you to manage it according to His leave and law. Who gave you the right to classify parts of it as lawful and other parts as unlawful? Did God give you permission to do that? Only God decrees what is lawful and what is unlawful. The concept that only God has the right to decree what is lawful and what is unlawful appears often throughout the Quran. This concept is the practical application of the fundamental statement, "there is no deity except God." The recognition that God is the Creator and the Provider implies that He is the only one who deserves to be worshiped and that He alone has the right to control people's lives. The verses continue by confronting the idolaters with the lies they fabricated about God, and warns them with the consequences of these lies on the Day of Judgment, "And what do those who invent lies against God will think on the Day of Judgment? Verily God is bountiful toward people, but most of them are ungrateful." Following the threat issued to those who associate partners with God, the verse reminds them with the bounty that God blessed them with. The bounty does not only include the material provisions but also the divine project which God bestowed on people. This divine project enables people to lead a better life on earth. It is a project that brings out the best in everyone. It is a project that provides a balance between the needs of this life and the needs of the Hereafter and allows humans to live in harmony with the universe. But most people are heedless of this bounty and they are ungrateful. They abandon the divine project and associate partners with God; and as a result, they end up leading unhappy life because the divine project provides healing to the ailments of the breasts. When people abandon the divine project, they lose the benefit of the healing that it provides. It is an amazing expression which describes a deep truth. The Quran heals all the ailments of the heart. It addresses the natural innate human feelings and fills the hearts with security and contentment.

"Whatever business you may be engaged in, whatever portion you may be reciting from the Quran, and whatever deed you (people) may be doing, We are witnesses thereof when you are deeply engrossed therein. Nothing is hidden from your Lord (even as much as) the weight of an atom on the earth or in heaven. Nor what is less than that or greater than that, but it is (recorded) in a clear Record." This verse stirs, in the heart, feelings of security and awe at the same time. This mixture of feelings is evoked by the knowledge that the God Almighty who manages the universe is with us every moment, He sees what we do, He knows what we go through, and He looks after us. We are not atoms that are left to wander aimlessly in this vast universe. There is nothing that escapes God. He is fully aware of all things. Certainly, those who are under the care of God will never fear or grieve, “Verily the allies of God shall have no fear nor will they grieve?” How can they fear or grieve when they know that God looks after them? They are true believers. They are fully conscious of God, “Those who believe and are conscious of God,” True faith is what rests deep in the heart and is reflected on the deeds. Those have the glad tidings of great success, “for them are glad tidings, in the life of this world and in the Hereafter. The words of God will not be changed. This is indeed the supreme triumph.”

God then addresses His Messenger (PBUH), “And let not their speech grieve you (Muhammad). All might belong wholly to God; He is the All-Hearing, the Omniscient.” The Messenger (PBUH) should not worry about those who fabricate lies about God; even though they are the elite in the community. God who has all the might will protect His Messenger (PBUH).

“Verily to God belong whosoever is in the heavens and whosoever is on the earth? Those who invoke other than God do not (actually) follow (His) partners. They follow only a conjecture, and they are only telling lies.” God controls all people, strong and weak alike. Those who associate partners with God are only following a mirage. God has no partners.

“He it is who made the night that you may rest therein, and the day to make things visible (to you). Verily in this are signs for those who listen.” The verse stresses some of the cosmic signs which people take for granted and ignore the power behind them. God controls the universe. It is He who chose to make the day for work and the night for rest.

This group of verses ends by refuting the lies made by those who associate partners with God and stresses the consequences of such lies, “They say, ‘God has begotten a son.’ Glory be to Him; He is Self-Sufficient. His are all things in the heavens and on earth. You have no authority to say this. Do you say about God that which you do not know? Say, ‘Those who invent a lie against God will never succeed.’ (They will have) a little enjoyment in this world. Then, to Us will be their return. Then shall We make them taste the severe torment for their disbelief.” It is silly to imagine that God has begotten a son. It reflects a lack of imagination which causes confusion between the nature of the Creator and the nature of the creature. The Creator is eternal while humans are mortals. God does not need progeny; He does not need help or support. He is Self-Sufficient and Independent. These lies are mere baseless conjectures. Uttering such lies is a great sin. Those who commit this sin will never succeed, neither in this life nor in the Hereafter.

Verses 71 to 103

71. And recite to them the story of Noah, when he told his people, “My people, if my presence among you and my reminding you of God's revelations offend you, I have put my trust in God, so decide upon your course of action you and your partners. Let not your course of action be obscure for you. Then execute your decision against me and give me no respite.

72. But if you turn away, (consider that) I never asked you for a reward. I seek my reward only from God, and I have been commanded to be of those who submit to God's will."
73. They denied Him so We saved him and those with him in the Ark, and We made them inherit (the earth), while We drowned those who denied Our revelations. Then see what the end of those who had been warned was.
74. Then after him, We sent messengers to their peoples. They brought them clear signs, but they would not believe what they had already denied beforehand. Thus, do We seal the hearts of the transgressors.
75. Then after them We sent Moses and Aaron to Pharaoh and his chiefs with Our signs. But they were arrogant. They were a guilty folk.
76. When the truth did come to them from Us, they said, "This is indeed evident sorcery."
77. Moses said, "Is this what you call the truth when it comes to you? Is this magic? Magicians are never successful.
78. They said, "Did you come to us to turn us away from that which we found our fathers following, in order that you and your brother may have greatness in the land? But we will not believe in you."
79. Pharaoh said, "Bring me every learned sorcerer."
80. When the sorcerers came, Moses said to them, "Cast what you will cast."
81. When they had cast, Moses said, "What you have brought is sorcery. God will certainly render it useless. God does not uphold the deeds of those who make mischief. "
82. And God will vindicate the truth by His words, however much the guilty will be averse."
83. But none believed in Moses except some offspring of his people, in fear of Pharaoh and his chiefs, lest they should persecute them. And certainly Pharaoh was mighty in the land and one who was given to excesses.
84. Moses said, "My people, if you have believed in God, then in Him put your trust if you have indeed submitted to Him."
85. They said, "In God do we put our trust. Our Lord, do not subject us to the persecution of the wrongdoers.
86. And deliver us by your mercy from the disbelievers."
87. We inspired Moses and his brother (saying), "Settle your people in houses in Egypt, make your houses places of worship, and establish prayers. And give glad tidings to the believers."
88. Moses prayed, "Our Lord, You have indeed bestowed on Pharaoh and his chiefs splendor and wealth in the life of this world. Our Lord, they mislead people from Your path. Our Lord, destroy their wealth and harden their hearts, so they do not believe until they see the painful torment."
89. He (God) said, "Your prayer has been answered, so stay on the straight path and do not follow the path of those who have no knowledge."
90. We took the Children of Israel across the sea. Pharaoh and his hosts followed them in insolence and spite. When the drowning overtook him, he said, "I believe that there is no deity except Him whom the Children of Israel believe in. I am of those who submit (to God)."
91. Now! When you had been a rebel before and had been of the mischief-makers?"
92. This day We save you in body that you may be a sign for those who come after you. Most people are, indeed, heedless of Our signs.

93. And We had certainly settled the Children of Israel in a good dwelling-place, and provided for them sustenance of the best. It was after knowledge had been granted to them, that they fell into schisms. Verily God will judge between them on the Day of Judgment regarding that over which they used differ.
94. If you are in doubt concerning that which We have revealed to you, then ask those who have been reading the Scripture before you. The truth had indeed come to you from your Lord, so do not be of those who doubt.
95. Do not be among those who deny the revelations of God, for then you would become of the losers.
96. Those against whom the word of your Lord has passed will not believe.
97. Even if every sign was brought to them, until they see the painful torment.
98. If only there had been a community (of all those that were destroyed of old) that believed and profited by its belief as did the folk of Jonah. When they believed We relieved them of the torment of disgrace in the life of this world and gave them comfort for a while.
99. And if your Lord had willed, all who are on the earth would have believed together. Would you (Muhammad) compel people until they become believers?
100. It is not for any soul to believe save by the permission of God. He has set uncleanness upon those who have no sense.
101. Say, "Consider all that is in the heavens and on earth"; but neither signs nor warnings avail those who do not believe.
102. What are they waiting for but (what happened in) the days of those who passed away before them? Say, "Wait then, I too will wait with you."
103. In the end We deliver Our messengers and those who believe. It is binding on Us that We should deliver those who believe. (10:71-103)

"And recite to them the story of Noah, when he told his people, 'My people, if my presence among you and my reminding you of God's revelations offend you, I have put my trust in God, so decide upon your course of action you and your partners. Let not your course of action be obscure for you. Then execute your decision against me and give me no respite. But if you turn away, (consider that) I never asked you for a reward. I seek my reward only from God, and I have been commanded to be of those who submit to God's will.' They denied Him so We saved him and those with him in the Ark, and We made them inherit (the earth), while We drowned those who denied Our revelations. Then see what the end of those who had been warned was."

These verses narrate the last episode of the story of Prophet Noah (PBUH). It is an episode which describes the last challenge posed by Prophet Noah (PBUH) to his people after a long series of episodes in which he exhorted them to join the ranks of the believers. Many of the details of the story are absent from these verses because the focus here is on the last attempt of Prophet Noah (PBUH) and his absolute reliance on God. The verses then mention the salvation of Prophet Noah (PBUH) and the few believers who joined him on the Ark. This episode starts with Prophet Noah's (PBUH) resolution, "My people, if my presence among you and my reminding you of God's revelations offend you, I have put my trust in God, so decide upon your course of action you and your partners. Let not your course of action be obscure for you. Then execute your decision against me and give me no respite." Plan whatever you can plan and execute your plan I will put my trust in God alone. God is sufficient for me. It is the final statement which reflects the absolute reliance of the believer on God and the absolute trust in His power and protection. God's messengers are role models for the believers who want to call to God. They should not fear the tyranny of the despots. God will support them and will protect them. The story of Prophet Noah (PBUH) is an example of the struggle of the messenger against the tyrants. His message was that he never asked them a reward for guiding them. So, whether they listen or turn away he will get his reward from God. He will remain steadfast in his faith, "I have been commanded to be of those who submit to God's will." God saved him in the Ark when his people denied him.

The verses continue to mention God's messengers who came after Noah (PBUH), "Then after him, We sent messengers to their peoples. They brought them clear signs, but they would not believe what they had already denied beforehand. Thus do We seal the hearts of the transgressors." These messengers brought clear signs to their people but the people continued in their obstinacy to deny the truth because their hearts were sealed.

The following verses narrate the story of Moses (PBUH) in a little more detail. The story encompasses five scenes. "Then after them We sent Moses and Aaron to Pharaoh and his chiefs with Our signs. But they were arrogant. They were a guilty folk. When the truth did come to them from Us, they said, 'This is indeed evident sorcery.' Moses said, 'Is this what you call the truth when it comes to you? Is this magic? Magicians are never successful.'" The verses refer to the nine miracles that Moses (PBUH) brought very briefly, no details are given. The verses stress the fact that "the truth did come to them from Us," to emphasize the enormity of their sin in calling the truth "evident sorcery." Moses (PBUH) was appalled by their response. He (PBUH) tried to explain that magic does not guide people to the straight path and it has no basis to stand on; that is why it is doomed to failure.

At this point in the discussion, their true motive becomes apparent, "They said, 'Did you come to us to turn us away from that which we found our fathers following, in order that you and your brother may have greatness in the land? But we will not believe in you.'" They wanted to hang on to their old beliefs, in spite of the fact that these beliefs were deeply rooted in myth and falsehood. These beliefs gave them the power over people and they did not want to relinquish that power. Like all arrogant tyrants, they resisted the call to believe in God because the call threatened their power and control.

It seems that Pharaoh and his chiefs believed that they can fight Moses' (PBUH) claims with magic, "Pharaoh said, 'Bring me every learned sorcerer.' When the sorcerers came, Moses said to them, 'Cast what you will cast.' When they had cast, Moses said, 'What you have brought is sorcery. God will certainly render it useless. God does not uphold the deeds of those who make mischief. And God will vindicate the truth by His words, however much the guilty be averse.'" One notices the brief account of the encounter between Moses (PBUH) and the magicians. The main emphasis is placed on Moses' (PBUH) statement, "What you have brought is sorcery. God will certainly render it useless." The statement points out clearly that magic cannot stand in the face of the belief in God. All their tricks will be in vain and the truth will remain unshaken. It is a statement which reflects the deep confidence of the believer in God. The truth will prevail by God's words even though it is against the wish of the disbelievers. The truth prevailed and the magicians lost.

“But none believed in Moses except some offspring of his people, in fear of Pharaoh and his chiefs, lest they should persecute them. And certainly Pharaoh was mighty in the land and one who was given to excesses.” Moses said, ‘My people, if you have believed in God, then in Him put your trust if you have indeed submitted to Him.’ They said, ‘In God do we put our trust. Our Lord, do not subject us to the persecution of the wrongdoers. And deliver us by your mercy from the disbelievers.’ We inspired Moses and his brother (saying), ‘Settle your people in houses in Egypt, make your houses places of worship, and establish prayers. And give glad tidings to the believers.’” It seems that only a group of young people declared publicly their belief in Moses’ (PBUH) message. This group of young people was persecuted by the Egyptians. They needed to be comforted and assured by Moses (PBUH), “My people, if you have believed in God, then in Him put your trust if you have indeed submitted to Him.” Putting one’s trust in God is a sign of the deep faith in Him. Putting one’s trust in God provides a source of power and support to the believer. They responded positively to his words, “In God do we put our trust. Our Lord, do not subject us to the persecution of the wrongdoers. And deliver us by your mercy from the disbelievers.” It should be noted that there is no contradiction between this supplication and the fact that they have put their trust in God. On the contrary, it emphasizes their trust in God because it shows that they were certain that God is in control of all affairs. A believer should not wish to be persecuted however, if subjected to persecution, one should persevere. God then commanded Moses (PBUH) to start organizing the campaign for leaving Egypt, “We inspired Moses and his brother (saying), ‘Settle your people in houses in Egypt, make your houses places of worship, and establish prayers. And give glad tidings to the believers.’” During this stage, Moses (PBUH) was commanded to launch a campaign to prepare the children of Israel both physically and spiritually for the exodus. Both parts of the campaign were necessary for the exodus to succeed. People may belittle the need for spiritual preparation, but experience has shown repeatedly that a soldier needs a strong faith as well as good fighting equipment to win a battle.

“Moses prayed, ‘Our Lord, You have indeed bestowed on Pharaoh and his chiefs splendor and wealth in the life of this world. Our Lord, they mislead people from Your path. Our Lord, destroy their wealth, and harden their hearts, so they do not believe until they see the painful torment.’” Pharaoh and his chiefs used the power and wealth that God bestowed on them to sway people away from the straight path. They did this both by temptation and persecution. Some people do not persevere in such tests. They are easily influenced by those who have power and wealth. Moses (PBUH) prayed God to remove from Pharaoh and his chiefs the means to tempt and persecute people. His prayer showed that he had despaired that Pharaoh and his chiefs would ever believe in God. God responded favorably to Moses’ prayer, “Your prayer has been answered, so stay on the straight path and do not follow the path of those who have no knowledge.”

We now come to the second scene, the scene of the exodus. “We took the Children of Israel across the sea. Pharaoh and his hosts followed them in insolence and spite. When the drowning overtook him, he said, “I believe that there is no deity except Him whom the Children of Israel believe in. I am of those who submit (to God).” This is the last scene in the story of the encounter between Moses and Pharaoh. The narrative provides a brief description of the scene. The focus is on the end of the tyrant and the salvation of the believers. The emphasis is not on the details but on the fact that God’s promise, made earlier in the Sura, has been fulfilled. When Pharaoh realized that his end was near and that his power and arrogance did not save him, he begged for salvation. But, it was too late, “Now! When you had been a rebel before and had been of the mischief-makers?”

God chose to save his corpse so that people would know the consequences of arrogance and tyranny, “This day We save you in body that you may be a sign for those who come after you. Most people are heedless of Our signs.” However, many people do not reflect on these signs.

The verses continue to narrate the events which the children of Israel encountered after the exodus, “And We had certainly settled the Children of Israel in a good dwelling-place, and provided for them sustenance of the best. It was after knowledge had been granted to them, that they fell into schisms. Verily God will judge between them on the Day of Judgment regarding that over which they used differ.” The Arabic words which are translated here as “good dwelling-place” suggest that God gave them safe and secure dwellings. However, they differed in their opinions regarding the allowable and the forbidden, so God will settle these differences on the Day of Judgment.

“If you are in doubt concerning that which We have revealed to you, then ask those who have been reading the Scripture before you. The truth had indeed come to you from your Lord, so do not be of those who doubt.” The Messenger (PBUH) was not in doubt. It was narrated that, when this verse was revealed, he said, “I do not doubt and I am not going to ask.” Furthermore, the verse ends by saying, “The truth had indeed come to you from your Lord.” So what is the reason behind the command? The verse refers to the difficult situation in which the Prophet (PBUH) found himself after the incident of Israa and Mi’raj (the trip to the Farthest Mosque and the ascension to heaven). Some Muslims simply could not believe the story and they became apostates. This saddened the Prophet (PBUH) in addition to the sadness brought about by the loss of his wife and his uncle. This verse consoled the Prophet (PBUH) and assured him that he was on the right path. It also indicated that punishment is awaiting those who abandoned their faith. The verse also established a basic Islamic principle: when in doubt ask those who have the knowledge. Is there a contradiction between the command not to be of those who doubt and the command to seek clarification? The answer is no. The command not to be of those who doubt means that one should not be of those who persist in doubting; those who do not seek the knowledge which would clarify their doubts.

But those who stubbornly persisted in their denial after they saw the truth are losers “do not be among those who deny the revelations of God, for then you would become of the losers.” They were those who earned the painful torment because they closed their eyes so that they do not see the truth, “Those against whom the word of your Lord has passed will not believe. Even if every sign was brought to them, until they see the painful torment.”

“If only there had been a community (of all those that were destroyed of old) that believed and profited by its belief as did the folk of Jonah. When they believed We relieved them of the torment of disgrace in the life of this world and gave them comfort for a while.” This statement describes the state of the communities of the past. They did not believe; only a few people believed in each of these communities. Had they believed they would have benefited but they chose to disbelieve except one community: the folk of Jonah. The verse does not detail what happened to Jonah’s (PBUH) folk but simply outlines the end result. The verse states that when they believed they achieved salvation, had they not believed at the right time, they would have suffered the grave torment.

One can glean two lessons from this account:

1. No one should despair of God’s mercy. It is never too late to repent and return to the straight path. This may be a reason for the exemption from the disgraceful torment in this life. God saved the people of Jonah when they repented.
2. God’s law has taken effect. Saving Jonah’s people from the torment in this life is an expression of this law. When they believed they were saved.

“And if your Lord had willed, all who are on the earth would have believed together. Would you (Muhammad) compel people until they become believers?” This is a fundamental rule. Had God willed, He could have created all people the same. He could have made them all believers like the angels. Had God willed, He could have deprived people of the free will, they would have had no ability to choose. God Almighty in His wisdom created human beings with propensity to goodness and evil and gave them the ability to choose either way. People have the free will to choose whether to believe or disbelieve. The Prophet (PBUH) could not compel any one to adopt faith. There should be no compulsion in matters of the heart and conscience.

“It is not for any soul to believe save by the permission of God. He has set uncleanness upon those who have no sense.” The verse does not imply that God will force people to believe or disbelieve. It states that faith can be reached only through a certain route, outlined by God. To be a believer one should follow God’s route to belief. Those who choose not to apply their ability to discern right from wrong have lost their cleanliness. They will see the signs of God in heavens and earth but will not be able to understand them because they disabled their intellectual ability to think and reflect, “Say, ‘Consider all that is in the heavens and on earth’; but neither signs nor warnings avail those who do not believe.” The Arabs who lived at the time of the revelation of the Quran did not know much about the universe, the heavens and the earth. However, it is important to understand that there is a connection between the initial natural disposition of the human beings and the universe. When humankind tunes this disposition to listen to the universe the communication between the two is established.

God's law is firmly established and never changes. The consequences of denying the truth are well known. No one should expect God's law to change. Thus an ultimatum has been issued, "What are they waiting for but (what happened in) the days of those who passed away before them? Say, 'Wait then, I too will wait with you.'" This group of verses ends with a promise to the believers, a promise that God will fulfill, "In the end We deliver Our messengers and those who believe. It is binding on Us that We should deliver those who believe."

Verses 104 to 109

104. Say, "People, if you are in doubt of my religion, then (know that) I do not worship those whom you worship, other than God. But I worship God who will take your souls (at death). I am commanded to be of the believers,"
105. And, (Muhammad) set your face resolutely towards religion, and be not of those who ascribe partners (to God).
106. And do not call besides God on that which can neither benefit you nor harm you, for if you do then surely you will in that case be of the wrong-doers.
107. If God afflicts you with harm, there is none who can remove it save Him; and if He desires good for you, there is none who can repel His bounty. He strikes with it whom He wills of his servants. He is the All-Forgiving, the Giver of Mercy.
108. Say, "People, the truth has come to you from your Lord. So whosoever is guided, is guided only for (the good of) his soul, and whosoever goes astray only goes astray against it. And I am not a guardian over you.
109. And (Muhammad) follow that which is being revealed to you, and persevere until God gives judgment. And He is the Best of Judges. (10: 104-109)

The Sura ends with a proclamation to all humanity, even though, only the idol worshippers of Quraish were the only people who heard it directly from the Prophet (PBUH), "Say, 'People, if you are in doubt of my religion, then (know that) I do not worship those whom you worship, other than God. But I worship God who will take your souls (at death). I am commanded to be of the believers,'" The verse commanded the Messenger (PBUH) to state his position to the idolaters, "I know that I call you to the truth. If you have any doubts about it, I am still going to persevere and I will never worship any except God who will put you to death. I will obey God's command to be a believer."

God's command to His Messenger (PBUH) continued, "And, (Muhammad) set your face resolutely towards religion, and be not of those who ascribe partners (to God)." Do not call upon those who do could not benefit or harm you, "And do not call besides God on that which can neither benefit you nor harm you, for if you do then surely you will in that case be of the wrongdoers."

"If God afflicts you with harm, there is none who can remove it save Him; and if He desires good for you, there is none who can repel His bounty. He strikes with it whom He wills of his servants. He is the All-Forgiving, the Giver of Mercy." God's law of causality is in effect. The consequences of each deed are well established and no one can change them. Only God can change His own law.

The final proclamation then follows, “Say, ‘People, the truth has come to you from your Lord. So whosoever is guided, is guided only for (the good of) his soul, and whosoever goes astray only goes astray against it. And I am not a guardian over you.’” This is the final proclamation; each one should choose the way ahead. The consequences will follow.

Finally, a command is issued to the Prophet (PBUH) to follow what has been revealed to him, “And (Muhammad) follow that which is being revealed to you, and persevere until God gives judgment. And He is the Best of Judges.”

Sura 11: Hud

In the Name of God, the Lord of Mercy, the Giver of Mercy

This Sura has been revealed, in its totality, in Mecca. Some scholars are of the opinion that verses 12, 17, and 114 were revealed in Medina but when one reflects on the narrative, this seems to be less likely. The three verses flow naturally with the narrative of the whole Sura. In addition, these verses deal with topics which are typical of the verses of the Quran revealed in Mecca. They deal with the issues of the doctrine and Quraish's stance and opposition to the new religion. One can cite for example verse 12 which says, "Perchance you may (feel inclined) to give up a part of what is revealed to you, and your heart may feel straitened because they say, 'Why is not a treasure sent down to him, or why does not an angel come down with him?'" But you are only there to warn. It is God that arranges all affairs." This verse clearly describes Quraish's obstinacy and alludes to the distress that the Prophet (PBUH) suffered as a result of this obstinacy. The verse offers a consolation to the Prophet (PBUH). It is thus clear that such circumstances could only have happened during the Meccan period and around the time of the death of the Prophet's (PBUH) wife and uncle.

It is clear that verse 17, "Is he (to be counted equal with them) who has a clear proof from his Lord and a witness from Him recites it, and before it was the Book of Moses, an example and a mercy? Such believe therein, and whoso disbelieves therein of the clans, the Fire is his appointed place. So be not you in doubt concerning it. It is the Truth from your Lord; but most people do not believe," has all the characteristics of the Meccan Quran. It deals with the fundamentals of faith and it builds a case that this Quran is a divine revelation similar to the revelation that Prophet Moses (PBUH) received before.

Verse 114 came to comfort the Prophet (PBUH) and to remind him of similar difficulties which Prophet Moses (PBUH) faced. It admonished the Prophet (PBUH) to seek help in prayers and perseverance to be able to face these difficult times.

The whole Sura was revealed after Surat Yunus (Chapter 10) which was revealed after Surat Al-Israa (Chapter 17). This order helps us determine the time when this Sura was revealed. The Sura was revealed during one of the most difficult periods of the life of the Prophet (PBUH) in the Meccan era. This was the period when the Prophet's (PBUH) uncle and wife died. The idolaters of Mecca were reluctant to challenge the authority of Abu Taleb who announced that Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) enjoys his protection. Abu Taleb's death encouraged many of the idolaters of Mecca to take advantage of the situation and ridicule and assault the Prophet (PBUH).

Verses 1 to 24:

1. Alif. Lam. Ra. (This is) a Book whose verses are perfected and then presented in detail from One who is Wise, Totally-Aware.
2. (Say Prophet), "Worship none but God. I am sent to you from Him as a warner and a bringer of glad tidings."

3. And (Saying), "Seek forgiveness of your Lord, and turn to Him in repentance, that He may grant you enjoyment, good (and true), for an appointed term, and He may bestow His grace on all who merit grace. But if you turn away, then I fear for you the torment of a great day.
4. To God is your return, and He has power over all things."
5. Undoubtedly, they enshroud their hearts that they may hide from Him. Even when they cover themselves with their garments, He knows what they conceal, and what they reveal, for He knows well the (innermost secrets) of the hearts.
6. There is no moving creature on earth but its sustenance depends on God. He knows the time and place of its definite dwelling place and its temporary deposit. All is in a clear Record.
7. He it is who created the heavens and the earth in six Days - and His Throne was over the waters - that He might try you, which of you is best in conduct. But if you were to say to them, "You shall indeed be raised again after death", the disbelievers would surely say, "This is nothing but obvious sorcery."
8. And if We delay the torment for them for an appointed time, they will surely say, "What is keeping it back?" On the day it (actually) comes upon them, nothing will divert it away from them, and they will be completely encircled by that which they used to mock at.
9. And if we give humankind a taste of mercy from Us and then We withdraw it from him, indeed he is despairing, ungrateful.
10. And if We give him a taste of comfort after distress has afflicted him, he will certainly say, "The misfortune has gone away from me." Most surely he is exultant, boastful.
11. Save those who persevere and do good deeds. Theirs will be forgiveness and a great reward.
12. Perchance you may (feel inclined) to give up a part of what is revealed to you, and your heart may feel straitened because they say, "Why is not a treasure sent down to him, or why does not an angel come down with him?" But you are only there to warn. It is God that arranges all affairs.
13. Or they may say, "He forged it." Say, "Then bring ten suras forged like it and call whomsoever you can, other than God, if you are truthful."
14. If then they do not respond to you, then you should know that this revelation has been sent down containing knowledge from God, and that there is no deity but He. Will you then submit to Him?"
15. Those who desire the life of this world and its glitter; We shall repay them in full according to their deeds therein and they will not suffer any loss.
16. Those are they for whom there is nothing in the Hereafter but the Fire. Their designs here will be fruitless and their deeds will be futile.
17. Is he (to be counted equal with them) who has a clear proof from his Lord, recited by a witness from Him, and before it was the Book of Moses, an example and a mercy? Such believe therein, and whoso disbelieves therein of the clans, the Fire is his appointed place. So do not be in doubt concerning it. It is the Truth from your Lord; but most people do not believe.
18. Who can be more unjust than those who invent a lie against God? They will be brought back to the presence of their Lord, and the witnesses will say, "These are the ones who lied against their Lord." The curse of God is on the wrongdoers.

19. Those who would avert (people) from the path of God and desire to make it crooked, these were they who denied the Hereafter.
20. They will not frustrate (God's design) on earth, nor will they have protecting guardians besides God. Their torment will be doubled. They could not hear; and they did not see.
21. Those are the ones who lost their own souls, and that which they used to invent has failed them.
22. Assuredly in the Hereafter they will be the greatest losers.
23. But those who believe, do righteous deeds, and humble themselves before their Lord they will be companions of the paradise, to dwell therein forever.
24. The similitude of the two parties is as the blind and the deaf and the seer and the hearer. Are they equal in similitude? Will you not then take heed? (11:1-24)

“Alif. Lam. Ra. (This is) a Book whose verses are perfected and then presented in detail from One who is Wise, All-Aware. (Say Prophet), “Worship none but God. I am sent to you from Him as a warner and a bringer of glad tidings.” And (Saying), “Seek forgiveness of your Lord, and turn to Him in repentance, that He may grant you enjoyment, good (and true), for an appointed term, and He may bestow His grace on all who merit grace. But if you turn away, then I fear for you the torment of a great day. To God is your return, and He has power over all things.” These four verses state a number of fundamental principles of the doctrine. These include the truth of the revelation and message, God alone is worthy of being worshipped, the reward in the Hereafter for those who chose to follow the divine project, the punishment for those who deny God, the promise that all people will return to God, and the unlimited power of God.

“Alif. Lam. Ra. (This is) a Book whose verses are perfected and then presented in detail from One who is Wise, Totally-Aware.” The Book has been composed using the letters of the Arabic Alphabet. Its verses were perfected. They are well written and provide unequivocal meanings. Each word has been chosen carefully to provide exactly the intended meaning. The sentences are in harmony and the narrative flows without contradictions. It is God who composed the Book. This is why it came in a perfect form.

The Book states the fundamental principles of the doctrine. The first principle, “Worship none but God.” This is a statement of the Oneness of God. He is the only one worthy of worship, worthy of obedience, and worthy of service. The second principle is the Message which includes both a warning and a glad tidings. The third principle is the duty to repent and turn back to God. Those who will follow the divine project are then promised a great reward in the Hereafter, “He may grant you enjoyment, good (and true), for an appointed term, and He may bestow His grace on all who merit grace.” Then there is the threat of grievous punishment for those who deny God. All people will return to God because God has limitless power, “To God is your return, and He has power over all things.” God has absolute power; He is in total control of everything.

This is the Book which brought the fundamental principles on which the religion of Islam is established. The most important principle is the belief in the Oneness of God. It draws a demarcation line between order and chaos. It liberates people of the myth which drives them to worship human beings like themselves. It allows the establishment of objective and rational systems which are not dictated by the whims and desires of tyrant rulers. The dispute between the believers and disbelievers was not about who is the Creator, but the main issue was and is about who is worthy of taking control of people's lives. Is it God or is it the tyrant rulers? This is the issue that has been addressed in these verses, "Worship none but God." Worshipping God alone means that one accepts to be governed by God's rules and that people should live according to the divine project.

People should then believe in the Message because it came to teach people the details of the divine project. It also implies that only God has the authority to issue the laws which control people's lives. Seeking God's forgiveness is a sign of sound hearts. Only sound hearts feel the pain of sinning and have the desire to be forgiven. The first condition of a genuine repentance is to relinquish sin. The verses then discuss the belief in the Day of Judgment to establish the fact that there is a purpose for this life. The purpose of life is to achieve goodness, and whoever fulfills his/her duty will be rewarded fully. The reward is comprehensive, "He may bestow His grace on all who merit grace." Some of the scholars believe that the reward will be obtained in the Hereafter, but I believe that the verse implies that the reward is in this life as well as in the Hereafter. Any community that lives according to the divine project will be rewarded with a good life; a life of prosperity, peace, and justice.

The verses continue to describe the reaction of the disbelievers to the principles stated in the Book, "Undoubtedly, they enshroud their hearts that they may hide from Him. Even when they cover themselves with their garments, He knows what they conceal, and what they reveal, for He knows well the (innermost secrets) of the hearts." The verse may be describing the actual response of the idolaters of Mecca when they heard the Quran being recited. They lowered their heads as if they were trying to hide from God. However, they were reminded that God knows what people reveal and what they conceal. God even knows their thoughts.

"There is no moving creature on earth but its sustenance depends on God. He knows the time and place of its definite dwelling place and its temporary deposit. All is in a clear Record." This is another form of God's comprehensive knowledge and power. He provides for each living creature on earth and knows its place of dwelling. His knowledge is all encompassing and His power is limitless. Although God has pledged to provide for each living creature but this should not be taken as an excuse to stop people from working hard to earn their livelihood. These two verses assert two of God's attributes which should be clear in the minds of people: His is Omniscient and He is the Provider.

The verses continue to teach people about the attributes of their Lord, "He it is who created the heavens and the earth in six Days - and His Throne was over the waters - that He might try you, which of you is best in conduct. But if you were to say to them, 'You shall indeed be raised again after death,' the disbelievers would surely say, 'This is nothing but obvious sorcery.'" We discussed the creation of heavens and earth before in Surat Yunus (Chapter 10). It is mentioned here to relate the organization of the universe to people's lives. This verse mentions a new aspect of the creation of heavens and earth, “and His Throne was over the waters,” which indicates that water was present when the heavens and earth were fashioned in their final forms and God’s throne was on water. However, we will not speculate on where was this water and how did it carry the throne. The verse does not mention any details about the process of creation. However, the purpose of the creation is to test people’s conduct.

God created the heavens and earth in six days this was necessary for the earth to become, in its final form, suitable for sustaining human life. God created people and designed the earth to become a livable environment for them. God also equipped humankind with the tools and skills suitable for life on earth. God gave humankind an initial natural disposition that is adept to understand the laws that govern the universe. However, God also gave humankind the ability to discriminate between right and wrong and to choose between them. God will help those who choose to follow guidance and will let those who choose not to follow guidance to wander blindly in their misguidance. God made life on earth a testing ground to determine who of them will do good deeds. God does not need the results of the test, because His knowledge is encompassing, however, the results of the test are necessary for the reward or punishment to be decided on the basis of clear material evidence. This is a testament of God’s justice.

But people deny the Hereafter and the accountability, “But if you were to say to them, ‘You shall indeed be raised again after death,’ the disbelievers would surely say, ‘This is nothing but obvious sorcery.’” They also have the audacity to mock the prophets, “And if We delay the torment for them for an appointed time, they will surely say, ‘What is keeping it back?’ On the day it (actually) comes upon them, nothing will divert it away from them, and they will be completely encircled by that which they used to mock at.” In the early time of the history of human race on earth, God chose to destroy nations which continued to reject the guidance brought to them after they have received physical miracles which testified to the truth of the Message. God sent specific messages to individual nations. The miracles that God sent to support a message were meant only to be an evidence for those who witnessed it. These were transient situations. The Message that Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) brought is the last Message that God sent to the whole human race. The miracle that Prophet (PBUH) brought as an evidence for the truth of the Message is the Quran which is an everlasting miracle. It is available to be witnessed and read by all human generations since the time it was revealed till the end of time. The divine wisdom chose not to destroy those who rejected the message because guidance is a continuous process. The same rule was applied to the previous monotheistic religions. The people who rejected these messages were not annihilated. The disbelievers were ignorant of God’s rule. They were wondering why the punishment had not befallen them. They did not appreciate the fact that God created humankind with the ability to choose between right and wrong. They rejected the concept of accountability. That is why they challenged the Prophet (PBUH) and kept asking, “What is keeping it back.”

On the Day of Judgment God will hold every one accountable to what they have done during their lives, “On the day it (actually) comes upon them, nothing will divert it away from them, and they will be completely encircled by that which they used to mock at.” No believer should ask for God’s punishment to be hastened. It is out of God’s mercy that people are given respite. When we consider the number of people who adopted Islam after they had initially rejected it, we understand the wisdom of God in delaying the punishment till the Day of Judgment. God knows best.

The narrative then moves on to a discussion of the human psyche, “And if we give man a taste of mercy from Us and then We withdraw it from him, indeed he is despairing, ungrateful. And if We give him a taste of comfort after distress has afflicted him, he will certainly say, ‘The misfortune has gone away from me.’ Most surely he is exultant, boastful.” The verses describe the short sightedness of the human being. Humankind lives the present moment, he easily forgets the past and finds it difficult to think about the future. He does not realize that a loss that he suffered may have been a blessing from God. The difficulty is quickly forgotten when God removes his difficulty and redresses his misery. He then becomes, “Most surely he is exultant, boastful.” Except those, “who persevere and do good deeds. Theirs will be forgiveness and a great reward.” Those who persevered at the time of difficulty and did not forget God’s favor in the time of comfort will be forgiven and will have a great reward. Certainly the strong faith which is reflected on good deeds is the safeguard which protects the believer against despair in the time of adversity and against ingratitude in the time of comfort.

The Messenger (PBUH) was confronted with many of those short sighted ungrateful people who did not understand why God should send a human being as a messenger. They wanted a material proof. They wanted the Messenger (PBUH) to be an angel or at least to be accompanied by one. Then they wondered why the Messenger (PBUH) would not have a treasure. The Quran consoled the Prophet (PBUH) and reminded him of his duty and assured him of God’s support, “Perchance you may (feel inclined) to give up a part of what is revealed to you, and your heart may feel straitened because they say, ‘Why is not a treasure sent down to him, or why does not an angel come down with him?’ But you are only there to warn. It is God that arranges all affairs.” It is a reminder in the form of a rhetorical question. No, you will not succumb to their harassment and give up a part of what is revealed to you. You are only there to warn them; their accountability is to God.

“Or they may say, ‘He forged it.’ Say, ‘Then bring ten suras forged like it and call whomsoever you can, other than God, if you are truthful.’” The idolaters of Mecca accused the Prophet (PBUH) repeatedly of forging the Quran. The Quran challenged them in Surat Yunus to forge one verse similar to the verses of the Quran, why then the challenge is repeated here asking them to compose ten Suras? The early scholars who interpreted the Quran are of the opinion that the idolaters were first challenged to bring about a Quran similar to the Quran that was revealed to the Prophet (PBUH). When they failed, the challenge was reduced to ten Suras, then to a single Sura. However, there is no evidence to support this opinion. Our opinion (God knows best) is that these challenges were posed to address specific incidents. Each one had its own circumstance and consequently required a different type of challenge. The challenge posed to the disbelievers to compose a book similar to this Quran aimed at showing that they will not be able to compose a book at the same level of eloquence as the Quran. In such case, the amount does not matter; it is the quality that matters. They were asked to assemble the best authors they can manage to attempt to compose ten Suras similar to this Quran. They were doomed to failure in this endeavor, “If then they do not respond to you, then you should know that this revelation has been sent down containing knowledge from God, and that there is no god but He. Will you then submit to Him?" Their failure should be a clear proof that it has been revealed by God. There is no deity but He. Should not you then submit? But they continued to be stubborn. They were more interested in their wealth and earthly power than in the truth, "Those who desire the life of this world and its glitter, We shall repay them in full according to their deeds therein and they will not suffer any loss. Those are they for whom there is nothing in the Hereafter but the Fire. Their designs here will be fruitless and their deeds will be futile." The efforts that aimed at worldly gains will be rewarded justly in this life, but there will be no reward for them in the Hereafter. We should emphasize that had these efforts been done with the intention of seeking God's pleasure, the reward would have been in both this life as well as in the Hereafter.

"Is he (to be counted equal with them) who has a clear proof from his Lord, recited by a witness from Him, and before it was the Book of Moses, an example and a mercy? Such believe therein, and whoso disbelieves therein of the clans, the Fire is his appointed place. So do not be in doubt concerning it. It is the Truth from your Lord; but most people do not believe." There are different opinions regarding the interpretations of the two sentences, "Is he (to be counted equal with them) who has a clear proof from his Lord, recited by a witness from Him." The most probable interpretation, in my opinion, is that, "Is he (to be counted equal with them) who has a clear proof from his Lord," refers to the Messenger (PBUH) as well as to anyone who believes in his message. The sentence, "recited by a witness from Him," refers to the Quran, which God sent as a witness to confirm the truth of the message that Muhammad (PBUH) brought. The previous Book that Moses (PBUH) was given testifies to truthfulness of Muhammad (PBUH) as well.

It seems to me that the verse describes the relationship between God and His Messengers. It indicates that God places faith in the heart of the messengers who have been sent by Him. We can see this clearly from the discussions between the messengers and their people. Noah (PBUH) said, "My people, think: if I have a clear sign from my Lord, and that He has sent mercy to me from His own presence, but that the mercy has been made obscure to you? Shall we compel you to accept it when you are averse to it?" (11:28). The same address was made by Saleh (PBUH), "My people, do you see if I have a clear proof from my Lord and He has bestowed His mercy on me, who then can help me against God if I were to disobey Him? You would only increase my loss." (11:63). Also, Shu'ayb (PBUH) said, "My people, do you see if I have a clear proof from my Lord and He gave me fair provision? I do not wish, in opposition to you, to do that which I forbid you to do. I only desire (your) betterment to the best of my power; and my success (in my task) can only come from God. In Him I trust, and to Him I always turn." (11:88). All these messengers used the same wording in addressing their people. This expression reflects the deep belief that fills their hearts and confirms the connection between them and their true Lord. The objective of the repetition of the same message is to confirm the unity that binds all the messengers of God including Prophet Muhammad (PBUH). This refutes the claims made by the idolaters that Muhammad (PBUH) fabricated this Quran.

The verse questions the logic behind the idolaters' claim that Muhammad (PBUH) has fabricated the Quran. It reiterates the argument which supports the prophet-hood of Muhammad (PBUH), showing clearly that he is a member of the group of messengers that God sent to lead humanity to the straight path. Muhammad's (PBUH) message is supported by all the previous messengers. So, let there be no doubt about the authenticity of the Message.

“Who can be more unjust than those who invent a lie against God? They will be brought back to the presence of their Lord, and the witnesses will say, ‘These are the ones who lied against their Lord.’ The curse of God is on the wrongdoers.” Those who invent lies against God will be paraded on the Day of Judgment and the witnesses will point to them labeling them liars. The witnesses include the angels, the messengers, and the believers. They will then be cursed for their efforts to bar people from the straight path, “Those who would avert (people) from the path of God and desire to make it crooked, these were they who denied the Hereafter.” They wanted people to follow the crooked path and they denied the Hereafter. People servitude to God is a source of honor and dignity while servitude to anyone other than God is a source of humiliation.

“They will not frustrate (God’s design) on earth, nor will they have protecting guardians besides God. Their torment will be doubled. They could not hear, and they did not see.” No one will be able to frustrate God; had He willed He could have punished the idolaters during their lives. They will have no protector to support them against God. In the Hereafter, they will have the punishment that they earned for the deeds they committed during their lives. Those are the ones who lost themselves, “Those are the ones who lost their own souls, and that which they used to invent has failed them.” This is the greatest loss that a person can suffer. They lost their dignity in the life of this world and they will suffer the humiliation in the Hereafter. They will also lose that which they fabricated against God, “Assuredly in the Hereafter they will be the greatest losers.” They lost their souls both in the worldly life and in the Hereafter.

On the other side, one finds the believers who did good deeds secure in their faith, “But those who believe, do righteous deeds, and humble themselves before their Lord they will be companions of the paradise, to dwell therein forever.” The Arabic sentence which has been translated as “humble themselves before their Lord,” has the connotation of being secure with God, confident of His help, and happy in submitting to Him.

“The similitude of the two parties is as the blind and the deaf and the seer and the hearer. Are they equal in similitude? Will you not then take heed?” The verse paints an image which juxtaposes the two groups: the believers and the disbelievers. The disbelievers are blind and deaf; they do not see nor can they hear. The main function of the senses in the humankind is to act as gates to the heart and mind so that one can understand and reflect. The disbelievers closed these gates and thus deprived themselves of the benefit of the senses. The believers on the other hand enjoy the full benefit of their senses so they become guided. They are certainly not equal.

Verses 25 to 49:

25. And We sent Noah to his people (and he said), “I have come to you with a plain warning
26. That you serve none but God. Verily I do fear for you the torment of a painful Day.”
27. But the chiefs of the disbelievers among his people said, “We see you but a mortal like ourselves. And we see that those who followed you are but the meanest among us, whose

28. He said, “My people think, if I have a clear sign from my Lord, and He has sent mercy to me from His own presence, but that the mercy has been made obscure to you? Shall we compel you to accept it when you are averse to it?”
  29. And my people, I do not ask you any reward in return. My reward is from none but God. But I will not drive away (in contempt) those who believe. Verily they are to meet their Lord, and I see that you are the ignorant ones,
  30. And my people, who would help me against God if I drove them away? Will you not then take heed?
  31. I tell you not that I have the treasures of God, nor do I know the unseen, nor do I claim to be an angel. I will not say, to those whom your eyes do despise, that God will not grant them (all) that is good. God knows best what is in their souls. I should, if I did, indeed be a wrongdoer.”
  32. They said, “Noah, you have argued with us for too long, now bring upon us what you threaten us with, if you speak the truth.”
  33. He said, “Truly, God will bring it on you if He wills and you will not be able to escape.
  34. My counsel will not profit you if I were to advise you, if God's will is to keep you astray. He is your Lord and to Him you will be brought back.
  35. Or do they say, “He forged it?” Say, “If I forged it, I will bear the consequence of my sin. I am innocent of (all) that you commit.”
  36. It was revealed to Noah, “None of your people will believe except those who have believed already. So grieve no longer over their (evil) deeds.
  37. But construct an Ark under Our eyes and by Our inspiration, and do not speak to Me on behalf of the wrongdoers. They are about to be drowned.”
  38. And he was building the Ark, and every time the chieftains of his people passed by him, they mock him. He said, “You may mock us now, but we will mock you as you used to mock (us).
  39. You will soon know who it is on whom will descend a torment that will cover them with shame and on whom will a lasting torment come down.”
  40. (Thus it was) till, when Our command came to pass and water gushed out of the oven. We said, “Carry therein two of every kind, a pair (the male and female), and your household, save him against whom the word has gone forth already, and those who believe. But only a few believed with him.
  41. And he said, “Embark therein. In the name of God be its course and its mooring. My Lord is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.”
  42. And it sailed with them amid waves like mountains, and Noah cried to his son – who separated himself from the others – “My son, come ride with us, and be not with the disbelievers.”
  43. He (the son) said, “I shall take refuge in some mountain that will save me from the water.” (Noah) said, “This day there is none that saves from the command of God save him on whom He bestowed His mercy.” And the waves came in between them, so he was among those who drowned.
  44. And it was said, “Earth, swallow your water and, sky, be cleared of clouds.” And the water subsided. And the command was fulfilled. And it (the Ark) came to rest upon (the mount) Al-Judi and it was said, “Gone are the wrongdoers.”

45. And Noah called upon his Lord. He said, "My Lord, my son is of my household, and Your promise is the truth, and You are the Most Just of Judges."
46. He (God) said, "Noah, he is not of your household. His conduct was unrighteous. So ask not of Me that of which you have no knowledge. I admonish you lest you act like the ignorant."
47. He (Noah) said, "My Lord, I do seek refuge with You, lest I ask You that of which I have no knowledge. And unless You forgive me and have mercy on me, I should indeed be lost."
48. It was said, "Noah, go you down with peace from Us and blessings upon you and some nations (that will spring) from those who are with you. (There will be other) nations to whom We shall give enjoyment for a while, then a painful torment from Us will overtake them."
49. These are accounts of the unseen which We reveal to you (Muhammad). Neither you nor your people had any previous knowledge of them, so persevere. The future belongs to those who are conscious of God. (11:25-49)

"And We sent Noah to his people (and he said), 'I have come to you with a plain warning, that you serve none but God. Verily I do fear for you the torment of a painful Day.'" This is almost the same wording that was used in describing Muhammad's (PBUH) mission. This emphasizes the oneness of the message which was delivered by all messengers. In the Arabic text the verse does not explicitly have "(and he said)" which we added in the translation. The Arabic text narrates the encounter between Noah (PBUH) and his people as if it were a live scene that plays in front of us. The verse sums up the role of the messenger, "I have come to you with a plain warning." It also emphasizes the essence of the message, "That you serve none but God." Then it outlines the consequences of not heeding the warning, "Verily I do fear for you the torment of a painful Day." What was the response of the elite among his people? "But the chiefs of the disbelievers among his people said, 'We see you but a mortal like ourselves. And we see that those who followed you are but the meanest among us, whose judgment is immature. Nor do we see in you (all) any merit above us. In fact, we think you are liars.'" This was their arrogant response to Noah's (PBUH) call. It is the same response that Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) received from the chiefs of Quraish. They did not think that a human being is worthy of being a messenger of God. It is true that delivering God's message is an enormous task, but God in His wisdom must have prepared humankind to carry this responsibility. They were also indignant that a messenger was not chosen from among the elite. They did not understand that carrying the message requires more than being wealthy or powerful. A messenger should be a highly spiritual, honest and perseverant person. They objected to the fact that the messenger was a human being, then they raised another objection about those who followed the messenger, "those who followed you are but the meanest among us," They confused poverty with meanness. They refused to be grouped in one class with those who were less fortunate. They used a materialistic measure to evaluate the worth of people. They did not understand that people's worth is not measured by their wealth, their power, or their status in the society. They forgot that the values of honor, understanding, and knowledge are more important. Then the chieftains made their final conclusion, "In fact we think you are liars."

Noah (PBUH) endured their accusations and arrogance with expressions of tolerance. However, his response reflected his confidence in the true message that he brought them. He ignored their rudeness and spoke to them kindly, “He said, ‘My people think, if I have a clear sign from my Lord, and He has sent mercy to me from His own presence, but that the mercy has been made obscure to you? Shall we compel you to accept it when you are averse to it?’” He opened his address with an endearing phrase, “My people.” Then he explained in plain words, that he may have had certain attributes which made him qualified to receive the true message from his Lord. This is a great mercy from God. However, he did not intend to force them to accept the message if they were averse to it. In his response to them, Noah (PBUH) tried in a nice way to point out the values that they were turning away from.

“And my people, I do not ask you any reward in return. My reward is from none but God. But I will not drive away (in contempt) those who believe. Verily they are to meet their Lord, and I see that you are the ignorant ones.” Noah (PBUH) continued to refute their argument, pointing out that he was not seeking any reward from them and he does not care how wealthy his followers were. He would not expel those who followed him simply because they were poor. He would not transgress God’s standards, “And my people, who would help me against God if I drove them away? Will you not then take heed?”

He then reminded them of the essence of his true message, “I tell you not that I have the treasures of God, nor do I know the unseen, nor do I claim to be an angel. I will not say, to those whom your eyes do despise, that God will not grant them (all) that is good. God knows best what is in their souls. I should, if I did, indeed be a wrongdoer.” In this verse, Noah (PBUH) purified the Message which he brought, from all superficial values. It is a true message from God.

“They said, ‘Noah, you have argued with us for too long, now bring upon us what you threaten us with, if you speak the truth.’” This was a response that disguised impotence under a veil of power, weakness under a veil of strength, and fear under a veil of arrogance. Noah (PBUH) responded in a way a noble prophet would respond, “He said, ‘Truly, God will bring it on you if He wills and you will not be able to escape.’” He was only a messenger; his duty was to deliver the Message. It is God’s role to inflict His punishment if He wills and when He wills. If God’s will is that you would perish because of your misguidance then you will perish and, “My counsel will not profit you if I were to advise you, if God's will is to keep you astray. He is your Lord and to Him you will be brought back.”

The story of Prophet Noah (PBUH) is then interrupted briefly to refute Quraish’s denial of the message which Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) brought, “Or do they say, ‘He forged it?’ Say, ‘If I forged it, I will bear the consequence of my sin. I am innocent of (all) that you commit.’” Forging the Quran is a crime that a prophet would not commit.

After this brief digression, the narrative resumes the story of Prophet Noah (PBUH). We are presented by a scene of Noah (PBUH) receiving a revelation from his Lord, “It was revealed to

Noah, 'None of your people will believe except those who have believed already. So grieve no longer over their (evil) deeds.'" No more people will believe in you, so should not grieve. The warning has been delivered, the period of respite has ended, and it is now time for action, "But construct an Ark under Our eyes and by Our inspiration, and do not speak to Me on behalf of the wrongdoers. They are about to be drowned."

The following verses describe the third scene of the story of Prophet Noah (PBUH). The scene of building the Ark, "And he was building the Ark, and every time the chieftains of his people passed by him, they would mock him. He said, 'You may mock us now, but we will mock you as you used to mock (us). You will soon know who it is on whom will descend a torment that will cover them with shame and on whom will a lasting torment come down.'" The verses paint a vivid scene. We can see Noah (PBUH) in our imagination, a messenger of God turned carpenter, confidently building the Ark. He was not bothered by the folk mocking him because he knew they cannot comprehend the concept of God's revelation.

Then the expected event occurred, "(Thus it was) till, when Our command came to pass and water gushed out of the oven. We said, 'Carry therein two of every kind, a pair (the male and female), and your household, save him against whom the word has gone forth already, and those who believe.' But only a few believed with him." Stories explaining water gushing from the oven are abound, however, all what we will say is that this may have been a sign for Prophet Noah (PBUH) to load the Ark. He was commanded to allow those who believed to embark the Ark with him, "And he said, 'Embark therein. In the name of God be its course and its mooring. My Lord is All-Forgiving, Giver of Mercy.'"

The verses describe the stages of the process one after another. The first stage was the command to build the Ark. Then came the stage of loading the Ark. The command excluded those who earned the wrath of God from the list of those who would be allowed to join Noah (PBUH) on the Ark.

The verses continued to describe the horrible image of the flood, "And it sailed with them amid waves like mountains, and Noah cried to his son – who separated himself from the others – 'My son, come ride with us, and be not with the disbelievers.'" In addition to the horror brought about by the tremendous flood, Noah's (PBUH) heart was filled with the agony of the prospect of losing his son. He called upon his son to join them on the Ark but the son, full of arrogance, replied, "I shall take refuge in some mountain that will save me from the water." Noah (PBUH), knowing the truth, tried again to persuade his son, "(Noah) said, 'This day there is none that saves from the command of God save him on whom He bestowed His mercy.'" On that day, there was no escape from what God had ordained. The moment of truth came in a split second, "And the waves came in between them, so he was among those who drowned." Even now, after the passing of thousands of years, one can still feel the terror as if we were watching the events unfold in front of our eyes.

The storm abated and the universe was wrapped in stillness and, “it was said, ‘Earth, swallow your water and, sky, be cleared of clouds.’ And the water subsided. And the command was fulfilled. And it (the Ark) came to rest upon (the mount) Al-Judi and it was said, ‘Gone are the wrongdoers.’” This is a very brief verse which captures the dramatic event. The command was passed and the disbelievers met their doom.

Noah (PBUH) having seen the horrible events of the flood come to end, remembered his loss. He turned to God, “And Noah called upon his Lord. He said, ‘My Lord, my son is of my household, and Your promise is the truth, and You are the Most Just of Judges.’” He asked God about His promise to save Noah’s family. God then reminded him with the truth that he forgot in the midst of the dramatic events, “He (God) said, ‘Noah, he is not of your household. His conduct was unrighteous. So ask not of Me that of which you have no knowledge. I admonish you lest you act like the ignorant.’” A family in God’s book is not merely a group of people who share a blood relationship. A family is a group of people who share a specific creed. By this definition, Noah’s (PBUH) disbelieving son is not part of the family of the believers. The verse carries the semblance of a warning to Noah (PBUH). The warning came to address Noah’s (PBUH) request of God to fulfill His promise. Noah (PBUH) should have known that the relationship between the believers is stronger than blood relationships. God’s promise has been fulfilled; He saved the family of the believers. Noah (PBUH) understood the lesson and sought God’s forgiveness, “He (Noah) said, ‘My Lord, I do seek refuge with You, lest I ask You that of which I have no knowledge. And unless You forgive me and have mercy on me, I should indeed be lost.’”

God extended His mercy over Noah (PBUH) and blessed him and his followers, “It was said, ‘Noah, go you down with peace from Us and blessings upon you and some nations (that will spring) from those who are with you. (There will be other) nations to whom We shall give enjoyment for a while, then a painful torment from Us will overtake them.’” This was the end of the story. God granted those who believed with Noah (PBUH) and their progeny security and safety while issuing a dire warning to those who preferred the pleasure of this world. The believers received the glad tidings while the disbelievers were promised a severe punishment in the Hereafter.

This part of the Sura ended with a general statement, “These are accounts of the unseen which We reveal to you (Muhammad). Neither you nor your people had any previous knowledge of them, so persevere. The future belongs to those who are conscious of God.” The statement declared the truth of the revelation which the disbelievers denied. There are several objectives for this story and the stories mentioned in the Quran in general. The verses narrated events which were known neither to the Prophet (PBUH) nor to the Arabs at that time. These stories were part of a revelation that the Prophet (PBUH) received from the Wise, the Omniscient. The stories are also a statement of the oneness of the creed from the time Noah (PBUH) the second father of the human race. The stories cited the objections that were raised by the disbelievers whenever a messenger was sent to them. The stories also express the eternal truth, “the future belongs to those who are conscious of God.”

The story of Prophet Noah (PBUH) left many questions unanswered: was this a universal flood? Was the whole earth covered with water? Or was it a local flood? Where did it take place? We can only speculate about the answers, but there is no way one can find the correct answers to these questions. One can state that, on the face of it, the verses indicate that Noah's (PBUH) people were the only human beings living on earth at that time. The piece of land that they lived on was the only part of the earth that was inhabited at that time. It seems that the flood covered the area on which they were living. Everything perished in the flood except those who were on the Ark.

We would like to outline the lessons that we learn from Noah's (PBUH) story before we continue with the rest of the verses in this Sura. Noah's (PBUH) people were the descendants of Adam (PBUH). Adam (PBUH) was prepared and entrusted to the task of establishing the life of the human race on earth. God struck a covenant with Adam (PBUH) to follow God's guidance. God took the same covenant from Adam's wife and children. The covenant embodied the first articles of faith known to the human race. These articles of faith emanated from the principle of complete submission to God. They all received a warning to beware of the Devil's efforts to tempt them away from the straight path. God promised to guide those who submit to Him; this guidance protects them against the Devil's temptation. As time passed, generation after generation the commitment of the progeny of Adam (PBUH) to God's covenant was weakened. The Devil worked hard and used the natural weaknesses of the human beings to tempt them away from the straight path. The Devil succeeded in convincing people to worship idols as was the case with Noah's (PBUH) people. Thus, the lesson that is given in these few verses is the fact that submission to God is the first creed given to the human race. It is the protection against the Devil's temptation.

Another lesson that can be gleaned from the story is the appreciation of the value of those who submit to God. It is being said that Noah (PBUH) continued to call people to submit to God during his life on earth which is estimated to have been about nine hundred and fifty years. It has also been reported that only twelve people followed him. God saw that this small number of people is worthy of a miraculous change in the natural laws which govern the universe: causing the flood to happen. This is a very important message to the believing few who committed themselves to the absolute submission to God. They will be supported by God, even if this support came in the form of a miracle which breaks the norm of the natural laws which govern the universe. They should continue on the straight path and never despair of God's support.

Verses 50 to 68:

50. And to (the tribe of) A'ad (We sent) their brother, Hud. He said, "My people, worship God. You have no other god save Him; you are only making up lies.
51. My people, I ask of you no reward for it. My reward is the concern only of Him who created me. Do you not have sense?
52. And my people, ask forgiveness of your Lord, and turn to Him (in repentance). He will cause the sky to rain abundance on you and will add strength to your strength. Do not turn away, guilty."

53. They said, "Hud, you did not bring us a clear proof and we will not abandon our gods on the basis of your words. Nor shall we believe in you.
54. We say nothing but that (perhaps) some of our gods may have possessed you in an evil way." He said, "I call God to witness, and you too bear witness, that I am innocent of the sin of associating partners with Him.
55. So plot (your worst) against me, all of you, and give me no respite.
56. I put my trust in God, My Lord and your Lord. There is no moving creature, but He has grasp of its forelock. Verily, my Lord's way is straight.
57. If you turn away, I (at least) have conveyed the message with which I was sent to you. My Lord will make other people to succeed you, and you will not harm Him in the least. For my Lord is Keeper over all things."
58. So when Our command came to pass, We saved Hud and those who believed with him, by (special) grace from Ourselves. We saved them from a severe torment.
59. And such were A'ad. They denied the revelations of their Lord and disobeyed His messengers and followed the command of every obstinate tyrant.
60. And they were pursued by a curse in this life, and on the Day of Judgment. For A'ad denied their Lord. Away with A'ad, the people of Hud.
61. And to (the tribe of) Thamud (We sent) their brother Salih. He said, "My people, worship God. You have no other god save Him. He brought you forth from the earth and has made you dwell in it. So ask forgiveness of Him and turn to Him repentant. My Lord is near, Responsive.
62. They said, "Salih, we used to have such great hope in you. Do you (now) forbid us to worship what our fathers used to worship? We are really in grave doubt concerning that which you are calling us to."
63. He said, "My people, do you see if I have a clear proof from my Lord and He has bestowed His mercy on me, who then can help me against God if I were to disobey Him? You would only increase my loss.
64. And my people, this is God's she-camel a sign for you. Leave her to pasture on God's earth, and inflict no harm on her, or a swift torment will seize you."
65. But they did ham-string her. So he said, "Enjoy yourselves in your homes for three days. This is a threat that will not be belied."
66. When Our commandment came to pass, We saved Salih, and those who believed with him, by a mercy from Us, from the ignominy of that day. Your Lord is verily the Strong, the Eminent.
67. The (mighty) blast overtook the wrongdoers and they lay dead in their homes before the morning;
68. As if they had never dwelt and flourished there. Thamud rejected their Lord; away with Thamud. (11:50-68)

Hud (PBUH) was a member of the tribe of A'ad. The verses reflect the strong tie between the members of the tribe. Such tie should have been an important asset in helping to convince the tribe that the message brought by one of them must be good for them. The verses also highlight the error committed by the people when they rejected such a message and how the rejection resulted in creating a divide between the believers and the disbeliever, a divide based on difference in faith. Hud (PBUH) addressed his people in an endearing fashion, “And to (the tribe of) A'ad (We sent) their brother, Hud. He said, ‘My people, worship God. You have no other god save Him,’” reminding them of the strong tribal ties that binds him to them then asking them to believe in the Oneness of God. This is the same message that each and every messenger brought to his people. Hud (PBUH) reminded them that idol worship is only a lie, “You are only making up lies.” He stressed that his motivation is to serve God alone, he does not expect any reward from them, “My people, I ask of you no reward for it. My reward is the concern only of Him who made me.” His statement may have been in response to an accusation made by his people that his aim was to receive a material gain. He then stressed his objective, “Do you not have sense?” How can a messenger of God ask people for a material gain? God is the owner of everything and it is He who sends the messengers and it is He who provides for everyone. Hud (PBUH) directed them to the way to receive provisions in abundance, “And my people, ask forgiveness of your Lord, and turn to Him (in repentance). He will cause the sky to rain abundance on you and will add strength to your strength. Do not turn away, guilty.” He finished the statement by a warning them against rejecting God’s revelations.

It is interesting to note the relationship between asking God for forgiveness and the increase in provision and strength. Forgiveness is in the realm of the spiritual while provisions and strength are in the realm of the physical which is controlled by God’s universal laws. It is easy to explain the relationship between the spiritual and the physical in regard to strength. Those who have pure hearts and are keen on doing good deeds are in pursuit of pure food which usually promote their well-being. Piety is a sure medicine for stress and other psychological ailments. It provides a sense of security, safety, and a hope in the mercy of God.

Rain is controlled by natural laws. Rain can be useful in sustaining life but it can also be a destructive force. God controls the natural laws. He can direct these laws to produce the amount of rain which help sustain life. On the other hand, He is able also to direct these laws to produce rain which becomes a tool for destruction. God has the power to control the laws and to change them according to His will.

However, they took his warning lightly, “They said, ‘Hud, you did not bring us a clear proof and we will not abandon our gods on the basis of your words. Nor shall we believe in you. We say nothing but that (perhaps) some of our gods may have possessed you in an evil way.’” They rejected his call claiming that he did not bring them enough proof to support its veracity. The concept of the Oneness of God does need a proof. A reminder is sufficient to excite the initial natural disposition of the human being to accept this concept. However, they dismissed his reminder arrogantly, thinking that his argument is lacking and he did not bring a solid proof. In explaining what happened to him, they came up with the idea that one of their gods must have struck Hud (PBUH) with a touch of madness.

Hud (PBUH) had no alternative but to accept their challenge and to call upon his Lord as a witness that he has delivered the message, “He said, ‘I call God to witness, and you too bear witness, that I am innocent of the sin of associating partners with Him. So plot (your worst) against me, all of you, and give me no respite. I put my trust in God, My Lord and your Lord. There is no moving creature, but He has grasp of its forelock. Verily, my Lord’s way is straight.”

If you turn away, I (at least) have conveyed the message with which I was sent to you. My Lord will make other people to succeed you, and you will not harm Him in the least. For my Lord is a Keeper over all things.” It is a strong declaration that severs the ties between Hud (PBUH) and the disbelievers. He was one of them, the ties between Hud (PBUH) and his tribal brothers were very strong but now, the difference in faith placed a barrier between them. One marvels at the courage of a lone person like Hud (PBUH) to stand up against his tribe and to call upon them to change their faith, not fearing their reprisal. It is the strength of faith and the belief in God which filled Hud (PBUH) with the confidence to stand up against the disbelievers. He had complete confidence in God’s support. God controls every living thing and His path is the straight path. Hud (PBUH) finished his statement by indicating that he had fulfilled his task, he delivered the message and if they turn away they will suffer the consequences. God is the keeper of everything. God can always destroy the disbelievers and establish others on earth. No one can harm God in the least.

The dialogue ended and the time to exercise the threat came, “So when Our command came to pass, We saved Hud and those who believed with him, by (special) grace from Ourselves. We saved them from a severe torment.” Hud (PBUH) and those who believed were saved from the severe torment that befell the disbelievers. A’ad perished and they were cursed till the Day of Judgment, “And such were A’ad. They denied the revelations of their Lord and disobeyed His messengers and followed the command of every obstinate tyrant.” Although they only rejected one messenger, but the verse states that they rejected God’s messengers. It is a reference to the fact that all God’s messengers came with the same message. They committed a grievous error by denying God’s “revelations” and rejecting God’s “messengers.” They followed the command of those obstinate tyrants who refused to acknowledge the truth that came to them from God. They met their doom “And they were pursued by a curse in this life, and on the Day of Judgment. For A’ad denied their Lord; away with A’ad, the people of Hud”

The issue at hand is the right of the human beings to free themselves from the hold of the tyrants and to think and choose for themselves. The issue that arose between Hud (PBUH) and the tribe of A’ad is the principle of who has the ultimate authority and is worthy of being followed? Is it God or the obstinate tyrants? The sin that the people of A’ad committed is that they rejected the command which the messenger brought and they followed the commands of the tyrants. Their messenger commanded them to submit to God. It is the same message that all the messengers of God brought to their people. The absolute submission to God is the essence of the belief in the oneness of God.

The same message was given to Salih (PBUH), “And to (the tribe of) Thamud (We sent) their brother Salih. He said, ‘My people worship God. You have no other god save Him. He brought you forth from the earth and has made you dwell in it. So ask forgiveness of Him and turn to Him repentant; my Lord is near, Responsive.’” It is the same message: worship God alone, seek His forgiveness, and acknowledge the closeness and responsiveness of God. Salih (PBUH) continued to remind his people of their creation and the blessings of God Which He bestowed on them.

The corruption sealed their hearts and prevented them from seeing the truth. They ignored Salih's (PBUH) kind approach and doubted his words, "They said, 'Salih, we used to have such great hope in you. Do you (now) forbid us to worship what our fathers used to worship? We are really in grave doubt concerning that which you are calling us to.'" How dare he forbid them to continue worshipping that which their forefathers used to worship? They followed blindly in the footsteps of their fathers. The essence of the call to believe in the Oneness of God is to free oneself from the shackles of servitude to customs and tyrants.

Their statement, "We used to have such great hope in you," reminds one with the response of Quraish to Muhammad (PBUH). They used to call him the trustworthy but when he brought them the message of Islam they turned around and called him magician and liar. They forgot how he lived among them before he was sent as a messenger of God.

Salih (PBUH) responded in the same way his grandfather Noah (PBUH) responded, "He said, 'My people, do you see if I have a clear proof from my Lord and He has bestowed His mercy on me, who then can help me against God if I were to disobey Him? You would only increase my loss. And my people, this is God's she-camel a sign for you. Leave her to pasture on God's earth, and inflict no harm on her, or a swift torment will seize you.'" God gave me clear signs that led me to the straight path and He chose me to carry His message to you, would I then disobey Him? No one will help me escape the wrath of God if I disobey Him to please you. I will only suffer a greater loss: the loss of the honor of being a messenger of God, the humiliation in this life, and the punishment in the Hereafter. He then gave them a sign: God's she-camel. The expression, "God's she-camel," indicates that the camel was known to them. He also gave them a warning.

But they did not heed the warning, "But they did hamstring her. So he said, 'Enjoy yourselves in your homes for three days. This is a threat that will not be belied.'" God gave them respite for three days and God's threat came to pass, "When Our commandment came to pass, We saved Salih, and those who believed with him, by a mercy from Us, from the ignominy of that day. Your Lord is verily the Strong, the Eminent. The (mighty) blast overtook the wrongdoers and they lay dead in their homes before the morning." God saved Salih (PBUH) and those who believed with him as a sign of His mercy. They were saved from death and from the humiliation of that day. The death of Thamud was humiliating, they were seized by God and they perished as if they never existed before, "As if they had never dwelt and flourished there. Thamud rejected their Lord; away with Thamud."

Verses 69 to 83:

69. And Our messengers came to Abraham with good news. They said, "Peace." He answered, "Peace," and without delay he brought a roasted calf.
70. But when he saw their hands did not reach towards the (meal), he mistrusted them, and was fearful of them. They said, "Have no fear. We have been sent to the people of Lot."
71. And his wife was standing (there), she laughed. We gave her glad tidings of Isaac, and after Isaac of Jacob.
72. She said, "Alas for me! How am I to bear a child, seeing that I am an old woman, and my husband here is an old man? This would be indeed a wonderful thing."

73. They said, "Do you wonder at God's command? The grace of God and His blessings on you people of the house. He (God) is indeed worthy of all praise, full of all glory."
74. When fear left Abraham and the glad tidings had reached him, he began to plead with us on behalf of Lot's people.
75. Verily Abraham was, without doubt, forbearing, tender-hearted, and penitent.
76. Abraham, forsake this; your Lord's command has gone forth, there will come to them a torment which cannot be averted.
77. When Our messengers came to Lot, he was distressed and knew not how to protect them. He said, "This is a difficult day."
78. And his people came rushing towards him, and they had been long in the habit of practicing abominations. He said, "My people, here are my daughters. They are purer for you (if you marry). Be conscious of God, and do not disgrace me with my guests. Is there not among you a single right-minded man?"
79. They said, "You have certainly known that we have no claim on your daughters. Indeed, you know quite well what we want."
80. He said, "If only I had the power to stop you or that I could take refuge in a strong support."
81. They said (The Messengers), "Lot, we are messengers from your Lord. They will not reach you. So travel with your people in the dead of the night and let not one of you turn round, except your wife. Whatsoever befalls them shall befall her. Verily their appointed time is the morning, is not the morning soon?"
82. When Our command came to pass, We turned (the cities) upside down, and rained down on them brimstones hard as baked clay, spread, layer on layer;
83. Marked with fire in the providence of your Lord (for the destruction of the wicked); and they are never far from the wrongdoers. (11:69-83)

"And Our messengers came to Abraham with good news." The angels came to Abraham (PBUH) with good news. The nature of the good news was not revealed until Abraham's (PBUH) wife was present. "They said, 'Peace.' He answered, 'Peace,' and without delay he brought a roasted calf." Abraham (PBUH) prepared a meal for the guests in keeping with the tradition of hospitality. However, the angels did not eat, "But when he saw their hands did not reach towards the (meal), he mistrusted them, and was fearful of them." When the angels refused to eat, Abraham (PBUH) took this as a sign of bad intention on the part of the guests. This made him apprehensive and he mistrusted them. Feeling this, they disclosed their nature to him, "They said, 'Have no fear. We have been sent to the people of Lot.'" His wife joined them, she was surprised to hear the good news, "And his wife was standing (there), she laughed. We gave her glad tidings of Isaac, and after Isaac of Jacob." She exclaimed, how could she become pregnant being a barren old woman? In addition, her husband was also old, "She said, 'Alas for me! How am I to bear a child, seeing that I am an old woman, and my husband here is an old man? This would be indeed a wonderful thing.'" One should not wonder at miracles decreed by God. He is the one who created the laws that govern the nature, and He is able to change these laws as He wishes, "They said, 'Do you wonder at God's command? The grace of God and His blessings on you people of the house. He (God) is indeed worthy of all praise, full of all glory.'"

Having heard the angels, the trust returned to Abraham (PBUH) but he was saddened with what will happen to the people of Lot (PBUH). He started praying God on behalf of Lot's (PBUH) people, "When fear left Abraham and the glad tidings had reached him, he began to plead with us on behalf of Lot's people. Verily Abraham was, without doubt, forbearing, tender-hearted, and penitent." Abraham (PBUH) was forbearing, tender-hearted, and penitent. This indicates that Abraham (PBUH) was perseverant, constant in praying God, and always repenting. These attributes made Abraham (PBUH) to argue with the angels about the doom that was about to befall the people of Lot (PBUH). However, he was admonished by God, "Abraham, forsake this; your Lord's command has gone forth, there will come to them a torment which cannot be averted."

The verses turned from Abraham (PBUH) and his wife to the story of the people of Lot (PBUH), "When Our messengers came to Lot, he was distressed and knew not how to protect them. He said, 'This is a difficult day.'" Lot (PBUH) knew what his people will do. They deviated from practicing the natural relationship between males and females which was designed to maintain the human race. One can understand the existence of individuals who are homosexuals but the homosexuality of the people of Lot (PBUH) is a strange phenomenon. The whole community practiced homosexuality. Lot (PBUH) tried to argue with his people to save his guests from the expected assault, "And his people came rushing towards him, and they had been long in the habit of practicing abominations. He said, 'My people, here are my daughters. They are purer for you (if you marry). Be conscious of God, and do not disgrace me with my guests. Is there not among you a single right-minded man?'" He pleaded with them not to shame him in front of his guests. He suggested that heterosexual relationships are better for them. He appealed to their sense of honor and hospitality, but it was all in vain, "They said, 'You have certainly known that we have no claim on your daughters. Indeed, you know quite well what we want.'"

The verses describe Lot's (PBUH) sense of helplessness, "He said, 'If only I had the power to stop you or that I could take refuge in a strong support.'" He saw how young the guests were and he realized that they would not be able to defend themselves. He wished that he had a strong support from someone. He forgot that God promised support to those who believe. Then the relief came, "They said (The Messengers), 'Lot, we are messengers from your Lord. They will not reach you. So travel with your people in the dead of the night and let not one of you turn round, except your wife. Whatsoever befalls them shall befall her. Verily their appointed time is the morning, is not the morning soon?'" They gave Lot (PBUH) the glad tidings that he and those who believed will be saved but the rest of his people will be destroyed. His wife was among those who were destroyed because she approved of the practices of her people.

"When Our command came to pass, We turned (the cities) upside down, and rained down on them brimstones hard as baked clay, spread, layer on layer; marked with fire in the providence of your Lord (for the destruction of the wicked); and they are never far from the wrongdoers." These verses describe the last scene in the story of the people of Lot (PBUH), what a devastating scene. The cities were completely demolished. Marked stones were sent down from the sky to destroy everything.

Verses 84 to 95:

84. And to Midian (We sent) their brother Shu'ayb. He said, "My people, worship God. You have no other god save Him. And do not give short measure and short weight. I see you are well-to-do, and I fear for you the torment of an overwhelming day.
85. And my people give full measure and weight, do not withhold from the people the things that are rightly theirs, and do not commit evil in the land with intent of making mischief.
86. That which God leaves to you is better for you, if you are believers; and I am not a keeper over you."
87. They said, "Shu'ayb, does your (religion of) prayer command you that we should forsake that which our fathers (used to) worship, or that we should refrain from doing what we please with our own property. You are the forbearing who guides to good behavior."
88. He said, "My people, do you see if I have a clear proof from my Lord and He gave me fair provision? I do not wish, in opposition to you, to do that which I forbid you to do. I only desire (your) betterment to the best of my ability; and my success (in my task) can only come from God. In Him I trust, and to Him I always turn.
89. And my people, let not the schism between you and me cause you to sin so that there befalls you that which befell the people of Noah and the people of Hud, and the people of Salih; and the people of Lot are not far off from you.
90. But ask forgiveness of your Lord, and turn to Him (in repentance). For my Lord is indeed Giver of Mercy, Loving."
91. They said, "Shu'ayb, we do not understand much of what you say. We do see you weak among us. If it were not for your family, we would have stoned you, for you are not mighty against us."
92. He said, "My people, is my family more honored by you than God? Did you put Him behind your backs? Verily my Lord encompasses what you do.
93. And my people, do whatever you can, I will do (my part). Soon you will know who it is on whom descends a disgraceful torment, and who is a liar. And you watch, for I too am watching with you."
94. When Our commandment came to pass, We saved Shu'ayb, and those who believed with him, by a mercy from Us, the (mighty) blast overtook the wrongdoers and they lay dead.
95. As if they had never dwelt and flourished there; away with Midian as was Thamud removed. (11:84-95)

"And to Midian (We sent) their brother Shu'ayb. He said, 'My people, worship God. You have no other god save Him. And do not give short measure and short weight. I see you are well-to-do, and I fear for you the torment of an overwhelming day.'" It is the same message: the belief in the oneness of God. This is the basic principle that should govern the way of life, the law and the dealings of people.

"And my people give full measure and weight, do not withhold from the people the things that are rightly theirs, and do not commit evil in the land with intent of making mischief. That which God leaves to you is better for you, if you are believers; and I am not a keeper over you."

Another message that Shu'ayb (PBUH) brought the people of Midian. He commanded them to be honest and fair in their dealings. This is a message that springs directly from the basic principle of the belief in the Oneness of God. The people of Midian, who lived on the route between the Arabian Peninsula and Syria, used to cheat people in their business dealings. This is a bad trait and an immoral act. They abused their strategic location which controlled the trading route between the Arabian Peninsula and Syria. The verses stress the link between the belief in the Oneness of God and business dealings between people. This link guarantees the establishment of a fair trading system and ensures peaceful life for people. It introduces a permanent standard for people to refer to in all their dealings. The desire of people to gain God's favor is the assurance that they will follow that standard. Shu'ayb (PBUH) reminded his people that God gave them good provision and they do not need to cheat to make more money. He threatened them the torment of an encompassing day. This could happen in the Hereafter or it could happen in this life. In the Hereafter God will punish them for their sins. In this life, cheating will lead to mistrust among people and this will lead to chaos in life. Shu'ayb (PBUH) even goes beyond observing fair practices in trading, he asks his people to be more generous in the exchange of commodities, not to deprive the people their fair share, and not to spread mischief in the land. He reminded them that what God has for them is much better than any other material gain. Shu'ayb (PBUH) reminded them that everyone will answer to his/her own behavior; and that he will not be held accountable for their mistakes.

But they were obstinate, they ridiculed Shu'ayb (PBUH), "They said, 'Shu'ayb, does your (religion of) prayer command you that we should forsake that which our fathers (used to) worship, or that we should refrain from doing what we please with our own property. You are the forbearing who guides to good behavior.'" This logic clearly indicates that they did not understand the link between the doctrine and the practices in their daily life. Many of the present day people, Muslims, Christians, and Jews alike, subscribe to the same ideology. They separate between the doctrine of their faith and the daily life practices. They follow God's doctrine in performing the rituals but they follow man made laws in their dealings. Many present day Muslims object to linking the faith to daily practices. They do not see the link between personal behavior and faith. They object on imposing any codes of practice dictated by religion on matters they consider related to personal freedom or even economic matters. In a way this is a kind of associating partners with God. The people of Midian not only objected to what Shu'ayb was asking them to do but they ridiculed him saying, "You are the forbearing who guides to good behavior," while they meant the opposite.

Being confident of his message, Shu'ayb (PBUH) ignored their mockery and addressed them nicely stressing the truth of his message, "He said, 'My people, do you see if I have a clear proof from my Lord and He gave me fair provision? I do not wish, in opposition to you, to do that which I forbid you to do. I only desire (your) betterment to the best of my ability; and my success (in my task) can only come from God. In Him I trust, and to Him I always turn.'" His response was clear: he is not seeking personal gains, power, or money. His objective is to improve their characters. He assured them that they will not lose anything if they follow his advice. On the contrary, he assured them of great gains if they change their bad habits. In addressing them, Shu'ayb (PBUH) used endearing language reminding them of the fact that he is one of them. He assured them that his advice is only motivated by the desire to improve their lot. His objective is to bring improvements to their way of life so that everyone in the society can benefit of the pure gain that will result. He then reminded them of the fate that met those before them who refused guidance, "And my people, let not the schism between you and me cause you to sin so that there befalls you that which befell the people of Noah and the people of Hud, and the people of Salih;

and the people of Lot are not far off from you.” Do not let your obstinacy drive you away from the guidance that has been brought to you. Shu’ayb (PBUH) opened a door for them to turn back from their obstinacy, “But ask forgiveness of your Lord, and turn to Him (in repentance). For my Lord is indeed Giver of Mercy, Loving.” But, they were locked in their misguided ways and refused to open their minds and hearts to the truth that has been sent to them, “They said, ‘Shu’ayb, we do not understand much of what you say. We do see you weak among us. If it were not for your family, we would have stoned you, for you are not mighty against us.’” They thought that they can use their material standards to measure the extent of the danger that they may be subjecting themselves to. They saw that Shu’ayb (PBUH) has no material support and they reminded him with this fact. They told him that if it were not out of respect to his family, they would have stoned him to death.

Shu’ayb (PBUH) became angry for their trespassing against God, “He said, ‘My people, is my family is more honored by you than God? Did you put Him behind your backs? Verily my Lord encompasses what you do. And my people, do whatever you can, I will do (my part). Soon you will know who it is on whom descends a disgraceful torment, and who is a liar. And you watch, for I too am watching with you.’” Shu’ayb (PBUH) told them that his family members are only mortals with no power; they should worry more about the wrath of God not the pleasure of his family. God knows everything. The verse describes a model for the believer who cherishes his Creator more than anything else. He then made his final statement indicating the parting of ways and expressing his absolute trust in God.

The curtain falls on the final scene of the story showing the destruction of the people of Shu’ayb (PBUH) and how they vanished from life as if they had never existed, “When Our commandment came to pass, We saved Shu’ayb, and those who believed with him, by a mercy from Us, the (mighty) blast overtook the wrongdoers and they lay dead. As if they had never dwelt and flourished there. Away with Midian as were Thamud removed.”

Verses 96 to 99:

- 96. And we sent Moses, with Our verses and a clear authority*
- 97. To Pharaoh and his chiefs. They followed the command of Pharaoh but Pharaoh was misguided.*
- 98. He will go before his people on the Day of Judgment, and lead them into the Fire. But woeful indeed will be the place to which they are led.*
- 99. And they were followed by a curse in this (life) and on the Day of Judgment. Woeful is the gift which shall be given (to them). (11:96-99)*

The scene that the verses describe starts with sending Moses (PBUH), supported by the power and authority from God, to Pharaoh and his chiefs, “And we sent Moses, with Our verses and a clear authority to Pharaoh and his chiefs.” Then the verses jump to the end of the story, “They followed the command of Pharaoh but Pharaoh was misguided.” God gave them the free will and the power to make the right decision but they abdicated their will to Pharaoh. He will lead them in the Hereafter, as he led them in the life of this world, to their doom, “He will go before his people on the Day of Judgment, and lead them into the Fire. But woeful indeed will be the place to which they are led.” They will be cursed, “And they were followed by a curse in this (life) and on the Day of Judgment.” And they will be disappointed when they find that the gift that Pharaoh has promised them is only Hellfire, “Woeful is the gift which shall be given (to them).”

Verses 100 to 123:

100. These are some of the stories of communities which We relate to you, of them some are still standing, and some have been mown down (by the sickle of time).
101. We wronged them not, but they did wrong themselves; and their gods, on whom they used to call beside God, availed them naught when your Lord's command came to pass; they added to them naught save ruin.
102. Such is the seizure of your Lord when He seizes communities while they are committing wrongdoing. Painful, indeed, and severe is His seizure.
103. In that is a sign for those who fear the torment of the Hereafter. That is a Day for which all people will be gathered together. That will be a Day that will be witnessed.
104. Nor shall We delay it but for an appointed term.
105. The Day it arrives, no soul shall speak except by His leave; of those (gathered) some will be wretched and some will be happy.
106. As for those who will be wretched, they will be in the Fire sighing and wailing.
107. They will dwell therein for all the time that the heavens and the earth endure, except as your Lord wills. Your Lord always does what He wills.
108. And as for those who have been blessed with happiness, they will be in paradise, abiding there so long as the heavens and the earth endure save for that which your Lord wills - unfailing gift.
109. Do not be in doubt as to what these worship. They worship nothing but what their fathers worshipped before. Verily We shall pay them back (in full) their portion unabated.
110. We certainly gave Moses the Book but differences arose about it. Had it not been for a word that had already gone forth from your Lord, the matter would have been decided between them, but they are in grave doubt concerning it.
111. Certainly, your Lord will repay them for their deeds in full. He is well informed of what they do.
112. Therefore, stand firm (on the straight path) as you were commanded, you and those who repented. Do not transgress. He (God) certainly sees well all that you do.
113. And do not incline to the wrongdoers lest the Fire touches you; and you have no protecting guardians other than God, nor shall you be helped.
114. And establish regular prayers at the two ends of the day and during parts of the night, for those things, that are good remove those that are evil. This is a reminder for the mindful.
115. And persevere; for verily God will not waste the reward of those who do good.
116. If only there had been among the generations before you people possessing a remnant (of good sense) to warn against corruption in the earth, as did a few of those whom We saved from among them. The wrongdoers pursued the enjoyment of plenty, and they were guilty.

117. Nor would your Lord be the One to destroy communities for a single wrongdoing, if its members were likely to mend their way.

118. If your Lord had so willed, He could have made humankind one nation, but they will continue to differ.

119. Except those on whom your Lord has bestowed His mercy, and for this did He create them. And the Word of your Lord shall be fulfilled, "I will fill Hell with jinn and humans all together."

120. And all that We narrate to you of the stories of the messengers to strengthen your heart therewith; and in this has come to you the truth, an admonition, and a reminder to the believers.

121. Say to those who do not believe, "Do whatever you can, we shall do our part;

122. And wait, we too shall wait."

123. To God belongs the unseen of the heavens and the earth, and to Him goes back every affair. Then worship Him, and put your trust in Him. Your Lord is not unmindful of what you do. (11: 100- 123)

"These are some of the stories of communities which We relate to you, of them some are still standing, and some have been mown down (by the sickle of time). We wronged them not, but they did wrong themselves; and their gods, on whom they used to call beside God, availed them naught when your Lord's command came to pass; they added to them naught save ruin. Such is the seizure of your Lord when He seizes communities while they are committing wrongdoing. Painful, indeed, and severe is His seizure." The previous verses presented several images of the doom that befell different peoples when they refused the guidance and rejected their messengers. Of these, those who drowned in the flood, those who perished in the severe wind, those who were destroyed with the blast, and those whose city was turned upside down. Finally, there was the image of the Pharaoh who will lead his people to Hellfire. The present verses sum up the previous stories, telling the Messenger of God (PBUH) that he had no knowledge of these stories before they were revealed to him in the Quran. The remnants of some of these peoples were still there for all to see, e.g. the ruins of the tribes of A'ad and Thamud in Al-Ahqaf and Al-Hijr, respectively. The others, like the people of Noah (PBUH) and the people of Lot (PBUH), left no ruins as if they were like a plant that was completely harvested. God did not wrong them, but it was they who wronged themselves. They did not use the faculties that God gave them, rejected the guidance that was sent to them, and ignored the messengers' warning. Thus, they became wrongdoers. The false gods they adopted did not benefit them. On the contrary their loss was multiplied because their false gods encouraged them in their wrongdoing. They were seized. God's seizure is severe.

"In that is a Sign for those who fear the torment of the Hereafter. That is a Day for which all people will be gathered together. That will be a Day that will be witnessed. Nor shall We delay it but for an appointed term. The Day it arrives, no soul shall speak except by His leave; of those (gathered) some will be wretched and some will be blessed. As for those who will be wretched, they will be in the Fire sighing and wailing. They will dwell therein for all the time that the heavens and the earth endure, except as your Lord wills. Your Lord always does what He wills. And as for those who have been blessed, they will be in paradise, abiding there so long as the heavens and the earth endure save for that which your Lord wills - unfailing gift.”

The verses are a reminder of the Day of Judgment. Only those who fear that day will heed the warning. Their sense of God consciousness will be sharpened. The hearts of those who don't fear the Day of Judgment will remain sealed blocking their senses. They cannot see God's signs, nor will they be able to understand God's wisdom. They only understand what they can physically sense. On that day, everyone will be gathered. No one will escape that day. Silence will encompass the place and the scene will be shrouded in fear. No one will be able to speak except by God's leave. Then people will be sorted out: some will be happy and some will be wretched. The wretched will suffer great stress as they are driven into Hellfire. But those who are happy will be led nicely to paradise; they will get their promised gift. Both groups will continue in their places as long as the heavens and earth endure according to God's will. God does what He wills.

“Do not be in doubt as to what these worship. They worship nothing but what their fathers worshipped before. Verily We shall pay them back (in full) their portion unabated.” This is an address to the Prophet (PBUH), a summary of the moral of the stories which were told. This address provides support to the Prophet (PBUH) and those who believed with him but it provides warning to the disbelievers. The disbelievers will surely meet the fate of those who preceded them in rejecting the guidance.

“We certainly gave Moses the Book but differences arose about it. Had it not been for a word that had already gone forth from your Lord, the matter would have been decided between them, but they are in grave doubt concerning it.” We have given Moses (PBUH) the Scripture but his followers differed among themselves, but God decreed that they will face their reckoning on the Day of Judgment. God's wisdom decreed that those who received a Scripture will be given respite until the Day of Judgment. The Scripture is a permanent record of God's message. It is a continuous source of guidance for people, generation after generation. It is different from the physical miracles that God provided to support many of His messengers. A physical miracle can only be witnessed by those who were present when the miracle took place. But the Scripture is a lasting material evidence for everyone to see and read. The Torah and the Bible were revealed to complement each other; then the Quran was revealed as the last and final Book which came to confirm the previous messages. The followers of Moses (PBUH) differed among themselves and they were in doubt of the contents of the Torah because it was written generations after Moses (PBUH) passed away. Even though God gave people respite but they will be given their reward in full, “Certainly, your Lord will repay them for their deeds in full. He is well informed of what they do.” The statement that emphasizes that God will repay everyone according to their deeds was meant to be a strong warning to the disbelievers and a support for the believers at the difficult times that they were facing in Mecca.

“Therefore stand firm (on the straight path) as you were commanded, you and those who repented. Do not transgress. He (God) certainly sees well all that you do. And do not incline to the wrongdoers lest the Fire touches you; and you have no protecting guardians other than God, nor shall you be helped. And establish regular prayers at the two ends of the day and during parts of the night, for those things, that are good remove those that are evil. This is a reminder for the mindful. And persevere; for verily God will not waste the reward of those who do good.”

This was a command to the Prophet (PBUH) to stand firm. This was a demanding request. Standing firm requires continuous effort to be careful in following God’s message, to be agile in recognizing the boundaries of the permissible, and to control one’s feelings and desires. The Prophet (PBUH) has been quoted to have said that he felt the gravity of the contents of Surat Hud when this verse was revealed. It should be noted that the command to stand firm was not a command that was meant to address the shortcomings of the Prophet (PBUH) in fulfilling his task but it was a command to warn against excesses and transgression. There is always fear of excesses and transgression when people are too sincere and too enthusiastic in performing their duties which will move the injunctions of the religion outside the circle of ease which God wanted for His religion. God wanted the practice of this religion to be rightly balanced without any excesses. Excesses which make the practices extremely difficult as well as excesses which trivializes the practices are both rejected. The essence of this religion is moderation. The believers are warned not to take the side of those who transgress lest they be tormented in Hellfire. They should only seek God’s support. They have no helper but Him. The believers were commanded to perform prayers; prayers provided the support they needed to stand firm in the face of the difficulties they were facing. Prayers provide the link to God and thus bring solace and spiritual strength. The verse mentioned praying at the ends of the day and by night which would cover the five compulsory prayers; however, no other details about these prayers were mentioned. Authentic Prophetic traditions gave the details of the rules that govern the performance of prayers. The command to perform prayers was directly followed by a statement that, “things, that are good remove those that are evil,” which is a general rule that applies to all good deeds including prayers. This is a reminder for those who remember. Prayers itself is a reminder. Standing firm requires patience and perseverance, hence the command to persevere. God’s does not waste the reward of those who do good deeds: standing firm is a good deed, establishing prayers is a good deed, and perseverance in the face of difficulty is a good deed.

“If only there had been among the generations before you people possessing a remnant (of good sense) to warn against corruption in the earth, as did a few of those whom We saved from among them. The wrongdoers pursued the enjoyment of plenty, and they were guilty. Nor would your Lord be the One to destroy communities for a single wrongdoing, if its members were likely to mend their way.” These verses state one of the principles that God has decreed in treating nations or groups of people. God will punish a nation whose members give in to corruption and do not try to stand up against tyranny and oppression. But, God will help a nation whose members stand up against corruption and tyranny and He will spare this nation of any torment. A group of people who call to the belief in the oneness of God are the saviors of their nation from God’s torment.

“If your Lord had so willed, He could have made humankind one nation, but they will continue to differ. Except those on whom your Lord has bestowed His mercy; and for this did He create them. And the Word of your Lord shall be fulfilled, 'I will fill Hell with jinns and humans all together.'" Had God willed, He could have created all people the same. But it is God's will and wisdom to create people different, each human being is different from any other human being. God created human beings with different attitudes, attributes, and aptitudes. Each one is free to choose the way he/she will follow in life. Consequently, human beings bear the responsibility for the decisions they make. Those who chose guidance will be saved but those who chose to transgress against God will be among those who are destined to Hellfire.

"And all that We narrate to you of the stories of the messengers to strengthen your heart therewith; and in this has come to you the truth, an admonition, and a reminder to the believers.

Say to those who do not believe, 'Do whatever you can, we shall do our part; and wait, we too shall wait.' To God belongs the unseen of the heavens and the earth, and to Him goes back every affair. Then worship Him, and put your trust in Him. Your Lord is not unmindful of what you do.'" The Messenger (PBUH) faced great difficulty and staunch opposition from his people. God revealed these verses to provide the Messenger (PBUH) with moral support and consolation to enable him to withstand the difficulty that he was facing. The stories that were narrated in this Sura and others assured the Messenger (PBUH) of the ultimate success of his call. The verses brought the truth from God, the glad tidings to the believers, and a warning to the disbelievers. God knows everything, He knows the unseen. He controls everything in the heavens and earth, so worship Him alone and put your trust in Him. God is aware of all what you do.

The Sura ends on the same note that was mentioned in the beginning of the Sura: the note of calling people to worship God alone. It is the same theme that runs through all the Meccan Suras: the belief in the Oneness of God.

Sura 12: Yusuf (Joseph)

In the name of God, the Lord of Mercy, the Giver of Mercy

This Sura was revealed in Mecca. It comes in sequence after Surat Hud (Chapter 11). It was revealed during the critical period of time that started after the death of both the uncle and the wife of the Prophet (PBUH) and ended by the pledges of allegiance of Al-‘Aqabah. These pledges of allegiance brought relief to the persecuted Muslims of Mecca and were a prelude for the migration of Muslims from Mecca to Medina.

There is an opinion that verses 1,2,3, and 7 were revealed in Medina. However, we are of the opinion that the whole Sura was revealed in Mecca. The first three verses read, “Alif. Lam. Ra. These are verses of the Book that makes things clear. We have sent it down as an Arabic Quran, in order that you may understand. We narrate to you (Muhammad) the best of narratives in what We have revealed to you of this Quran, though aforesaid you were one of those who were unaware.” These verses provided a logical introduction to the body and topic of the Sura. The Sura begins with the letters Alf, Lam, Ra; stating that these are verses of the Book that makes things clear; and that the Quran has been revealed in the Arabic language. This echoes the typical issues that can be seen in the Quranic verses revealed in Mecca. This introduction is also closely related to the ending of the Sura. Verse 8 is also closely related to verse 7 and complements it. Thus, it is clear that these four verses form an integral part of this Sura and they must have been revealed at the same time at which the rest of the rest of the Sura was revealed.

The Sura came down to console the Prophet (PBUH) who was saddened by the death of his uncle then the death of his wife. The Sura narrates the story of the suffering of Prophet Joseph (PBUH) being betrayed by his brothers, thrown in the well, sold in slavery, seduced by the wife of the Egyptian governor, and imprisoned. The story goes on to tell how Joseph (PBUH) moved from the prison to the palace and how he treated his brothers when they came to Egypt as traders. Yusuf (PBUH) gave the highest example of forgiveness and humility. He was not spoiled by the glory and power which were bestowed on him and he did not lose sight of the final goal, he only asked God for one thing, “My Lord, You have indeed bestowed on me power, and taught me something of the interpretation of dreams and events. You are the Creator of the heavens and the earth. You are my Patron in this world and in the Hereafter. Take my soul (at death) as one submitting to Your will, and unite me with the righteous.”

I can almost feel that the verses introduce the idea of migration from Mecca as a means for Muslims to attain power and security, similar to what happened to Prophet Joseph (PBUH). This thought was confirmed in my mind when I read the last verses in the Sura, “All the messengers We sent before you were men to whom We made revelations, men chosen from the people of their towns. Have (the disbelievers) not travelled through the land and seen the end of those who went before them? But the home of the Hereafter is best, for those who are conscious of God. Will you not then understand? (They continued) until, when the messengers despaired and thought that they were denied, then came to them Our help, and whom We willed was saved. And Our wrath cannot be averted from the guilty. There was certainly a lesson in their stories for those who understand. It is not an invented story but a confirmation of the existing (Scripture) and a detailed explanation of everything, and guidance and mercy for people who believe.” These verses remind people of God's promise to His believing servants: ease will follow difficulty even when it seems that difficulty will never cease.

This Sura has a special style which sets it apart from the other Suras of the Quran. The Sura narrated the complete story of Prophet Joseph (PBUH) contrary to the style used in narrating stories of other prophets, where different parts of the story would be told in different Suras. It is interesting to note that the Sura starts by the mention of Joseph's (PBUH) dream and ends by explaining the interpretation of the dream.

Verses 1 to 20:

1. Alif. Lam. Ra. These are verses of the Book that makes things clear.
2. We have sent it down as an Arabic Quran, in order that you may understand.
3. We narrate to you (Muhammad) the best of narratives in what We have revealed to you of this Quran, though aforetime you were one of those who were unaware.
4. When Joseph said to his father, "My father, I saw in a dream eleven planets and the sun and the moon, I saw them prostrating themselves to me."
5. He (the father) said, "My (dear) little son, do not tell your brothers of your dream, lest they plot a plot against you. Satan is certainly, for man an open enemy."
6. Thus, will your Lord choose you and teach you the interpretation of narratives (dreams and events) and perfect His blessing upon you and upon the posterity of Jacob - as He perfected it upon your fathers Abraham and Isaac aforetime. Your Lord is Omniscient, Wise.
7. Verily in Joseph and his brothers are lessons for those who seek them.
8. They said, "Truly Joseph and his brother are dearer to our father than we are, although we are a many. Our father is certainly in manifest error.
9. Slay Joseph or cast him out to some (unknown) land, so that the favor of your father may be all for you, and (that) you may afterward be righteous folk."
10. One among them said, "Do not kill Joseph but, if you must be doing, fling him into the depth of the pit; some caravan will find him."
11. They said, "Our father, why do you not trust us with Joseph, seeing we are indeed his sincere well-wishers?"
12. Send him with us tomorrow to enjoy himself and play, and we shall take good care of him."
13. (Jacob) said, "Indeed, it saddens me that you should take him away. I fear that a wolf would devour him while you are heedless."
14. They said, "If the wolf were to devour him while we are (so large) a party, then we would indeed be losers."
15. So they did take him away, and they all agreed to throw him down to the bottom of the well. And We inspired him, "You will (one day) tell them the truth of this affair while they do not realize it."
16. Then they came to their father in the evening, weeping.
17. They said, "Our father, we went racing with one another, and left Joseph with our things; and the wolf devoured him. But you will never believe us even though we are telling the truth."

18. And they came with false blood on his shirt. He said, "No, your souls have enticed you into something. (My course is) comely patience. And it is God whose help is to be sought in such (predicament) which you describe."
19. Then there came a caravan of travelers. They sent their water-carrier (for water), and he let down his bucket (into the well). He said, "Good news, here is a (fine) young man." So they concealed him as a treasure. But God knows well all that they do.
20. And they sold him for a low price, a few silver coins; and they showed no interest in him. (12: 1 – 20)

"Alif. Lam. Ra. These are verses of the Book that makes things clear. We have sent it down as an Arabic Quran, in order that you may understand. We narrate to you (Muhammad) the best of narratives in what We have revealed to you of this Quran, though aforetime you were one of those who were unaware." We used the letters of the Alphabet that the people know and use to write this Book. It came down in the Arabic language so that you may recognize that He who used the simple letters of the Alphabet to compose such a miraculous book cannot be a human being. It is imperative then that the Book must be a revelation from God. The Quran provides an invitation for people to use their intellect to reflect on this Book.

The main theme of the Sura revolves around the story of Prophet Joseph (PBUH), that is why it starts with stating this objective, "We narrate to you (Muhammad) the best of narratives in what We have revealed to you of this Quran," in spite of the fact that before this Quran you were not aware of any of these stories.

This was the introduction, which is then followed by the first scene of the story. In the first scene we see Prophet Joseph (PBUH) talks to his father about his dream, "When Joseph said to his father, "My father, I saw in a dream eleven planets and the sun and the moon, I saw them prostrating themselves to me." Joseph (PBUH) was a young boy. However, his father with his insight and wisdom realized that this is not just a young boy's dream. He immediately instructed his son, "My (dear) little son, do not tell your brothers of your dream, lest they plot a plot against you. Satan is certainly, for man an open enemy." The father realized that if the brothers came to know about this dream, their jealousy of Joseph (PBUH) will increase. He explained to his son how Satan finds a way to trap human beings and seduce them to do evil deeds.

Jacob (PBUH) may have realized that the dream is an introduction to the good news that Joseph (PBUH) will be the second in line as an heir of prophet-hood. The fathers (a grandfather is also considered a father) of Joseph (PBUH), Abraham, Isaac and Jacob (PBUT) were all prophets of God. These thoughts were communicated to Joseph (PBUH), "Thus, will your Lord choose you and teach you the interpretation of narratives (dreams and events) and perfect His blessing upon you and upon the posterity of Jacob - as He perfected it upon your fathers Abraham and Isaac aforetime. Your God is Omniscient, Wise." It is interesting that Jacob (PBUH) said, "Thus, will your Lord choose you and teach you the interpretation of narratives (dreams and events)," Knowing the interpretation of events means knowing how the events will end, but what did he mean by the word, “narratives?” Did he mean that God will give Joseph (PBUH) the insight to see through the events which he will be part of, and predict how they will unravel? Or did he mean that Joseph (PBUH) will be given the ability to interpret dreams, as we will see happen when we read the Sura? Either explanation is possible.

It might be useful at this time to digress a little bit and talk about dreams. We are commanded to believe that some dreams give us glimpses of what will happen in the future. The rationale of this belief is the dreams which Joseph (PBUH) saw, the dream of the two men who were imprisoned with Joseph (PBUH) and the dream that the king of Egypt saw. All these dreams were realized later on. In addition, our own individual experience tells us that sometimes we see in our dreams certain things which would materialize later on.

The verses move to another scene: the scene of Joseph’s (PBUH) brothers conspiring against him. The new scene starts with a strong note which grasps the attention of the reader, “Verily, in Joseph and his brothers are lessons for those who seek them.” There are many signs in the story of Joseph’s (PBUH) and his brothers for those who are seeking to learn from these stories. The focus of their complaint was the attention that Joseph (PBUH) and his brother were getting from their father; while they, who were a strong group that can provide protection and power for their father, were not getting similar attention, “They said, ‘Truly, Joseph and his brother are dearer to our father than we are, although we are a many. Our father is certainly in manifest error.’” They did not mention Joseph’s (PBUH) dream which indicates that they were not aware of the dream, contrary to what is mentioned in the Old Testament. Their hearts became full of hate which blinded them and allowed Satan to seduce them to plot a scheme to get rid of Joseph (PBUH). It was a heinous crime to contemplate the killing of Joseph (PBUH). How could the children of a prophet – even though they were not themselves prophets – even think of committing such a heinous crime, “Slay Joseph or cast him out to some (unknown) land, so that the favor of your father may be all for you, and (that) you may afterward be righteous folk.” This is how Satan seduced them: if you kill Joseph (PBUH) your father’s attention will turn towards you, then you can repent and ask forgiveness for your evil deeds and become righteous again. What kind of repentance is this? True repentance occurs after an individual has committed a crime as a result of negligence or weakness then regrets what he/she has done. One of their brothers realized the enormity of what they were contemplating, so he suggested a compromise, “One among them said, ‘Do not kill Joseph but, if you must be doing, fling him into the depth of the pit; some caravan will find him.’” The use of the phrase, “if you must be doing,” shows his reluctance to join them and indicates that he was trying to dissuade them from going on with their plans.

They went to their father to entice him to let Joseph (PBUH) join them on their outing. Their appeal carried a tone of hidden reproach. How can their father doubt their love for Joseph (PBUH) and their interest in his well-being, “They said, ‘Our father, why do you not trust us with Joseph, seeing we are indeed his sincere well-wishers?’” They assured their father of their sincerity, “Send him with us tomorrow to enjoy himself and play, and we shall take good care of him,” enticing the father to comply for the benefit of his son.

Jacob (PBUH) ignored their hidden reproach and expressed his fear that a wolf might devour him while they were busy, “(Jacob) said, ‘Indeed, it saddens me that you should take him away. I fear that a wolf would devour him while you are heedless.’” His statement that he will miss Joseph (PBUH) must have revived the feelings of jealousy and hatred in their hearts. However, they found an exit in their father’s statement, “They said, ‘If the wolf were to devour him while we are (so large) a party, then we would indeed be losers.’” If it is the wolf that you are worried about, then there is no need for you to worry, we are a large and strong group who is able to scare any wolf away.

So, their father capitulated and they went off with Joseph (PBUH), “So they did take him away, and they all agreed to throw him down to the bottom of the well.” They made up their mind to throw him in the pit. Joseph (PBUH) must have felt helpless facing his strong brothers. It must have been a scary moment for Joseph (PBUH) to be thrown in a pit in the middle of nowhere, with no hope of being rescued. At this critical moment, God assured him that he will be saved and he will live to face his brothers and remind them with what they have done to him, “We inspired him, ‘You will (one day) tell them the truth of this affair while they do not realize it.’”

We leave Joseph (PBUH) in his moment of difficulty, alone in the pit with God’s inspiration as the only consolation and walk with Joseph’s (PBUH) brothers, “Then they came to their father in the evening, weeping.” In their haste to get rid of Joseph (PBUH), they did not think of a better plan than to retell their father what he himself had suggested before, “They said, ‘Our father, we went racing with one another, and left Joseph with our things; and the wolf devoured him.’” They made up a story to tell their father. However, it is clear that they felt that the story was so flimsy that they doubted that their father would believe them, “But you will never believe us even though we are telling the truth.” They brought Joseph’s (PBUH) shirt stained with blood, thinking that this trick might convince their father of the truth of their story. However, their father realized what they had done, and he was convinced their story was a fabrication, so he confronted them with his opinion of what had happened, “He said, ‘No, your souls have enticed you into something. (My course is) comely patience. And it is God whose help is to be sought in such (predicament) which you describe.’”

Now we go back to the pit to find out what happened to Joseph (PBUH). The pit was on a caravan route. One of these caravans was passing by and they sent a man to get them water from the pit, “Then there came a caravan of travelers. They sent their water-carrier (for water), and he let down his bucket (into the well). He said, ‘Good news, here is a (fine) young man.’ So they concealed him as a treasure. But God knows well all that they do.” The verses do not tell how Joseph (PBUH) ended up in the bucket and what transpired between him and the man who found him in the pit. The verses go directly to the conclusion of this episode, “And they sold him for a low price, a few silver coins; and they showed no interest in him.”

Verses 21 to 34:

21. The man in Egypt who bought him, said to his wife, "Give him an honorable home, he may bring us much good, or we shall adopt him as a son." Thus, did We establish Joseph in the land, that We might teach him the interpretation of narratives (dreams and events). And God has full power and control over His affairs; but most among humankind know it not.
22. When Joseph attained His full manhood, We gave him wisdom and knowledge. Thus, do We reward those who do right.
23. But she, in whose house he was, sought to seduce him to do an evil act. She bolted the doors, and said, "Now come, you (dear one)." He said, "God forbid. Truly, he (your husband) is my lord. He gave me an honorable home. Certainly, the wrongdoers do not succeed."
24. And (with passion) did she desire him, and he would have desired her, had it not that he saw the evidence of his Lord. Thus, (did We order) that We ward off from him (all) evil and shameful deeds, for he was one of Our chosen servants.
25. And they raced each other to the door, and she tore his shirt from behind, and they met her husband at the door. She said, "What shall be his reward the one who intended evil to your wife, save prison or a painful torment?"
26. He said, "It was she who sought to seduce me." And a witness of her own folk testified, "If his shirt is torn from the front, then she has told the truth and he is of the liars.
27. And if his shirt is torn from behind, then she has lied and he is of the truthful."
28. So when he saw his shirt was torn at the back, (her husband) said, "This is another instance of your cunning. Indeed, your (women's) cunning is great.
29. Joseph, turn away from this, and you, (woman), ask forgiveness for your sin. Indeed, you were of the sinful."
30. And some women in the city said, "The Governor's wife is seeking to seduce her slave-boy; indeed, he has impassioned her with love. We see her (to be) in plain error."
31. When she heard of their malicious talk, she sent for them and prepared a banquet for them. She gave each one of them a knife; and she said (to Joseph), "Come out before them." When they saw him, they were stunned with his beauty and (in their amazement) they cut their hands. They said, "God is perfect. This is not a human being. This is none but a gracious angel."
32. She said, "There before you is the man about whom you did blame me. I did seek to seduce him but he did firmly save himself guiltless; but if he does not do what I, command him to do, he shall certainly be cast into prison, and shall be of those who are in a state of ignominy."
33. He said, "My Lord, I would prefer prison to that which they are inviting me to. Unless You protect me from their plotting, I shall incline unto them and become of the foolish."
34. So his Lord heard his prayer and fended off their cunning from him. He is All-Hearing, Omniscient. (12: 21 – 34)

The narrative did not disclose, so far, who bought Joseph (PBUH), but we will learn later that he was bought by the Governor of Egypt (some say he was the first minister). However, we know that Joseph's (PBUH) time of difficulty has ended and that he is now secure in this new place,

“The man in Egypt who bought him, said to his wife, “Make his stay (among us) honorable, he may bring us much good, or we shall adopt him as a son.” The man asked his wife to make Joseph’s (PBUH) stay with them pleasant. He hoped that Joseph (PBUH) would bring goodness to his house or that they may even adopt him as a son – some scholars are of the opinion that the couple did not have children.

The narrative digressed to emphasize that these developments happened by God’s leave. Establishing Joseph (PBUH) in the land started by settling him securely in the house of the Governor. God’s will cannot be overturned, “Thus, did We establish Joseph in the land, that We might teach him the interpretation of narratives (dreams and events).” Joseph’s (PBUH) brothers plotted to harm him, but God’s will have overturned their plotting and saved Joseph (PBUH), “God has full power and control over His affairs; but most among humankind know it not.”

The verses continued to follow Joseph (PBUH) as he grew up, “When Joseph attained His full manhood, We gave him wisdom and knowledge. Thus, do We reward those who do right.” Joseph (PBUH) was given insight and wisdom to discharge the affairs that he was entrusted with. However, it was not long before Joseph (PBUH) faced the second time of difficulty in his life. This time he faced a worse trial than the one he faced before, “But she, in whose house he was, sought to seduce him to do an evil act. She bolted the doors, and said, “Now come, you (dear one).” He said, “God forbid. Truly, he (your husband) is my lord. He treated me honorably. Certainly, the wrongdoers do not succeed.” Joseph (PBUH must have been a teenager at that time and he was facing the temptation of a full grown up woman who knew what she wanted, she plotted to get it, and she was determined to get it. Her invitation to Joseph (PBUH) was unambiguous; she bolted the doors and prepared herself to seduce him.

The following verse (in the Arabic wording) poses a problem in reconciling the chastity of Joseph (PBUH) and the fact that he could have had entertained a desire to succumb to her temptation, but the following translation reflects the interpretation of most of the scholars, “And (with passion) did she desire him, and he would have desired her, had it not that he saw the evidence of his Lord. Thus, (did We order) that We ward off from him (all) evil and shameful deeds, for he was one of Our chosen servants.” The verses hint to the persistence of the woman in trying to seduce Joseph (PBUH) and the steadfastness of Joseph (PBUH) in refusing her. When at a moment of human weakness, he was about to fall for her, God intervened and saved him from this fall.

When he “saw the evidence of his Lord,” he ran towards the door to escape and she was in pursuit, she was about to catch him but instead she ripped his shirt from behind, “And they raced each other to the door, and she tore his shirt from behind,” Suddenly, they came face to face with her husband, “and they met her husband at the door.” But she was a sophisticated woman and she was able to quickly find a way out of the trap she found herself in, “She said, ‘What shall be his reward the one who intended evil to your wife, save prison or a painful torment?’” Joseph (PBUH) responded truthfully, “It was she who sought to seduce me.” One of her relatives provided a suggestion to sort out the dispute; he suggested that they should examine the ripped shirt, “If his shirt is torn from the front, then she has told the truth and he is of the liars, and if his shirt is torn from behind, then she has lied and he is of the truthful.” The verses do not detail the circumstances during which the dispute was resolved. We do not know when or where her family member was consulted, but the verse intimates that he was consulted and he gave his suggestion. However, it is interesting to note the reaction of the husband when he realized that his wife lied, “So when he saw his shirt was torn at the back, (her husband) said, ‘This is another instance of your cunning. Indeed, your (women’s) cunning is great. Joseph, turn away from this, and you, (woman), ask forgiveness for your sin. Indeed, you were of the sinful.’ First, he deflected the blame to the whole feminine sex, blaming her act of seduction on women’s cunning nature. Then, he turned to the innocent Joseph (PBUH) to say, “, turn away from this,” meaning that Joseph (PBUH) not only should ignore the whole story but he should also keep it a secret. This was the important thing for him, not to make the story public. He was afraid of the scandal. Finally, he asked his wife to repent for her sin.

Life in the palace continued as usual; Joseph (PBUH) continued to live in the palace in close proximity with the woman who tried to seduce him. Very soon after that, rumors started to circulate, “And some women in the city said, ‘The governor’s wife is seeking to seduce her slave-boy; indeed, he has impassioned her with love. We see her (to be) in plain error.’” This is the first time it is mentioned that the woman was in fact the governor’s wife, and we understand that it was the governor who bought Joseph (PBUH).

Her reaction reflected both her audacity and her cunning, “When she heard of their malicious talk, she sent for them and prepared a banquet for them. She gave each of them a knife; and she said (to Joseph), ‘Come out before them.’ When they saw him, they were stunned with his beauty and (in their amazement) they cut their hands. They said, “God is perfect. This is not a human being. This is none but a gracious angel.” She invited those aristocratic women to a party in her house. They were leaning on cushions while eating. She gave each one of them a knife to use in cutting up food. She then, commanded Joseph (PBUH) to come out before them while they were busy cutting meat or peeling fruits using the knives. They were stunned when they saw Joseph (PBUH). They said, “God is perfect,” expressing their amazement of how perfect God’s creation can be.

This was the reaction she expected of them and thus, she felt vindicated, “She said, ‘There before you is the man about whom you did blame me.’” See for yourselves how handsome he is. Like you, I admired him and, “I did seek to seduce him but he did firmly save himself guiltless;” She did not refrain from admitting her guilt in front of her women friends. She did not show any remorse, instead she promised to relentlessly pursue him and punish him if he does not yield to her wishes, “but if he does not do what I command him to do, he shall certainly be cast into prison, and shall be of those who are in a state of ignominy.”

When Joseph (PBUH) heard the conversation, he had no choice but to seek God’s help, “He said, ‘My Lord, I would prefer prison to that which they are inviting me to. Unless You protect me from their plotting, I shall incline to them and become of the foolish.’” This is the prayer of a man who knew the inherent human weaknesses and he did not want to expose himself to the risk, so he prayed for the help of God to strengthen him while facing this difficult test. God responded favorably to his prayer, “So his Lord heard his prayer and fended off their cunning from him. He is All-Hearing, Omniscient.” God’s support could come in different ways. God may have made the women despair of being able to seduce Joseph (PBUH) so they left him alone, or God may have strengthened Joseph (PBUH) so he became immune to their seduction. Thus, Joseph (PBUH) was able to cross safely the second trial in his life.

Verses 35 to 53:

35. Then it occurred to them, after they had seen the signs (of his innocence), (that it was best) to imprison him for a time.
36. Now with him there came into the prison two young men. One of them said, "I see myself (in a dream) pressing wine." The other said, "I see myself (in a dream) carrying bread on my head, and birds are eating, thereof." "Tell us," (they said) "The truth and meaning thereof, for we see you are one of those who do good."
37. He said, "I shall tell you the interpretation of your dreams before the food which you are given (daily) shall come to you. This is of that which my Lord has taught me. I have forsaken the religion of a people who do not believe in God and they deny the Hereafter.
38. And I follow the religion of my fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. It never was for us to attribute a partner to God. This is of the bounty of God upon us (the seed of Abraham) and upon humankind; but most people are ungrateful.
39. My two companions of the prison, (I ask you): are many lords differing among themselves better, or the One God, the Dominator.
40. Those whom you worship beside Him are but names which you have named, you and your fathers. God has revealed no sanction for them. The decision rests with God only, who has commanded you that you worship none save Him. This is the true religion, but most men do not know.
41. My two companions of the prison, as for one of you, he will pour out wine for his lord to drink; and as for the other, he will be crucified so that the birds will eat from his head. The matter has been decreed about which you both inquired."
42. And he said to him of the twain, whom he knew would be released, "Mention me to your lord." But Satan caused him to forget to mention it to his lord, so he (Joseph) stayed in prison for some years.
43. The king (of Egypt) said, "I do see (in a dream) seven fat cows being eaten by seven lean ones, and seven green ears of corn, and seven (others) withered. Chiefs, explain to me my vision if you can interpret dreams."
44. They said, "A confused medley of dreams, and we are not skilled in the interpretation of dreams."
45. And he of the two who was released, and (now) at length remembered, said, "I am going to inform you of the interpretation, therefore send me forth."
46. (And when he came to Joseph in the prison, he exclaimed), "Truthful Joseph, tell us the meaning of seven fat cows being eaten by seven lean ones and the seven green ears of corn and other (seven) dry, that I may return to the people, so that they may know."
47. He (Joseph) said, "You shall sow seven years as usual, but that which you reap, leave it in the ears, all save a little which you eat.

48. Then after that will come seven hard years which will devour all that you have prepared for them, save a little of that which you will store.
49. Then, after that, will come a year when the people will have plenteous crops and when they will press (wine and oil)."
50. And the king said, "Bring him to me." And when the messenger came to him, he (Joseph) said, "Return to your lord and ask him what was the case of the women who cut their hands. My Lord knows their plot."
51. He (the king) (then sent for those women and) said, "What happened when you tried to seduce Joseph?" They answered, "God forbid! We know no evil about him." The wife of the Governor said, "Now the truth is out. I tried to seduce him, and he is indeed of the truthful."
52. (Then Joseph said, "I asked for) this, that he (my lord) may know that I betrayed him not in secret, and that surely God does not guide the mischief of the betrayers.
53. Nor do I absolve my own self (of the blame) - the (human) soul is certainly prone to evil unless my Lord bestows His Mercy - but surely my Lord is All-forgiving, Giver of Mercy." (12: 35 -53)

Such was the impudence of the society that they decided to imprison Joseph (PBUH), "Then it occurred to them, after they had seen the signs (of his innocence), (that it was best) to imprison him for a time." It may be they thought that this is a way to deflect the blame from the Governor's wife to the innocent Joseph (PBUH).

"Now with him there came into the prison two young men." These were two of the men working for the king. They somehow enraged the king so he threw them into the prison. The verses jump directly to the encounter between the two men and Joseph (PBUH), "One of them said, 'I see myself (in a dream) pressing wine.' The other said, 'I see myself (in a dream) carrying bread on my head, and birds are eating, thereof.' 'Tell us,' (they said) 'The truth and meaning thereof, for we see you are one of those who do good.'" It seems from the verse that they saw that Joseph (PBUH) was fit to be their council. Joseph (PBUH) started by assuring them that he will be able to explain to them what their dreams meant, "I shall tell you the interpretation of your dreams before the food which you are given (daily) shall come to you. This is of that which my Lord has taught me" His answer reflected his confidence in his expertise but explained that he only got this expertise because of a special gift bestowed on him by his Lord. He gained this gift because of his devotion to his Lord, "I have forsaken the religion of a people who do not believe in God and they deny the Hereafter." He referred to the religion adopted by the governor and his household which happened to be also the religion that these two men followed, but he did not want to confront them with what he thought of their religion in an ugly. He did not want to discourage them to listen to what he was going to tell them. He wanted to tell them about his religion, "I follow the religion of my fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. It never was for us to attribute a partner to God. This is of the bounty of God upon us (the seed of Abraham) and upon humankind; but most people are ungrateful." The verse tells us that he explained to them that he and his forefathers believe in the Oneness of God. He then continued to expound on the logic underlying his faith, "My two companions of the prison, (I ask you): are many lords differing among themselves better, or the One God, the Dominator." He addressed them in an endearing way, "My two companions of the prison," so that they open up to him. Then he questioned them about their beliefs. This was a question that appealed to the initial natural disposition which yearns to the belief in the One God, the Creator. Then he continued to show them the falsehood embodied in associating partners with God, “Those whom you worship beside Him are but names which you have named, you and your fathers. God has revealed no sanction for them.” These gods whether they are human, angels, spirits, or cosmic phenomena are controlled by God. They have no power on their own. God has full control over everything and only He has the power to make the decisions, “The decision rests with God only, Who has commanded you that you worship none save Him. This is the true religion, but most men do not know.” The word worship is more comprehensive than performing the rituals. The word worship in Arabic means to humble oneself. When these verses were revealed there were no prescribed rituals to be performed. Thus, the word worship in the Quran meant that one should obey God in all matters: ritualistic, ethical, and legal. God’s law controls all aspects of human life. We worship God by following His commands in all our human activities. When we understand the true meaning of the word worship, we understand the reason that Joseph (PBUH) made the right of God to be worshipped alone contingent on the fact that He is in control of everything. A god who is not in full control of everything does not deserve to be worshipped. A religion whose adherents practice these principles is the true religion, which deserves to be followed. Unfortunately, most people do not know. The fact that some people do not know places them outside the circle of the adherents to this religion, even if they considered themselves Muslims. Their ignorance is not an excuse for them to be called Muslims.

It is better for humankind to worship God the Dominator than to worship a multitude of gods who are not in control of anything. Humanity suffered as a result of being under the control of a multitude of gods who usurped the right of God and who continually fight among themselves over power and authority. God the Dominator is Independent and Self-Sufficient. He only wants pity, righteousness, and prosperity.

With these few words, Joseph (PBUH) outlined the hallmark of the religion and the principles underlying the faith. These words undermine the foundations of associating partners with God. One of the characteristics of tyrants is that they usurp the right to be treated like gods. They do not accept less than absolute obedience from their subjects in all matters of life. Even if this principle is not stated explicitly, it is practiced as an unwritten law. Tyranny flourishes only in the absence of a strong faith. It vanishes when it is faced with a strong faith in God deeply rooted in people’s hearts. When a deeply rooted belief in God fills the hearts of people, they will only be obedient to God alone. Worship is in its essence obedience to God’s law.

Having delivered the message, he turned to address the request of the two prison companions, “My two companions of the prison, as for one of you, he will pour out wine for his lord to drink; and as for the other, he will be crucified so that the birds will eat from his head. The matter has been decreed about which you both inquired.”

Joseph (PBUH) asked the man whom he thought will be saved to give a message to the king. He wanted the king to investigate his case, “And he said to him of the twain, whom he knew would be released, 'Mention me to your lord.' But Satan caused him to forget to mention it to his lord, so he (Joseph) stayed in prison for some years." The man was saved and went back to work for the king but he forgot to deliver Joseph's (PBUH) message. So, years went by and Joseph (PBUH) remained in the prison. This may have been meant as a lesson for Joseph (PBUH) to remind him to rely only on God and not to seek help from a human.

The king saw a dream and wanted someone in his court to interpret the dream, "The king (of Egypt) said, 'I do see (in a dream) seven fat cows being eaten by seven lean ones, and seven green ears of corn, and seven (others) withered. Chiefs, explain to me my vision if you can interpret dreams.'" No one in his court was able to provide an explanation for the dream, or it may be that they sensed that the dream carried ominous news and no one wanted to be the bearer of bad news, so they said, "A confused medley of dreams, and we are not skilled in the interpretation of dreams."

At this moment, the man who was freed from imprisonment remembered Joseph's (PBUH) ability to interpret dreams, "He said, 'I am going to inform you of the interpretation, therefore send me forth.'" He then went to see Joseph (PBUH) in the prison, he said to him, "Truthful Joseph, tell us the meaning of seven fat cows being eaten by seven lean ones and the seven green ears of corn and other (seven) dry, that I may return to the people, so that they may know." Joseph (PBUH) did not only explain what the dream meant but also gave him an advice how to deal with the impending difficult situation, "He (Joseph) said, 'You shall sow seven years as usual, but that which you reap, leave it in the ears, all save a little which you eat. Then after that will come seven hard years which will devour all that you have prepared for them, save a little of that which you will store. Then, after that, will come a year when the people will have plenteous crops and when they will press (wine and oil).'" The difficult years will be followed by a good year during which people will be able to grow plants and grapes and they will press their grapes and olives to get wine and oil. It should be noted that the king's dream did not refer to this last year. This was an addition that Joseph (PBUH) was able to predict by virtue of the knowledge that God bestowed on him.

The verses do not mention any details on how the king's messenger delivered Joseph's (PBUH) interpretation to the king, but they jump to a scene in the king's court after the king had been told of Joseph's (PBUH) interpretation of the dream. The king decided that he wanted to meet the man who gave the interpretation of the dream in person, "And the king said, 'Bring him to me.'" The king's messenger went to tell Joseph (PBUH) of the king's command. Here we see the effect of the years of training in the divine school on Joseph's (PBUH) attitude. He was no longer impatient to get out of the prison. Clearing his name was more important to him than leaving the prison. This was a drastic difference in attitude from Joseph (PBUH) who said to the prison companion, "Mention me to your lord," and Joseph (PBUH) who said to the messenger who came to invite him to the king's presence, "Return to your lord and ask him what was the case of the women who cut their hands. My Lord knows their plot." He wanted the king to discover by himself that Joseph (PBUH) was innocent. Joseph (PBUH) did not want to defend himself in front of the king. He wanted to meet king after his name has been cleared.

The king asked the women, “What happened when you tried to seduce Joseph?” They answered, “God forbid! We know no evil about him.” The wife of the Governor said, “Now the truth is out. I tried to seduce him, and he is indeed of the truthful.”

The Governor’s wife confessed to her guilt and admitted that Joseph (PBUH) was innocent. This brings us to the end of another episode of Joseph’s (PBUH) trials.

Verses 54 to 79:

54. And the king said, “Bring him to me that I will appoint him exclusively to serve me.” And when he had talked with him he said, “You are today in our presence established and trusted.”
55. He (Joseph) said, “Set me over the store-houses of the land. Indeed, I am a skilled custodian.”
56. Thus, We established Joseph in the land to settle therein wherever he willed. We grant Our mercy to whom We will. We do not allow the reward of those who do good to be lost.
57. And certainly the reward of the Hereafter is much better for those who believe and are conscious of God.
58. And Joseph's brothers came and presented themselves before him, and he knew them but they knew him not.
59. And when he provided them with their provision, he said, “Bring me a brother of yours from your father. Do you not see that I give full measure and I am the best of hosts?”
60. Now, if you do not bring him to me you shall have no measure (of corn) from me, nor shall you (even) come near me.”
61. They said, “We shall certainly do all we can to persuade his father to send him with us, indeed we shall do.”
62. And he (Joseph) told his servants to put their merchandise back into their saddle-bags, so they should know it only when they have returned to their people, in order that they might come back.
63. So when they went back to their father they said, “Our father, we have been denied any more corn, so send with us our brother that we may obtain another measure, surely we will guard him well.”
64. He said, “Can I entrust him to you as I entrusted his brother to you before? God is better at guarding, and He is the Most Merciful of those who show mercy.”
65. And when they opened their belongings they discovered that their merchandise had been returned to them. They said, “Our father, what (more) can we ask? Here is our merchandise returned to us. We shall get provision for our people, guard our brother, and we shall have an extra measure of a camel (load). This is an easy measure.
66. He (Jacob) said, “Never will I send him with you until you swear a solemn oath to me, in God's name, that you will be sure to bring him back to me unless you are yourselves surrounded (and made powerless).” And when they had sworn their solemn oath, he said, “God is a witness over all that we say.”

67. And he (Jacob) said, "My sons, do not enter through one gate; but go in through different gates. I cannot help you against God's will. The decision rests with God only. In Him I put my trust, and in Him let all the trusting put their trust."
68. And when they entered in the manner which their father had enjoined, it did not help them against God's will; it was but a need of Jacob's soul which he thus satisfied; and he was a person of knowledge because We had taught him; but most people know not.
69. And when they went in before Joseph, he drew his brother closer to him, saying, "I am your brother, therefore grieve not for what they did."
70. And when he provided them with their provision, he put the drinking-cup in his brother's saddlebag, and then a crier cried, "Camel-riders, you are indeed thieves."
71. They said, turning towards them, "What is it that you have lost?"
72. They said, "We have lost the king's cup, and he who brings it shall have a camel-load," and "I (said Joseph) am answerable for it."
73. They said, "By God, you know for certain that we did not come to make mischief in the land, and we are not thieves."
74. (The Egyptians) said, "What then shall be the penalty for this, if you are liars?"
75. They said, "The penalty should be that he, in whose saddle-bag it is found, should be held (as bondman) to atone for the (crime). Thus, it is we punish the wrongdoers."
76. Then, he (Joseph) began the search with their bags before his brother's bag, then he produced it from his brother's bag. Thus, did We contrive for Joseph. He could not have taken his brother according to the king's law unless God willed. We raise by grades (of mercy) whom We will, and above everyone who have knowledge there is the One who is all knowing.
77. They said, "If he steals, there was a brother of his who did steal before (him)." But these things did Joseph keep locked in his heart, and he did not reveal it to them. He (simply) said (to himself), "You are in a far worse situation; and God knows best the truth of what you assert."
78. They said, "Noble one, he has a father, aged and venerable, (who will grieve for him); so take one of us in his place; for we see that you are a good-doer."
79. He said, "God forbid that we take other than him with whom we found our property; indeed (if we did so), we should be wrongdoers." (12:54 – 79)

When the king realized that Joseph (PBUH) was innocent and that he is both knowledgeable and wise he wanted to get Joseph (PBUH) to work for him, "And the king said, 'Bring him to me that I will appoint him exclusively to serve me.' And when he had talked with him he said, 'You are to-day in our presence established and trusted.'"

The verses do not tell us what transpired after that, but we find Joseph (PBUH) speaking to the king, "He (Joseph) said, 'Set me over the store-houses of the land. Indeed, I am a skilled custodian.'" Joseph (PBUH) knew that his expertise will be needed to save the country of an impending famine. He asked the king to appoint him as a manager of the store-houses. He did not ask this as a personal favor. On the contrary, he was making the king a favor.

It is important to examine Joseph's (PBUH) request, "He (Joseph) said, 'Set me over the store-houses of the land. Indeed, I am a skilled custodian,'" in light of the Islamic tradition. Was this request appropriate? There are two known principles in Islam. It is not allowed to appoint someone to a position of authority, if that person requested such an appointment. The Prophet (PBUH) has been quoted to have said, “By God, we do not appoint a person to a position of authority, if that person requested such an appointment.” The second principle is that it is considered inappropriate to promote oneself as can be gleaned from the verse, “Do not assert your own goodness.” (53:32) We will not respond to this question by saying that these rules were established after the revelation of the Quran, so they did not exist in Joseph’s (PBUH) time and therefore were not binding on him. This may be true, but these are fundamental principles and we do not want to base an exception on a technicality. Islamic jurisprudence is a product of the intellectual effort of the Muslim scholars to address the actual needs of an existing Muslim community. The laws produced as a result of such an exercise were developed, evolved, and continue to evolve to address the changing needs of the community. The laws of Islamic jurisprudence were developed to address the actual needs of the community, and since these needs are ever changing the process should be dynamic. These are two fundamental principles that should be understood by the scholars of jurisprudence: the laws are dynamic and they are developed to address actual needs. They cannot be developed in isolation of the real conditions of the society. Islamic jurisprudence can then be applied only in a Muslim society and it should be applied in its entirety. Only in a Muslim society people will accept Islamic jurisprudence, will be willing to live by its injunctions, and will be able to benefit from it. Applying Islamic jurisprudence in a non-Muslim society is a futile exercise. One cannot pick and choose certain rules to apply and others to ignore. At the time of this story, the Egyptians were not Muslims and therefore no one can expect them to apply Islamic rules in their daily life.

There is a rationale behind abiding by the two principles mentioned above in an Islamic society. The first principle is not to appoint in positions of authority those who request to be appointed. The second principle is that it is considered inappropriate to promote oneself in public spheres. Holding positions of authority in an Islamic society is a responsibility not a privilege. Being in a position of responsibility is a great burden on people who are charged with such responsibility. People who are most suitable to discharge the responsibility and only those who are seeking God’s reward should be chosen.

We come back to Joseph’s (PBUH) story after this brief digression. The verses do not narrate the king’s response to Joseph’s (PBUH) request, as if all what Joseph’s (PBUH) needed to do was to ask. We understand implicitly that Joseph (PBUH) got what he wanted from the following verse, “Thus, We established Joseph in the land to settle therein wherever he willed. We grant Our mercy to whom We will. We do not allow the reward of those who do good to be lost. And certainly the reward of the Hereafter is much better for those who believe and are conscious of God.” God established Joseph (PBUH) in the land, allowing him to choose where to settle. God replaced Joseph’s (PBUH) difficulty with ease and rewarded him because He does not let the reward of those who do good to be wasted. The reward in the Hereafter will certainly be better.

The famine plagued the lands around Egypt but Egypt was saved because of Joseph’s (PBUH) planning, wisdom, and vision. The famine drove Joseph’s (PBUH) brothers to Egypt looking for food for their people. They did not recognize him when they saw him; however, he recognized them but he did not reveal his identity to them, “And Joseph's brothers came and presented themselves before him, and he knew them but they knew him not.” He had a plan so he treated them well and gave them what they wanted. It is implicit that he must have approached them in a way that made them trust him and reveal to him that they have a half-brother who stayed back with their father. They must have mentioned that their father loves this son very much and cannot bear the thought that his son would travel with them looking for food. He must have shown that he was intrigued and requested to see their half-brother, “Bring me a brother of yours from your father. Do you not see that I give full measure and I am the best of hosts? Now, if you do not bring him to me you shall have no measure (of corn) from me, nor shall you (even) come near me.” They responded that they will do every effort to do as Joseph’s wishes, “They said, ‘We shall certainly do all we can to persuade his father to send him with us, indeed we shall do.’”

In the meantime, Joseph (PBUH) told his servants to return the goods that his brothers brought to barter in exchange for the food they wanted to get from Egypt. He knew that when they go home and find that they received the food free of charge they will come back again, “And he (Joseph) told his servants to put their merchandise back into their saddle-bags, so they should know it only when they have returned to their people, in order that they might come back.”

The succeeding verses take us to a scene where we listen to an exchange between Joseph’s father and his sons after they had returned home, “So when they went back to their father they said, ‘Our father, we have been denied any more corn, so send with us our brother that we may obtain another measure, surely we will guard him well.’” Their promise to guard their half-brother must have reminded Jacob (PBUH) with the promise they made before when they took Joseph (PBUH) in their outing and he ended up losing his son. So, he exclaimed, “Can I entrust him to you as I entrusted his brother to you before? God is better at guarding, and He is the Most Merciful of those who show mercy.” It is God whom I should ask for protection.

“And when they opened their belongings they discovered that their merchandise had been returned to them. They said, ‘Our father, what (more) can we ask? Here is our merchandise returned to us. We shall get provision for our people, guard our brother, and we shall have an extra measure of a camel (load). This (that we bring now) is an easy measure.’” They used the fact that their money was returned to them to support their argument that Jacob (PBUH) should send their half-brother with them. They also argued that with their brother in the caravan they will be able to get one more share of food from Joseph (PBUH). It seems that Joseph (PBUH) was rationing the food so each person gets one share only. Finally, Jacob (PBUH) did agree to send his son with them, but he made one condition, “Never will I send him with you until you swear a solemn oath to me, in God's name, that you will be sure to bring him back to me unless you are yourselves surrounded (and made powerless).” And when they had sworn their solemn oath, he said, “God is a witness over all that we say.” Jacob (PBUH) reminded them that God is a witness over their oath. Jacob (PBUH) advised his sons to be careful, “And he (Jacob) said, ‘My sons, do not enter through one gate; but go in through different gates. I cannot help you against God’s will. The decision rests with God only. In Him I put my trust, and in Him let all the trusting put their trust.’”

Let us reflect on Jacob's (PBUH) statement, "The decision rests with God only." It is clear that what he meant was that one should accept God's decrees. No one can change God's decrees; belief in destiny is one of the articles of faith in Islam. However, there is another kind of God's decisions. These are decisions that are accomplished through people's actions and choices. These kinds of decrees are expressed in terms of God commands and prohibitions. God gave his servants the ability to choose whether to follow these commands and prohibitions or not. They have the free will to comply or not to comply; either way they have to bear the consequences of their actions and choices. Those who submit truly to God are the those who choose to follow God's commandments.

There is nothing in the verses that explains why Jacob (PBUH) advised his sons to enter Egypt through different gates. We will not speculate on the reasons. We will just accept that it was something that Jacob (PBUH) wanted his sons to do and they obeyed his command. The verses tell us that God bestowed knowledge on Jacob (PBUH) and that the sons obeyed their father, "And when they entered in the manner which their father had enjoined, it did not help them against God's will; it was but a need of Jacob's soul which he thus satisfied; and he was a person of knowledge because We had taught him; but most people know not."

The verses go on directly to describe the encounter between Joseph (PBUH) and his brothers. The first thing that the verses describe is the meeting between Joseph (PBUH) and his brother and his effort to assure his brother that he is now safe with him. It may have taken Joseph (PBUH) sometime to arrange for such a meeting but it is the style of the Quran to focus on the main issues, "And when they went in before Joseph, he took his brother to himself, saying, 'I am your brother, therefore grieve not for what they did.'"

The verses then go on directly to the scene when the brothers were about to leave. The verses describe an exciting scene. First, Joseph (PBUH) hides his cups inside the saddle-bag of his brother. Then a strong voice accuses them of theft, "And when he provided them with their provision, he put the drinking-cup in his brother's saddlebag, and then a crier cried, 'Camel-riders, you are indeed thieves.'" Joseph's (PBUH) brothers became terrified. How can they be accused of theft and they are the sons of the prophets: Jacob, Isaac, and Abraham (PBUT)? So they went back to find out what was going on, "They said, turning towards them, 'What is it that you have lost?' They said, 'We have lost the king's cup, and he who brings it shall have a camel-load, and I (said Joseph) am answerable for it.'"

Joseph's (PBUH) brothers tried to explain to the king's servants that they did come to Egypt to steal, "They said, 'By God, you know for certain that we did not come to make mischief in the land, and we are not thieves.' (The Egyptians) said, 'What then shall be the penalty for this, if you are liars?'" Now we understand the scheme which God inspired Joseph's (PBUH) to carry out so that he would be able to keep his brother with him. One of Jacob's (PBUH) religious laws was that the thief would be taken as a captive in exchange of what he stole, "They said, 'The penalty should be that he in whose saddle-bag it is found, should be held (as bondman) to atone for the (crime). Thus it is we punish the wrongdoers.'" It was God's plan that they would apply Jacob's (PBUH) religious laws rather than the Egyptian's law. This was the only way for Joseph's (PBUH) to keep his brother with him. Had they applied the Egyptian law the thief would have been punished but he would have been able to travel back to his country with his brothers.

This encounter was in the presence of Joseph (PBUH), so he commanded a search of their belongings. The search started with the brothers' belongings and finally the cup was found in Joseph's (PBUH) younger brother belongings, "Then he (Joseph) began the search with their bags before his brother's bag, then he produced it from his brother's bag. Thus did We contrive for Joseph. He could not have taken his brother according to the king's law unless God willed. We raise by grades (of mercy) whom We will, and above everyone who have knowledge there is the One who is all knowing." This was God's inspired plan which Joseph (PBUH) undertook so that he could keep his younger brother.

The verse explains what is meant by the word "Deen" which is translated as "religion." The word religion is used to indicate a whole system and a way of life. Those who think the word religion is limited only to the articles of faith and the rituals are missing the point. Religion is much more than beliefs and rituals. It is a whole system of life. This meaning has been lost on many of today's Muslims. They limit their understanding of religion to the acceptance of the articles of faith and the performance of the acts of worship. Religion is a comprehensive way of life.

Joseph's (PBUH) brothers wanted to absolve themselves of the crime and to lay all the blame on their younger brother, "They said, 'If he steals, there was a brother of his who did steal before (him).' But these things did Joseph keep locked in his heart, and he did not reveal it to them. He (simply) said (to himself), 'You are in a far worse situation; and God knows best the truth of what you assert.'"

They were faced with the problem of the oath that they made to their father. They pleaded with Joseph (PBUH), "They said, 'Noble one, he has a father, aged and venerable, (who will grieve for him); so take one of us in his place; for we see that you are a good-doer.'"

But Joseph (PBUH) wanted to teach his brothers a lesson, "He said, 'God forbid that we take other than him with whom we found our property; indeed (if we did so), we should be wrongdoers.'" One notices the accuracy of Joseph's (PBUH) expression. He did not say, "God forbid that we take other than the one who stole," because he knew that his brother was not a thief.

Verses 80 to 101:

80. When they saw no hope of him (yielding), they held a conference in private. The leader among them said, "Do you not remember that your father did take an oath from you in God's name, and how, before this, you did fail in your duty with Joseph? Therefore, I will not leave this land until my father permits me, or God decides for me; and He is the best of decision Makers.

81. Return to your father and say, "Our father, your son has stolen. We testify only to that which we know; we are not guardians of the unseen.
82. Ask in the town where we have been and the caravan in which we traveled with, and (you will find) we are indeed telling the truth."
83. He (Jacob) said, "No, your souls have prompted you to do wrong. So patience is most fitting (for me). Maybe God will bring them (back) all to me (in the end), for He is indeed the Omniscient, the Wise."
84. And he turned away from them, and said "How great is my grief for Joseph." And his eyes became white with sorrow, and he fell into silent melancholy.
85. They said, "By God, (Never) will you cease to remember Joseph until your health is ruined or you are of those who perish."
86. He said, "I only complain of my distress and anguish to God, and I know from God that which you do not know.
87. My sons, go and enquire about Joseph and his brother, and never give up hope of God's Mercy, truly no one despairs of God's Mercy, except the disbelievers."
88. And when they came (again) before him (Joseph) they said, "Noble one, misfortune has touched us and our folk, and we bring but poor merchandise, so fill for us the measure and be charitable to us. God will certainly reward the charitable."
89. He said, "Do you know what you did to Joseph and his brother in your ignorance?"
90. They said, "Are you indeed Joseph?" He said, "I am Joseph, and this is my brother. God has indeed been gracious to us (all). Indeed, he who is God conscious and perseverant (will be rewarded), never will God allow the reward to be lost, of those who are good-doers."
91. They said, "By God, indeed has God preferred you above us, and we certainly were sinners."
92. He said, "This day let no reproach be (cast) on you. God will forgive you, and He is the Most Merciful of those who show mercy.
93. Go with this shirt of mine, and cast it over the face of my father; he will become (again) seeing. Then come back to me together with all your family."
94. When the caravan left (Egypt), their father said, "You may think I am senile, but I do indeed smell the scent of Joseph."
95. They said, "By God, you are indeed lost in your old illusions."
96. Then, when the bearer of the glad tidings came, he cast (the shirt) over his face, and he (Jacob) regained clear sight. He (Jacob) said, "Did I not say to you, 'I know from God that which you do not know?'"
97. They said, "Our father, ask forgiveness for our sins, for we were truly sinners."
98. He said, "I shall ask forgiveness for you of my Lord. He is the All-Forgiving, the Giver of Mercy."
99. And when they came in before Joseph, he drew his parents closer to him, and said, "Come into Egypt safe, God willing."
100. And he raised his parents high on the throne, and they fell down in prostration, (all) before him. He said, "My father, this is the fulfillment of my old dream. God has made it come true. He was indeed good to me when He took me out of the prison and brought you (all here) out of the desert, (even) after Satan had sown enmity between me and my brothers. Verily, my Lord is Subtle in what He wills; indeed, He is the Omniscient, the Wise.

101. “My Lord, You have indeed bestowed on me power, and taught me something of the interpretation of dreams and events. You are the Creator of the heavens and the earth. You are my Patron in this world and in the Hereafter. Take my soul (at death) as one submitting to Your will, and unite me with the righteous.” (12: 80 - 101)

Joseph’s brothers lost any hope they could convince Joseph (PBUH) to let their younger brother go free. They sat down to discuss the situation, the verses do not mention the details of the discussion but they outline the end result of the discussion, “When they saw no hope of him (yielding), they held a conference in private. The leader among them said, “Do you not remember that your father did take an oath from you in God's name, and how, before this, you did fail in your duty with Joseph? Therefore, I will not leave this land until my father permits me, or God decides for me; and He is the best of the decision Makers.” The older brother reminded them of their failure to guard Joseph (PBUH) before. He then told them of his decision not go back with them but to stay in Egypt until his father allows him to go back or God would command him to go back.

He also asked them to go back to their father and tell him what happened to their brother, “Return to your father and say, ‘Our father, your son has stolen. We testify only to that which we know; we are not guardians of the unseen. Ask in the town where we have been and the caravan in which we traveled with, and (you will find) we are indeed telling the truth.’”

The father simply repeated the same words he said when he lost Joseph (PBUH), “Jacob said, “No, your souls have prompted you to do wrong. So patience is most fitting (for me).” However, this time he had hope, “Maybe God will bring them (back) all to me (in the end), for He is indeed the Omniscient, the Wise.” God is indeed the Omniscient, the Wise. He knows Jacob’s (PBUH) condition, He knows the rationale behind these trials, and He allows the events to take place at the appropriate times so that the intended lessons would be learnt. Where did the ray of hope in the old man’s heart come from? It is the close connection with God and the deep feeling of God’s presence and mercy. These are the feelings which fill the hearts of the chosen few, feelings which are more real than the reality that can be seen and touched.

“And he turned away from them, and said ‘How great is my grief for Joseph.’ And his eyes became white with sorrow, and he fell into silent melancholy.” The verse paints a very emotional image for the father who lost his son. He felt lonely. There was no one to share his sorrow or to console him. His sons whose hearts were full of envy were not kind to him. On the contrary, they chastised him for what seemed to them as false hope, “They said, ‘By God, (Never) will you cease to remember Joseph until your health is ruined or you are of those who perish.’” He only wanted to be left alone with his Lord. He did not seek their help, he was only seeking God’s mercy, “He said, ‘I only complain of my distress and anguish to God, and I know from God that which you do not know.’” These were words which describe the deep faith in a heart connected to his Lord. The apparent reality defied any hope in the return of Joseph (PBUH). He has long been gone. His brothers ridiculed their father for his seemingly farfetched hope in the return of his son. However, the feeling that filled the heart of this righteous man and the trust in the mercy of his Lord filled his heart with hope. He knows about his Lord that which others would not know. This is the benefit of faith which fills the heart and opens it to the divine light to see and feel that which others would not see or feel, “I know from God that which you do not know.”

This hope moved Jacob (PBUH) to command his sons never to despair of God’s mercy, “My sons, go and enquire about Joseph and his brother, and never give up hope of God's Mercy, truly no one despairs of God's Mercy, except the disbelievers.” He told them to go back and enquire discreetly about Joseph (PBUH) and his brother.

Joseph’s (PBUH) brothers went back to Egypt for the third time carrying their merchandise to barter it in exchange for food, but they knew that the merchandise was poor and they appealed to Joseph’s (PBUH) sense of charity to overlook this fact, “And when they came (again) before him (Joseph) they said, ‘Noble one, misfortune has touched us and our folk, and we bring but poor merchandise, so fill for us the measure and be charitable to us. God will certainly reward the charitable.’” Joseph (PBUH) felt that the time for the big surprise has come and that his brothers were ready to learn the lesson, “He said, ‘Do you know what you did to Joseph and his brother in your ignorance?’”

They heard this voice before and the face looked familiar, “They said, ‘Are you indeed Joseph?’” The answer came to confirm the surprise and to remind them of what they have done a long time ago, “He said, ‘I am Joseph, and this is my brother. God has indeed been gracious to us (all). Indeed, he who is God conscious and perseverant (will be rewarded), never will God allow the reward to be lost, of those who are good-doers.’” He did not lay any blame on them, but he showed his gratitude to His Lord who bestowed His bounty on him and his brother because they persevered and were conscious of their Lord. The brothers remembered the shameful way they treated Joseph (PBUH) and they felt sorry, “They said, ‘By God, indeed has God preferred you above us, and we certainly were sinners.’”

They have admitted their guilt and expressed their sorrow for what they had done. Joseph (PBUH) response was honorable and generous, “He said, ‘This day let no reproach be (cast) on you. God will forgive you, and He is the Most Merciful of those who show mercy.’” Not only he did not blame or chastise them but he also asked God to forgive them. He then turns his attention to what happened to his father. He yearned to meeting his father and erasing the sorrow which filled his heart all these years, “Go with this shirt of mine, and cast it over the face of my father; he will become (again) seeing. Then come back to me together with all your family.” How did Joseph (PBUH) know that the smell of his shirt will bring back the sight to the eyes of the old man? This must have been part of the knowledge that God blessed him with.

The verses tell of many surprises one after another, “When the caravan left (Egypt), their father said, ‘You may think I am senile, but I do indeed smell the scent of Joseph.’” No one had imagined that Joseph (PBUH) would come back. How can an old man smell the scent of Joseph (PBUH) over that long distance? The people around Jacob (PBUH) did not smell anything. They thought that senility must have filled the old man's mind with illusions, "They said, 'By God, you are indeed lost in your old illusions.'"

But they were up for another surprise, "Then, when the bearer of the glad tidings came, he cast (the shirt) over his face, and he (Jacob) regained clear sight. He (Jacob) said, 'Did I not say to you, I know from God that which you do not know?'" The sons then asked their father's forgiveness, "They said, 'Our father, ask forgiveness for our sins, for we were truly sinners.'" However, he was not ready for that yet but he promised to do it later, "He said, 'I shall ask forgiveness for you of my Lord. He is the All-Forgiving, the Giver of Mercy'"

The verses continue to describe the meeting between Joseph (PBUH) and his parents after a long time of separation, hope, and despair. It must have been a very dramatic scene full of emotions and feelings. "And when they came in before Joseph, he drew his parents to him, and said, 'Come into Egypt safe, God willing.'" Joseph (PBUH) then reminded his father of the old dream which have now come true, "And he raised his parents high on the throne, and they fell down in prostration, (all) before him. He said, 'My father, this is the fulfillment of my old dream. God has made it come true. He was indeed good to me when He took me out of prison and brought you (all here) out of the desert, (even) after Satan had sown enmity between me and my brothers.'" He did not forget to show his gratitude to God, who blessed him with all these bounties, "Verily, my Lord is Subtle in what He wills; indeed, He is the Omniscient, the Wise."

The final scene of this story, shows Joseph (PBUH) extracting himself out of celebrating the unification of his family to pray, praising his Lord and expressing his gratitude, "My Lord, You have indeed bestowed on me power," My Lord, You have bestowed on me power, status, honor, and wealth. These are bounties for this life. "And taught me something of the interpretation of dreams and events." You have given me the knowledge to interpret dreams and events; and You have given me the vision to predict the future events which these dreams indicate. "You are the Creator of the heavens and the earth." You created them and they run under your control, You decide what will happen to them. "You are my Patron in this world and in the Hereafter." You provide the support and the help. My Lord, I do not ask for power, health, or wealth all I ask is this, "Take my soul (at death) as one submitting to Your will, and unite me with the righteous."

The images of success, power, and happiness of the unification of the family recede to the background and the image of the sincere servant of God comes to the forefront. It is the image of a sincere servant who prays God to keep him blessed with the bounty of submission to God until he is put to death and to unite him after death with God's righteous servants. Joseph (PBUH) achieved the total success in the final test.

Verses 102 to 110:

102. This is of the tidings of the unseen which We reveal to you (Muhammad). You were not present with them when they put together their plan while they conspired.

103. And though you try much, most men will not believe.
104. You did not ask them a reward for this; it is nothing but a reminder to humankind.
105. And how many signs in the heavens and the earth do they pass by? Yet they turn (their faces) away from them.
106. And most of them will not believe in God without associating (others as partners) with Him.
107. Do they then feel secure that there will not come to them an overwhelming torment of God, or that the Hour will not come upon them suddenly while they do not realize it?
108. Say, "This is my Way. I and all those who follow me, call to God with sure knowledge. Glory be to God; and I am not of the idolaters.
109. All the messengers We sent before you were men to whom We made revelations, men chosen from the people of their towns. Have (the disbelievers) not travelled through the land and seen the end of those who went before them? But the home of the Hereafter is best, for those who are conscious of God. Will you not then understand?
110. (They continued) until, when the messengers despaired and thought that they were denied, then came to them Our help, and whom We willed was saved. And Our wrath cannot be averted from the guilty.
111. There was certainly a lesson in their stories for those who understand. It is not an invented story but a confirmation of the existing (Scripture) and a detailed explanation of everything, and guidance and mercy for people who believe. (12: 102 – 111)

The Sura started with a verse, "We narrate to you (Muhammad) the best of narratives," and ends with reiterating the fact that Muhammad (PBUH) was not privy to such stories before. The story that was narrated in this Sura was not common knowledge among the people at the time of Prophet Muhammad (PBUH). This story has been revealed to you and you were not present with them when they were scheming, "This is of the tidings of the unseen which We reveal to you (Muhammad). You were not present with them when they put together their plan while they conspired." The story tells of the schemes that Joseph's (PBUH) brother contrived to get rid of Joseph (PBUH), the schemes that women contrived to seduce Joseph (PBUH), and the schemes that the king's court contrived to put Joseph (PBUH) in jail.

People should have been moved by these verses. They should have realized that they are revelations from God, however most people do not believe. They do not pay attention to many of God's signs which they see in the heavens and the earth. What are they waiting for? God's wrath may descend on them any time, "And though you try much, most men will not believe. Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) was keen that his people believe and avail themselves of the goodness which is associated with this belief, but God who knows the nature of these people tells him that many of them will not believe because they do not want to heed God's signs. Muhammad (PBUH) will not benefit whether they believe or not, "You did not ask them a reward for this;" His task was only to remind people, "it is nothing but a reminder to humankind." God's signs are all around them. These signs lead those who reflect to the belief in the oneness of God and His power, "And how many signs in the heavens and the earth do they pass by? Yet they turn (their faces) away from them." Have they reflected on sunrise and sunset? Have they reflected on the shadows, and how they change? Have they reflected on the growing plants, the flying birds, the swimming fish, the crawling worms, the persevering ants, and the animal kingdoms? One moment of reflection at the beginning or the end of the day is enough to remind the human being of the Creator; but many people are heedless when they pass by these signs.

Associating partners with God may crawl surreptitiously into the hearts of the believers, “And most of them will not believe in God without associating (others as partners) with Him.” Pure faith requires vigilance on the part of the believer, so that the heart remains in a state of absolute submission to God avoiding any form of concealed association of partners with God. Many traditions address this point. Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) has been quoted to have said, “Associating partners with God is as surreptitious as the crawl of an ant.” There are many practices that may lead to concealed association of partners with God. Ibn Umar (RA) narrated that, “Whoever took an oath in the name of anything except God has associated partners with God.” The Prophet (PBUH) has been quoted to have said, “Whoever wore a talisman has associated partners with God.”

What are they waiting for, “Do they then feel secure that there will not come to them an overwhelming torment of God, or that the Hour will not come upon them suddenly while they do not realize it?” This is a statement that is meant to wake them up from their heedlessness. No one knows what will happen next, so how can the heedless guarantee their safety?

“Say, ‘This is my Way. I, and all those who follow me, call to God with sure knowledge. Glory be to God; and I am not of the idolaters.’” It is a straight path, unique in its clarity, illuminated by the guidance of God. Those who walk this way are sure of their path. They do not use guess work to know what is right and what is wrong. I do not associate partners with God. This is my way, people are free to choose which way they take but I am going to remain on this way, the straightway.

“All the messengers We sent before you were men to whom We made revelations, men chosen from the people of their towns. Have (the disbelievers) not travelled through the land and seen the end of those who went before them? But the home of the Hereafter is best, for those who are conscious of God. Will you not then understand?” Muhammad (PBUH) was not the first messenger to be sent by God. God sent many messengers before Muhammad (PBUH). They were men, not angels. They were chosen from people living in towns not people living in the desert. They were kind and perseverant. Observing the relics of the past fills the heart with awe. Imagine these places which were once full of people leading a bustling life, and now they became relics of the past; they remind us of the perpetual cycle of life. These reflections will lead to the fact that the worldly life is only a transient phase of life; the Hereafter is the true everlasting life. Those who remain conscious of God in this life will have the good reward in the Hereafter.

The following verse paints a horrific image of God’s messengers who met difficult times dealing with their people who denied them and rejected the guidance they brought. But when the road became darkest, the divine will intervened and help was provided, “(They continued) until, when the messengers despaired and thought that they were denied, then came to them Our help, and whom We willed was saved. And Our wrath cannot be averted from the guilty.” This is one of God's subtle laws. Victory is guaranteed but it only comes after the messenger has made use of all the tools available to him and has worked extremely hard to bring the message to people. Delivering the message is not an easy task nor should it be taken lightly but at the end, God's reward awaits those who work very hard so that God's guidance is delivered.

Joseph's (PBUH) story is full of examples of the trials and tests that God's messengers faced in their lives. He suffered when he was thrown in the pit, when he was working in the governor's house, and when he was imprisoned. But God's reward was waiting for him at the end of the road. God's promise never fail. These stories provide lessons for those who reflect, "There was certainly a lesson in their stories for those who understand. It is not an invented story but a confirmation of the existing (Scripture) and a detailed explanation of everything, and a guidance and a mercy for people who believe."

Sura 13: Al-Ra'd (The Thunder)

In the name of God, the Lord of Mercy, the Giver of Mercy

According to al-Asas, there is a difference in opinion where this Sura has been revealed. The most general opinion is that it was revealed in Mecca, except for the verses (8-13). All the verses of the Sura have a single rhyme. It takes the human being around the universe, speaking of different physical phenomena. Al-Asas is of the opinion that this Sura elaborates on the verses 26 and 27 of Surat al-Baqarah.

Verses 1 to 18:

1. Alif. Lam. Mim. Ra. These are verses of the Book. That which is revealed to you from your Lord is the Truth, but most of humankind do not believe.
2. God is He who raised the heavens without any visible supports; then He established Himself on the Throne. He has subjected the sun and the moon each one runs (its course) for an appointed term. He regulates all affairs and explains the signs in detail so that you may have certitude in the meeting with your Lord.
3. And it is He who spread out the earth, and set thereon mountains standing firm and (flowing) rivers, and fruit of every kind He made in pairs, two and two. He draws the night as a veil over the day. Verily in these things there are signs for those who reflect.
4. And in the earth are tracts side by side, vineyards and ploughed lands, and date-palms, like and unlike, which are watered using the same water. And we have made some of them taste better than others. Herein verily are signs for people who have sense.
5. If you do marvel (at their want of faith), strange is their saying, "When we are (actually) dust, shall we then (be raised) in a new creation?" Such are they who disbelieve in their Lord; such have chains on their necks; such are the rightful owners of the Fire, they will abide therein forever.
6. They ask you to hasten on the evil rather than the good, when exemplary punishments have indeed occurred before them. But your Lord is the Lord of forgiveness to people, notwithstanding their injustice; and most surely your Lord is severe in punishment.
7. And the disbelievers say, "Why is not a sign sent down to him from his Lord?" But you are indeed a warner, and to every people (We sent) a guide.
8. God knows what every female (womb) bears, and by how much the wombs fall short (of their time or number) or do exceed. And everything with Him is measured.
9. He is the Knower of the unseen and the seen, the Great, the Most High.
10. It is the same (to Him) whether any of you conceal his speech or declare it openly; whether he is hidden by night or walk forth freely by day.
11. For each (such person) there are angels ranged before him and behind him, who guard him by God's command. God does not change the condition of a people until they (first) change that which is in their hearts; and if God wills misfortune for a people there is none that can repel it, nor have they a protector beside Him.
12. It is He who shows you the lightning (causing) fear and hope. It is He who raises up the clouds, heavy (with rain).

13. The thunder sings His praise, and so do the angels in awe. He launches the thunder-bolts, and smites with them whomsoever He wills, while they dispute, and He is mighty in wrath.
14. For Him (alone) is prayer in truth. And those on whom they call upon besides Him hear them no more than a one who stretches forth his hands toward water (asking) that it may come into his mouth, and it will never reach it. The prayer of the disbelievers goes (far) astray.
15. Whatever beings there are in the heavens and the earth do prostrate themselves to God, willingly or unwillingly, as do their shadows in the morning and the evening hours.
16. Say, "Who is the Lord of the heavens and the earth?" Say, "(It is) God." Say, "Do you then take (for worship) protecting guardians other than Him, such as have no power either for good or for harm to themselves?" Say, "Is the blind equivalent to the seeing? Or is darkness equivalent to light?" Or do they assign to God partners who created the like of His creation so that the creation (which they made and His creation) seemed alike to them? Say, "God is the Creator of all things, and He is the One, the Dominator."
17. He sends down water from the skies, so that the valleys flow according to their measure, and the flood bears (on its surface) swelling foam. And from that which they smelt in the fire in order to make ornaments and tools rises foam like it. Thus, God compares the truth and the falsehood. Then, as for the foam, it passes away as scum upon the banks, while, as for that which benefits the people, it remains in the earth. Thus, God coins parables.
18. For those who answered God's call is bliss; and for those who did not answer His call, if they had all that is in the earth, and the like thereof, they would certainly offer it as a ransom. (As for) those, an evil reckoning shall be theirs and their refuge is hell, and evil is the resting-place. (13: 1 – 18)

The Sura starts with a fundamental principle of the principles of creed: the principle that this Book is a divine revelation which has been revealed by God. This principle is the foundation of the remaining components of the creed. These include the belief in the oneness of God, the belief in the resurrection, and the necessity of doing good deeds in this life. The validity of these components is contingent on the belief that this Book is a true revelation from God and therefore it embodies God's commandments.

"Alif. Lam. Mim. Ra. These are verses of the Book." The verses of the Quran are signs which indicate that this Book is a divine revelation. The fact that the Book has been composed using the known Alphabetical letters is an evidence that it has not been composed by a human being but it is a divine revelation. "That which is revealed to you from your Lord is the Truth." It is the truth and nothing but the truth, "but most of mankind do not believe." They do not believe that this Book is a divine revelation and consequently they do not believe in the consequences of this belief. These consequences include the absolute submission to God and the belief in the resurrection after death.

This opening summarizes the whole Sura and points to the issues that the Sura deals with. The succeeding verses review the cosmic signs which show the extent of the power of the Creator, His ability to control the universe, and His wisdom in managing the universe. A consequence of God's wisdom is that he decreed that people should be given a divine revelation to open up their eyes on the realities of life and the fact that they will stand one day in front of God to account for their deeds in life.

The miracle brush starts to paint an image of gigantic cosmic scenes, a touch on heaven and another on earth and the secrets of life, “God is He Who raised the heavens without any visible supports;” Regardless of how people perceive the sky, it is there and everyone sees it. One should reflect on the statement, “without any visible supports.” Then, “He established Himself on the Throne.” High above everything is the Throne. The verse moves from the physical elevation of the sky to the absolute (metaphorical) elevation of the Throne. Then the verses move from the elevation to the control, “He has subjected the sun and the moon each one runs (its course) for an appointed term. He regulates all affairs and explains the signs in detail so that you may have certitude in the meeting with your Lord.” Everything runs according to God’s law. Every physical phenomenon is managed by God’s power. Part of this management is making its details known to people at appointed times so they can understand the secrets of the creation and realize that they will one day meet their Lord.

The next verse paints an image for the miracles on earth, “And it is He who spread out the earth, and set thereon mountains standing firm and (flowing) rivers, and fruit of every kind He made in pairs, two and two. He draws the night as a veil over the Day. Verily in these things there are signs for those who reflect.” The earth is extended in front of us, we may think of it as a wide flat land even though its true shape is otherwise. The mountains are standing firm and the rivers are flowing. Then two general phenomena are mentioned. The fruits were made in pairs: male and female. The male and female components may exist in different plants or they may be combined in the same plant. This is a true fact that was not known to people until very recently, a phenomenon to reflect upon. Then the perpetual cycle of the day and night is mentioned. It is a marvelous phenomenon that calls for reflection for those who reflect.

Let us stop a moment here to think about the artistic style which juxtaposes the fixed mountains versus the flowing rivers, the male plant versus the female plant, the day versus the night, and the earth versus the heavens in one gigantic cosmic scene.

The following verses continue to paint an image of the amazing scene of the earth. Many of us pass by these scenes and do not pay attention to it. “And in the earth are tracts side by side,” Pieces of land, side by side but different in nature. Some are fertile, some are infertile, and some are rocky. The same land may have different plants, “vineyards and ploughed lands, and date-palms, like and unlike, which are watered using the same water,” even the same plant may have different types and forms. All these different plants are watered with the same water. Although it is the same soil and the same water but it produces fruits having different taste, “And we have made some of them taste better than others. Herein verily are signs for people who have sense.” Who of us did not find that fruits from the same plant could have different taste? How many of us reflected on this simple fact that the Quran asks us to pay attention to? The Quran has these scenes which explore the universe and the soul and motivate the mind of the human being. This is a limitless resource for reflection.
